on my right, in his own very admirable address on this subject, pointed out that in conferring powers upon Congress in the Constitution that instrument had given it powers to confer upon others whatever powers were necessary and proper to execute its own powers; that that is in itself a substantive part of the Constitution of the United States, and that in the exercise of that additional conference of power upon the Congress of the United States, Congress had delegated its legislative power in a sense to the President of the United States, to the Supreme Court of the United States, to every Cabinet minister that is an executive hand of the President, and to many bureau officers. It is a fact of political history which we ought to recognize that to-day were it not for this power of Congress which has been challenged here about this matter, the whole Government of the United States would be flabby and fall to the earth like a helpless bag.

DELEGATED POWERS OF CONGRESS CONFERRED ON THE PRESIDENT BY CONGRESS.

I start with the President of the United States. In the year 1890, by the act of October entitled "An act to reduce the revenues and equalize duties on imports," the President was authorized to suspend by proclamation the free introduction of sugar, molasses, coffee, tea, hides. When? When "he is satisfied"—not when we, the delegated lawmakers of the people, who can enact laws on this subject—"that any country producing any such articles imposes duties or other exactions upon the agricultural or other products of the United States which he may deem to be reciprocally unequal or unreasonable——

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from Virginia is a great lawyer, and I know he wants to be accurate in this matter. Congress did not authorize the President of the United States to suspend duties, and it could not have done it. Congress itself suspended duties when the President found certain facts to be in existence.

Mr. DANIEL. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator inadvertently, I have no doubt, said Congress authorized the President to suspend duties.

Mr. DANIEL. Well, we did so through him. That is the point.

Mr. ALDRICH. Oh, no; Congress allowed the President of the United States to ascertain facts.

Mr. DANIEL. Exactly.

Mr. ALDRICH. And upon the proclamation of those facts Congress itself suspended certain duties.

Mr. DANIEL. Just exactly as in this case we propose to authorize the Interstate Commerce Commission to fix the point of reasonableness or justice, and then we say that is the rate. As I was saying, this might be done by the President when satisfied another country imposed duties or other exactions upon the products of the United States which he might deem to be reciprocally unequal or unreasonable. This was held to be constitutional. A single man for 80,000,000 of people, without judge, without jury, without Congress, ascertains and determines the facts upon which devolve levies of taxation on the people of the United States. The act left to his—the President's—"satisfaction" the ascertainment of certain things. It left to his "deeming"—that is to say, to his judgment or opinion—the conclusion of the fact as to the duties or other exactions imposed by other countries on agricultural or other products of the United States. Predicating on his "satisfaction," "deeming," and judgment in the law, we enacted what he said in that process to be correct.

THE DISTINCTIONS MADE BY THE SUPREME COURT.

In passing upon this case, Mr. Justice Harlan said:

The true distinction is between the delegation of power to make the law, which necessarily involves a discretion as to what it shall be, and conferring authority or discretion—

Mark the word "discretion"—

as to its execution, to be exercised under and in pursuance of the law. The first can not be done; to the latter no valid objection can be made.

The latter is just what we propose to do in this bill. In these words Judge Harlan quoted the language of Judge Ranney, of Ohio, in the case of the Cincinnati, Wilmington, etc., Railroad against Commissioners, 1 Ohio State, 88.

Half the statutes on our books—

Says the Pennsylvania court, which Judge Harlan quotes from, in Moers v. City of Reading (21 Penn. St., 188, 202)—

Half the statutes on our books are in alternative, depending on the discretion of some person or persons to whom is confided the duty of determining whether the proper occasion exists for executing them. But it can not be said that the exercise of such discretion is the making of the law.

So, in Locke's appeal (72 Penn. St., 491, 498):

To assert that a law is less than a law because it is made to depend on a future event or act is to rob the legislature of the power to act wisely for the public welfare whenever a law is passed relating to a state of affairs not yet developed, or to things future and impossible to fully know.

The proper distinction, the court said, was this:

The legislature can not delegate its power to make a law, but it can make a law to delegate a power to determine some fact or state of things upon which the law makes or intends to make its own action depend.

Suppose we deny this principle, Mr. President. Here is the consequence which the court points out:

To deny this would be to stop the wheels of government. There are many things upon which wise and useful legislation must depend which can not be known to the lawmaking power, and must, therefore, be a subject of inquiry and determination outside of the halls of legislation.

So, Mr. President, it is determined that Congress can leave it to the "satisfaction," to the "power," to the "discretion," and "deeming judgment" of one man to ascertain and to determine without appeal to any court the facts upon which hinge the taxes upon the whole people of the United States, and that nothwithstanding the fact that Congress is in exclusive possession, unrivaled, of the whole tax-laying power of the United States.

CONGRESSIONAL POWERS DELEGATED TO THE COURTS.

I turn now, Mr. President, to the courts themselves. We are told that the courts will not accept and should not exercise any administrative function. That is true as a general principle; but let me ask argumentatively a question in relation to that proposition. It will be perceived how nearly they have gone toward doing it. Whence are derived the ninety-four equity rules which are the law of the land for the people of the United States? Congress never enacted them; they are not in any ancient equity that by any construction can be taken to have been embodied in the jurisprudence of the United States, and yet they are a part of the law of this land, and they control the practice of equity in the inferior courts of the United States.

How did those rules get into force and being? The Supreme Court of the United States made them. By any inherent power of the court? Not so. I have little faith in the inherent power of courts. The inherent power of courts is, to my contemplation, first cousin to the divine rights of kings. Courts have no power except that which the sovereign people of this country have specifically or by necessary implication conferred upon them, and they are just as much trustees in the exercise of powers subordinate to the sovereign as is any officer or agent of the United States.

POWERS EXCLUSIVELY LEGISLATIVE CAN NOT BE DELEGATED, BUT THOSE NOT EXCLUSIVELY LEGISLATIVE CAN BE DELEGATED.

The authority given to the Supreme Court to make these rules is found in the Revised Statutes, sections 913 and 917. These rules embrace the taking of testimony and the reference to the proceedings before masters. We have provided that they must not be inconsistent with any law of the United States, and the right of Congress to delegate its power over process and to make rules for the courts of the United States to the Supreme Court has been upheld and sustained in Wayman against Southard, 10 Wheaton, page 42, in the year 1825.

Now, Mr. President, the opinion which was given in upholding this power of Congress and this delegated power of the court is an instructive one, and it makes a distinction which I have not heard referred to in this debate. Judge Marshall gave the decision, and I read an extract:

It will not be contended—

Says he—

It will not be contended that Congress can delegate to the courts, or to any other tribunals, powers which are strictly and exclusively legislative.

That is what the well-informed lawyer means when he says that the legislature can not delegate its powers. It means those powers which are strictly and exclusively legislative and belong and appertain necessarily to itself as a legislative body.

But—

He says—

Congress may certainly delegate to others powers which the legislature may rightfully exercise itself. Without going further for examples, we will take that, the legality of which the counsel for the defendants admit, the seventeenth section of the judiciary act and the seventh section of the additional act empower the courts respectively to regulate their practice. It certainly will not be contended that this might not be done by Congress. The courts, for example, may make rules demanding the return of writs and processes, the filing of declarations and other pleadings, and other things of the same description. It will not be contended that these things might not be done by the legislature without the intervention of the courts; yet it is not alleged that the power may not be conferred on the judicial department.

The line has not been exactly drawn which separates those important subjects, which must be entirely regulated by the legislature itself, from those of less interest, in which a general provision may be made and power given to those who are to act under such general provisions to fill up the detail.

So, Mr. President, to start off with, we have the assured right to delegate certain powers to the President and to the courts with respect to matters about which we might act, but in which it has been concluded we may better act by the employment of these executive hands.

THE INTERIOR DEPARTMENT AND DELEGATED POWERS TO LAND COMMISSIONERS.

Mr. President, I will step from here over to the Interior Department. The decree of the three Commissioners which I have pointed out in the California Land case, which was appealed to the courts, although they were not themselves a court, was passed on in the case of United States v. Halleck, 1 Wallace, 439; United States v. Billings, 2 Wallace, 448, and in The Fossatt, 2 Wallace, 649. It was held by the Supreme Court that an appeal lies to the district court and thence to the Supreme Court under the act referred to.

Now, we find further in the Land Office of the Interior Department and in various bureaus of the Interior Department the gravest questions are passed upon by subordinate officials involving interests and titles to millions of acres of land. These questions are determined entirely by the administrative officers of the United States without the power of any judge whatsoever to pass upon any of them.

On yesterday, Mr. President, I called attention to the declaration of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] that it is a right of every American citizen and English-speaking man to have his legal right passed on by a court and to have a day in court to show that it was mere imagination and not basic under any American principle of jurisprudence in the great body of American things, for the reason that many were seeking to put at disadvantage those who upon this floor contended that the Interstate Commerce Commission should have the right to fix a rate, and that that should be made as nearly conclusive as it is in the power of Congress to make it.

Now I will cite some further cases. I cite the case of Burfenning v. The Chicago and St. Paul Railroad (163 U. S.). There it is said:

Whether, for instance, a certain tract is swamp land or not, saline land or not, mineral land or not, presents a question of fact not resting on record, dependent on oral testimony; and it can not be doubted that the decision of the Land Department, one way or the other, in reference to these questions is conclusive and not open to relitigation in the courts, except in those cases of fraud, etc., which permit any determination to be reexamined.

Of course, Mr. President, I always except fraud. The truth, legally speaking, about fraud is sententiously expressed by a great English judge, who said, "fraud cuts down everything."

In another case, Riverside Oil Company v. Hitchcock (190 U. S., 316), it is said:

Whether he decided right or wrong is not the question. Having jurisdiction to decide at all, he had necessarily jurisdiction, and it was his duty to decide as he thought the law was, and the courts have no power whatever under those circumstances to review his determination by mandamus or injunction.

The next case I quote is Marquez v. Frisbie, 101 United States, 473. This is a bill in equity to review the decision of the Land Department in a preemption case. Mr. Justice Miller gave the opinion of the court.

This means—

Said the judge—

and it is a sound principle of law, that where there is a mixed question of law and fact and the court can not so separate it as to show clearly where the mistake of law is, the decision of the tribunal to which the law has confided the matter is conclusive.

I refer next to Gaines v. Thompson, 7 Wallace, 347. It was held in that case that the Supreme Court would not interfere, either by injunction or mandamus, to control the head of a Department.

In Dunlap v. Black, 128 United States, 40, it was said that the courts will not interfere by mandamus with the executive officers of the Government in the exercise of their ordinary official duties, even where those duties require an interpretation of the law, no appellate power being given them for that purpose.

The rule upon this subject may be summarized as follows: That where the decision of questions of fact is committed by Congress to the judgment and discretion of the head of a Department, his decision thereon is conclusive; and, second, that even upon mixed questions of law and fact, or of law alone, his action will carry with it a strong presumption of its correctness, and the courts will not ordinarily review it, although they may have the power and will occasionally exercise the right of so doing.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. DANIEL. Certainly.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I was interested in the suggestion of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] yesterday, that these matters to which the Senator from Virginia is referring are matters relating to the Government dealing with its own, and I should like to ask the Senator from Virginia if there is a real distinction in law between the Government's rights when dealing with its own—that is to say, for example, with public land or the postal service or the customs service—and its right to deal with property and property interests not particularly its own?

Mr. DANIEL. I think the courts have drawn a distinction, and I am going to sum up what I conceive to be the judicial distinction as I wind up. I can not state the distinction all at once. That is the misfortune of a speech, that you can not state everything in a lump. I am approaching the conclusion of my own mind, and I hope I may have the concurrence of the distinguished and able Senator from Iowa when I get to that point. Though I may be a little tedious in reaching it, I think that some who have occasionally misconceived some of these principles might perhaps follow the delineations of the courts without being entirely harmed in their knowledge of the Constitution of this country as it is construed and practiced.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I will say to the Senator——

Mr. DANIEL. I am not referring to the Senator.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I will say to the Senator from Virginia that I was simply anxious that he, being a recognized master of the law, might clarify the matter, although I think his conclusion would reach by proper judicial reasoning an opinion that I have cherished rather on instinct than on any other basis.

Mr. DANIEL. I hope and believe we will not be far apart. Of course, I was not referring in the slightest degree in any light way to my friend, whose ability I much admire. I suppose he knows that. He does not need any assurance of that. But I appreciate the fact, Mr. President, that we have got one of the most delicate questions to handle here that Congress has ever undertaken to deal with. It is sincerely my desire—and nothing else would actuate me to speak so long on the question if I did not wish to seek to put this measure, when it goes before the Senate foursquare to all the winds that blow, without incurring the risk needlessly, according to my own conception, of being uprooted or curtailed by judicial decision; and I have taken pains to follow through their intricacies the lines of thought that underlie the various decisions on this question in order the better to show how we may avoid danger and how danger does lie, as I apprehend, in a certain direction. That is all.

ADMINISTRATIVE POWERS OF THE POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT CONCLUSIVE.

Before I undertake to answer the Senator's question, let me call his attention here to another case. It is the case of the Clearing House v. Coyne (194 U. S., 497), where the highest civil rights are dealt with—not public lands, which we may dispose of as we please; we have passed out of that. Congress sought to suppress—

First. Schemes for the distribution of money, etc., by lot, chance, or drawing of any kind; and,

Second. All schemes or devices for obtaining money or any real or personal property by any kind of means of false or fraudulent pretenses, representations, or promises. To this end it enacted, in 1890, September 19 (26 Stat., 465), that—

The Postmaster-General may, upon evidence satisfactory to him that any person or company is engaged in conducting any lottery, gift enterprise, or scheme for the distribution of money, or of any kind of real or personal property by lot, chance, or drawing of any kind, or that any person or company is conducting any other scheme or device for obtaining money or property of any kind through the mails by means of false or fraudulent pretenses, representations, or promises, instruct postmasters at any post-office at which registered letters arrive directed to any such person or company * * * to return all such registered letters to the postmaster at the office at which they were originally mailed, with the word "fraudulent" plainly written or stamped upon the outside thereof.

By section 4041, the Postmaster-General is authorized in similar terms to forbid the payment by any postmaster of any postal money order in favor of any person engaged in the prohibited business; and by section 4 of the act of March 2, 1895 (28 Stat., 963), the power thus conferred upon the Postmaster-General by the preceding section, 3929, is extended and made applicable to all letters or other matter sent by mail.

The Supreme Court said, in passing upon the right thus devolved upon a single man to decide these numerous questions, that—

If the ordinary daily transactions of the Departments which involve an interference with private rights were required to be submitted to the courts before action was finally taken, the result would entail practically a suspension of some of the most important functions of the Government.

Again (194 U. S., 515):

But, as already indicated, it would practically arrest the executive arm of the Government if the heads of Departments were required to obtain the sanction of the courts upon the multifarious questions arising in their Departments before action was taken in any matter which might involve the temporary disposition of private property (p. 515).

So the Senator will observe that a temporary disposition of private property, a matter of individual right, is thus permitted to be disposed of under the positive enactment of the Congress of the United States by one man, and that it is unchallengeable before any tribunal whatsoever of this country and is conclusive as to all law and all facts. In that decision the court went a step further than it did in those I before cited and answered in some measure the question which the distinguished Senator put to me. The letters were not "our own," but letters of our citizens and patrons that were condemned.

THE SECRETARY OF COMMERCE AND LABOR AND HIS FINAL DECISIONS.

I step a little further, Mr. President, as to the rights of an American citizen. I read next, or give a citation, from the case of The United States v. Ju Toy (198 U. S., 253). Ju Toy was a citizen of the United States; he was a native of the United States. He had just the same right to the protective power of the Constitution and the laws of the United States that my honorable friend and myself enjoy. One of our rights is to go here or there, as we may please, to California and back, or out of the country and back. What were his rights? He was denied permission to land in the city of San Francisco, in his own native home country, when returning on shipboard after temporary departure. By whom denied? The collector of the port detained him. The Secretary of Commerce and Labor, to whom he appealed, sustained the collector's ruling. In habeas corpus proceedings the Supreme Court held the administrative process to be due process of law and to be final. Not even the sacred writ of habeas corpus could take by the hand the native-born American citizen and give him that right which we hear heralded here to be the sacred right of every English-speaking man, and the citizen could not receive that heritage which it is said belongs to us all.

THE SECRETARY OF THE NAVY AND HIS FINAL DECISION OF A PENSION CLAIM.

I have another case which, I believe, I want to cite before I finish this subject. I can not lay my finger on it at this moment, Mr. President, but it is the case, in 14 Peters, of Decatur against Paulding. The appellant there was the widow of Stephen Decatur, a naval officer of the United States of very distinguished and honorable career. At that time the Secretary of the Navy was Paulding, and under the statutes of the United States it became his duty to pass upon her right and title to a pension provided in certain cases by Congress. He passed upon the claim of the widow of Stephen Decatur and denied the pension. It was, as she contended, a matter of right. It was predicated upon those considerations of honorable service to the country which all nations of high spirit hold dear. Her appeal was denied. Notwithstanding that, the Secretary of the Navy had to pass upon the interpretation of the laws in a certain judicial sense and had to take the responsibility of determining the question, like a court. The Supreme Court declared that the Secretary's opinion was conclusive.

So, Mr. President, whether it be the sacred right of personal freedom, the sacred right of private property, the right of going and coming, the right of receiving a benefit decreed by law, the right of being made infamous by having "fraud" written upon your back, so to speak, by a Cabinet minister—no matter how high these rights are, no matter how dear they are to the human beings who possess them, they are within the power of the Congress of the United States, and daily, in the exercise of that power, those rights are administered, as necessarily they must be, by one man or by the subordinates that Congress has chosen as trustees to carry out these things.

Yet, Mr. President, when on a public highway in this country Congress undertakes to give to a commission of public administrators, chosen by the President of the United States, and, in the nature of things, men of learning and dignity and character, the power to fix a toll upon a public road—a thing which was done by our ancestors through generations without question by the courts—we are first met in this debate by the challenge of the commercial power of Congress, and then by the assertion that we must guard this or that in the administration of the laws.

DIFFERENTIATION OF THIS CASE FROM PURELY ADMINISTRATIVE CASES.

I intend to march up to the very truth and justice of this case wherever I may find it, and, no matter where the chips may fall, to hew to the line of wisdom as to our legislation, as I may best see that line through the mysteries of jurisprudence. Where is the differentiation in this case from all of these administrative cases? Here, in the fact that the Supreme Court of the United States, construing what it regards to be due process of law, has held that in questions which involve the right and title to property dedicated to public use and coming quite near to the thought which the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER] suggested to me, and especially where property is taken in invitum by condemnation originally or where the owner is constrained by public law to allow its use for a fixed compensation, in such and in similar cases the words "due process" involve and require a settled course of judicial procedure. Furthermore, for thirty years the laws of this country have been administered with that understanding, and the whole system of jurisprudence has so grown up.

Seeing those facts to exist, having them before our eyes, and with an expression of the Supreme Court of the United States, in words and form which I will presently read, I can not believe that I would be acting as a wise and prudent legislator, and as one who held foremost the good of the people in whose service we are to legislate, if I undertook to take away from the courts such jurisdiction as they had asserted themselves to possess, and which had been recognized as the law of the land and as due process of law for thirty years. Here are some of the expressions of the Supreme Court on this subject:

> The question of the reasonableness of a rate of charge for transportation by a railroad company, involving as it does the element of reasonableness both as regards the company and as regards the public, is eminently a question for judicial investigation, requiring due process of law for its determination. (Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul R. R. Co. v. Minnesota, 134 U. S., 458.)

Again it says:

> While rates for transportation of persons and property within the limits of a State are primarily for its determination, the question as to whether they are unreasonably low as to deprive the carrier of its property without such compensation as the Constitution secures, and therefore without due process of law, can not be conclusively determined by the legislature of the State or by regulations adopted under its authority, that the matter may not become the subject of judicial inquiry. (Smythe v. Ames, 169 U. S., 526.)

Again the Supreme Court says:

> When we recall that, as estimated, over ten thousand millions of dollars are invested in railroad property, the proposition that such a vast amount of property is beyond the protecting clauses of the Constitution, that the owners may be deprived of it by the arbitrary enactment of any legislature, State or nation, without any right of appeal to the courts, is one which can not for a moment be tolerated. (Chicago, Milwaukee, etc., R. R. Co. v. Tompkins, 176 U. S., 172.)

When the Supreme Court has thus solemnly declared that neither State nor nation, which means neither a legislature nor Congress, can take away the right of appeal to the courts in a case like this, shall we not hesitate to deprive the courts of any appropriate and customary power that belongs to such appeal? Should we not strive to avoid collision between Congressional enactment and court decisions and seek all reasonable and honorable methods to that end? If the courts did not tolerate what we do the people would suffer thereby.

Let me observe here, Mr. President, that it is not attempted nor sought in the amendment proposed, which I am now debating, to take away entirely from the court the power of injunction; neither is it asserted that there is any purpose to intercept or prevent the power of appeal or review in some way or other. What, then, is it that is sought to be done? Not anything that does any particular good to anybody except for a short period, and, Mr. President, that particular thing which is done for a short period, which is a period of delay, is the very vital thing which provokes the power of equity in the case, and it goes in itself to the very heart and core of the matter in so far as the carrier is concerned.

No lawyer can contemplate these decisions—at least none can if he interprets them as I do—without at least the grave and serious apprehension that, should we adopt that amendment to this bill, which abolishes the interlocutory injunction, we would be like the commander of a ship who whirled his broadside to the guns of an enemy instead of bearing down upon that enemy with the prow foremost. I can not see that it is prudent or that it is wise to do this or that it is judicious legislation. If a man must take a risk, let him take it wholly and without regard to consequences; but no wise man takes any risk which he may fittingly, honorably, and prudently avoid. So should no statesman.

HOW RISK MAY BE AVOIDED.

How may we prudently avoid it? By providing for a review modeled upon the California land act; by requiring the record to be produced in the petition for review; by requiring the parties to put in all their testimony before the Interstate Commerce Commission, except such as they could not get hold of by due diligence; by requiring five days' notice of a motion for any suspensory order or injunction; by requiring a good and full bond to be presented as condition to that suspension order or injunction; and by putting the period of appeal or review as near as possible to the decision of the Interstate Commerce Commission. Thus as short a time as may be will go by as between the decision of the intermediate and administrative body and the conclusive order of a court. Thus, too, the best practicable ends we may subserve by procedure may be accomplished.

To my mind, Mr. President, we can not subserve the interests of the great population of the United States who ship their produce by rail, or the immense public that must travel by rail, better than by giving them a water-tight remedy; one that can not be easily assailed; one that has got all of our Anglo-Saxon rights, equities, and liberties cased up and fortified in it; one that exposes them to nobody, but challenges the just sense of everyone who impeaches its justice by provisions for the fairest, fullest, and most complete hearing that the wit and wisdom of man can devise for the ends of justice between all parties to the case.

Mr. WARREN. I ask if the regular order has been laid aside for the day? If so, I should like to have taken up for reading the Army appropriation bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The regular order has not been laid aside for the day.

Mr. KEAN. I understood that the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] was to speak to-day. However, the Senator from South Carolina will be here in a moment.

JOHN M. FARQUHAR.

Mr. GALLINGER. With the consent of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], I ask for unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 4983) granting an increase of pension to John M. Farquhar. It is an important pension bill, and I should like to have it considered. I mean it is important in view of the fact that it is urgent.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 6, after the word "late," to strike out "major" and insert "captain Company B;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John M. Farquhar, late captain Company B, Eighty-ninth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a penison at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 395) concerning foreign-built dredges, asks for a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. GROSVENOR, Mr. MINOT, and Mr. SPIGHT managers at the conference on the part of the House.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

H. R. 8997. An act to regulate the practice of pharmacy and the sale of poisons in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes;

H. R. 11796. An act for the diversion of water from the Sacramento River, in the State of California, for irrigation purposes;

H. R. 14989. An act granting an increase of pension to Arcatie E. Thompson;

H. R. 14990. An act granting an increase of pension to Lucius D. Whaley;

H. R. 14993. An act granting an increase of pension to Riley M. Smiley;

H. R. 15007. An act granting an increase of pension to Henry Hares;

H. R. 15011. An act granting an increase of pension to John Eldridge, jr.;

H. R. 15024. An act granting an increase of pension to Henry C. Keyser;

H. R. 15050. An act granting an increase of pension to William H. Near;

H. R. 15061. An act granting an increase of pension to Ethan Allen;

H. R. 15119. An act granting an increase of pension to Cornelius Westman;

H. R. 15216. An act granting an increase of pension to Truman C. Stevens;

H. R. 15240. An act granting an increase of pension to James W. Fowler;

H. R. 15256. An act granting an increase of pension to Benjamin F. Greer;

H. R. 15277. An act granting an increase of pension to George W. Pierce;

H. R. 15380. An act granting an increase of pension to Valentine Gunselman;

H. R. 15396. An act granting an increase of pension to John T. Jacobs;

H. R. 15415. An act granting an increase of pension to Ann R. Nelson;

H. R. 15484. An act granting an increase of pension to Robert Dick;

H. R. 15487. An act granting an increase of pension to Truman Aldrich;

H. R. 15548. An act granting an increase of pension to Jacob Ferber;

H. R. 15616. An act granting an increase of pension to Pleasant Calor;

H. R. 15621. An act granting an increase of pension to Caleb M. Tarter;

H. R. 15670. An act granting an increase of pension to Daniel E. Durgin;

H. R. 15683. An act granting an increase of pension to Thomas Brown;

H. R. 15701. An act granting an increase of pension to William Brown;

H. R. 15717. An act granting an increase of pension to Ebenezer A. Rice;

H. R. 15780. An act granting an increase of pension to Peter Cole;

H. R. 15794. An act granting an increase of pension to Samuel Pepper;

H. R. 15835. An act granting an increase of pension to George M. Thompson;

H. R. 15840. An act granting an increase of pension to Edgar B. Hughson;

H. R. 15863. An act granting an increase of pension to William Louther;

H. R. 15894. An act granting an increase of pension to Alma L. Wells;

H. R. 15928. An act granting an increase of pension to Herbert D. Ingersoll;

H. R. 15956. An act granting an increase of pension to Walter F. Bean;

H. R. 15982. An act granting an increase of pension to Henrietta W. Wilson;

H. R. 16023. An act granting an increase of pension to Sheldon B. Fargo;

H. R. 16024. An act granting an increase of pension to Katie B. Meister;

H. R. 16179. An act granting an increase of pension to William N. J. Burns;

H. R. 16182. An act granting an increase of pension to Samuel F. Williams;

H. R. 16190. An act granting an increase of pension to James T. Caskey;

H. R. 16210. An act granting an increase of pension to Abraham G. Long;

H. R. 16250. An act granting an increase of pension to Augustus J. Morey;

H. R. 16266. An act granting an increase of pension to Margaret A. Rucker;

H. R. 16296. An act granting an increase of pension to Henry C. Coffin;

H. R. 16334. An act granting an increase of pension to Enos Day;

H. R. 16376. An act granting an increase of pension to Joseph Muncher;

H. R. 16428. An act granting an increase of pension to Edwin Hicks;

H. R. 16433. An act granting an increase of pension to Marius S. Cooley;

H. R. 16437. An act granting an increase of pension to Samuel H. Frazier;

H. R. 16442. An act granting an increase of pension to John A. Powell;

H. R. 16445. An act granting an increase of pension to Henry H. Sibley;

H. R. 16454. An act granting an increase of pension to Samuel E. Carlton;

H. R. 16455. An act granting an increase of pension to John Long;

H. R. 16504. An act granting an increase of pension to Thomas W. Barnum;

H. R. 16514. An act granting an increase of pension to John W. Barton;

H. R. 16523. An act granting an increase of pension to Charles P. Hopkins;

H. R. 16578. An act granting an increase of pension to Edward Lilley;

H. R. 16583. An act granting an increase of pension to David R. Walden;

H. R. 16650. An act granting an increase of pension to Robert B. Williby;

H. R. 16985. An act granting an increase of pension to Gilson Lawrence;

H. R. 17028. An act granting an increase of pension to Lorenzo D. Hartwell;

H. R. 17194. An act granting an increase of pension to Jennie White;

H. R. 17235. An act granting an increase of pension to Martha Howard;

H. R. 17274. An act granting an increase of pension to Andrew J. Mosier;

H. R. 17589. An act granting an increase of pension to Sidney A. Lawrence;

H. R. 17608. An act granting an increase of pension to Sidney S. Brewerton; and

H. R. 18709. An act making additional appropriations for the public service on account of earthquake and attending conflagration on the Pacific coast.

REGULATION OF RAILROAD RATES.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12987) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, and all acts amendatory thereof, and to enlarge the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, what disposition was made of the unfinished business? Was it temporarily laid aside?

Mr. KEAN. It has not yet been.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Jersey stated to the Senate——

Mr. KEAN. I ask the Senator from Wyoming to withhold his request for a moment, until the Senator from South Carolina can be present.

Mr. WARREN. I have no desire to interfere with the pending measure if I could, but I understand that no one is ready to proceed on it, and I am very anxious in that case to take up House bill 14397, being the Army appropriation bill, and to proceed with its consideration as far as we can this evening.

Mr. BERRY. Unless it be done by unanimous consent, it will displace the unfinished business.

Mr. WARREN. I ask unanimous consent.

Mr. TILLMAN entered the Chamber.

Mr. KEAN. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside without prejudice. Of course if anyone else desires to be heard on the unfinished business this afternoon, I shall insist that he be allowed to proceed.

Mr. WARREN. In order that there may be no misunderstanding, I agree that if anyone is ready to proceed on the rate bill I will ask that the Army bill be laid aside.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Jersey asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WARREN. I renew my request for unanimous consent for the present consideration of the Army appropriation bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 14397) making appropriation for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments.

Mr. WARREN. I ask that the first formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that it be read for amendment, and that the committee amendments be first considered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Wyoming? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was, on page 2, line 6, after the word "expenses," to strike out "fifteen" and insert "twenty;" so as to make the clause read:

Army War College: For expenses of the Army War College, being for the temporary hire of office rooms, purchase of the necessary stationery, office, toilet, and desk furniture, text-books, books of reference, scientific and professional papers and periodicals, binding, maps, police utensils, and for all other absolutely necessary expenses, $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 10, after the word "dollars," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That of the receipts of the Washington-Alaska Military Cable and Telegraph System that have been covered into the Treasury of the United States, the sum of $179,000 be, and the same is hereby, made available for defraying the cost of such extensions and betterments of the system as may be approved by the Secretary of War, the extent of such extensions and the cost thereof to be reported to Congress by the Secretary of War.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 21, after the word "dollars," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That all commissioned officers of the Army may transfer or assign their pay accounts, when due and payable, under such regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, line 2, to increase the appropriation for pay of officers for length of service, to be paid with their current monthly pay, from $950,000 to $1,255,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Ordnance Department," on page 7, line 17, to increase the appropriation for additional pay for length of service from $30,000 to $46,886.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Pay to clerks, messengers, and laborers at headquarters of divisions and departments and office of the Chief of Staff," at the top of page 10, to insert:

Fifteen clerks at $1,600 each per annum.
Twenty-seven clerks at $1,400 each per annum.
Seventy-three clerks at $1,200 each per annum.
One hundred clerks at $1,000 each per annum.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, after line 11, to insert:

One captain of the watch at $900 per annum.
Three watchmen at $720 each per annum.
One gardener at $720 per annum.
One packer at $840 per annum.
Two messengers at $840 each per annum.
Seventy-four messengers at $720 each per annum.
Two messengers at $600 each per annum.
One laborer at $660 per annum.
Two laborers at $600 each per annum.
One laborer at $480 per annum.
Five charwomen at $240 each per annum.
In all, $329,040.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, line 8, after the word "clerks," to insert "messengers, and laborers;" and in line 11, after the word "clerk," to insert "messenger, or laborer;" so as to make the clause read:

And said clerks, messengers, and laborers shall be employed and assigned by the Secretary of War to the offices and positions in which they are to serve: Provided, That no clerk, messenger, or laborer at headquarters of divisions, departments, or office of the Chief of Staff, shall be assigned to duty with any bureau in the War Department.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, after line 15, to strike out—

Adjutant-General's Department: For pay of the Adjutant-General of the Army, $7,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Retired officers," on page 15, line 6, after the word "rank," to insert the following proviso:

Provided further, That officers who served creditably during the civil war and who now hold the rank of brigadier-general on the active list of the Army, having previously held that rank for two years or more, shall, when retired from active service, have the rank and retired pay of major-general.

Mr. KEAN. Let the amendment be passed over for the present.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be passed over, at the request of the Senator from New Jersey.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was, under the subhead "Miscellaneous," on page 16, line 11, to increase the appropriation for pay of ninety paymasters' clerks from $139,560 to $139,560.29.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, line 13, to increase the appropriation for pay of paymasters' messengers from $15,000 to $16,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 17, line 6, to increase the appropriation for clothing not drawn due to enlisted men on discharge from $1,000,000 to $1,082,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to the end of line 9, on page 17.

Mr. WARREN. At this point there is a committee amendment, which the Senator from Connecticut desires to offer.

Mr. BULKELEY. A few days since I gave notice of a proposed committee amendment, and I now offer it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Connecticut, on behalf of the Committee on Military Affairs, proposes an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 17, line 9, after the word "deposits," it is proposed to insert the following:

As may not be repaid on June 30, 1906, as shown by the books of the Paymaster-General's Office, said sum to be transferred in the Treasury Department from pay of the Army to the credit of the deposit fund created by section 1305 of the Revised Statutes, as herein amended.

That sections 1305 and 1308 of the Revised Statutes of the United States are hereby amended, to take effect July 1, 1906, and to read as follows:

"SEC. 1305. Any enlisted man of the Army may deposit his savings, in sums not less than $5, with any Army paymaster, who shall furnish him a deposit book, in which shall be entered the name of the paymaster and of the soldier, and the amount, date, and place of such deposit. The amount so deposited shall be accounted for in the same manner as other public funds, and shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States and kept as a separate fund, known as pay of the Army deposit fund, repayment of which to the enlisted man on discharge from the service shall be made out of the fund created by said deposits, and shall not be subject to forfeiture by sentence of court-martial, but shall be forfeited by desertion, and shall not be permitted to be paid until final payment on discharge, or to the heirs or representatives of a deceased soldier, and that such deposits be exempt from liability for such soldier's debts: Provided, That the Government shall be liable for the amount deposited to the person so depositing the same.

"SEC. 1308. Clothing balances accumulating to the soldier's credit under section 1302 shall, when payable to him upon his discharge, be paid out of the appropriation for pay of the Army for the then current fiscal year."

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, is the bill being read for committee amendments?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is being read, and committee amendments are to be first considered.

Mr. CULBERSON. I will ask that this amendment may go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is an amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut on behalf of the committee.

Mr. CULBERSON. Very well. I should like it to go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will go over at the request of the Senator from Texas.

Mr. FORAKER. As I understand, the amendment does not affect anything except only the method of bookkeeping. It is simply to enable the Department to improve the method of keeping the books.

Mr. CULBERSON. I merely wish to have an opportunity to read the amendment and see what there is in it.

Mr. WARREN. I take it for granted the amendment will appear in the RECORD, so that the Senator from Texas and others may read it. It is a matter of better bookkeeping. There is no objection to its going over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The proposed amendment will go over for the present.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was, on page 17, after line 14, to insert:

For extra pay to enlisted men employed on extra duty for periods of not less than ten days in the offices of district artillery engineers and district ordnance officers, $4,599.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 17, line 20, before the word "thousand," to insert "and fifty;" so as to read:

For mileage to officers and contract surgeons when authorized by law, $450,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 17, line 22, after the word "troops," to insert "and retired officers who have so traveled since March 3, 1905;" so as to read:

Provided, That hereafter officers, active and retired, when traveling under competent orders without troops, and retired officers who have so traveled since March 3, 1905, shall be paid 7 cents per mile and no more.

Mr. KEAN. I ask the Senator from Wyoming, what is the effect of the amendment?

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, after considerable contention a law was passed providing that retired officers should receive the pay of active men up to that of a major, but those having higher rank and serving as active officers while on the retired list could only get the pay and allowances of a major. By a construction of the Comptroller mileage is not considered an allowance, and therefore while an officer below the rank of major may draw his pay, a retired colonel serving on the active list has to accept the pay of a major and has no mileage. This is to pay that mileage while he is so engaged, and it is also to cover the few cases that have already transpired.

Mr. KEAN. But they have all been retired at one grade higher.

Mr. WARREN. Oh, no.

Mr. KEAN. I mean above the rank of colonel.

Mr. WARREN. There are a great many on the retired list who were not in the civil war, and of course they did not get one rank higher, and even if a brigadier-general should to-day be put upon active service he can only draw the pay of a major in the active service. This is to provide for mileage, which all officers have who are on duty in active service; no more and no less.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Committee on Military Affairs.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was, on page 20, line 2, after the word "troops," to insert "and the amount so paid shall not include any shore expenses at port of embarkation or debarkation;" and in line 6, after the word "Archipelago," to insert "the Hawaiian Archipelago;" so as to read:

And provided further, That for all sea travel actual expenses only shall be paid to officers, contract surgeons, contract dental surgeons, and veterinarians, to paymasters' clerks, and to the expert accountant of the Inspector-General's Department, when traveling on duty under competent orders, with or without troops, and the amount so paid shall not include any shore expenses at port of embarkation or debarkation; but for the purpose of determining allowances for all travel under orders, or for officers and enlisted men on discharge, travel in the Philippine Archipelago, the Hawaiian Archipelago, the home waters of the United States, and between the United States and Alaska shall not be regarded as sea travel and shall be paid for at the rates established by law for land travel within the boundaries of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 20, after line 10, to strike out:

For additional 20 per cent increase on pay of enlisted men serving in the Philippine Islands, the island of Guam, Alaska, China, and Panama, $540,369.48.

For additional 10 per cent increase on pay of commissioned officers serving in the Philippine Islands, the island of Guam, Alaska, China, and Panama, $200,201.39.

And insert:

For additional 20 per cent increase on pay of enlisted men serving beyond the limits of the States comprising the Union and the Territories of the United States contiguous thereto (excepting Porto Rico and Hawaii), as provided by act approved June 30, 1902, the time of such service to be counted from the date of departure from said States to the date of return thereto, $540,369.48.

For additional 10 per cent increase on pay of commissioned officers serving beyong the limits of the States comprising the Union and the Territories of the United States contiguous thereto (excepting Porto Rico and Hawaii), as provided by act approved June 30, 1902, the time of such service to be counted from the date of departure from said States to the date of return thereto, $200,201.39: Provided, That the appropriations for pay of the Army for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1905, and June 30, 1906, shall be available for the payment of the increase for service at foreign stations to which commissioned officers and enlisted men are entitled under the provisions of the act of June 30, 1902.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 22, line 8, after the word "dollars," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That men hereafter enlisted in the Porto Rico Provisional Regiment of Infantry shall be enlisted for a period of three years and may be reenlisted.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 23, line 5, after the word "dollars," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That all enlisted men of the Regular Army who have been appointed commissioned officers of Philippine Scouts subsequent to March 2, 1903, or who may hereafter be so appointed, and who, upon their muster out, have returned or may return to the ranks of the Regular Army, shall have such period of service counted as if it had been rendered as enlisted men, and that they be entitled to all continuous-service pay and to count in computing the time necessary to enable them to retire as enlisted men.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 25, line 8, after the word "dollars," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That hereafter when any portion of the organized militia of any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia participates in the encampment, maneuvers, and field instruction of any part of the Regular Army, under the provisions of section 15 of the act of January 21, 1903, they may, after being duly mustered by an officer of the Regular Army, be paid at any time after such muster for the period from the date of leaving the home rendezvous to date of return thereto as determined in advance, both dates inclusive, and such payment, if otherwise correct, shall pass to the credit of the paymaster making the same.

Mr. KEAN. Will the Senator from Wyoming kindly explain the amendment?

Mr. WARREN. The amendment is one that was sent up by the Paymaster, and the purpose is to facilitate the payment of those members of the militia who may attend the field maneuvers. The trouble has been that the Comptroller rules that the payment can not be made in advance. The men are paid on the field a small amount——

Mr. KEAN. I think I remember a case that we had in the Committee on Claims; and this provision will cure the defect in those cases?

Mr. WARREN. It will cure that defect.

Mr. KEAN. There was a case from the Senator's own State.

Mr. WARREN. Yes. I will say, however, that this grew out of several other cases and was not put in the bill because of any desire on the part of the committee, but to conform to the desire of the Paymaster-General and the Comptroller.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Military Affairs.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was, under the subhead "Subsistence Department," on page 26, line 18, after the word "roasters," to insert "for cooking apparatus in the field, and when traveling (except on transports), bake ovens and apparatus pertaining thereto;" so as to read:

For payments: For meals for recruiting parties and recruits, including applicants for enlistment while held under observation; for hot coffee, canned meats, and baked beans for troops traveling, when it is impracticable to cook their rations; for coffee roasters, for cooking apparatus in the field, and when traveling (except on transports), bake ovens and apparatus pertaining thereto; scales, weights, measures, utensils, tools, stationery, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 27, line 19, after the word "absence," to insert "for payment of commutation of rations in lieu of the regular established ration for members of the Nurse Corps (female) while on duty in hospital, and for enlisted men sick therein, at the rate of 30 cents per ration (except that at the General Hospital at Fort Bayard, N. Mex., 50 cents per ration is authorized for enlisted patients in said hospital) to be paid to the surgeon in charge;" on page 28, line 3, after the word "service," to strike out "for difference between the cost of the ration at 22 cents per day and the amount of 37 cents per day, to be expended by commissaries on request of medical officers for special diet to enlisted patients in hospital (except that at the General Hospital at Fort Bayard, N. Mex., the difference between the cost of the ration at 22 cents and 50 cents per day is authorized) who are too sick to be subsisted on the Army ration;" in line 12, after the word "determine," to insert "for providing prizes to be established by the Secretary of War for enlisted men of the Army who graduate from the Army schools for bakers and cooks, the total amount of such prizes at the various schools not to exceed $900 per annum;" and in line 17, after the word "all," to strike out "six million dollars" and insert "six million two hundred and forty-nine thousand seven hundred and three dollars and seventy cents;" so as to read:

To enlisted men selected to contest for places or prizes in department and army rifle competitions while traveling to and from places of contest; to male and female nurses on leaves of absence; for payment of commutation of rations in lieu of the regular established ration for members of the Nurse Corps (female) while on duty in hospital, and for enlisted men sick therein, at the rate of 30 cents per ration (except that at the General Hospital at Fort Bayard, N. Mex., 50 cents per ration is authorized for enlisted patients in said hospital) to be paid to the surgeon in charge; for subsistence of the masters, officers, crews, and employees of the vessels of the Army transport service; for ice to organizations of enlisted men stationed at such places as the Secretary of War may determine; for providing prizes to be established by the Secretary of War for enlisted men of the Army who graduate from the Army schools for bakers and cooks, the total amount of such prizes at the various schools not to exceed $900 per annum; in all, $6,249,703.70, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War and accounted for as "Subsistence of the Army," and for that purpose to constitute one fund.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Quartermaster's Department," on page 30, line 8, after the word "dollars," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That hereafter fuel may be furnished to commissioned officers on the active list by the Quartermaster's Department, for the actual use of such officers only, at the rate of $3 per cord for standard oak wood, or at an equivalent rate for other kinds of fuel, the amount so furnished to each to be limited to the officer's actual personal necessities as certified to by him.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 34, line 24, after the word "stations," to insert "to provide such furniture for the public rooms of officers' messes at military posts as may be approved by the Secretary of War;" so as to read:

For barracks and quarters for troops, storehouses for the safe-keeping of military stores, for offices, recruiting stations, to provide such furniture for the public rooms of officers' messes at military posts as may be approved by the Secretary of War, and for the hire of buildings and grounds for summer cantonments, and for temporary buildings at frontier stations, for the construction of temporary buildings and stables, and for repairing public buildings at established posts, including the extra-duty pay of enlisted men employed on the same.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 35, line 18, before the word "dollars," to insert "one hundred and fifty thousand;" so as to make the additional proviso read:

Provided further, That the number of and total sum paid for civilian employees in the Quartermaster's Department, including those paid from the funds appropriated for regular supplies, incidental expenses, barracks and quarters, Army transportation, clothing, camp and garrison equipage, shall be limited to the actual requirements of the service, and that no employee paid therefrom shall receive a salary of more than $150 per month, except upon the approval of the Secretary of War, $3,150,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 35, line 18, after the word "dollars," to insert the following proviso:

Provided further, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to use not more than $300,000 of the sum set apart for barracks and quarters in the act of appropriation for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1906, in the acquisition by purchase of 310 acres of land adjoining the military reservation at Fort Sam Houston, Tex., at a cost not exceeding $188,000; and in the acquisition by purchase of 17,000 acres of land comprised in the Oppenheimer and Shaas tracts, lying near San Antonio, Tex., at a cost not exceeding $112,000.

Mr. KEAN. Let that amendment be passed over for the present.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be passed over.

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator will withhold his objection until I can perfect the amendment, it may then be passed over.

Mr. KEAN. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. In line 3, on page 36, after the words "purchase of," I move to insert "not less than."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. After the word "land," in the same line, I move to strike out the words "comprised in the Oppenheimer and Shaas tracts."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. In line 4, after the words "San Antonio, Texas," I move to insert "for use as an artillery and rifle range."

Mr. FORAKER. Should it not also be used for a drill ground?

Mr. WARREN. It is intended for that as well.

Mr. FORAKER. That would limit the use to an artillery and rifle range and exclude the use of it for drill purposes.

Mr. WARREN. I think not. However, there is no objection to adding the words the Senator suggests.

Mr. FORAKER. I suggest that there be added the words "and for drill purposes."

Mr. WARREN. I do not think it is necessary, perhaps, to state that it is for use as an artillery and rifle range, and I would be satisfied with the amendment without stating that it was for that purpose.

Mr. FORAKER. "For military purposes" would be a better phrase.

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator wishes we can make it read "for use for military purposes."

Mr. FORAKER. I think that would be better.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wyoming will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "Texas," in line 5, insert "for use for military purposes."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. On page 34, line 24, after the words "purchase of," I move to insert "not less than."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. Now let the amendment as amended be read slowly.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment as amended will be read, at the request of the Senator from Wyoming.

The Secretary read as follows:

Provided further, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to use not more than $300,000 of the sum set apart for barracks and quarters in the act of appropriation for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1906, in the acquisition by purchase of not less than 310 acres of land adjoining the military reservation at Fort Sam Houston, Tex., at a cost not exceeding $188,000; and in the acquisition by purchase of not less than 17,000 acres of land lying near San Antonio, Tex., for use for military purposes, at a cost not exceeding $112,000.

Mr. WARREN. Now, the amendment as amended may lie over, if the Senator from New Jersey wishes.

Mr. KEAN. I ask that the amendments may lie over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment as amended will be passed over for the present.

Mr. KEAN subsequently said: I should like to turn back to page 35—the amendment in regard to the purchase of a camp ground at Fort Sam Houston, Tex. I withdraw my request that the amendment be passed over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Jersey withdraws his request to have the amendment passed over. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was, on page 39, line 16, before the word "million," to strike out "eleven" and insert "twelve;" in the same line, before the word "hundred," to strike out "seven" and insert "six;" in line 17, before the word "thousand," to strike out "and fifty;" and in the same line, after the word "dollars," to strike out—

Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be applied to the payment of the expense of using transports in any other Government work than the transportation of the Army and its supplies.

So as to read:

Provided further, That the number of draft animals purchased from this appropriation, added to those now on hand, shall be limited to such numbers as are actually required for the service, $12,600,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 39, after line 20, to insert:

For the construction and maintenance of military and post roads, bridges, and trails in the district of Alaska, to be expended under the direction of the board of road commissioners described in section 2 of an act entitled "An act to provide for the construction and maintenance of roads, the establishment and maintenance of schools, and the care and support of insane persons in the district of Alaska, and for other purposes," approved January 27, 1905, and to be expended conformably to the provisions of said act, $150,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 40, line 14, before the word "hundred," to strike out "one" and insert "two;" so as to make the clause read:

Barracks and quarters, Philippine Islands: Continuing the work of providing for the proper shelter and protection of officers and enlisted men of the Army of the United States lawfully on duty in the Philippine Islands, including the acquisition of title to building sites when necessary, and including also shelter for the animals and supplies, and all other buildings necessary for post administration purposes, $250,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 41, line 12, after the word "garrisons," to strike out "275,000" and insert $500,000: Provided, That the following sums be used in the erection of modern sanitary hospitals at the posts named: Eighty thousand dollars at Fort D. A. Russell, Wyo.; $100,000 at Columbus Barracks, Ohio; and $75,000 at Jefferson Barracks, Mo.;" so as to make the clause read:

Construction and repair of hospitals: For construction and repair of hospitals at military posts already established and occupied, including the extra-duty pay of enlisted men employed on the same, and including also all expenditures for construction and repairs required at the Army and Navy Hospital at Hot Springs, Ark., and for the construction and repair of general hospitals and expenses incident thereto, and for additions needed to meet the requirements of increased garrisons, $500,000: Provided, That the following sums be used in the erection of modern sanitary hospitals at the posts named: Eighty thousand dollars at Fort D. A. Russell, Wyo.; $100,000 at Columbus Barracks, Ohio; and $75,000 at Jefferson Barracks, Mo.

Mr. CLAY. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Wyoming to the fact (I may be mistaken about it, though I do not think I am) that this amendment provides for striking out "$275,000" and inserting "$500,000," and "that the following sums be used in the erection of modern sanitary hospitals at the posts named: Eighty thousand dollars at Fort D. A. Russell, Wyo.; $100,000 at Columbus Barracks, Ohio; and $75,000 at Jefferson Barracks, Mo.," and yet I see no estimate for these additional hospitals and no recommendation from the War Department.

Mr. WARREN. They are all of them estimated for and particularly recommended. The estimate is $500,000, and the particular hospitals, if the Senator will look, he will see are recommended.

Mr. CLAY. Does the Senator mean that they are all estimated for?

Mr. WARREN. Yes, sir; every one of them, and more.

Mr. CLAY. I do not find them in the Book of Estimates.

Mr. WARREN. I will find them for the Senator.

Mr. CLAY. I will take the word of the Senator.

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator accepts my assurance, I can say that they are all there.

Mr. CLAY. I was looking over the Book of Estimates, and I did not find any estimates at all for this purpose.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Medical Department," on page 43, line 24, after the word "dollars," to strike out the following proviso:

Provided, That hereafter the purchase of medicines and medical stores or the engagement of services not personal for the Medical Department of the Army may be made by the Medical Department in open market, in the manner common among business men, when the aggregate of the amount required does not exceed $200, but every such purchase or employment shall be promptly reported to the Secretary of War for approval, under such regulations as he may prescribe.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 44, line 8, after the word "Provided," to strike out "further;" so as to read:

Provided, That no contract or purchase on behalf of the United States shall be made unless the same is authorized by law or is under an appropriation adequate to its fulfillment, except in the War and Navy Departments, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Ordnance Department," page 47, after line 14, to strike out:

Ordnance Service: Current expenses of the Ordnance Service required to defray the current expenses at the arsenals; of receiving stores and issuing arms and other ordnance supplies; of police and office duties; of rents, tolls, fuel, light, water, and advertising; of stationery and office furniture; of tools and instruments for service; incidental expenses of the Ordnance Service and those attending practical trials and tests of ordnance, small arms, and other ordnance supplies, including purchase of publications for libraries for the Ordnance Department and payment for mechanical labor in the office of the Chief of Ordnance, $300,000.

And to insert:

For the current expenses of the Ordnance Department in connection with purchasing, receiving, and issuing ordnance and ordnance stores, comprising police and office duties, rents, tolls, fuel, light, water, and advertising, stationery, and office furniture, tools, and instruments for service; for the incidental expenses of the Ordnance Service and those attending practical trials and tests of ordnance, small arms, and other ordnance stores, and for publications for libraries of the Ordnance Department, including the Ordnance Office, and payment for mechanical labor in the office of the Chief of Ordnance, $300,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 48, line 22, to increase the appropriation for ordnance stores and ammunition from $600,000 to $624,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 49, line 2, before the word "dollars," to insert "one hundred thousand;" so as to make the clause read:

Small-arms target practice: Ammunition, targets, and other accessories, for small-arms target practice and instruction; marksmen's medals, prize arms, and insignia for all arms of the service, $1,100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 50, line 3, after the word "artillery," to insert "and articles for field and coast artillery material;" and in line 4, before the word "thousand," to insert "and fifty;" so as to make the clause read:

Ordnance stores and supplies: For overhauling, cleaning, repairing, and preserving ordnance and ordnance stores in the hands of troops and at the arsenals, posts, and depots; for purchase and manufacture of ordnance stores to fill requisitions of troops; for infantry, cavalry, and artillery equipments, including horse equipments for cavalry and artillery and articles for field and coast artillery material, $1,150,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 50, after line 4, to insert:

Benicia Arsenal, Benicia, Cal.: For increasing the facilities for the repair of seacoast armament, field artillery, and general stores, $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. I wish to offer an amendment at this point, a committee amendment, which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 50, after line 7, insert the following separate paragraph:

That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to establish on the military reservation at Fort Mason, Cal., a general depot for the supply departments of the United States Army, and to construct thereon the necessary storehouses, offices, shops, stables, sheds, power houses, quarters, and other buildings, together with wharves for the accommodation of at least four ships of the Army transport service: Provided, That a contract or contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for the construction of the buildings herein provided for, including the preparation of the ground for building sites, the acquisition by condemnation proceedings of the submerged land needed for wharves, the construction of roads, walks, and drainage, and for the installation of sewerage, water-supply and electric-light systems, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate the sum of $1,500,000, of which amount $750,000 shall be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to line 19 on page 50.

Mr. BLACKBURN. On behalf of the committee, I wish to offer an amendment to come in after line 19 on page 50.

The SECRETARY. On page 50, after line 19, insert:

That the following sum be, and the same is hereby, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay under the direction of the Secretary of War the actual expenses of members of the National Board for the Promotion of Rifle Practice, incident to attending official meetings of said board called by the Secretary of War during the fiscal years ended June 30, 1903, June 30, 1904, and June 30, 1905, the sum of $2,162.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was, on page 51, line 14, after the word "purchase," to insert "exceeding $100;" so as to make the clause read:

Hereafter the purchase of supplies and the procurement of services for all branches of the Army service may be made in open market, in the manner common among business men, when the aggregate of the amount required does not exceed $500; but every such purchase exceeding $100 shall be promptly reported to the Secretary of War for approval, under such regulations as he may prescribe.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 51, after line 22, to strike out:

That the sum of $5,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated and the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to expend the same, or so much thereof as may be necessary, in protecting and preserving the battlefield of Balls Bluff, in Loudoun County, Va., and the burial place of those killed in that battle. In his discretion and within said appropriation said Secretary of War is authorized to buy so much of said battlefield as he deems proper for the purposes aforesaid.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 52, after line 6, to insert:

That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to accept, on behalf of the United States, the dedication and gift by Mrs. Rachael A. Paxson, as stated in her written offer of January 14, 1902, of a strip of land 30 feet wide from the Leesburg and Point of Rocks turnpike in Loudoun County, Va., to the 41-acre tract over which the United States now has a right of way to the Balls Bluff National Cemetery; and the sum of $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated to enable the Secretary of War to build a substantial road from the Leesburg turnpike to said cemetery, and to properly fence and protect the same, and, within said appropriation, buy so much of the Balls Bluff battlefield as may be necessary for its protection and preservation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 52, after line 20, to insert:

For the fencing, protection, and maintenance of the Government reservation at Nahant, Mass., $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 52, after line 23, to insert:

That subject to the approval of the Secretary of War, and to be expended under his direction, the sum of $15,000 is hereby appropriated for purchasing right of way and approaches and for constructing proper driveways and approaches from the city of Salisbury, N. C., to the national cemetery at or near said city, the beginning, direction, and terminus of said driveway and approaches to be determined by the Secretary of War.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OVERMAN. On page 53, after line 6, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk. This proposition has heretofore passed the Senate, and I understand the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs agrees to accept it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from North Carolina will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 53, after line 6, it is proposed to insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be authorized, and he is hereby directed, to pay to the governor of the State of North Carolina the sum of $5,000, to be by him transferred to the Moores Creek Monumental Association, incorporated by the legislature of the State of North Carolina, for the purpose of repairing the monument already erected on said battlefield and for inclosing and beautifying the same.

Mr. KEAN. I do not like to object to the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Carolina, but we all have a great many amendments of a similar character which we should like to have put on appropriation bills. I do not think we ought to place that amendment on this bill.

Mr. WARREN. I will say that the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Carolina is one which has had the approval of the committee, and it has heretofore passed the Senate.

Mr. KEAN. I have no doubt the amendment has the approval of the committee and has passed the committee, but I think it is hardly fair that it should be inserted in this bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. I hope the Senator will withdraw his objection. The amendment is one which has several times passed the Senate in the shape of a bill, and the Senator will remember that it was favored by the late Senator Hoar, of Massachusetts.

Mr. KEAN. I have introduced a bill which has passed the Senate many times in regard to the Princeton battlefield monument, which, if this amendment is adopted, I should like to have inserted as an amendment to this bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. This is a provision for the repair of a monument which is falling down, and which, unless repaired, will go to pieces. It is also intended to beautify and inclose the grounds surrounding it.

Mr. KEAN. I think the Senator from North Carolina ought to be satisfied with the $15,000 which he got for the road in there, without asking for $5,000 additional to repair the monument.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN].

Mr. KEAN. I suppose the Senator from North Carolina would not object if I offered an amendment appropriating $30,000 for a monument on the battlefield at Princeton?

Mr. OVERMAN. I should not object to anything of that kind.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was, on page 53, after line 6, to insert:

That sections 1 and 2 of an act approved April 15, 1904, entitled "An act to regulate shipping in trade between ports of the United States and ports or places in the Philippine Archipelago, between ports or places in the Philippine Archipelago, and for other purposes," shall not take effect until July 1, 1909.

Mr. WARREN. I ask the Senate to disagree to that amendment of the committee, the subject-matter having been passed upon here by a special bill a few days ago.

The amendment was rejected.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

Mr. WARREN. Now, I wish to return to page 41. On page 41, line 15, before the word "thousand," in the amendment of the committee heretofore agreed to, I move to strike out "eighty" and insert "one hundred and twenty."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be regarded as still open to amendment. The Senator from Wyoming proposes an amendment to the amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 41, line 15, before the word "thousand," it is proposed to amend the amendment of the committee by striking out "eighty" and inserting "one hundred and twenty;" so as to read:

One hundred and twenty thousand dollars at Fort D. A. Russell, Wyo.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. FRAZIER. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Tennessee will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 53, line 6, after the amendment adopted on the motion of Mr. OVERMAN, it is proposed to insert:

That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to accept, under the will of Martha J. Patterson and from the heirs of W. B. Bachman, all descendants of Andrew Johnson, late President of the United States, free of cost to the Government, the tract of land where said Andrew Johnson's remains now lie, known as "Monument Hill," containing not exceeding 10 acres, and situated in Greene County and in or near the town of Greeneville, Tenn., and upon presentation of good and perfect title to said tract of land the Secretary of War is authorized and directed to establish thereon a national cemetery of the fourth class.

Mr. WARREN. The committee accepts that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FORAKER. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to come in on page 5, after line 18.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Ohio will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 5, after line 18, it is proposed to insert:

That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to construct, and thereafter maintain and operate, a submarine cable from Key West, Fla., to the United States naval station at Guantanamo, Cuba, and from thence to the Canal Zone, on the Isthmus of Panama; and for the purpose of carrying the foregoing provisions of this paragraph into execution the sum of $927,000, or so much thereof as is necessary, to be immediately available, is hereby appropriated: Provided, That in connection with the installation and operation of such cable system the Secretary of War is authorized and empowered to utilize, if consistent with the public interest, the personnel and resources of the military establishment, as far as they can be advantageously used without detriment to the public interest, and to employ such experts and other persons as may be deemed necessary to assist in carrying into execution the provisions of this paragraph.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the Senator from Ohio, as I am not quite sure that I caught the reading of the amendment correctly, whether it provides simply for a cable from Key West to Guantanamo?

Mr. FORAKER. From Key West to Guantanamo, and on through to Panama.

Mr. BACON. Of course, I presume the Senator is acting upon some survey and estimate; but the reason I make the inquiry is that Guantanamo is on the southern coast of Cuba, and it would be very much more direct to have the cable on the northern side of Cuba, unless it is desirable to have it laid entirely under water for the purpose of maintaining control of it.

Mr. FORAKER. We are following in this matter the recommendation of the War Department. They have very carefully considered it; and the sum proposed to be appropriated is the estimate which they made of the expense. We have a naval station at Guantanamo.

Mr. BACON. I understand that very well.

Mr. FORAKER. The idea is to avoid going with our cable through any foreign country.

Mr. BACON. And to lay it altogether under water?

Mr. FORAKER. To keep it altogether under water. We are now compelled, in communicating by cable with Panama, to use a cable that passes through two foreign countries—Mexico and Nicaragua. We are keeping up that kind of communication at very great expense. This plan will perhaps save a great deal of embarrassment if there should come trouble of any kind, as there might come at any time.

Mr. BACON. I presume the advantage of having the cable not pass through foreign territory is that which is to be considered more than the matter of expense.

Mr. FORAKER. That is the controlling consideration—to have a cable which belongs to the Government, under Government control, and not subject to any foreign jurisdiction.

Mr. WARREN. I presume the Senator from Ohio has not forgotten that it is intended that the cable shall not only run to Cuba and Panama, but that it shall eventually be extended also to Porto Rico; that it is to take in all three of those countries.

Mr. FORAKER. Yes. Ultimately the cable will probably be extended to Porto Rico, though it is not so extended by this provision.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BULKELEY. I offer the amendment I send to the desk, to come in on page 47, line 3, after the word "dollars."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 47, line 3, after the word "dollars," it is proposed to insert a colon and the following proviso:

Provided further, That in addition to the number of chaplains now authorized by law there shall hereafter be one for the Corps of Engineers.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 53, after line 6, it is proposed to insert:

That there is hereby granted to the University of Utah the following-described land lying within the Fort Douglas Military Reservation and adjacent to the site of said university in the State of Utah, namely: Beginning at the point of intersection of the west boundary line of Fort Douglas Reservation and north boundary line of Fourth South street, of Salt Lake City, which point is 10.23 rods east and 192.14 rods south of the northeast corner of section 5, township 1 south, range 1 east, Salt Lake meridian, and which marks the southwest corner of the present campus of the University of Utah, and running thence south 48 rods, thence east 80 rods, thence north 184 rods to the intersection of the prolongation of the north boundary of the campus of the University of Utah, thence west 9.4 rods to the northeast corner of the university campus, thence south 136 rods along the east boundary of the campus to the southeast corner of same, thence west 70.6 rods to point of beginning: Provided, That the State of Utah shall improve the said property and maintain the same for university purposes and not otherwise, and that in case said land shall be abandoned by the State for said purposes the said land and all improvements thereon shall revert to the United States: Provided further, That the grant of said land shall in no manner carry with it any right or title in or to any portion of the waters of the Red Butte Canyon Creek: And provided further, That there is reserved to the United States the perpetual right to maintain, alter, rebuild, and enlarge the sewer which runs from the Fort Douglas military post across said tract of land, or to construct and maintain a new sewer system across the same should it be desirable so to do.

Mr. WARREN. That is a matter which the committee have duly considered. It will cost no money, it is approved by the War Department, and is a concession of the use of certain United States land to the State university. The committee accepts the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CARTER. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 41, after line 18, it is proposed to insert the following:

To erect a guardhouse at Fort Keogh, Mont., $11,000; to erect two double barracks at Fort Keogh, Mont., at $55,000 each, $110,000; in all, $121,000.

Mr. CARTER. I have a letter from the Quartermaster-General that refers to the subject-matter of the amendment which I ask may be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE QUARTERMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, January 25, 1906.

DEAR SENATOR CARTER: Your favor of the 23d instant is at hand, and in reply I would state that Fort Keogh is on the list of permanent posts for four troops of cavalry. While the officers' quarters are not good, they will answer all purposes for the present; the guardhouse is in very bad condition, not repairable on account of age and poor arrangement of rooms, and should be replaced by a new, modern structure; barracks are also very old and will not last much longer, therefore they should be replaced by new barracks.

I think the new construction should be of brick, with stone foundations and water table.

A new guardhouse would cost, approximately	$11,000
Two double barracks, at $55,000 each	110,000
Total	121,000

There can be no question as to the necessity of the buildings mentioned, and it is thought a special appropriation by Congress of $121,000 would be a good and proper starter, and for the other necessary buildings this could be followed year after year by funds specifically furnished by Congress or taken from the appropriations "Barracks and quarters" or "Military posts," allowed this office for general construction.

Very truly,

C. F. HUMPHREY,
Quartermaster-General United States Army.

Hon. THOMAS H. CARTER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

Mr. ALDRICH. Before the Senator rises to a point of order, I should like to ask the Senator who presented the amendment what is meant by "a starter?" [Laughter.]

Mr. CARTER. That is a technical phrase well understood in the Army, I believe. [Laughter.]

Mr. ALDRICH. I suppose it must be.

Mr. LODGE. If this is a mere "starter," how much does the Senator think will be required hereafter?

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, Fort Keogh is one of the old permanent posts of the western country. The reservation is, I think, the best reservation in the entire country. The buildings certainly must be replaced. The military board put Fort Keogh upon the list of permanent military posts, and it is well understood by those familiar with the country that a military post is required there. I hope the Senator will take the amendment under advisement and that he will give it at least fair consideration.

Mr. WARREN. I am willing that the amendment shall be printed and lie over. I withhold the point of order against it, but I desire to say just a word or two in relation to it.

There are a great many cases like the one which the Senator seeks to provide for in the amendment which he has offered which are never dealt with, and should not be dealt with, upon the regular Army appropriation bill. They should be dealt with on the sundry civil, or else in special bills. They are not estimated for in the Army appropriation bill, and, unless a special paragraph should go in, the appropriation is obnoxious to the law which governs these appropriations. However, I am willing to let the amendment go over until the morning, so that I may look it up more carefully and the Senator can do the same, reserving the point of order.

Mr. CARTER. I am quite sure, if the Senator investigates the matter and reflects upon it, he will be glad to allow the amendment to become a part of the bill.

I now desire to present the amendment which I send to the desk, which, not carrying an appropriation, I suppose will be instantly adopted. I hope so at any rate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 34, after line 21, it is proposed to insert:

The Secretary of War is authorized, in his discretion, to permit the Department of Agriculture to use, for the purposes of an experimental horse-breeding station, such portion of the Fort Keogh Military Reservation, in Montana, as may not, in his opinion, be required for military purposes.

Mr. WARREN. I hope the Senator will not press that amendment, unless it has been considered by the Department and he has some statement from it regarding the subject.

Mr. CARTER. I understand the fact to be that the Department of Agriculture is seeking to establish certain experimental breeding stations, one having been already established in Colorado. Inasmuch as the amount of land embraced in the Fort Keogh Military Reservation furnishes a very excellent breeding ground, without the necessity of purchasing land, and in view of the further fact that the major portion of the reservation is not used for military purposes, it does seem expedient to authorize the Secretary of War, in his discretion, to permit the use of such ground belonging to the United States as is not required for one public purpose to be devoted to another public purpose. The amendment will certainly not cause any embarrassment to the military establishment, because the matter of use is left entirely in the discretion of the Secretary of War. I trust the amendment may be adopted.

Mr. WARREN. Has the Senator from Montana any recommendation of the amendment from the Department of Agriculture?

Mr. CARTER. Not from the Department of Agriculture. I expect the Department of Agriculture to utilize——

Mr. WARREN. Let me suggest to the Senator, would it not be better to submit the amendment to the Department of Agriculture for recommendation, and then propose it to the agricultural appropriation bill?

Mr. CARTER. Well, Mr. President, the Senator from Wyoming knows that the reference from one bill to another is an ordinary method of getting rid of an amendment entirely. I have gone with amendments to the Committee on Appropriations time and again—the most affable body of men whom I know; and it was my privilege to be a member of that committee for many a day, and I regret that I am not a member of it now, because to serve for a brief time upon the Committee on Appropriations is indeed a liberal education——

Mr. WARREN. I may say that, as a member of that committee, I regret the Senator is not now serving on it.

Mr. CARTER. The Senator flatters me. I am sure he speaks sincerely, because we worked together, as a rule, on that committee, and I hope we will on this particular occasion. I trust the Senator will accept the amendment.

Mr. WARREN. Serving as I do on the Committee on Agriculture, I think we could come nearer, perhaps, to attaining the object through that committee; but there is this about it——

Mr. CARTER. If I should seek to have the amendment placed on the agricultural bill, I fear I would be made aware of the fact that it would involve the appropriation of a certain amount of land set aside by Congress for military purposes, and that jurisdiction on the agricultural bill might be considered very questionable.

Mr. WARREN. It would be under the approval of the Secretary of War, just as it is now, of course.

Mr. CARTER. Most assuredly.

Mr. LODGE. This amendment, as the Senator has pointed out, has the great merit of carrying no appropriation.

Mr. CARTER. That should commend it, I think, to public approval.

Mr. LODGE. I suppose the expenditure made necessary by the establishment of the station at Fort Keogh will follow on the agricultural bill.

Mr. CARTER. I presume the agricultural bill will take notice of any expenditure the Department of Agriculture may recommend.

Mr. WARREN. I think there is a very easy way of accomplishing what the Senator desires. If he would move to do away with Fort Keogh, and turn the entire reservation over to the Agricultural Department, we would then have the reservation for agricultural purposes.

Mr. CARTER. We are so near Wyoming there that we think it better to maintain the post so as, if possible, to help maintain order amongst our neighbors on the south. [Laughter.]

Mr. WARREN. Then I will not push the matter.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WARREN. I shall have to raise the point against the amendment that there is no estimate or recommendation from the Department.

Mr. CARTER. There is nothing to estimate for. There is no appropriation proposed.

Mr. WARREN. It is a matter of general legislation, as the Senator knows.

Mr. CARTER. It is a matter of permitting the use by the Government of the United States of its own property for another purpose, when the present purpose does not entirely absorb it.

Mr. WARREN. I think it is subject to the point of order that it is general legislation, but so far as I am concerned, if the Senator will make it read that when Fort Keogh Military Reservation is not needed for military purposes it may be used for this purpose, I shall not object.

Mr. CARTER. Some years ago I assisted the Senator from Wyoming in securing the establishment of a military post in Wyoming a short distance south of this place, and at that time I received the Senator's assurance of perpetual allegiance to Fort Keogh. [Laughter.]

Mr. WARREN. If I have overlooked that, I will admit, for the sake of the argument, that I am trying to protect it now; and in this connection I wish to call the attention of the Senator to one point. I have never yet seen an encroachment upon a military reservation, either by using a portion of it temporarily or any other, that it did not raise the question in somebody's mind whether the military reservation was necessary, and I believe the Senator himself, if he will reflect upon it, will consider that that alone will carry a doubt, perhaps, against the maintenance of Fort Keogh, which neither he nor I would care to admit.

Mr. CARTER. The use of the land for such purpose as the Government may put it to certainly can carry nothing persuasive as to the military necessity for the continuance of the fort at that point.

I believe it is true that the War Department has given much attention to the raising of cavalry horses. I think it would be a matter of public economy if more attention be given to the breeding of cavalry horses. The condition of the British army in South Africa is an example of the utter inefficiency of a force when not provided with proper cavalry horses and equipment. For many months our western plains were the scene of enormous purchases of horses for use in South Africa. The Senator knows and I know that the British soldiers found that most of those wild horses were more injurious to the men who attempted to ride them than their presence upon the field furnished a menace to the enemy. I think the breeding of cavalry horses is a matter to which the Department of Agriculture is giving attention, and this is a most excellent location upon which to engage in the experimental work of the Department.

Inasmuch as the amendment carries no appropriation, but merely grants a permission which may not be availed of, I shall say nothing more of it. I leave it to the Senator in charge of the bill. I believe it is good policy for the Government to use its own property to the best advantage it can. I have not any doubt whatever that the Secretary of War would, with this permission granted or authority given, if called upon by the Secretary of Agriculture, set aside something like a township on that reservation for a breeding station for experimental purposes. If it is thought best that the Government property be permitted to lie idle, and that the Secretary of Agriculture be put to the necessity of renting land from private individuals, well and good; I shall have nothing more to say about it.

Mr. WARREN. There is much force in what the Senator from Montana stated. I agree with him entirely as to the matter of cavalry horses. I think probably the matter may be reached by reducing that reservation for this purpose and probably safely. I will ask, reserving the point of order against the amendment, to have it printed and lie over, and I will look into the matter further. I should be very glad, indeed, to find some way to carry out the idea of the Senator from Montana and the improvement he desires to accomplish.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The proposed amendment will go over and be printed.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President, if it meets with the approval of the chairman of the committee, I should like to ask permission to have printed in the RECORD, for the information of the conferees, that part of the President's message relating to the depot at Fort Mason. It contains estimates and letters from the Quartermaster-General and the Commissary-General.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the portion of the President's message indicated by the Senator from California will be printed in the RECORD.

The matter referred to is as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

* * * * * * *

Furthermore, I recommend that the Congress act on the recommendations of the War Department and appropriate the money necessary to establish a building as a general supply and storage depot for the supply departments of the Army and transport service on a part of the military reservation of Fort Mason. This project is set forth in Senate bill 4475 of the present session.

I have requested the Treasury and Post-Office Departments to prepare their estimates for replacing or repairing the other Government buildings in San Francisco. These estimates will be ready in a short while and will then be laid before you.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, April 25, 1906.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, April 24, 1906.

The PRESIDENT:

Replying to your letter of 23d instant directing that a report be made regarding the buildings required for the War Department in San Francisco, I have the honor to invite your attention to the inclosed memorandum from the Quartermaster-General relative to the establishment of a general supply and storage depot for supply departments of the Army and the transport service on a part of the military reservation of Fort Mason, Cal. This project is set forth in Senate bill 4475 of the present session, upon which, in response to call therefor, the Department, on February 21 last, submitted to the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, United States Senate, reports from the Quartermaster-General, the Judge-Advocate-General, and the Chief of Staff.

The subject of establishing a general supply depot in San Francisco to cover all branches of the Army service was first taken up in 1903 and has since been very fully investigated and considered by the bureaus concerned, and particularly by the Quartermaster's Department. The memorandum herewith from the Quartermaster-General is a résumé of the subject, from which it will be seen that the Department owned no buildings in the city of San Francisco, but occupied rented accommodations at a total annual expenditure of $76,550. As the Quartermaster-General very pertinently remarks, this project, which was originally presented on its merits in the interests of good administration and a saving of time and expense for rentals and employees, has now assumed a character of indispensable and imperative necessity for the military service on the Pacific coast, Hawaii, and the Philippine Islands.

The amount called for has been increased from $1,350,000 to $1,500,000, and the amount to be immediately available from $500,000 to $750,000, in view of the necessity of adopting a stronger, more durable, and permanent system of construction than the type originally considered. The construction of this depot will afford ample and modern provision for all the supply departments of the Army and result in an annual saving in rent of at least $60,000, leaving as the only branches of the service unprovided for the division and department headquarters, which are required by convenience to be located within the city; and the engineer offices, which, as stated by the Chief of Engineers in his accompanying letter, will be accommodated either through renting private quarters or perhaps in securing quarters in the proposed new custom-house.

The War Department does not own any public buildings at Sacramento, San Jose, and Oakland.

Very respectfully,

ROBERT SHAW OLIVER,
Acting Secretary of War.

[Inclosures.]

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS,
Washington, April 23, 1906.

The honorable the SECRETARY OF WAR.

SIR: 1. I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of a copy of a letter of the President relating to estimates for public buildings in San Francisco.

2. It is not thought that the Engineer Department of the Army is involved in the matter, however. Heretofore two offices have been maintained in rented buildings in San Francisco in connection with river and harbor and fortification work. The office buildings occupied have been destroyed, and new provision must be made, but this will be accomplished through renting private quarters or, perhaps in the future, securing quarters in the proposed new custom-house.

3. Two companies of engineer troops are quartered at Fort Mason, but it is believed that no damage of a serious character has occurred there, and that the repairs of these garrison buildings would, in any event, be made by the Quartermaster's Department, and would be covered by estimates submitted by the Quartermaster-General under the terms of the President's letter of April 23, 1906.

Very respectfully,

A. MACKENZIE,
Brigadier-General, Chief of Engineers, U. S. Army.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE SURGEON-GENERAL,
Washington, April 23, 1906.

Memorandum for the information of the Secretary of War.

The Secretary of the Treasury, under date of January 29, 1906, in connection with H. R. 10117, for the erection of a building for the use of such Government officials as may now be occupying rented quarters at San Francisco, requested to be advised as to the space at present occupied by officials of the War Department in rented quarters.

Under date of February 5, 1906, the chief surgeon, Department of California, reported to this officer that he would require for his office (3 rooms) 952 square feet floor space; for the attending surgeon's office (3 rooms) 1,008 square feet, and the officer in charge of medical supply depot would require 47,000 square feet in the event of a Government building being erected in San Francisco.

This represents the space that has been occupied in San Francisco by the medical department. The offices of the chief surgeon and attending surgeon were in the portion of the Phelan Building occupied by Headquarters Department of California, and this office does not know what would be its proper proportion of the rental paid. The annual rent of the medical supply depot on Mission street was $18,000 per annum.

R. M. O'REILLY,
Surgeon-General, U. S. Army.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE COMMISSARY-GENERAL,
Washington, April 23, 1906.

Memorandum for the Secretary of War in re Senate bill No. 4475, introduced in the Senate February 15, 1906, by Senator PERKINS.

Regarding construction at Fort Mason, Cal., of wharf, storehouse, and quarters for occupancy in lieu of the various buildings rented in San Francisco, in an inspection of the station of San Francisco made August 30 and 31 and September 1, 1905, the inspector, Colonel Chamberlain, under date of October 3, 1905, states:

"The present annual rental paid for offices, wharfage, and storage in San Francisco for the quartermaster's depot, the transport service, the subsistence depot, and medical supply depot amounts to $49,400.04, exclusive of $2,592 paid for commutation of quarters for the officers on duty in connection with the said depots. That the amount so expended will diminish is very improbable. On the contrary, an increase is probable.

"In the interest of convenience and economy it is recommended that a wharf, suitable office building, storehouses, and quarters for the depot officers be constructed at Fort Mason. A suitable site, owned by the Government, is, I believe, available."

That paper was referred to this office, and the depot commissary in San Francisco, under date of November 23, 1905, reported as follows:

"Referring to your letter (173223) of the 14th instant, I have the honor to report as follows for your information:

"The Government pays $4,800 rental per annum for the premises 46 Spear street, occupied in part by this depot. One-fourth of the building is used by the Quartermaster's Department, which makes the cost of the space assigned to the Subsistence Department $3,600 per annum.

"Subsistence stores for posts in the United States, except large lots, are assembled at the warehouse and prepared for shipment. Large lots of stores are delivered by the sellers direct to the railroad or steamers.

"Stores for use of transports are delivered direct to the transports. About 24,000,000 pounds of subsistence supplies purchased and shipped to the Philippines each year are delivered to the transports by the sellers, saving thereby to the Government the cost of handling, storage, and drayage.

"So far as the Subsistence Department is concerned, there would be no economy in constructing a wharf and erecting an office building, storehouse, and quarters at Fort Mason."

The Quartermaster-General, under date of November 6, 1905, stated: "This scheme of transfer of the San Francisco depot to Fort Mason was submitted by this office to the Secretary of War with detailed estimates for buildings, roads, walks, wharves, etc., amounting to $1,256,280, December 10, 1903. This included all the supply departments of the Army and the transport service."

On January 29, 1906, the Secretary of the Treasury wrote to the Secretary of War referring to House bill No. 10117, for the erection of a building for the use of Government officials now occupying rented quarters at San Francisco, inquiring with regard to space at present occupied by officials in the War Department in rented quarters in the city of San Francisco, and the amount required to meet present and prospective needs, to which this office replied as follows:

"Referring to letter dated January 29, 1906, from the Secretary of the Treasury, relative to amount of space required by War Department in proposed building in San Francisco for use of such Government officials as may now be occupying rented quarters there, which was referred by you to this office for report, I have the honor to state that the chief commissary of the Department of California will require three rooms, only two rooms being allotted now for his needs, and the depot and purchasing commissary will require 36,800 square feet of space for office, storage, and shipping facilities, while the present space occupied for this purpose is 18,420 square feet. The increase is necessary to meet prospective needs and to provide for emergencies."

From the foregoing it appears that the matter has been thoroughly considered and that detailed estimates have been submitted. As Senate bill No. 4475 appropriates an amount just about equal to the estimate of the Quartermaster-General, it is recommended that the same be returned to Congress, urging favorable consideration. It is necessary that some provision should be promptly made to properly house the subsistence department in San Francisco, so as to provide for the proper supply of the transports and the forwarding of supplies to the troops in the Philippine Islands.

HENRY G. SHARPE, Commissary-General.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE QUARTERMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, April 23, 1906.

Memorandum relative to establishment of a general supply and storage depot for supply departments of the Army and the transport service, on a part of the military reservation of Fort Mason, Cal.

The project contemplates the construction of the necessary buildings, wharves, roads, walks, tramways, water supply, sewerage, and lighting and power plants on public land constituting a part of the military reservation, Fort Mason, Cal., locally known as Black Point.

The purpose is to do away with all the buildings and premises now rented at very high annual rentals in the city of San Francisco, Cal., and concentrate at one place all the facilities needed for the administration and operation of the quartermasters and other supply departments of the Army, and the transport service, in connection with the military service at San Francisco and posts in its vicinity and in the Hawaiian Islands and the Philippines, in so far as said operations can be conducted to advantage at that port.

As outlined in plans originally prepared in December, 1903, the project contemplated construction of:

A general office building for the administrative and clerical work of all the different supply departments of the Army.

Three storehouses for clothing, equipage, and other quartermaster supplies.

One storehouse for the subsistence department.

One storehouse for the medical department.

One general packing house.

One general repair shop.

Stables, corrals, and sheds for wheel transportation.

Power house with machinery for furnishing light, power for elevators, etc.

One storehouse for the transport service.

Construction of wharves and necessary dredging for accommodation of at least four ships of the size of the largest Army transports.

Preparing ground for building sites, construction of roads, walks, drainage, sewerage, water supply, etc.

Five sets of quarters for officers of the supply departments whose services would be required at this depot.

The estimated cost of the entire project was $1,256,250.

This did not, however, cover any expenditures for purchase of additional land, but recent developments indicate that it will be necessary to acquire, by purchase or condemnation, the rights of certain private owners to a part of the land which would be needed for wharves and slips for the transport service, and it was estimated that the aggregate sum needed to carry out the project as originally laid out should be increased to $1,350,000.

The plans as heretofore considered had in view construction of brick buildings with stone or concrete foundations, but with the ordinary wooden floors and wood frame for roofing. More recent observation and experience indicate that, although first cost would be increased, it will be far preferable to adopt a stronger and more durable and permanent system of construction, having in view the use of stone, brick, and concrete masonry, with steel frames, trusses, etc. This, together with enhanced cost of material and skilled labor incident to the great demands that will be made upon all sources of supply on account of the reconstruction of the city of San Francisco, will require a greater sum than that above given to complete the project as a whole, and it is therefore recommended that the total amount be increased to $1,500,000, and that the amount to be immediately available be increased to $750,000.

The destruction of nearly every facility heretofore used in connection with the supply departments and the transport service in San Francisco renders it imperative that work on a larger scale than first contemplated be commenced at once.

In a memorandum on this subject prepared by this office January 17, 1906, it was stated:

"Carrying out this project would place the military establishment in San Francisco in possession of a system of terminal facilities by land and water which can not be surpassed and bring under the direct supervision of the responsible officers the operations of the transport service and the several supply departments which are necessarily related and dependent upon each for prompt and efficient service.

"The necessity for an establishment of this kind in San Francisco in December, 1903, when the report was submitted, is much greater to-day than it was then. Not only are rents rising all over the city, but it has been found impracticable to secure at any reasonable cost accommodations required for convenient and expeditious transaction of operations of the supply departments and owners of premises now held under lease have made it known in several instances that leases would not be renewed.

"With facilities for the ordinary routine operations of the military service cramped, expensive, inconvenient, and inadequate during a period of profound peace, it can be readily foreseen what would be the result if emergencies should arise rendering necessary greater activities in the transport service and the supply departments at this important port."

At this time it is known that with the exception of the rented wharf from which Army transports sail, no facilities for storage of supplies and conducting the ordinary operations of the supply departments of the Army can be obtained in San Francisco, and a project which was originally presented on its merits, in the interests of good administration and a saving of time and expense for rentals and employees, has now assumed the character of indispensable and imperative necessity for the military service on the Pacific coast, Hawaii, and the Philippine Islands.

Even if the wharf used by Army transports in San Francisco is saved—of which there is at this time no positive information at hand—its relinquishments by the Army would be a great relief to the commercial shipping interests of the city.

A list of premises rented and amount of rentals in the city of San Francisco, Cal., for the various uses of the military services, also copy of report of the Judge-Advocate-General of the Army in respect to the subject of adverse claims to a part of the water-front lands at Fort Mason, Cal., and remarks of this office by indorsement of February 19, 1906, on the same subject, are inclosed.

C. F. HUMPHREY,
Quartermaster-General United States Army.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE QUARTERMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, April 23, 1906.

List of buildings and properties rented for use of the various branches of the military service in San Francisco, Cal.

	Monthly rental.
For the army transport service:
* One wharf, Folsom street	$1,500.00
For harbor-boat service:
* One wharf, Washington street, steamer McDowell	120.00
* One wharf, Washington street, steamer Mifflin	120.00
For quartermaster's depot and storage:
* One building, Montgomery street	666.67
* One building, Folsom and Spear streets	425.00
* One stable, Pine street	75.00
For medical department:
* One building, Mission street, storage and supply	1,500.00
For subsistence department:
* One building, Spear street	400.00
For administrative offices:
Eighth floor, Grant Building, headquarters Division of the Pacific	332.50
Fourth floor, Phelan Building, headquarters Department of California	900.00
Three rooms, Rialto Building, recruiting service	100.00
* Commutation of quarters for five officers of the supply departments of field officers' rank would be	240.00
Total monthly rental	6,379.17
Total per year	76,550.00

The items marked thus * in foregoing list pertain directly to the operation of the transport and harbor service and supply departments of the Army, and aggregate—

Per month	$5,046.67
Per year	60,560.04

The above amount, aggregating $60,560.04 per year on the basis of prices heretofore paid, would be saved on rentals alone when the buildings and improvements contemplated are available for use. [Or over 2 per cent per annum on $3,500,000, but aside from this these buildings, if properly constructed, by reason of their isolation from other buildings will afford absolute security for the quartermaster, commissary, and medical supplies, United States Army.—Mr. PERKINS.]

C. F. HUMPHREY,
Quartermaster-General United States Army.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE JUDGE-ADVOCATE-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., February 12, 1906.

Respectfully submitted to the Secretary of War.

This is a proposition to establish a general supply depot on a portion of the Fort Mason Military Reservation at San Francisco, Cal. Senator PERKINS desires that a bill for the purpose above stated be drafted by the Department with a view to its introduction in the Senate.

Drafts of two bills are submitted herewith, one carrying an appropriation of $1,350,000, such appropriation to be made outright, and another authorizing the establishment of the depot in the operation of a contract system like that now applied to the construction of works of river and harbor improvement, in which the legislative authority is given to contract for the entire improvement, with an appropriation of a sufficient sum to enable the work to be carried on for the next fiscal year and the usual proviso that later payments are to be made in pursuance of specific appropriations of Congress.

The submerged lands in front of the Fort Mason Reservation are now held in private ownership, and such parcels as are necessary for the construction of wharves will have to be obtained by a resort to condemnation proceedings. These are provided for in the bill. The question of the submerged lands was fully discussed in a report rendered by this office on the 10th instant of an offer submitted by William B. Sharp, attorney for the owners, to sell such submerged lands to the United States for $400,000.

It was recommended by this office, for reasons stated, that Attorney Sharp's offer be declined. If a resort be had to condemnation proceedings, it is probable, in view of the easements imposed on such lands in the Constitution, that they will be acquired at a cost of from $50,000 to $100,000. The Quartermaster-General estimates the cost of the improvements at $1,256,250. To this sum about $94,000 has been added, in the draft of the bills, to cover the cost of the submerged lands.

GEO. B. DAVIS,
Judge-Advocate-General.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE QUARTERMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, February 19, 1906.

Respectfully returned to the Secretary of War.

The accompanying bill—S. 4475, Fifty-ninth Congress, first session—is in accordance with recommendation made by the Chief of Staff February 13, 1906. It embodies the appropriation that was asked for by this office for improvements at Fort Mason, these being contained in papers forwarded to the Secretary of War December 10, 1903, containing a full report of all that relates to that part of the subject, together with the cost of submerged lands, estimated by the Judge-Advocate-General in the total sum of $1,350,000. Of this, the estimate for the submerged lands amounts to $94,000.

It appears from the Judge-Advocate-General's indorsement of February 12, 1906, herewith, submitting drafts of the bill, that the question of the submerged lands was discussed by him in a report rendered to the Secretary of War on the 10th instant on the subject of an offer made by William B. Sharp, attorney for the owners, to sell such submerged land to the United States for $400,000. The recommendation of this office concerning this offer was that no action be taken favorable to its acceptance on account of the difficulty in determining title.

This question of title is, according to the estimate of the Judge-Advocate-General, one that could reasonably be expected to be justly settled for $94,000, and this, as stated above, is included in the appropriation of $1,350,000.

These claims have been developing and pending for more than fifty years, and a favorable opportunity to bring the matter to a final conclusion seems never to have been offered in such manner as to give a proper solution.

The report referred to by the Judge-Advocate-General relative to the submerged land is supposed to contain all the information required to elucidate this subject, and it is presumed that all further information needed on the subject of title of these submerged lands will be found in the Judge-Advocate-General's office.

This bill as it stands appears to cover all the essential requirements to establish the depot required at Fort Mason, with a perfect title on the part of the Government to the land which has been for so long a time subject to adverse claims, and the passage of this bill is recommended.

C. F. HUMPHREY,
Quartermaster-General United States Army.

Mr. NELSON. I offer an amendment, to come in at the end of line 11 on page 15.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Minnesota offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 15, after line 11, it is proposed to insert:

That upon written application to the Secretary of War, and subject to the conditions and requirements hereinafter contained, the name of each surviving major-general and brigadier-general of volunteers in the United States Volunteer Army of the civil war, and each surviving field officer of a volunteer regiment therein, who was at any time appointed and commissioned by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, as brigadier-general or major-general of volunteers, by brevet, on account of services rendered in said Army, shall be entered on a roll, to be known as the volunteer retired list. Each person so entered shall have served as an officer or an enlisted man not less than two and a half years in said Volunteer Army between April 15, 1861, and July 15, 1865, at least one year of which service shall have been in the field with troops; he shall have been honorably discharged from said service and shall have reached the age of 70 years; he shall not belong to the Regular Army and shall not have been retired; said application to be accompanied with proof of the identity of the applicant, and both the application and proof to be under oath: Provided, That an officer who lost an arm, leg, or both eyes by wounds in battle, if otherwise qualified, shall be entitled to retirement without reference to the length of his services in said Volunteer Army.

That each applicant whose name shall be entered upon said list shall be entered as of the highest rank held by him while serving in said Volunteer Army, and when so entered on said list he shall be paid, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, one-half pay, according to his actual rank, which pay shall be the same as that now received by retired officers of like rank in the Regular Army, and shall be paid in like manner; such pay to begin on the date of filing his said application with the Secretary of War and to continue during his natural life.

That each person who shall receive pay under this act shall thereby relinquish all his right and claim to pension from the United States after the date of filing said application, and any payment of such pension made to him covering a period subsequent to the filing of his said application shall be deducted from the amount due him on the first payment or payments under this act; and pay allowed by this act shall not be subject or liable to any attachment, levy, lien, or detention under any process whatever; and persons whose names are placed upon said list shall not constitute any part of the United States Army.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I have a great deal of sympathy with the object of this measure, but of course the Senator from Minnesota will agree with me that it is not permissible at this time on the pending bill. The matter is before the Committee on Military Affairs; it has been considered at one or two meetings; hearings have been had, and perhaps more will be had. But it is not estimated for; it is not an amendment recommended by any standing committee, and, in my judgment, is legislation. Therefore I feel that I must make the point of order, although I will not make it now if the Senator from Minnesota desires to be heard.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

Mr. WARREN. The amendment may lie over, if the Senator does not wish to take it up at so late an hour. But I will reserve the point of order.

Mr. NELSON. If the bill is not to be disposed of this evening, let the amendment lie over until morning.

Mr. WARREN. I suggest that it lie over. I reserve the point of order on it.

Mr. LODGE. Oh, yes; the point of order is reserved.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The proposed amendment will lie over.

Mr. MARTIN. I send to the desk an amendment which I offer.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Virginia proposes an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of the bill the following:

To be expended under the supervision and direction of the Secretary of War in the improvement of the national boulevard owned by the United States, between Princess Anne street and the gate to the national cemetery, at Fredericksburg, Va., the sum of $30,000.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, I desire to say that 17,000 soldiers are buried in this cemetery, and the Government owns in fee simple this roadway from the city of Fredericksburg to the gate of the cemetery. The Government at one time made some expenditure for the improvement of the road, but the sum was entirely inadequate. The road is now in a miserable condition. I have recently been over it, and it is almost impassable. It is a disgrace to the National Government.

Mr. WARREN. The Government owns the road itself, does it?

Mr. MARTIN. In fee simple. It owns 60 feet in width, and on one occasion it expended a sum of money for its improvement. But the amount expended was entirely inadequate to make a suitable roadway, and it has been going from bad to worse, until now it is a scandal and a disgrace to the Government that such a roadway should exist between the city of Fredericksburg and a national cemetery where there are 17,000 soldiers buried.

I will say, furthermore, that this amendment has been to the Secretary of War and comes back with his approval. The amendment, as I originally prepared it, carried an appropriation of $50,000, but the Secretary of War estimates that $30,000 will answer the purpose. I think the amendment comes within the rule in such cases. It is not subject to any point of order, because it has been estimated for by the Secretary of War; and the amendment, in my judgment, is of urgent importance and necessity. I hope the Senate will adopt it. I send to the desk the recommendation of the Secretary.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Is this a highway used by the general public?

Mr. MARTIN. The general public use it like they use any highway leading to a national cemetery where there are 17,000 soldiers buried.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I understand; but is it used only for the purpose of reaching the cemetery?

Mr. MARTIN. I suppose it is not. There is no prohibition to its use. The Government can do as it chooses about it. The Secretary of War can regulate that.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I do not think the Senator understands the question. Is it a part of a public highway that extends beyond the cemetery?

Mr. MARTIN. I think not. My understanding is it runs to the gate of the cemetery. There may be some other roads leading from there, but they are not a part of this highway. This is owned in fee simple by the Government.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I understand that.

Mr. MARTIN. I have been to the War Department, and I ascertained what I knew before I went there, that this strip of land, 60 feet in width, is under the absolute dominion, control, and ownership of the Government.

Mr. HEMENWAY. But it is used by the general public as a highway?

Mr. MARTIN. I have no doubt that anybody travels it who desires to do so, because the Secretary of War very wisely would not put any restrictions on a highway leading to a national cemetery.

Mr. WARREN. Reserving the point of order, I ask the Senator from Virginia if he is willing to have the amendment go over?

Mr. MARTIN. I am willing that it go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will go over. What disposition does the Senator from Virginia wish to have made of the papers he has sent to the desk?

Mr. MARTIN. I think they had better be printed.

Mr. WARREN. Let me suggest that if the Senator from Virginia has the recommendation of the Secretary of War, it be printed.

Mr. MARTIN. It is here, and I would be very glad to have it printed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be printed in the RECORD.

The matter referred to is as follows:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington, D. C., April 5, 1906.

CLERK SENATE COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I introduced yesterday a bill providing for an appropriation of $50,000 for the improvement of the national boulevard between Princess Ann street and the gate to the national cemetery at Fredericksburg, in the State of Virginia, which boulevard is owned by the United States.

I introduced at the same time a similar provision in the form of an amendment to the military appropriation bill. I will be obliged if you will send the bill and the amendment both to the War Department for investigation and report as soon as practicable.

Yours, very truly,

THOMAS S. MARTIN.

[First indorsement.]

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE QUARTERMASTER-GENERAL,
April 9, 1906.

Respectfully returned to the Secretary of War.

Approval of this project is recommended. It is, however, further recommended that the amount be reduced to $30,000, which amount is considered by this office to be sufficient for the purpose.

C. F. HUMPHREY,
Quartermaster-General United States Army.

[Second indorsement.]

WAR DEPARTMENT, April 11, 1906.

Respectfully returned to the chairman Committee on Military Affairs, United States Senate, inviting attention to the foregoing report of the Quartermaster-General of the Army approving the bill, if reduced in amount to $30,000, which amount is considered sufficient for the purpose.

WM. H. TAFT, Secretary of War.

Mr. KEAN. If the Senator from Wyoming does not care to go on any further this evening, I suggest that we have a brief executive session.

Mr. WARREN. Very well.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. KEAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, May 3, 1906, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate May 2, 1906.

SECRETARY OF LEGATION.

Henry L. Janes, of Wisconsin, now secretary of the legation at Habana, to be secretary of the legation of the United States at Santiago, Chile, vice Edward Winslow Ames, resigned.

SURVEYOR OF CUSTOMS.

Robert A. Ravenscroft, of Maryland, to be surveyor of customs in the district of Baltimore, in the State of Maryland. (Reappointment.)

PROMOTIONS IN THE NAVY.

P. A. Surg. Holton C. Curl to be a surgeon in the Navy from the 16th day of December, 1905, vice Surg. John M. Steele, promoted.

The following-named ensigns to be assistant naval constructors in the Navy from the 30th day of April, 1906, to fill vacancies existing in that grade on that date:

Edwin G. Kintner.
Alexander H. Van Keuren.
Paul H. Fretz.
Roy W. Ryden.
Fred G. Coburn.
Waldo P. Druley.

POSTMASTERS.

ARKANSAS.

R. S. Coffman to be postmaster at Searcy, in the county of White and State of Arkansas, in place of Everett F. Pilkington. Incumbent's commission expired April 1, 1906.

William C. Roberts to be postmaster at Rogers, in the county of Benton and State of Arkansas, in place of William R. Cady. Incumbent's commission expires June 10, 1906.

CALIFORNIA.

La Fevre Webster to be postmaster at Ventura, in the county of Ventura and State of California, in place of La Fevre Webster. Incumbent's commission expired April 25, 1906.

ILLINOIS.

Levi W. Davison to be postmaster at Earlville, in the county of Lasalle and State of Illinois, in place of Levi W. Davison. Incumbent's commission expires June 4, 1906.

Milton A. Ewing to be postmaster at Neoga, in the county of Cumberland and State of Illinois, in place of Milton A. Ewing. Incumbent's commission expires June 10, 1906.

Joseph E. Helfrich to be postmaster at Carthage, in the county of Hancock and State of Illinois, in place of Joseph E. Helfrich. Incumbent's commission expires May 8, 1906.

Frank Rockwell to be postmaster at St. Charles, in the county of Kane and State of Illinois, in place of Frank Rockwell. Incumbent's commission expires June 10, 1906.

Jerome B. Stewart to be postmaster at Wilmington, in the county of Will and State of Illinois, in place of Jerome B. Stewart. Incumbent's commission expired March 14, 1906.

Sylvanus S. Thompson to be postmaster at Marseilles, in the county of Lasalle and State of Illinois, in place of Sylvanus S. Thompson. Incumbent's commission expires June 30, 1906.

INDIAN TERRITORY.

John McFall, jr., to be postmaster at Ramona, in district 4, Indian Territory. Office became Presidential April 1, 1906.

KANSAS.

Frank E. Shoemaker to be postmaster at Neodesha, in the county of Wilson and State of Kansas, in place of Frank E. Shoemaker. Incumbent's commission expires June 5, 1906.

Alonzo H. Williams to be postmaster at Holton, in the county of Jackson and State of Kansas, in place of Alonzo H. Williams. Incumbent's commission expires June 5, 1906.

LOUISIANA.

John A. Duplan to be postmaster at Patterson, in the parish of St. Mary and State of Louisiana, in place of John A. Duplan. Incumbent's commission expired April 17, 1906.

MISSISSIPPI.

William F. Elgin to be postmaster at Corinth, in the county of Alcorn and State of Mississippi, in place of William F. Elgin. Incumbent's commission expired April 2, 1906.

Sallie Millsaps to be postmaster at Hazlehurst, in the county of Copiah and State of Mississippi, in place of Sallie Millsaps. Incumbent's commission expired March 25, 1906.

Louis J. Piernas to be postmaster at Bay St. Louis, in the county of Hancock and State of Mississippi, in place of Louis J. Piernas. Incumbent's commission expires June 27, 1906.

Neal M. Woods to be postmaster at Water Valley, in the county of Yalobusha and State of Mississippi, in place of Thomas B. Leland. Incumbent's commission expired April 2, 1906.

MISSOURI.

James H. Nay to be postmaster at Holden, in the county of Johnson and State of Missouri, in place of Cyrus H. Hartzell. Incumbent's commission expired March 14, 1906.

NEBRASKA.

Edward R. Sizer to be postmaster at Lincoln, in the county of Lancaster and State of Nebraska, in place of Edward R. Sizer. Incumbent's commission expired January 31, 1906.

NEW JERSEY.

Edward S. Hance to be postmaster at Wharton, in the county of Morris and State of New Jersey, in place of Edward S. Hance. Incumbent's commission expires May 14, 1906.

NORTH CAROLINA.

John O. Burton to be postmaster at Weldon, in the county of Halifax and State of North Carolina, in place of John O. Burton. Incumbent's commission expires June 27, 1906.

NORTH DAKOTA.

Arnold J. Brunner to be postmaster at Minot, in the county of Ward and State of North Dakota, in place of Peter Fugelso. Incumbent's commission expired March 1, 1906.

OHIO.

William H. Antram to be postmaster at Lebanon, in the county of Warren and State of Ohio, in place of William H. Antram. Incumbent's commission expired January 16, 1906.

W. B. Bryson to be postmaster at Wooster, in the county of Wayne and State of Ohio, in place of Thomas L. Flattery. Incumbent's commission expires June 9, 1906.

Gilbert D. McIntyre to be postmaster at Orrville, in the county of Wayne and State of Ohio, in place of Gilbert D. McIntyre. Incumbent's commission expires June 24, 1906.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Edgar J. Graff to be postmaster at Blairsville, in the county of Indiana and State of Pennsylvania, in place of Edgar J. Graff. Incumbent's commission expires June 30, 1906.

Lott I. Leech to be postmaster at Chicora, in the county of Butler and State of Pennsylvania, in place of Simon Frankle. Incumbent's commission expires June 30, 1906.

R. A. Fulton Lyon to be postmaster at Greensburg, in the county of Westmoreland and State of Pennsylvania, in place of R. A. Fulton Lyon. Incumbent's commission expired April 10, 1906.

TENNESSEE.

Gale Armstrong to be postmaster at Rogersville, in the county of Hawkins and State of Tennessee, in place of Gale Armstrong. Incumbent's commission expires June 9, 1906.

Frank E. Britton to be postmaster at Jonesboro, in the county of Washington and State of Tennessee, in place of Frank E. Britton. Incumbent's commission expires May 16, 1906.

William A. Pamplin to be postmaster at Fayetteville, in the county of Lincoln and State of Tennessee, in place of William A. Pamplin. Incumbent's commission expired March 1, 1906.

TEXAS.

William S. Hart to be postmaster at Humble, in the county of Harris and State of Texas. Office became Presidential April 1, 1906.

Tom Richards to be postmaster at Sherman, in the county of Grayson and State of Texas, in place of Tom Richards. Incumbent's commission expired March 25, 1906.

Walter S. Yates to be postmaster at Forney, in the county of Kaufman and State of Texas, in place of Walter S. Yates. Incumbent's commission expires June 27, 1906.

WASHINGTON.

Emery Troxel to be postmaster at Connell, in the county of Franklin and State of Washington. Office became Presidential April 1, 1906.

James M. Vernon to be postmaster at Everett, in the county of Snohomish and State of Washington, in place of James M. Vernon. Incumbent's commission expires June 30, 1906.

WISCONSIN.

Christian N. Johnson to be postmaster at Merrill, in the county of Lincoln and State of Wisconsin, in place of Christian N. Johnson. Incumbent's commission expired January 21, 1906.

Rollin C. Lybrand to be postmaster at Richland Center, in the county of Richland and State of Wisconsin, in place of Rollin C. Lybrand. Incumbent's commission expires June 19, 1906.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate May 2, 1906.

ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

John H. Edwards, of Ohio, to be Assistant Secretary of the Treasury.

ASSISTANT TREASURER AT SAN FRANCISCO.

Julius Jacobs, of California, to be assistant treasurer of the United States at San Francisco, Cal.

POSTMASTERS.

NEW YORK.

Frank N. Webster to be postmaster at Spencerport, in the county of Monroe and State of New York.

OHIO.

E. R. Titus to be postmaster at Middleport, in the county of Meigs and State of Ohio.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Rudolph Neiman to be postmaster at Red Lion, in the county of York and State of Pennsylvania.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, May 2, 1906.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the agricultural appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 18537—the agricultural appropriation bill—with Mr. FOSTER of Vermont in the chair.

The Clerk read as follows:

Bureau of Entomology.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to be recognized for one minute. I desire to return to page 21, under the Bureau of Animal Industry, and move to strike out——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks leave to return to page 21 for the purpose of offering an amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out from and including line 20, page 21, to line 4, page 22, inclusive, as follows:

For the collection, purchase, testing, propagating, and distribution of rare and uncommon seeds, bulbs, trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants from foreign countries or from our possessions for experiments with reference to their introduction into and cultivation in this country, $37,780; and the seeds, bulbs, trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants thus collected, purchased, tested, and propagated shall be used for experimental tests, to be carried on with the cooperation of the agricultural experiment stations.

I offer the amendment for this reason: The amendment I have already offered embraces this very appropriation for extra seed, and it will be duplicated unless this is stricken out.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. HEPBURN. What is the amendment? It has not been reported from the Clerk's desk, has it?

The CHAIRMAN. Unless objection is made, the Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. LAMB].

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Collecting agricultural statistics: General expenses, Bureau of Statistics: Collecting domestic and foreign agricultural statistics, compiling, writing, and illustrating statistical matter for monthly, annual, and special reports; special investigations and compilations; purchase of maps and charts, stationery, office supplies, blanks, blank books, circulars, paper, envelopes, postal cards, postage stamps, office fixtures, telegraph and telephone services, freight and express charges, including employment of labor in the city of Washington and elsewhere, actual and necessary traveling expenses: Provided, That the monthly crop reports, which shall be issued on or before the 10th of each month, shall embrace statements of the conditions of the crops by States, in the United States, with such explanations, comparisons, and information as may be useful for illustrating the above matter, and that it shall be submitted to and officially approved by the Secretary of Agriculture before being issued or published: Provided further, That the condition reports of the cotton crop shall be issued on the same day as the first ginners' report of actual cotton ginned in each month, respectively, during the months in which both condition reports and ginners' reports are issued, $93,000, of which not more than $20,000 shall be expended for salaries in the city of Washington, D. C.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I move to strike out the last word, with a view to asking a question upon the subject of the collection of agricultural estimates. I read over the report of the Keep Commission respecting the collection of agricultural statistics, and I was impressed with the criticisms that Commission made in relation to the manner in which the estimates are collected and the expense, the unnecessary expense, that the Government is subjected to under the present system and the lack of accuracy and reliability in the estimates. I suppose the appropriations this year are substantially the same as those made last year, and they contemplate, I suppose, a continuation of substantially the same methods of gathering the agricultural statistics.

Mr. WADSWORTH. They do.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The report of the Keep Commission shows that there are about 250,000 people in the United States that contribute somewhat toward the collection of crop and acreage statistics or estimates, and the Commission reports that the Department relies almost exclusively upon the special agents and the State agents for the accuracy of the estimates and that a large volume of work and tabulation is made necessary by this great army of volunteer guessers throughout the country that is of no value at all.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Now, Mr. Chairman, in answer to the gentleman from Indiana I would say we gave the so-called "Keep report" full consideration, but as against that the representatives of the cotton growers, representatives of the cotton manufacturers, representatives of the cotton ginners, appeared before our committee simultaneously on the same day and they agreed that these statistics, or if you please to call them so, these "guesses," were practically correct, or as correct as it was possible under any circumstances or under any other methods to make them; and in view of that fact, all parties interested seeming to be satisfied with their accuracy, the committee inserted in the bill the clause as it has existed for several years.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The Agricultural Department makes its crop reports not upon the correspondence of these 85,000 volunteer reporters throughout the country—practically pays no attention to their estimates at all—and it seemed to me that the whole question is one of averages. Several thousand men make estimates and reports from different sources, and they are added together and the average obtained, and that average comes nearly the truth; but as a matter of fact the individual estimates differ widely from the truth. These statistics are regarded throughout the country, and particularly by the cotton growers, as of vital importance; but I have wondered whether they are of any real benefit or not. It seems to me that they tend to encourage gambling in the produce and cotton market, that they do more to encourage speculation in the form of gambling than they do to advance the interests of the producer. Stock and provision gambling not only contributes nothing to increase the wealth of the country, but does much to demoralize commerce and trade generally and to destroy decent business ideals. But I am not disposed to set up my judgment against the judgment of men who are so deeply interested, but I have simply wondered if a good deal of this correspondence could not be eliminated and just as good results obtained as now. The estimates are averages of guesses. We might as well select 500 people at random and let them take the acreage and amount of products for the past year and guess upon what it will be this year, and the average would be about as correct as the reports made by the Agricultural Department.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Touching generally the item of expense, I think if this item was transferred to the Census Bureau it would cost a good deal more money.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I think so too.

Mr. WADSWORTH (continuing). And in view of the fact that all the parties interested seem to be satisfied at the way in which the work is now done, we thought it best to insert the paragraph just as it is.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I would not favor the transfer of that work to the Census Bureau. I know it would cost more, because the Census Bureau would take an actual census. It could not afford to do the work any other way. The Census Bureau has no business with these estimates. It is a work which belongs to the Agricultural Department, and not to the Census Bureau if it is to be done at all.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Census Bureau collects the ginning reports.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That is an actual count; and the Census Bureau would be very glad if they did not have to do that.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. I desire to know whether or not this amount of $93,000 covers the cost of persons who are sent to ascertain the cotton statistics, the number of bales ginned by the different gins?

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is done by the Census Bureau.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Then what is it you refer to when you say gathering and collecting statistics from the agricultural country? Is that for traveling expenses? And then I see that you say that not more than $20,000 shall be expended in the city of Washington.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is for clerks who tabulate the returns.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Then there is $73,000 for traveling expenses.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is for inspectors that travel over the country conferring with special and local agents.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is not this work duplicated by the Census Bureau?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; I do not think that work in itself is duplicated.

Mr. SIMS. No, sir; no part of it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The ginning is entirely separate and is done by the Census Bureau.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I offer this pro forma amendment for the purpose of directing the attention of the House to a few facts in connection with this statistical work that I think make a sufficient answer to the objection made by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER]. This is a matter that the committee has investigated more carefully than anything else in connection with the work of the Department of Agriculture. It was very carefully inquired into by the committee at its recent hearings, and Members will find several score of pages regarding it in the hearings which are now before them. It was developed in the course of these hearings that the accuracy of the forecast has been something very remarkable, indeed. It was stated that during the past six years, as compared with the census reports, the forecasts made by this statistical division have not been more than 1½ per cent in error.

It may interest the House to know that the report of the Census Bureau, which is published this morning, and shows 10,575,000 bales of cotton as the crop of 1905, varies only 3 per cent and a small fraction over from the estimate made by the Statistical Division of the Agricultural Department last December, which showed a probable crop of 10,168,000 bales.

The work of the Bureau has justified itself amply, it seems to me, in a great many ways. The suggestion of the gentleman from Indiana that it promotes gambling can hardly be maintained in view of the fact that if the Department did not make the estimates private individuals would make them, as they have always made them, and certainly a report that came from a firm of private statisticians would promote gambling in the same way.

Mr. BARTLETT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCOTT. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BARTLETT. The trouble about the statistics from the Agricultural Department has been that some one in the Department has promulgated the information before the time it should have been given out. In other words, gamblers have been able to use it for their purpose by reason of the fact that the information got out improperly.

Mr. SCOTT. It is notorious, of course, that a scandal did arise in connection with the work recently, but so far as my information goes it has been only one time during the whole history of this work that such a scandal has arisen. But changes have now been made in the manner of collecting and collating and publishing the report which, the officials think, will make it impossible hereafter for such a scandal to be repeated.

Mr. BARTLETT. The gentleman says it only occurred once. He means by that that they only got caught one time. It had been done before on prior occasions, and prices had been improperly forced up and forced down. Last year it was ascertained that this sort of information had been given out improperly, and that it had been given out on other occasions improperly.

Mr. SCOTT. There was no information before the committee that there had been other scandals of a similar nature.

Mr. SIMS. I want to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. SCOTT. I will yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. SIMS. Is it not the opinion of the gentleman that actual information from reliable sources and disinterested sources will have a deterrent effect and tend to prevent gambling in the product?

Mr. SCOTT. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. JAMES. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SCOTT. I will.

Mr. JAMES. If I understood the gentleman correctly, he said that this leakage had only occurred one time from the Statistical Bureau of the Agricultural Department.

Mr. SCOTT. That was the information before the committee.

Mr. JAMES. Did it not occur in regard to tobacco, and was not a statement issued purporting to come from the Agricultural Department saying there was more tobacco planted or set than ever before and giving the per cent of acreage in the dark-tobacco region, which is in Kentucky and Tennessee, as greater than ever before, the purpose of which was to cause the farmer who was holding back for a higher price to sell at once to the trust? When that matter was investigated, was it not found out that the report was false, and instead of being as the statement went forth was in reality and truth only a 60 per cent crop? Yet this false report redounded to the great benefit of the tobacco trust by causing the farmers who had been holding their crop to sell for fear of this great increase in production of tobacco.

Mr. SCOTT. This statement which the gentleman makes comes to me for the first time.

Mr. JAMES. It is a matter of common knowledge, published throughout every newspaper in the United States.

Mr. SCOTT. I merely say that it has not come before the committee, and I have no information in regard to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words. I do so for the purpose of calling the attention of the House and of the country to the most important factor in the prosperity of the country which we now enjoy. We have heard a great deal recently, and I apprehend we will hear a great deal more during the coming campaign this year of the causes of the prosperity of the American people. Our friends on the other side claim that it is due entirely to the protective tariff. I desire to call attention now, while we are upon this subject, of the means for obtaining statistics by the Agricultural Department of the cotton crop, to the fact that it is due in the largest measure to that great staple crop of the country, raised in only one section of the country, from a part of which I have the honor to come as one of its Representatives on the floor of the House, that the immense sum of excess of exports over imports has flowed into the Treasury of the people of the United States; that it has been the exportation of the South's cotton crop which has produced this remarkable prosperity that we enjoy to-day. The figures taken from the reports of the Chief of the Bureau of Statistics of the exports and imports show that this country has exported during the past year a very large excess over and above the amount that it has imported, and by reason of that fact is a selling nation instead of a buying nation, the balance being upon our side of the books, instead of upon that of the foreigner, and that this great staple crop of the South is responsible for the prosperity which we now enjoy. Not only the prosperity of the South, but that of the entire United States. I hold in my hand figures which, in my judgment, show this beyond question or doubt. During the last year we exported $1,491,744,641, and imported $1,117,513,071. The excess of exports over imports amounted to $401,048,595. Of that amount exported raw or unmanufactured cotton formed $379,965,014. So that out of the $401,000,000 of excess of exports over imports the great staple agricultural product of the South produced all except $21,000,000 of that excess. So I say to-day, and call the attention of the House and country to the fact, that that part of the country which has prospered and will continue to prosper and which has produced the prosperity in which the whole country has shared has brought it about through its cotton crop and produced this great excess of exports over imports, for which crop not a penny of tariff protection exists, and none is wanted.

Mr. Chairman, the South has poured into the lap of the entire people of the country more than her share, and nearly all of this prosperity of the country, and to her the entire country is indebted. [Applause.] I hold in my hand a statement made by the Manufacturers' Record, of Baltimore, of January 4, 1906, which shows that during five years—from 1900 to 1905—the cotton crop and its by-product of seed amounted to $2,974,000,000 and that the entire output of the gold and silver of the whole world for those years did not, by over $400,000,000 equal the value of this staple product of the South for the same period. [Applause.] The whole amount of gold and silver produced in the world during those five years amounted to only $2,578,852,000. This is the raw product of our farmers, and of the South, and not one penny, not one-hundredth part of a cent, of tariff is levied for its benefit or protection; and it is this export of cotton to the world and its consumers that has brought prosperity to the South and prosperity to America. [Applause.] We are proud, Mr. Chairman, to exhibit to the country the wonderful progress and prosperity of the South because, when we show it with these figures, which can not be disputed, it shows that that section has contributed more than any other in bringing to our shores millions and millions of foreign gold, and with this influx of foreign gold has followed prosperity for all. [Applause.]

In this connection, Mr. Chairman, I ask permission to insert as a part of my remarks the compilation made by the Manufacturers' Record, of Baltimore, which shows the increase in wealth and farming products and other matters, in which the South has advanced during the past five years. It may read like a romance, but it is true. By these figures it will appear that for every day during 1905 the South's wealth increased $2,750,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent to insert the document referred to as a part of his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The following is the article referred to:

[From Manufacturers' Record, January 4, 1906.]

STEADY ADVANCE IN SOUTHERN WEALTH.

With a population 5,000,000 or 6,000,000 less than the population of the whole country in 1860, the wealth of the fourteen Southern States is now greater than the wealth of the whole country in 1860. Authoritative figures compiled by the Manufacturers' Record show that the assessed property values in the South in the year just closed were $6,648,000,000. These may be safely estimated as representing true values of $16,620,000,000. Such a fact is not surprising to anyone who has studied recent southern development. Three weeks ago it was shown through letters in the Manufacturers' Record received from bankers in the cotton belt that the true value of farm lands in their section had increased by about $1,000,000,000 during the past two years. That this enhancement is beginning to be effective in swelling assessed values was apparent a year ago. It becomes more apparent in the figures of the assessed valuation of property in the fourteen Southern States in 1905, which, through the friendly cooperation of the governors and other officials of the States, the Manufacturers' Record presents in the following table, furnishing a basis for comparison of 1905, 1904, and 1900:

State.	1900.	1904.	1905.
Alabama	$270,408,432	$322,878,793	$344,224,221
Arkansas	201,908,783	261,377,180	a270,000,000
Florida	96,686,954	116,967,310	a122,000,000
Georgia	433,323,691	530,894,755	577,967,938
Kentucky	640,688,240	767,997,638	795,771,824
Louisiana	276,659,407	351,018,941	396,821,157
Maryland	616,719,782	680,743,794	705,561,456
Mississippi	215,765,947	271,771,757	284,343,137
North Carolina	306,579,715	442,418,677	460,521,670
South Carolina	176,422,288	210,331,854	a219,000,000
Tennessee	396,363,586	428,665,262	445,832,036
Texas	914,007,634	1,082,587,438	1,139,022,730
Virginia	480,425,025	536,494,820	554,188,687
West Virginia	240,634,580	247,816,028	332,948,351
Total	5,266,594,044	6,246,964,247	6,648,203,217

a Estimated.

For three of the States, as noted, the figures are estimated, it is believed, below rather than above those which are yet to be officially announced. The figures for Mississippi must be read in the light of the fact that no assessment of realty has been made since 1902, and the value of bank stock had not been assessed in Virginia at the time that the figures for that State were compiled. But the approximate total, $6,648,203,217, is an advance of $401,238,970 over the total of $6,246,964,247 in 1904. Between 1900 and 1904 the advance was $980,370,203, or at the rate of about $245,000,000 a year.

The advance between 1890 and 1900 was but $755,668,807, or at the rate of about $75,000,000 a year. In the last five years the total increase has been $1,381,609,173, or at the rate of about $276,000,000 a year. The average increase per year between 1900 and 1905 was more than three times the average increase per year between 1890 and 1900, and the total increase in the five-year period was $625,940,373 greater than the total increase in the preceding ten-year period, and was equal to more than a half of the increase in the twenty-year period between 1880 and 1900.

The gratifying advance in southern wealth since the turn of the century is immediately connected with the betterment of the cotton situation in that period. The crop of 1899–1900, 9,422,000 bales, followed a period of great depression for the cotton grower, as in the decade before 1900 the price of cotton fell to its lowest point since the war, and the price of the 1899–1900 crop, with its seed, about $362,000,000, marked a turning point in cotton history and a starting point for greater development in southern agriculture and greater prosperity for the South generally.

For the hard years had, in bitter experience, impressed upon the South the necessity not only to systematize its efforts in making and handling the cotton crop, to the end that the crop of this season, 1905–6, with its seed, will bring about $685,000,000, or $300,000,000 more than the crop in the season of 1899–1900, but also to direct its energies upon other crops.

The accompanying tables of corn, hay, and potato production clearly show the tendency toward diversification of southern agriculture.

CORN.

State.	Bushels.		Value.
	1900.	1905.	1900.	1905.
Alabama	29,355,942	42,971,548	$17,026,446	$27,501,791
Arkansas	45,225,947	38,323,738	19,447,157	21,078,056
Florida	4,156,192	6,518,702	2,493,715	4,302,343
Georgia	34,119,530	47,255,164	19,448,132	33,078,615
Kentucky	69,267,224	94,893,638	27,706,890	40,804,264
Louisiana	24,702,598	19,516,499	12,351,299	11,905,064
Maryland	15,232,802	23,202,536	6,245,449	11,137,217
Mississippi	25,231,998	30,027,569	14,634,559	19,517,920
North Carolina	29,790,180	37,596,331	16,980,403	24,061,652
South Carolina	13,129,137	20,480,860	8,402,648	15,155,836
Tennessee	56,997,880	77,207,912	27,928,961	38,603,956
Texas	81,962,910	139,146,404	38,522,568	68,181,738
Virginia	28,183,760	43,514,874	13,810,042	23,062,883
West Virginia	19,299,708	22,813,122	9,649,854	12,090,955
Total South	476,655,808	643,468,897	234,648,123	350,482,290
Total United States	2,105,102,516	2,707,993,540	751,220,034	1,116,696,738

HAY.

State.	Tons.		Values.
	1900.	1905.	1900.	1905.
Alabama	94,061	104,966	$992,344	$1,314,174
Arkansas	228,580	130,664	2,022,933	1,254,374
Florida	6,418	19,239	87,927	312,634
Georgia	190,237	132,081	2,425,522	2,080,276
Kentucky	390,064	599,343	4,427,226	6,371,016
Louisiana	50,302	49,422	472,839	568,353
Maryland	302,292	371,814	4,247,206	4,432,023
Mississippi	99,922	75,273	994,224	840,799
North Carolina	176,680	201,013	1,978,816	2,572,966
South Carolina	192,453	84,479	2,213,210	1,128,639
Tennessee	313,432	543,114	3,698,498	6,256,673
Texas	548,879	751,760	3,732,377	6,104,291
Virginia	589,133	572,607	7,835,469	7,226,300
West Virginia	547,600	773,463	7,337,840	9,010,844
Total South	3,730,053	4,409,238	42,466,428	49,473,362
Total United States	50,110,906	60,531,611	445,538,870	515,959,784

As a corn grower the South is doing well in comparison with the whole country. It increased its corn production between 1900 and 1905 from 476,655,808 bushels to 643,468,897 bushels, or nearly 35 per cent, while the increase for the whole country was from 2,105,102,516 to 2,707,993,540 bushels, or something more than 28 per cent. In 1900 the southern crop was 22.6 per cent of the total crop, and in 1905 it was nearly 24 per cent of the total. The South's corn crop of 1905 was worth $116,000,000 more than that of 1900.

The production of hay in the South increased in the five-year period from 3,730,053 tons to 4,409,238 tons, or 18 per cent, and in the whole country from 50,110,906 to 60,531,611, or 20 per cent, rather a favorable showing for the South, where for a large portion of it there is no necessity to make hay or other forage crops.

The South dominates in the raising of sweet potatoes, the annual output being valued at between $16,000,000 and $18,000,000. But it is steadily going forward as a producer of Irish potatoes, the increase between 1900 and 1905 being from 16,940,410 to 24,599,038 bushels, or 45 per cent, while the increase in the whole country was from 210,926,897 to 260,741,294 bushels, or not quite 24 per cent.

IRISH POTATOES.

State.	Bushels.		Value.
	1900.	1905.	1900.	1905.
Alabama	417,933	763,520	$342,705	$671,898
Arkansas	2,127,816	1,425,710	1,212,855	1,040,768
Florida	104,280	308,250	110,537	369,900
Georgia	391,816	560,755	301,698	628,046
Kentucky	2,807,490	3,012,825	1,403,745	1,596,797
Louisiana	539,630	585,344	426,308	532,663
Maryland	1,269,455	2,758,895	685,506	1,600,159
Mississippi	347,094	644,930	288,088	548,190
North Carolina	1,063,474	1,992,991	691,258	1,355,234
South Carolina	335,946	767,750	335,946	790,782
Tennessee	1,365,660	1,888,000	792,083	1,095,040
Texas	916,918	2,236,160	806,888	2,079,629
Virginia	2,223,778	4,628,820	1,312,029	2,592,139
West Virginia	3,029,120	3,025,088	1,544,851	1,754,551
Total South	16,940,410	24,599,038	10,254,497	16,655,796
Total United States	210,926,897	260,741,294	90,811,167	160,821,080

The aggregate value of the crops of corn, hay, and potatoes in the South in 1905 was $416,611,448, of which $350,482,290 represented corn, $49,473,362 hay, and $16,655,796 Irish potatoes. To these should be added the values of wheat, $56,299,021; of oats, $26,413,956; of rye, $1,550,471; of tobacco, $35,021,641, and of rice, $12,285,834, which will bring the total to $548,182,371. In addition, the value of sugar products may be safely estimated at $25,000,000, of dairy products at $130,000,000, of poultry products at $150,000,000, of miscellaneous fruits and vegetables at $100,000,000, of live stock and miscellaneous products at $155,000,000. The value of all southern agricultural products in 1905 may be conservatively estimated, therefore, in round numbers, as follows:

Cotton, with seed	$685,000,000
Corn	350,400,000
Poultry products	150,000,000
Dairy products	130,000,000
Fruits and vegetables	100,000,000
Live-stock products	145,000,000
Wheat	56,300,000
Hay	49,500,000
Oats	26,400,000
Tobacco	35,000,000
Sugar	25,000,000
Irish potatoes	16,600,000
Sweet potatoes	16,500,000
Rice	12,300,000
Miscellaneous	10,000,000
Total	1,808,000,000

The total, $1,808,000,000, is the farm value of the products sold, and with the value of products consumed would approach a total of $2,000,000,000 as the value of the southern agricultural output last year, against $660,000,000 in 1880 and $773,000,000 in 1890.

It is not surprising that, with gross returns from farming operations of between $1,800,000,000 and $2,000,000,000, the increasing wealth of the South, clearly indicated in the fact that between 1892 and 1903, the latest year for which figures are available, deposits in national, State, savings, and private banks and loan and trust companies in the fourteen Southern States increased from $316,000,000 to $708,000,000, or by $392,000,000, is already being recorded in an increase in assessed values of property in one year of $400,000,000, which, with the usual proportion of assessed and true values that has prevailed in recent years, means an increase in true values in one year of at least $1,000,000,000.

Of course, agriculture is by no means the sole source of this increasing wealth, as the following figures show:

	1900.	1905.
Cotton mills:
Spindles	6,407,403	9,346,701
Bales consumed	1,597,112	2,215,674
Bituminous coal, short tons mined	49,048,059	70,600,000
Pig iron, long tons made	2,604,671	3,100,000
Petroleum:
Barrels produced	17,000,000	60,000,000
Railroad mileage	52,594	60,980

Since 1900 the output of southern coal mines has increased from 49,000,000 to 70,000,000 tons a year; its oil wells have increased their production from 17,000,000 to about 60,000,000 barrels; its furnaces are now turning out 3,100,000 tons of pig iron, against 2,600,000 tons in 1900; and its cotton mills, increasing as to their spindles from 6,400,000 to 9,300,000, consumed during the last season 2,215,000 bales, against 1,600,000 bales in 1900. Contributing immensely to the general advance, and at the same time consequent upon it, is the extension of railroads. The South is now rapidly increasing its railroad construction, and since 1900 has laid 8,386 miles, making its total mileage 60,980.

The close relation of the railroads to the growth of the South is probably in no way better illustrated than by statistics of the railroad business of that section. Taking the ton-mileage of the United States for a period of years, we have the following:

Year.	United States.	South Atlantic States.	Gulf and Mississippi Valley States.
	Tons.	Tons.	Tons.
1882	39,302,209,249	1,152,261,588	894,184,392
1890	79,192,985,125	3,921,778,157	3,618,298,877
1900	141,162,109,413	10,598,796,262	5,709,612,838
1904	173,613,762,130	13,964,627,573	7,626,175,159

Comparing the total for the South during these years with the rest of the United States, the figures are as follows:

Year.	Southern States.	United States, not including South.
	Tons.	Tons.
1882	2,046,445,980	37,255,763,269
1890	7,540,077,034	71,652,908,091
1900	16,308,409,100	124,853,700,313
1904	21,590,802,732	152,022,959,398

In 1882 the South had less than one-eighteenth as much as the rest of the country, in 1890 a fraction over one-tenth, in 1900 a little less than one-eighth, and in 1904 nearly one-seventh.

These figures show that while the total mile-tons of the railroads of the United States of 1904 was about four and a half times as great as in 1882, the mile-tons of the South in 1904 was more than ten times as great as in 1882.

Agriculture, mining, lumbering, and manufacturing, based upon these elemental industries, railroad construction, internal trade, and foreign commerce, added last year to the true wealth of the South at the rate of $2,750,000 a day. It would be difficult to give a correct estimate of the gross income of the South from all these energies, but with agriculture yielding at least $1,800,000,000 and manufacturing and mining a larger sum, an estimate of $4,000,000,000 as the gross income for 1905 would not be an exaggeration.

That the steady increase of southern earnings was reflected in an increase in assessed values of property of about $980,000,000 between 1900 and 1904 and of $400,000,000 in the past year shows that the South is spending its money in improving its condition in all directions. The earnings of 1905 will be likewise employed in betterment of farm homes within and without, in improving barns, in purchasing up-to-date machinery and implements, in making better fencing, in adding to stock, in enlarging manufacturing equipment, in constructing new schoolhouses, court-houses, and other public buildings in city, town, and country, in building good roads and up-to-date highways in the cities, in installing waterworks and sewerage systems, in extending railroads, and in wide diversity of other enterprises aided materially by southern financial institutions with better facilities than they ever enjoyed before. Manufacturers of many kinds, and investors of mind, money, or muscle in other parts of the country, will surely profit if they avail themselves of these opportunities in the South, and will participate in an emphasis of the truth that the development of the South means the enrichment of the nation.

The Clerk read as follows:

Total for library, Department of Agriculture, $25,880.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD a letter that I have just received bearing on the question of rural mail boxes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee moves to strike out the last word, and asks unanimous consent to insert a letter in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The letter is as follows:

HOWELL, MICH., April 28, 1906.

Hon. T. W. SIMS, M. C., Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I am pleased to note by the press that one lone Congressman, after years have flown, has had moral courage enough to attack the rural letter-box swindle.

It will take a breaking plow, a stump puller, and a steam dredge to uncover even a part of the iniquity in the development of this good public service, and no muck rake will be successful in exposing the tap-roots of its corruption, and I sincerely hope you may pull the stumps of arrogance, fraud, and deceit, even if it takes a few sticks of dynamite.

Three hardware dealers here were making excellent boxes for 75 cents to $1.50.

William Green, a wealthy farmer of Deerfield Township, told me that after they had all bought boxes they were ordered to go to Fenton and buy one of "fourteen accepted boxes approved by the Department."

Upon going there they found only four or five to select from, at prices from $2 to $3.50, and none any better than those already had.

He protested, because many of the poorer farmers could not afford to pay twice, nor to get unnecessary boxes no better than home industries produced.

I wrote a protest to the Department, and said while it might be proper for the Department to specify size, material, and general dimensions, that inasmuch as these boxes were paid for and owned by the people they ought to be allowed to buy where they could buy the cheapest or make them themselves.

In reply, I received a printed statement of law that if one mutilated a letter box he was subject to heavy fine and imprisonment.

I at once, October, 1901, wrote to President Roosevelt, stating the case and facts, and saying that "No Administration can hope to make itself popular with the American people when 4,000,000 to 6,000,000 farmers each believed himself robbed of $1 or $1.50 by a monopoly and graft established and promoted by the Government, and when every hardware dealer and tin shop in the country felt that it had been robbed of legitimate business by the same fraud."

I received a reply from Private Secretary Cortelyou that the matter would be brought to the attention of the President.

I later got the impression that the graft had been stopped and am surprised that it still exists in your country.

While this was going on, so-called examiners or inspectors went over the routes and made very obnoxious rulings and arbitrary directions in relation to moving posts (even "6 inches to confirm our authority"), and many were the people whose indignation at their treatment was great. One widow had a wooden box. The examiner said mail could not be delivered in it. She said: "Throw it on the grass." They said it will not be delivered. She dared them to carry it by, and the examiner told the carrier, "I guess you better deliver her mail and let her have her way," showing the elasticity of their scheme when trouble was likely.

Congressmen must have known of these almost universal doings, and I have always been surprised that some of them didn't use their influence with the Government in behalf of the people or expose the graft.

Some Congressmen took upon themselves all the credit of the origin and development of the system and that their own district was getting special favors and bought votes, so to say, under the false claim of their great influence, getting special favors (?) for the constituents of their own district, when the fact was that from Texas to Maine other districts were getting just as much as the Sixth district of Michigan.

I ran for Congress in 1902, and my attention was brought to proved cases where carriers were taking a poll of voters in a little book they carried as to whether voters were going to vote for Wood or Smith; also that in some places they were sticking my opponent's buttons on people's paper mail.

In the midst of the campaign I wrote, by registered mail, to the President protesting against such partisan iniquity, and received a reply that it would be investigated.

February following I wrote the Civil Service Commission.

April following an inspector called, six months too late to be of any value except to correct future evil. I suppose it was all dropped or whitewashed by the report.

But it was not always thus. I was a civil service clerk once. I heard a New York Congressman say to Col. J. F. Bates, superintendent of free delivery in Post-Office Department, when he was a member of a committee to select the large newspaper boxes for cities, "The people and Department want the best box—are entitled to the best. Mr. ——— box is the best, and moreover, Colonel, if you select the best box there will be no need for you to sit in a poor man's seat the rest of your life."

He was led out of the office and told never to return, and good, honest Colonel Bates died a poor man.

The people are entitled to the very best public service at the least possible fair cost and full and prompt report upon all public business.

Truth is inimitable, it does not change to suit circumstances and it exists regardless of the belief or unbelief of men.

Partisanship and government by party, life tenure, and organization of public officials to secure it and increase their own salaries are menaces to free institutions.

Parties are vehicles for the people to ride in, not to be ridden over; to get what they want, not to be coerced by absolutism in government.

Rules and system must prevail to secure public order, but the people are the Government, the people are the State, and public officials are their temporary public servants, and any sentiment that the people are granted favors is un-American, corrupt, illegal, and dangerous. Such suggestions from political charlatans lead to false conceptions and are a menace to future patriotism and present public good.

Favors imply that some receive beyond their deserts while others are denied their common rights. Equal treatment of all citizens before the law leads to just appreciation of the true principles of government and tends to satisfaction, content, pride in public service and affairs, and permanent patriotism.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, yours,

W. H. S. WOOD.

P. S.—Please send me copy of your speech.

W.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill and joint resolutions of the following titles:

H. R. 15334. An act to authorize the construction of dams and power stations on the Coosa River at Lock 2, Alabama;

H. J. Res. 145. Joint resolution for appointment of members of Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers; and

H. J. Res. 149. Joint resolution extending the thanks of Congress to Gen. Horace Porter.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 5811. An act to amend section 3646 of the Revised Statutes of the United States as amended by act of February 16, 1885, as amended by act of March 23, 1906.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

Nutrition investigations: To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to investigate and report upon the nutritive value of the various articles and commodities used for human food, with special suggestions of full, wholesome, and edible rations less wasteful and more economical than those in common use, including special investigations on the nutritive value and economy of the diet in public institutions; and the agricultural experiment stations are hereby authorized and directed to cooperate with the Secretary of Agriculture in carrying out said investigations in such manner and to such extent as may be warranted by a due regard to the varying conditions and needs of the respective States and Territories, and as may be mutually agreed upon; and the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized to require said stations to report to him the results of any such investigations which they may carry out, whether in cooperation with the said Secretary of Agriculture or otherwise, $20,000.

Mr. PERKINS. I wish to make a point of order upon the last section on the ground that it is not authorized by existing law. I would say that as I understand from the chairman of the committee this is one of the expenses that once begun forever continues. How many years have appropriations of this sort been made?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, appropriations for these nutrition investigations have been made ever since I have been chairman of the committee and, I think, for a year or two preceding that time—anyway, for ten or twelve years.

Mr. PERKINS. Very likely.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That item has been carried on the appropriation bill for at lease twelve years, and that is the only authority of law that there is for it.

Mr. PERKINS. That is it exactly.

Mr. WADSWORTH. And the question is whether it is subject to the point of order or not.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that if for twelve years these investigations with reference to wholesome articles of food have been made, we ought to have some results. It is certainly trifling to carry an appropriation like this year after year and year after year that furnishes a livelihood for a few employees, whose successors will be on the rolls a hundred years from now. I raise the point of order because I think it is a perpetual waste that is bringing us no valuable results.

Mr. ADAMS of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I should like to say just a word with reference to the point of order. This has been the law for a number of years, and under the operation of the law work has been carried on in this matter of nutritive investigation, which is really of vital importance, and in connection with that work the Department has been assisted by the various State experiment stations, and they are doing work of interest and of very great value. Now, I think the point of order is not good, because this work has been authorized for years by law. The work is in progress, and this simply provides for a continuation of the work.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to interrogate the gentleman from New York [Mr. PERKINS].

Mr. PERKINS. I shall be pleased to be interrogated.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman state his point of order?

Mr. PERKINS. The point of order is that the appropriation of $20,000 is made to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to investigate and report upon the value of various articles, as stated in the first part of the paragraph, and that such work has never been authorized by law. Appropriations have been made from year to year, but, as I understand the rule, no appropriations made in an appropriation bill amount to the creation of a law authorizing appropriations to be made in the future. They make the law for that one year, and no more. It was made last year, but it does not as a result of that become the law this year. That I understand to be the effect of the rulings of the Chair on these questions. If the point is a good one, I wish to make it.

Mr. BROOKS of Colorado. I should like to say a word on the point of order, if the Chair will hear me.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be glad to hear the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. BROOKS of Colorado. I submit that there is specific authority of law for this appropriation. The Chair will note that these items that we are now considering are under the head of the Office of Experiment Stations. Now, the Hatch Act, so called, establishing the experiment stations (I have sent for the act), specifically authorizes investigations in nutrition, in physiology, in food stuffs, and in all subjects allied to agriculture. This appropriation is under direct authority of the Hatch Act, because it is for the purpose of more fully carrying it into effect, and therefore can not be subject to the point of order which the gentleman raises. It is, I think, authorized by existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Colorado direct the attention of the Chair to the act?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have it here, Mr. Chairman, and will hand it to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. BROOKS of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I read from section 2 of the Hatch Act:

That it shall be the object and duty of said experiment stations to conduct original researches or verify experiments on the physiology of plants and animals.

Then a considerable number of other objects—

The chemical composition of manures, natural or artificial, with experiments designed to test their comparative effects on crops of different kinds; the adaptation and value of grasses and forage plants; the composition and digestibility of the different kinds of food for domestic animals; the scientific and economic questions involved in the production of butter and cheese; and such other researches or experiments bearing directly on the agricultural industry of the United States as may, in each case, be deemed advisable, having due regard for the varying conditions and needs of our respective States or Territories.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to have the gentleman from Colorado point out anything in that chapter authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to make any such investigations. Is it not limited to the experiment stations?

Mr. BROOKS of Colorado. I have not read the whole act, but I submit that this provision authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to do, through the experiment stations, and in cooperation with the experiment stations, the things specified in this item. I call the attention of the Chair to lines 9 and 10 of the bill, on page 50:

And the agricultural experiment stations are hereby authorized and directed to cooperate with the Secretary of Agriculture in carrying on such investigations.

And so forth.

Mr. Chairman, I read further from section 3 of the Hatch Act as to the point the Chair last mentioned. This act was passed when the Department was under the head of a commissioner, and by the act incorporating the Department all laws referring to the Commissioner are now made applicable to the Secretary of Agriculture:

That in order to secure, as far as practicable, uniformity of methods and results in the work of said stations it shall be the duty of the United States Commissioner of Agriculture to furnish forms, as far as practicable, for the tabulation of results of investigation or experiments; to indicate, from time to time, such lines of inquiry as to him shall seem most important; and, in general, to furnish such advice and assistance as will best promote the purposes of this act.

Mr. PERKINS. I would like to state, Mr. Chairman, that the purpose of this act, as stated, is only in reference to agriculture. Under the general authority it is claimed that the Secretary of Agriculture may, under this clause, investigate the nutritive value of various articles used for human food, with particular investigation into the various penal institutions. Certainly, Mr. Chairman, under the act that gives general authority to investigate questions of agriculture there can not be included the power to investigate, for instance, beef or mutton to be used for human food or in penal institutions. If you can cover that you can cover anything that might be required for the use of man or beast.

Mr. BROOKS of Colorado. I call the Chair's attention to the language of Mr. HULL, of Iowa, in the chair, in the first session of the Fifty-fourth Congress, which, though obiter, illustrates the proposition I am stating. There the point of order was raised against a provision in the bill providing for the publishing of dairy tests at the Columbian Exposition. It was held out of order because it was made by private parties; but the Chair states:

There can be no question as to the right of the Agricultural Committee to insert a clause requiring the Department of Agriculture to make the tests and publish the results.

Now, that kind of test was, it seems to me, identical in principle with the kind of test provided in this section. I refer again to the same decision to which I referred last night. The first session of the Fifty-seventh Congress, at page 4847, where upon the pure-food investigation and experiments Mr. CANNON made the point of order, and after a very elaborate discussion the point of order was overruled on the general authority of the act organizing the Department of Agriculture and outside of the Hatch Act entirely.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, this is a question of order, and its importance is far greater than the mere settlement of matters in the paragraph under consideration. The Hatch Act, as quoted by the gentleman from Colorado, provides for an investigation respecting the composition and digestibility of foods. This appropriation authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture or the experiment stations to investigate and report upon the nutritive qualities, not composition and digestibility, but the nutritive qualities of various articles and commodities used for human food, with special suggestion of full, wholesome, and edible rations, and to report, not upon the composition and digestibility, but upon the palatability and upon the nutritive qualities; and also upon the amount, upon the strength of the rations that the ordinary citizen of the country can best get along with. It involves a great deal more than is authorized by the Hatch Act. It is the law of the House that if a proposition contains more than is authorized by law, although it may be partly authorized, the whole provision must go out. I think there is no provision in the Hatch Act authorizing investigations respecting the nutritive quality of food or respecting the amount of food that a person should eat at any particular time, or respecting the edibility and procurement of edible rations less wasteful and more economical than those in common use. The Hatch Act had more relation to the healthfulness and wholesomeness of food. This relates to the economical features of the food question and the palatability aspect of it.

Mr. BROOKS of Colorado. I would like to ask the gentleman from Indiana a question, if he will permit.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I will be glad to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BROOKS of Colorado. The gentleman said, I think, there was no authority in the Hatch Act to make this line of investigation. I would like to ask the gentleman if he does not think the results of the investigation will be "useful and practical information on subjects connected with agriculture?"

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I do not. I think when we use the term "agriculture" in legislation it must be given its ordinary meaning. Agriculture means production from the soil.

It means production. It does not mean the marketing of products, and does not embrace questions of wholesomeness or palatability of food. It has no relation to questions of health, of the nutritive quality of that which is produced, or of what ought to be a fair-sized meal or an economical meal for the average citizen of the country. This provision goes far beyond anything contained in the Hatch Act.

Mr. PERKINS. The gentleman thinks that agriculture is not diet?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Is not diet.

Mr. BROOKS of Colorado. In this decision in the Fifty-seventh Congress the Chair distinctly held that "food matters were connected with agriculture in the widest sense of the term," and the Chair will remember that the original expression in the organic act was, "agriculture in the widest and most comprehensive sense of the term."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like a more definite idea in regard to the precedent than the gentleman has just proposed.

Mr. BROOKS of Colorado. It is in the first session of the Fifty-seventh Congress, at pages 4847 and 4848. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. POWERS] was in the chair. The point of order was made by Mr. CANNON on pure-food investigations in the Department of Agriculture, and upon that the Chair ruled that such work was connected with agriculture in the widest sense of the term.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I simply want to call attention to section 520, which I think also may cover this point, as follows:

> The general design and duties of which shall be to acquire and diffuse among the people of the United States useful information on subjects connected with agriculture, in the most general and most comprehensive sense of that word.

Certainly, according to the old saying, "All flesh is grass," food is an agricultural production, and investigation as to its nutritive qualities is in line with the general purpose of the Department.

Mr. PERKINS. Does the gentleman think that dyspepsia is an agricultural product?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

Mr. BROOKS of Colorado. The precedent is an important one. The matter directly under consideration is not important, but the limiting of the work of the Deparment in that way, the authority of Congress to legislate in the general appropriation bill would certainly be unfortunate.

Mr. ADAMS of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I would like the consent of the House to say a few words, and to ask my friend from New York [Mr. PERKINS] to withdraw his point of order, if I may be permitted.

Now, the reason for this kind of work is this: That it is well known to my friend from New York that men engaged in the business of raising stock, not only for the last ten years, but for a hundred years, have been studying the matter of a scientific ration—that is, to find out in Germany, England, and in this country and everywhere else what kind of food the farmer can give his cow, his horse, or his hog and not waste his food or his money. Now, in these nutrition investigations carried on by the experiment stations in the Department of Agriculture they are applying the same theory to the food used by the human race; and this work is important. It means an instruction to the American people, through careful and scientific experiment, as to what food they can most profitably and economically use. And I appeal to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PERKINS], because of the practical value of this work, to withdraw his point of order.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I would love to oblige my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. ADAMS], and if I thought his suggestions were accurate I certainly would withdraw my point of order. I have no desire to make a point of order that may be technically correct against work that I regard of actual value. But, as the gentleman truly said, for a hundred years they have been endeavoring to find out the value of these food products, and it is my belief that just as long as an appropriation of this sort is carried, which should finally result in some actual definite information, just so long we shall not have the information. If for twelve years we spend $20,000 a year for men to investigate, they certainly in the ordinary progress of science, if they are competent to do the work, and if they are willing to bring their work to an end, should tell us what is good and what is bad. We will never have a result so long as this Bureau is continued and the appropriation is made. So I must decline, with great regret, to withdraw my point of order.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield to a question?

Mr. PERKINS. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Has the gentleman examined the reports which have been made of this investigation?

Mr. PERKINS. No; I took the facts stated by the gentleman yesterday; when any branch of investigation was created, it was his experience it was never brought to an end. So stated the chairman of this very committee yesterday on this floor. He stated also that this particular appropriation has been made much longer than he remembers, and still we are appropriating and trying to find out. It is a very simple thing to find out the nutritive value of the articles used for human food. After they have been trying for twelve years, as I understand, they can not yet tell us the nutritive qualities of beef and mutton and pork and beans. I think when we have no result we might as well, for a while, take a rest.

Mr. ADAMS of Wisconsin. That is just exactly the point I want to make clear to my friend. Neither in one nor in five nor in ten years will all the problems of science be worked out to their perfection. We are making progress. You take this very matter of nutritive rations, the rations given to dairy cows. For twenty-five years the dairy judgment of the United States and the agricultural scientific judgment of the United States accepted the German ratio, which had been worked out in Germany, of five parts of carbon to one of nitrogen. Through the experiments that have been carried on at the experiment stations of the different States and at the Agricultural Department we have found that this is not the most profitable ratio. We find that less nitrogen is required, which is the most expensive part; and we have economized the forces which the farmers are constantly using to produce as cheap an article as possible, that not only may he make more money, but, finally, that the consumers of the United States shall get a cheaper food product. You can not work out this problem in one year or one century.

Mr. PERKINS. It seems to me, from the time they have taken to develop the telephone and the automobile, that they might have found the nutritive value of beef and chicken by this time.

Mr. ADAMS of Wisconsin. It took two thousand years to develop the telephone problem.

Mr. PERKINS. I did not know that the first application was made so far back.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York and myself are built somewhat on the same mold.

Mr. PERKINS. The gentleman does me great honor.

Mr. MANN. Well, I feel that I take great credit to myself in saying that. But I have very little hope of getting the gentleman to withdraw the point of order on that account. Still, I wish to say to the gentleman that in the course of the investigations which it has fallen to my lot to make in relation to pure food and food investigations I have had occasions to examine the reports and methods followed in this investigation.

I say to the gentleman that, so far as my judgment is concerned, there is no investigation carried on by the Government of more practical value than the investigation of the nutritive value of food. The gentleman assumes that they have not learned the nutritive value of beans and pork and beef. He can ascertain on an investigation of these matters there are far more important lessons to learn as to the different kinds of food. They never will be through investigating so long as food and people exist. Now, there is not a cooking school in this country—and there are thousands of them now in this country—there is not a cooking school in this country that does not receive and study carefully these reports of this investigation work.

Mr. PERKINS. As to the nutritive value of the articles?

Mr. MANN. That is the good part of the report. I see that the gentleman makes an objection because of the large expense. It differs from the great modern method. The gentleman from New York does the same thing in the change of judgment as to the foods used in the section from which he comes. Only a few years ago they used to eat pie for breakfast [great laughter] and now they eat breakfast food. It was not long ago when people coming from Rochester to my part of the country and asked what they wanted would ask for puddings and pies, and now they call for cereal foods. Why? Because it has been found by these investigations carried on by this Bureau that they are the best in building up the system rather than catering merely to the appetite.

Mr. PERKINS. I would reply to the gentleman that the Pilgrim Fathers, the men who made this country great, the men who are responsible in large part for its greatness and development, ate doughnuts and pie.

Mr. MANN. Yes; and they showed good judgment; and if we lived the same kind of lives that they lived I do not know but we could stand doughnuts and pie for breakfast.

Mr. WADSWORTH. And pickles.

Mr. MANN. But we do not live that kind of a life now. There is many a man and woman in this country who wakes up in the morning with a headache who does not know the reason why. It is because they are endeavoring to eat the kind of food which the gentleman would have the country eat. I will say to the gentleman frankly, after a good deal of study of this subject, that, in my judgment, there has been no work of the Government which has been of more practical value or that is made more use of throughout the country by people who are interested in the subject than this very investigation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule. The Chair may be permitted to say that it seems to the Chair a matter of regret that general legislation of this importance should be included year after year in these appropriation bills and that the question of continuing the work under them should finally be determined on a point of order. But, as the Chair indicated yesterday, when these points of order were raised, the Chair has no choice, but must follow the rules of the House.

In the judgment of the Chair there is no authority for this paragraph except that found under Title XII of the Revised Statutes. The Chair does not think that the law relating to experiment stations, to which the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BROOKS] called the attention of the Chair, has any force here. Now, section 520 of the Revised Statutes does give the Secretary of Agriculture authority to acquire and to diffuse among the people of the United States useful information on subjects connected with agriculture, in the most general and comprehensive sense of that word. That is a very broad and general authority. And yet it seems to the Chair that it can not be said that authority "to investigate and report upon the nutritive value of the various articles and commodities used for human food, with special suggestions of full, wholesome, and edible rations less wasteful and more economical than those in common use, including special investigations on the nutritive value and economy of the diet in public institutions," can be said to be useful information on subjects connected with agriculture, even in the most general and comprehensive sense of that word.

The Chair held yesterday that certain work provided for in this bill, namely, among other things, authority "to investigate the adulteration, false labeling or branding, and laws, regulations, and decisions relative thereto, of foods, condiments, beverages, and drugs, when deemed by the Secretary of Agriculture advisable," was subject to a point of order, and it seems to the Chair that portions of this paragraph are equally subject to the point of order. The Chair therefore sustains the point of order.

The Chair will say in this connection that the precedent which arose in the Fifty-seventh Congress, to which the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BROOKS] called the attention of the Chair, does not seem to be in point. While the case may be an analogous one, it is not a similar case. The Chair sustains the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Irrigation and drainage investigations: To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to investigate and report upon the laws of the States and Territories as affecting irrigation and the rights of appropriators and of riparian proprietors and institutions relating to irrigation and upon the use of irrigation waters, at home and abroad; with especial suggestions of the best methods for the utilization of irrigation waters in agriculture, and upon plans for the removal of seepage and surplus waters by drainage, and upon the use of different kinds of power and appliances for irrigation and drainage; and for the preparation, printing, and illustration of reports and bulletins on irrigation and drainage, including employment of labor in the city of Washington or elsewhere; and the agricultural experiment stations are hereby authorized and directed to cooperate with the Secretary of Agriculture in carrying out said investigations in such manner and to such extent as may be warranted by a due regard to the varying conditions and needs and laws of the respective States and Territories as may be mutually agreed upon, and all necessary expenses, $102,200, $5,000 of which amount, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be expended in making a drainage survey of the Neosho Valley, in the State of Kansas.

Mr. SIMS. I make the point of order against the following part of this paragraph:

Five thousand dollars of which amount, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be expended in making a drainage survey of the Neosho Valley, in the State of Kansas.

I regard that as new legislation, not authorized by law, and making a special provision in the act.

Mr. SCOTT. If the gentleman from Tennessee will reserve the point of order, I should like to be heard on it before the Chair passes upon it.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to waive it. I am willing, of course, that the gentleman shall make any statement he desires. I reserve the point of order.

Mr. SCOTT. I simply ask the Chair to give me his attention for a moment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] reserves the point of order.

Mr. SCOTT. I wish to direct the attention of the Chair to the fact that this is a limitation on an appropriation bill. It is certainly customary for the House in appropriation bills to direct that certain portions of a given appropriation shall be devoted to a given project, and, as I understand it, this is all that is done by this phrase.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the fact indicated by the gentleman from Kansas, but the object must be one already provided for by law, must it not? The Chair would like to know whether there is any authority in existing law for this project.

Mr. SCOTT. I think there is no question that there is authority in existing law for a project of this character. I do not claim that there is for this particular project, but I will call the attention of the Chair to section 520 of the Revised Statutes, in which this language is used:

SEC. 520. There shall be at the seat of government a Department of Agriculture, the general design and duties of which shall be to acquire and to diffuse among the people of the United States useful information on subjects connected with agriculture in the most general and comprehensive sense of that word, and to procure, propagate, and distribute among the people new and valuable seeds and plants.

It seems to me that this certainly gives to the Secretary of Agriculture authority to investigate drainage as well as irrigation problems. It is certainly as much a function of the Government to help the people grow crops on land that is too wet as upon lands that are too dry by nature. That is all that it intended to do by the work which the Department has carried on in the matter of drainage and in the investigation of draining propositions.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. SCOTT. Yes.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Does not the reclamation act, as it is generally termed, confer some authority upon the Secretary of Agriculture in irrigation matters.

Mr. SCOTT. I think not, as contemplated in the paragraph under consideration. Now, Mr. Chairman, the work of conducting drainage investigation has been proceeding under the direction of the Secretary of Agriculture for a great many years. There are now a number of projects under way upon which last year there was expended about $15,000.

The CHAIRMAN. Can the gentleman from Kansas indicate to the Chair any law under which that investigation is being carried on?

Mr. SCOTT. I think the investigations are being made under the general provision of the act establishing the Department.

The CHAIRMAN. But under no special law?

Mr. SCOTT. Under no special statute.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SCOTT. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think that an item in this bill making an appropriation to construct this drainage system would be subject to a point of order? Does the gentleman think there is any warrant in law by which we could appropriate a million or ten million dollars to do the work?

Mr. SCOTT. I do not think there is.

Mr. MANN. There not being any law for doing the work, how is there any law for making a survey to find out what it will cost?

Mr. SCOTT. Because by making the survey you diffuse useful information among the people of the United States and promote the interests of agriculture. That is what this statute provides.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no; it is not for the purpose of getting useful information throughout the United States. If there is no law for doing the work, I do not see how there is any law for making the survey.

Mr. SCOTT. I think it can hardly be maintained that because there is no authority of law for doing a given work by the United States that therefore no authority can be conferred showing the people how to do the work. The soil investigation and a great many other investigations are carried on by the different bureaus of this Department all in the direction of diffusing useful information, and yet no one would claim that the law would confer on the Department authority to go ahead and do the work which the bureau points out the way to do.

Mr. MANN. There is a project to drain the Dismal Swamp. Does the gentleman think that we would have a right on an agricultural appropriation bill to put in an item spending a hundred thousand dollars or a million dollars to investigate and find out how that was to be done without passing a law providing for it?

Mr. SCOTT. I think if it could be shown that the drainage survey of the Dismal Swamp would result in furnishing information to the people which would promote the interests of agriculture, that such work could be done under the authority of the general statute.

Mr. MANN. If there be general authority, then to give special authority is a change of law and absolutely makes it subject to a point of order.

Mr. SCOTT. I can not consent to that construction of it. It seems to me, as the chairman has just stated, that if the project is authorized by law then this phraseology simply places a limitation upon the appropriation.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. SCOTT] will allow me to make a statement in this matter, I believe the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] will withdraw his point of order.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I am quite willing that the gentleman should make his statement.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, the Department was spending $74,000 already for this kind of work, and it asks for an increase of $8,000. They estimated for that increase and came before the committee and made their statement. The committee really gave them an increase of over $30,000, and that is entirely sufficient to do the work in which the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] is interested and in which I am particularly interested myself. I am satisfied that none of us can be hurt by diverting this fund to the work in Kansas.

Mr. SIMS. Why is it that the committee is pointing out here a specific work where the money shall be expended.

Mr. LEVER. I admit the point of order is well taken.

Mr. SIMS. Is it not bad policy to establish such a precedent?

Mr. LEVER. So far as that is concerned, the bill is full of these specific directions.

Mr. SIMS. If the bill is full of such as that, I am sorry somebody did not notice it before I did.

Mr. LEVER. We had an instance of it yesterday in which we directed that a certain amount in the Bureau of Soils should be expended in the State of New York.

Mr. SIMS. I suppose no one made any point of order on it, and they were willing to accept it.

Mr. LEVER. That is very true, and for that reason we would like to treat the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. SCOTT] with equal fairness.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I should like to call the attention of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] to the facts stated in the hearings here which show that work precisely similar to that provided for in this appropriation is now being carried on. The engineer in charge of the drainage service is Mr. Elliott, and on page 795 of the hearings and on two or three succeeding pages he states that last year they had several such projects. One was that of making a drainage survey in Red River—the valley counties of North Dakota. They did similar work in the Kankakee Marsh, in the State of Indiana, and they also made similar investigations of the tidal coast lands of South Carolina with a view of benefiting the rice-growing industry in those lands, and if I cared to take the time I could show the gentleman a number of projects precisely similar to this which are now under way. I may as well say that this phraseology was inserted in the bill at my request, and I asked to have it done for the reason that for the past four or five years there have been very disastrous floods in the Neosho River Valley, destroying many millions of dollars' worth of property. The people have attempted to remedy that situation by building dikes and cutting canals, but their work has been done without expert advice. There is nobody in the State who is competent to give that advice. Consequently the money to a large extent has been wasted. At the same time it seemed to them and it seemed to me and to the committee that if these drainage experts could be sent there to make a drainage survey of that river they could make a report which would show the people living along the valley where to expend their money to the best possible advantage. It is not proposed to follow this up with a request that an appropriation be made to do the work. Nothing of that kind is expected or desired. We are perfectly willing to do the work and bear the expense ourselves, but we do believe that it is a proper function of the Government to send its experts to show us how to do the work with the least possible expense and the best results.

Mr. SIMS. Without this provision here could not the Secretary of Agriculture under his general authority do that very thing?

Mr. SCOTT. Undoubtedly.

Mr. SIMS. Then why distrust him on the merits of the proposition?

Mr. SCOTT. I do not think he regards the insertion of these words as in any way a reflection upon him or as conveying the idea of distrust of him.

Mr. SIMS. It must necessarily be that.

Mr. SCOTT. I can say frankly to the gentleman that I simply wanted to see to it that this project was done this year.

Mr. SIMS. But the gentleman is not willing to trust the Secretary of Agriculture unhampered by statute.

Mr. SCOTT. There may have been pressure on him to do other work in other parts of the country. The hearings brought out the fact that precisely similar projects were under way in other parts of the country, but the hearings also brought out the fact that they had been sufficiently concluded so that the money asked for in this respect could be diverted to a new project without interfering in any way with the prosecution of the work already under way.

Mr. SIMS. Why not increase the amount $5,000 and leave it to the Secretary?

Mr. SCOTT. Because the amount stated is all that is needed.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I would state to the gentleman that the committee did increase this item to meet this in the gentleman's absence.

Mr. SCOTT. I am informed by the chairman of the committee that during my absence the amount was increased to meet this item.

Mr. SIMS. Now, then, it comes right down to the point that the gentleman wants to put a legislative halter upon a Cabinet officer after having appropriated the money to do the work.

Mr. SCOTT. I think the gentleman will remember that that is very frequently done, and I trust that in asking that it be done in this case I am not violating any precedents or casting any reflection upon a Cabinet officer.

Mr. SIMS. I certainly have no objection to that work being done. The only objection I have is to point out and specifically require a certain amount of a general appropriation to be spent for a particular work that the whole country is not interested in. In other words, suppose I want a job of that kind, and I go to your committee, or another man does, and asks the same thing, the first thing you know the whole appropriation is specifically appropriated and nothing is left to the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. SCOTT. I simply repeat what I said, that this is a provision that is frequently inserted in appropriation bills, and the work is very important and so much desired that I very much hope the gentleman will withdraw the point of order.

Mr. SIMS. Do you not think all that will appeal to the Secretary of Agriculture?

Mr. SCOTT. Undoubtedly it will.

Mr. SIMS. Now, Mr. Chairman, it looks to me that is enough. There is no gentleman in the House for whom I have a higher regard than the gentleman from Kansas. I would like the best in the world to help him, but I see where it is going. We will all have these kind of things, and inasmuch as the case is so meritorious I am perfectly willing to trust the Secretary of Agriculture to do justice. Now, the chairman of this committee says the appropriation has been increased with this work specifically in view. Now, certainly after this discussion and statement on the floor of the House by the chairman himself the Secretary of Agriculture will so spend the money if the work is as represented, which I do not doubt.

Mr. SCOTT. I certainly would not ask the gentleman from Tennessee to withdraw the point of order as a personal matter, although I appreciate the expression of the gentleman's personal regard. I believe the point is not well taken, and will await the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. It seems to the Chair this is not a limitation upon an appropriation, but an affirmative limitation upon the judicial functions of the Secretary of Agriculture, and the Chair therefore sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Salaries, Office of Public Roads: One director, who shaall be a scientist and have charge of all scientific and technical work, $2,500; one chief of records, $1,800; one instrument maker, $1,200; one editorial clerk, $1,200; one clerk, class 1, $1,200; three clerks, at $1,000 each, $3,000; two clerks, at $720 each, $1,440; in all, $12,340.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the point of order on that paragraph, I would ask the gentleman whether there is authority of law for this director of roads?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Under the ruling of the Chair, I admit there is none.

Mr. MANN. Is there any authority for the next item in the bill, may I ask the gentleman?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The item you are reading now?

Mr. MANN. No; we have read the one creating the officials, and I do not know whether it would be fair to strike out the authority to do the work and leave the officials in, and that is the reason why I ask.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Under the ruling just made, Mr. Chairman, I concede that the whole item of public roads is subject to the point of order.

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman what is the value of this work? I think they built one public road once in my district for the benefit of some private parties——

Mr. WADSWORTH. The object of the appropriation, I think, is well stated in the paragraph on page 52:

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to make inquiries in regard to the systems of road management throughout the United States; to furnish expert advice on road building; to make investigations in regard to the best methods of road making, and the best kinds of road-making materials in the several States; to investigate the chemical and physical character of road materials; for the employment of local and special agents, clerks, assistants, and other labor required in the city of Washington and elsewhere; for collating, digesting, reporting, and illustrating the results of such investigations and experiments.

Mr. MANN. May I say to the gentleman from New York that reading the bill does not give any information as to what they are doing. If this work is accomplishing any good, very well; but my impression has been, I say to the gentleman, that the men who have been in charge of this work have been practically engaged in traveling around the country advertising themselves and not doing any actual work, and if I am mistaken about it I will be glad to know it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Let me say in answer to the gentleman from Illinois that the charge the gentleman makes perhaps had some ground of truth in it some months ago, but that has all been changed now, and the present head of the Bureau is a perfectly competent, honest man.

Mr. MANN. Then there is real reform there now?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think there is.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. MANN. Oh, well, I just reserved the point of order——

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], Mr. Chairman, that I know the Office of Public Roads of the Department of Agriculture has been doing some exceedingly valuable work, not only throughout the country, but especially at this particular time in North Carolina.

Mr. PERKINS. What particular thing has it done?

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. I will state to the gentleman.

Mr. PERKINS. What particular specific, valuable work is rendered?

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. The language of the bill indicates the scope of the work performed by the Public Roads Office. It is as follows:

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to make inquiries in regard to the systems of road management throughout the United States; to furnish expert advice on road building; to make investigations in regard to the best methods of road making, and the best kinds of road-making materials in the several States; to investigate the chemical and physical character of road materials; to collate, digest, report, and illustrate the results of such investigations and experiments, and to enable him to assist the agricultural colleges and experiment stations in disseminating information upon this subject—

Meaning the subject of public roads.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in reply to the question of the gentleman from New York [Mr. PERKINS] as to specific work, I do not know what has been done in other States, but I do know what has been done in North Carolina. Upon the request of the senior Senator from my State and myself, as Representative of my district, Mr. Page, who is a most efficient man and who is Director of the Office of Public Roads, sent down into my State a road expert. This road expert advised the citizens, who furnished the materials, in regard to the building of roads. He advised them with reference to the best character of materials to use and the best method of the improvement and construction of the road which runs from Magnolia, on the Atlantic Coast Line, to the county seat of the county of Duplin, Kenansville, and Mr. Page and this Office or Bureau of Roads are preparing to do most excellent work in other counties in that portion of North Carolina. There is no question but that Director Page is a most efficient man, and that his Office under his direction is doing most efficient work. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. PERKINS], I believe, and other Members of Congress as well as myself, are interested in this particular item, or should be. The building of good roads means the extension of the rural free delivery, quick transportation, easier access to markets, and it means a great many other things to the people who live in the country. It will be a mistake on a point of order or otherwise to let this item go out of the bill.

Mr. PERKINS. Now, is it possible that in the great State of North Carolina——

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Yes; it is a great State. I heartily concur in that observation.

Mr. PERKINS (continuing). There are no engineers, that there are no surveyors, that there are no persons to investigate, in behalf of the State, the building and construction of roads, and that they have to turn to Washington as their sole source of information. I know the gentleman is very tenacious about the rights of the States. I think the rights ought to also carry with them responsibility.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Well, I do not care to be diverted on the rights of the States. We can discuss that later; but I will say, in reply to the gentleman, that there are plenty of good engineers in North Carolina, and in New York, and in Illinois, but those engineers are not specialists, and when these experts——

Mr. PERKINS. I suppose——

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Just a moment. When these experts are sent down by Mr. Page, who is at the head of the bureau of good roads, to North Carolina, or to your State, or any other State, they go there to advise the local engineers, and they are directed to cooperate with them.

Mr. PERKINS. Yes; but it seems to me an engineer whose business it is to build a road either knows enough to build the road, in which case he needs no other assistant, or he does not know enough, in which case he ought not to be employed at all.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. It is not, I will say to the gentleman from New York, a question of building roads, with North Carolina or any other State, but it is a question of advice as to the best methods for the construction of the road and the best materials. I will illustrate this: The particular road to which I referred in my own district—from Magnolia to Kenansville—is being constructed by cooperation between the citizens and State and National governments. Mr. Page sent a road expert there. He was instructed to meet the representative of the State and county, and this Government road expert advised how to select the very best material for the construction of this road, which runs 10 or 12 miles from the railroad, out to the county seat.

The Agricultural Department, through the Office of Public Roads, besides furnishing an expert engineer to cooperate with and advise the State and county authorities and citizens as to materials and construction, also furnished some road machinery.

The citizens subscribed liberally to build the road, had public meetings, and took great interest in its construction, and did their part in every way.

The citizens furnished all the materials, labor, etc. The Government sent the expert and machinery—some machinery.

The expert's advice was very valuable in selection of materials.

Mr. PERKINS. If we had a man up our way, when we were building a public road, who would not be able to select good material, but would have to run somewhere else to get advice, we certainly would discharge him, and I think they would do the same in North Carolina.

Mr. MANN. If somebody else did not have to pay for it.

Mr. PERKINS. The public pays for it.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Well, if the public pays for it, this is a great public object. This small appropriation of $60,000 is not only for North Carolina, but applies to the whole country. I think it is something that the gentleman from New York is interested in as well as I am. While I am a States rights man, I feel justified in having the advantage of the advice of a Government expert as well as of the good engineers down in North Carolina in building good roads there and elsewhere.

Certainly there are few objects more important to farmers and those who live in the country than good roads. This item has been in the bill for many years, and results have been good. Now, in regard to the point of order, I think this is a continuation of a public work and public object, and therefore the paragraph would not be subject to the point of order. I hope, however, that the point of order will be withdrawn.

By leave of the House, and in extension of my remarks upon this subject, I submit the following statement of the work of the office of public roads, obtained from the Director:

During twelve years, since the establishment of the Office of Public Roads, the aggregate appropriation by Congress has been only $196,000. On this small appropriation the office has maintained a corps of engineers and experts, who have made comparative investigations into all known methods of road construction and all known road-making materials; have conducted careful tests and experiments for the purpose of discovering or providing substitutes for natural road materials which could be used for road building without excessive cost. The benefit of its investigations has been given to the general public in the way of engineering advice and expert supervision in the construction of approximately 100 object-lesson roads. All of these roads were built at local expense and served a most excellent purpose, the entire cost to the Federal Government being limited to salary and expenses of the engineer and expert. Road machinery was secured by the office in most cases from the manufacturers without cost to the Government. A road-material laboratory is maintained for the purpose of testing free of charge to citizens of the United States samples of road material. The value of this laboratory work is apparent when it is known that certain qualities are absolutely essential in a stone in order to make it suitable for road construction. The tests of the laboratory determine what material available is best suited for a particular road.

During the past year, with an appropriation of only $35,000, 21 object-lesson roads were built and much assistance was given to local communities in the form of lectures, advice to local officials, and by the dissemination of information through publications of the office.

At present object-lesson roads are being constructed in North Carolina, Alabama, Louisiana, Washington, Oregon, Maryland, Nebraska, Kentucky, Indiana, District of Columbia, North and South Dakota, and Montana. An example of the value of this work is that in Duplin County, N. C. The county officials did not feel that the county could afford to build hard roads, and they had tried, without success, to build other types of roads. An object-lesson road was constructed at Kenansville of sand and clay, mixed in the proper proportion,, which is proving a thorough success, the total cost being only $500 per mile. This short section of road has had the effect of inducing the local authorities to continue improving the roads of the county in the same manner.

Many special problems arise in carrying on the work, and discoveries are made which will undoubtedly have an important bearing upon the future of road building.

During the past summer experiments were conducted at Jackson, Tenn., in the use of oil and tar as road materials. Important results were obtained, justifying continuance of the experiments, and arrangements have been made whereby sections of road will be treated with oil and tar, in cooperation with the War Department, within the next few weeks. The results of these experiments may be far-reaching in prolonging the life of the ordinary macadam road and in satisfactorily disposing of the dust problem.

Vast areas of country in the Mississippi Delta and in the prairie region are destitute of natural road materials. The Office has been conducting experiments in burning clay or gumbo, with a view to its use as a hard substitute for rock. Results thus far obtained are gratifying, and it is hoped will have some effect in mitigating the conditions now prevailing in those sections of the country.

The sand-clay method of construction is being introduced by the Office in portions of the country where it can be successfully adopted and where hard roads are impracticable, and gratifying results have been achieved in North Carolina, Alabama, and Florida especially.

For some time past investigations have been carried on in the chemical laboratory of the Office of Public Roads on a number of problems the solving of which are of the utmost importance to the intelligent road builder. As a result of these investigations much valuable information has been obtained, which will in the near future undoubtedly help to perfect the methods now employed in road construction. As a result of the study of the effect of water on rock powders the direct cause of the cementing value of different road materials has been explained. This property is one of the most important factors in the life of a road, as upon it depends the preservation of the road proper from the destructive action of rain and wind. A good cementing rock will produce a clean, compact wearing surface, while one lacking in this respect will produce a loose surface, easily rutted and worn away.

It has been found, as a result of work done in this laboratory, that the cementing value of rocks which are ordinarily poor in this respect can be greatly increased by mixing in proper proportions with rocks of a different nature, and that the results obtained from thus blending the two materials may be increased to a point far beyond that of either separately. For instance, a granite whose cementing value was found to be 6, when mixed with a limestone whose cementing value was 20 gave a material whose cementing value reached 82, an increase of over four times that of the limestone alone and over seven times their common average.

In studying the decomposition of feldspars under the action of water the amount of potash liberated was found to be so great that the idea suggested itself of using the material as a fertilizer. Acting upon this suggestion, experiments have already been made in cooperation with the Bureau of Plant Industry upon tobacco plants, using the ground feldspar as a fertilizer, and up to the present time the results obtained have surpassed all expectations.

This Office is now engaged in collecting information from every county in the United States in regard to the mileage of improved and unimproved roads, the amount of cash tax, the number of men required to work upon the roads, the amount of bond issue which has been used for road improvement, and other information of a similar nature. This information is practically complete for a majority of the States, only the statistics for the States of Washington, Arizona, Arkansas, Oregon, and Virginia having been published up to the present time. The circulars for North Carolina, Alabama, and Iowa are now available. The total expenditures for the States named above, including the estimated cash value of the labor tax, for the year 1904, were as follows:

Washington	$1,436,070.19
Arizona	109,309.43
Arkansas	1,395,342.80
Oregon	796,375.97
Iowa	3,106,607.50
Alabama	1,576,434.27
Virginia	687,751.06
North Carolina	1,358,687.23

The percentages of roads which have been permanently improved in the States above named are as follows:

Washington	6
Arizona	4
Arkansas	7
Oregon	7.5
Iowa	1.7
Alabama	3.4
Virginia	3
North Carolina	2.5

The work of collecting this information has consumed about a year, and the expense has been about one-tenth of the total appropriation for the Office—that is, approximately, $5,000.

It is proposed to continue and enlarge this investigation next year by collecting information regarding the methods and cost of building roads throughout the United States.

The Office, through both foreign and domestic publications, uses every means possible to keep in touch with modern methods of road improvement and the testing of road materials, and has complete files of all reports and journals dealing with the subject, which are available to all road builders of the country.

Mr. MANN. Some years ago this department of the Agricultural Department came down into the district that I then represented to build a road. We certainly had many engineers in Chicago who would do it just as cheaply or cheaper than they did. It was of absolutely no value to anybody, except the people living on the road, and they did not want to pay for it. Now, it may be that this service is valuable. I do not know. I have never seen anything of it. I have read their reports, and their reports are silly, as a rule, as far as any value respecting building roads is concerned. In cities where they have engineers engaged in constructing a macadam or other kind of street, they do not need the service of any engineer from the Agricultural Department. The people of the country who have to work on the dirt roads do not need the services of these people over here. It may be in North Carolina, where they have plenty of material at hand, that they can build the roads. Road building is not a great problem.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. The gentleman from Illinois is criticising the past conditions in the Department here, and I think the points he makes are very well taken, as applying to the bureau of road inquiry several years ago.

Mr. MANN. I was just going to remark, for the benefit of my friend from Connecticut, I dislike very much to interfere with any work carried on by the Agricultural Department, which I think is the best Department of the Government, so far as work is concerned. And, so far as I am concerned, I am going to withdraw the point of order and allow this to go over for another year, and see whether this Bureau of the Agricultural Department will do any good. I hope the time will come when that will be taken out. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. I thank the gentleman.

The Clerk read as follows:

Public roads: To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to make inquiries in regard to the systems of road management throughout the United States; to furnish expert advice on road building; to make investigations in regard to the best methods of road making, and the best kinds of road making materials in the several States; to investigate the chemical and physical character of road materials; for the employment of local and special agents, clerks, assistants, and other labor required in the city of Washington and elsewhere; for collating, digesting, reporting, and illustrating the results of such investigations and experiments; for preparing, publishing, and distributing bulletins and reports; for rent and repairs of a building not to exceed $1,200; for necessary office fixtures and supplies, apparatus, and materials; telegraph and telephone service, traveling and other necessary expenses, and to enable him to assist the agricultural colleges and experiment stations in disseminating information on this subject, $47,660.

Total for Office of Public Roads, $60,000.

Total, Department of Agriculture, $7,040,460.

Mr. LLOYD. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee what connection there is between the Public Roads Inquiry department and the National Good Roads Association?

Mr. WADSWORTH. None whatever, that I know of.

Mr. LLOYD. Is it true that the National Good Roads Association has been announcing to the country that it does have connection with the Bureau of Public Roads Inquiry?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Not that I know of. I have never heard it and have never seen it in print.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. I think that is true; but it is an assumption on the part of the National Good Roads Association. The Department of Agriculture, the Secretary and Mr. Page, who has that work in charge, repudiates any connection with the National Good Roads Association.

Mr. LLOYD. That is exactly my information.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. The claim of the National Good Roads Association has brought discredit upon the work of the Department.

Mr. LLOYD. My purpose in calling attention to this matter was to draw out exactly what the gentleman from Connecticut says—that the National Good Roads Association has been claiming that it did have connection with the public road inquiry department, and the effect of it has been to discredit this branch of governmental work.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I answer the gentleman to the best of my knowledge. I had no knowledge that they had advertised themselves in that way at all.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. I wish to ask the gentleman from New York a question that I had intended to ask when the point of order was made, and I want to join with the gentleman from Connecticut in thanking the gentleman from Illinois for having withdrawn the point of order. Do you give to the Bureau of Public Roads the amount which the Department asks this year?

Mr. WADSWORTH. We do not give them the estimates; we raised the appropriation $10,000 over last year.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. I am glad to know it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I want to remind the Clerk to correct that total. It has been changed by the addition we have made to the Bureau of Plant Industry.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk does not make it. The Chair would state to the gentleman from New York that it is necessary that the changes be suggested.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Very well; let it be passed for the time being, and I will make the computation and give the correct figures.

The Clerk read as follows:

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to meet the emergency caused by the continued spread of the gypsy moth, $65,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated and made immediately available. And the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized to expend said appropriation by establishing a quarantine against such further spread in such manner as he shall deem best, in cooperation with the authorities of the different States concerned and with the State experiment stations.

Mr. PERKINS. I move to strike out the last word.

There seem to be two appropriations for the same thing here.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, if my colleague from New York will read these items, they explain themselves.

Mr. PERKINS. I have read them, but I do not understand them.

Mr. WADSWORTH. One of them is for the Bureau of Plant Industry:

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to meet the emergency caused by the continued spread of the Mexican cotton boll weevil in the Southern States by encouraging the diversification of crops, improved cultural methods, breeding of new cottons, and to study the diseases of cotton.

Now, under the Bureau of Entomology:

To study the habits and damage of the pest, the collection of data regarding its status, the study of parasites and diseases, the testing of remedies suggested, and the completion of experiments now under way.

Mr. PERKINS. It is not the same thing then?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Oh, no; one is under the Bureau of Plant Industry and the other is under the Bureau of Entomology.

Mr. PERKINS. I do not care about the bureaus, but do they do different work?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Absolutely. One treats absolutely of the cultural methods and the other of the parasites.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn.

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I made that motion, Mr. Chairman, for the purpose of begging the indulgence of the committee that I may make a statement concerning this paragraph which has just been read.

There was an understanding, while general debate on the bill was in progress, that I should be allowed one hour, but owing to the time occupied by the tariff speeches it was not possible for me to be granted any time. I therefore ask the unanimous consent of the committee that I be allowed to proceed for thirty minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROBERTS] asks unanimous consent to continue his remarks for thirty minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Chairman, as the result of bills introduced by me the Committee on Agriculture have incorporated in the pending measure an appropriation of $65,000 for establishing a quarantine against the further spread of the gypsy moth. This pest was not known in this country prior to 1868. It had been known in foreign countries for over a century prior to that time, and had ravaged extensive tracts of country in the European portion of the Eastern Hemisphere, doing immense damage.

In 1868 Prof. Leopold Trouvelotte, a distinguished French astronomer and scientist, residing at that time in the town of Medford, Mass., introduced some of these gypsy moths for the purpose of experimenting with them, with the idea of introducing a new silk worm into the United States. In the course of his experiments some of these moths escaped. It is not known definitely how, but it is thought that some of them escaped from the bushes upon which he was feeding them in his garden, by reason of a high windstorm which destroyed the netting he had over them. However it may have been, they escaped, and immediately upon the professor's becoming aware of that fact he notified the local authorities of the danger which menaced the community from the escape of these insects.

The people knew nothing of the insect or what it would probably do in the community, and little or no attention was paid to it.

For twenty years nothing was done to exterminate or in any way to control the spread of these insects. In that time it developed quite rapidly, and in 1888 it became such a serious menace and was doing so much damage in the town of Medford that the local authorities took the matter up, and in 1890 they brought it to the attention of the State legislature. In that year the State legislature began to appropriate money for the extermination of this pest.

Let me read briefly from a handbook issued by the State of Massachusetts in 1898 for the information and guidance of our citizens. That was some eight years after the State had commenced spending money to exterminate the pest. They say:

The gypsy moth destroys nearly every useful grass, plant, flower, shrub, garden or field crop, fruit, shade, or forest tree which grows in Massachusetts, and is a menace to the agriculture, horticulture, and forestry of the entire United States.

That was not an alarmist statement by any means, as will be seen if anybody will take the trouble to examine the document I have here, which is issued by the city of Medford, showing the conditions existing in that city resulting from the depredations of this moth.

Mr. JOHNSON. How does the moth extend itself?

Mr. ROBERTS. The moth extends itself largely by means of the automobile, carriages, freight trains, and such methods as that. I will come to that point a little later, if the gentleman will permit me.

The moth of itself does not spread rapidly, for the reason that the female bearing the eggs can not fly to any considerable distance. If the female moth attempts to leave the tree where she may be she comes to the ground within a distance of 100 or 200 feet. She can not fly off laterally, as can most moths that we know of. For that reason the spread of this moth has not been as rapid as has been the spread of other insect pests of that nature in the country. The danger, however, from this moth lies in the fact that it is omnivorous. As I have quoted from this pamphlet, it eats almost everything that grows in the State of Massachusetts. It was stated before the Committee on Agriculture, at the hearings held this year, by Professor Fernald, of the State Agricultural College of Massachusetts, who had been for years connected with the work of exterminating the gypsy moth in our State, that he had been in charge of the experiments carried on in connection with that work. His efforts were directed to ascertaining what the moth fed upon, and he found that it ate nearly everything that grew in our State. He says:

In regard to the destruction of this insect: Many of our insects feed on a single food plant, and they may destroy that one food plant; but here we have an insect that feeds upon about everything that comes along. I have a list of plants which he has fed upon in the State of Massachusetts, which reads as follows:

"Food plants of the gypsy moth: Apple, crab apple, pear, plum, cherry, quince, apricot, lime, pomegranate, peach.

"Grape, gooseberry, currant, strawberry.

"Rose, wild rose, woodbine, hydrangia, wisteria, umbrella tree, barberry, poison ivy, Japanese quince, lilac.

"Cabbage, dandelion, lettuce, celery, horse-radish, plantain, burdock, other weeds.

"Corn, herds grass, other grasses.

"Elm, linden, maple, poplar, balm of gilead, birch, beech, oak, ash, butternut, buttonwood, walnut, hickory, locust, sycamore.

"Horse chestnut, ironwood, English hawthorn, catalpa, willow, hop hornbean, hazlenut, witch-hazel, wild red cherry, wild black cherry, chokecherry.

"Spruce, pine, fir, larch, cedar.

"Cotton plant."

When we go through that list we have not much else in Massachusetts for them to feed upon. I will mention that my friend Mr. Kirkland, who was at that time in charge of the scientific part of the work under my direction, sent down into the South and had some fresh cotton plants sent North, and the caterpillars were put on that, and they ate the whole thing. I wonder what would be the result if this insect were allowed to spread and should get into the fields in the cotton belt.

This gypsy moth is unique in this respect, that it attacks coniferous trees, and one stripping of a coniferous tree means the death of that tree. It attacks the other kinds of trees as well, but the deciduous trees will stand two and sometimes three strippings and still live. Usually, however, the third stripping means the death of the tree.

The life habits of this insect are what make it so extremely dangerous when introduced into any community. That is owing to the fact that the female seeks the dark and obscure places in which to deposit her eggs. They do not deposit their eggs out in the open, like most moths, where they can be seen and easily destroyed. If they can find a place under the bark of a tree, if they can find a place under a loose stone or in the crevices of stone walls, or get under a dead and rotten tree, there they will deposit their eggs. They not only deposit eggs there, but in thickly infested districts they swarm over the houses and outbuildings and deposit their eggs under the steps, under the clapboards, and in all places that are dark and out of the way. This fondness for the darkness makes it extremely difficult to hunt up and destroy its eggs while the insect is in that stage of development. The greatest periods of danger of spread of this moth are of course while they are in the moth and caterpillar stages. These eggs hatch out in April and May; they are beginning in the infested districts to be hatched out at the present time.

As soon as the eggs are hatched the little caterpillars begin to feed on everything they come to, and when they have eaten all the foliage on the tree upon which they may have been hatched they move down on the ground and eat the growing crops. Prof. A. H. Kirkland, the director of the gypsy moth work in Massachusetts, says:

There are many cases where the moth has multiplied in woodlands and orchards, and run out of food, and then it comes down to the garden crops, and then to the grass, and makes a clean sweep wherever it goes. This last summer I knew of a market gardener who lost his entire crop from the moths from the woodland near by. They increased and multiplied in there until they simply boiled over and took his entire crop. That was on Mr. Charles Cummings's property in Burlington, Mass.

The next stage is the pupal, in which the caterpillar goes into the chrysalis form, from which it emerges as a moth again. There is danger of the pest spreading when in all its forms, but it is more likely to be carried from one section of the country to another when in the egg, caterpillar, and moth periods. When the eggs have been deposited you have the nucleus of a new colony, the growth of which will be rather slow at first, but they will increase with alarming rapidity. The eggs are laid in clusters of about 500 during the months of July and August and do not hatch until the following April or May. In this form the liability of a further distribution of the moth is quite serious. Prof. H. G. Wheeler, representing all the agricultural organizations of Rhode Island, including the State board of agriculture, says:

We have at the present time, I have been told within two or three days, a lot of lumber which was shipped in from Massachusetts, and this lumber is covered, I was informed, with the egg clusters of the gypsy moth, and they will hatch out in the spring and start out on their travels if we are not successful in exterminating them.

So that you will see that the menace is not only from the automobile, but it also comes from other materials which are shipped from the infested region; and, furthermore, they have a custom of sidetracking cars in Massachusetts occasionally, and they are shipped out to other States, going all over the Union, and unless every car which goes out is examined there will be continual danger of this pest being carried. Now, I fear that our appropriation is not large enough to bring about the extermination of this moth, but we intend as far as possible to draw a line around the infested area and try to keep it within its limits, and also to try to have an inspection around each railway station. Railway stations are likely to be centers of infection. We feel in Rhode Island that the thing is liable to be carried at any moment by means of the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad, and by the large number of automobiles passing through our State, into Connecticut and New Jersey. From our standpoint the reasonable proposition seems to be to establish if possible a quarantine line.

When the young caterpillars emerge from the egg clusters they crawl about in search of food. At this time they can exist for a week or more without food and may and often do wander a hundred feet from the place of birth before they commence feeding. As soon as they are hatched these tiny insects begin spinning a silken thread, and while thus suspended they are blown from place to place by the wind, and, falling upon passing vehicles, are conveyed to distant places, there to found a new source of trouble and damage. Testimony is abundant and conclusive that the gypsy moth has been widely spread in Massachusetts in this way. About the 1st of July the caterpillars pupate and remain in the pupal state a little over two weeks, when the moths begin to appear, the males a few days in advance of the females. If nature had endowed the female with the same ability to fly as the male, it would be impossible to prevent the rapid spread of this pest over the entire eastern portion of the United States, but while she has well-developed wings she is either too heavy with eggs or else too weak to fly. Concerning the spreading of the moth, I beg to quote from the Massachusetts Crop Report for July, 1904, issued by the State board of agriculture, as follows:

We have spoken of the natural spreading of the pest, but the artificial distribution by the insects falling on teams and other vehicles is much more important. Teams passing under infested trees early in the spring, or even when the caterpillars are half grown or more, take on a number of these accidental insect passengers and transport them from place to place. In this way the moth has become thoroughly distributed along the main lines of travel. Wood roads and other places much frequented by the public are also generally infested. The grounds around Bunker Hill Monument and at Mount Auburn Cemetery are two localities which remain infested from year to year, and which well illustrate the point. However severe the suffering and loss which have occurred in recent years in the metropolitan district, it is not to be compared in its economic significance with that which will result through the spreading of the moth into noninfested areas. Large colonies such as now exist in Arlington, Medford, or Malden continually menace not only the territory immediately contiguous, but also the towns and cities lying along the lines of travel which pass through these regions. The writer has repeatedly found the caterpillars on his team after a day spent in the moth colonies. Several people have reported finding the gypsy moth caterpillars in electric cars. At the Oak Grove station on the Boston and Maine Railroad the caterpillars literally have hung in festoons, under which it was practically impossible for passengers to walk without picking up one or more caterpillars. Dr. L. C. Jones, of Malden, an observant naturalist as well as a skilled physician, informs the writer that he has seen female moths in considerable numbers laying their eggs on trucks and sides of freight cars at the Oak Grove station. These few facts, taken at random from a large number of authentic instances, show the means by which the moth is spreading from the neglected colonies and portend a wide distribution of the insect in the course of a few years.

I started to tell the committee a moment ago that the State of Massachusetts began this work of extermination in 1890. They carried on that work every year until the 1st of February in the year 1900, and during that time the State expended out of the public treasury nearly a million and a quarter of dollars, and succeeded in reducing this pest to a comparatively small area. When the work ceased in 1900 the gypsy moth was found in an area of only about 350 square miles. The work was not taken up again in Massachusetts until last year, 1905, and when it was taken up it was found that between the 1st of February, 1900, and the year 1905, a period of about five years, these pests had extended over an area of 2,224 square miles. Not only had they spread from 350 square miles to 2,224 square miles in the State of Massachusetts, but they were also found to be in the State of Rhode Island and in the State of New Hampshire, and it is believed they are in the State of Maine. Since the entymologists of the New England States appeared before the Committee on Agriculture I have seen a statement in the press that gypsy moths have appeared in Connecticut along the line of the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad, showing they are spreading more rapidly now than they did in the decade from 1890 to 1900. The scientific men attribute this great and rapid spread to the large increase in the number of automobiles which are traveling about the country and which go through these infested districts taking the moths in the caterpillar state along with them and depositing them in these remote sections. But as I have before indicated, that is not the only method by which these moths are transmitted. In this connection I desire to call the attention of the committee to a communication received by Professor Marlatt, Acting Chief of the Division of Entomology, since the agricultural bill has been under discussion. It is from C. Abbott Davis, the curator of the Roger Williams Park Museum in the city of Providence, R. I., and is as follows:

ROGER WILLIAMS PARK MUSEUM,
Providence, R. I., April 21, 1906.

MR. C. L. MARLATT.

DEAR SIR: A short time ago Professor Stene, of Kingston College, and myself began a systematic survey of the gypsy moth districts to see if they were spreading. We hunted up and found the map made by Mr. James M. Southwick, and have discovered startling facts. They have spread over Ward 6 till they are within one block of Roger Williams Park. They are on all the principal avenues of the west side, are known to be in six out of ten wards, and may be in the others. We got a $5,100 appropriation pushed through at the last session of the State legislature, and are now at work on the city council for an additional sum. The United States Government ought to help also, as they are within one-half mile of the docks and will be carried all over the Atlantic coast by our ships. Professor Kirkland says that they have been carried to Connecticut from here on the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad, whose track is badly infested at several places. They will be spread all over Rhode Island by the automobiles, as they are along Elmwood avenue, Cranston street, Broad street, Broadway, and Westminster. My time will probably be devoted to trying to save our parks. If you can come on now it will do a lot of good, and try to impress on the authorities that the gypsies are spreading rapidly toward New York and Washington. Special appeals will be made directly to Senator ALDRICH and President Roosevelt by the State League of Improvement Associations and others. We begin work Monday here on Roger Williams Park and surrounding orchards, but have little money to work with.

Respectfully, C. ABBOTT DAVIS, Curator.

Now, for the eleven years that the State of Massachusetts was at work on this problem we were trying to hold the moth within the limits in which it appeared, and we were also trying to exterminate it within those limits, and, as I have stated, we expended nearly a million and a quarter of dollars of our own money in that effort; but in spite of all the money we spent, in spite of all the care we exercised to prevent the spread of these moths they got outside of those limits and into the adjoining States, and they are probably spreading from day to day now. It is not at all improbable that there may be colonies of these moths now located in New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, and all that tier of States lying to the west of the New England States. When they first make their appearance they do not attract particular attention, because they have not developed to a sufficient extent to become a nuisance, but having been once established they, growing like a wave rolling in from the sea, increase every moment until the first thing the people of the vicinity know there is an outbreak of this pest, and it is firmly established in their midst, only to be controlled by great effort and the expenditure of vast sums of money. If this pest finds lodgment in the forest regions of this country, it is impossible to calculate the amount of damage that will ensue, largely because of the difficulty of combating it and the great labor and expense of controlling or exterminating these insects.

The liberal expenditures of Massachusetts, aggregating more than a million and a half of dollars, spent and being expended, does not by any means measure the cost to the State and her citizens of their fight against the gypsy moth pest. Professor Marlatt, in Circular No. 58, issued by the Bureau of Entomology in July, 1904, estimates that in the two preceding years there was an expenditure by individuals aggregating $200,000 annually. He says:

The amount expended during the last two years in such work of control, judging from careful inquiry and estimate, probably almost equals the amount expended by the State during the years of its most active operations against the gypsy moth, namely, approaching $200,000. A single individual, Gen. S. C. Lawrence, has, for the last three years, had a large force of men working on certain gypsy moth colonies in his own and adjoining forest lands, expending each year, as he assures the writer, more than the actual value of the lands. Hundreds of individuals in each town have expended sums ranging from $10 to $100 in the control of the gypsy and brown-tail moths. Nearly every town corporation has made expenditures of from a few hundred dollars to several thousand dollars for the same purpose. A number of experts, or foresters, have gone into the business of clearing the premises of individuals of gypsy and brown-tail moths, and find constant employment for considerable forces of men. In general this work is excellently done.

I think his estimate is very conservative, and it is beyond question that the annual outlay by municipalities and individuals has enormously increased since his report was made.

There is something very singular with regard to insect pests.

INTRODUCED PESTS THE MOST NOXIOUS.

Experience shows that pests introduced into a foreign country congenial to them are far more destructive than in their native home.

THE SAN JOSE SCALE.

The San Jose, or "pernicious," scale was introduced into this country in 1870. Though scarcely noticed as a pest in foreign lands, it has already developed frightful capacity for injury here.

THE COTTON WORM.

The cotton worm, an introduced native of Mexico and the West Indies, and not especially noxious there, has ravaged the cotton crop of this country nearly every year since 1825, and has caused in the United States a recent average loss of from twenty-five to fifty million dollars a year.

HUNDREDS OF MILLIONS OF DOLLARS WASTED.

The grape phylloxera, a native of this country, has never been considered here a serious pest. Introduced into France some thirty years ago it nearly destroyed the entire grape industry of southern France. Extending to Portugal, it destroyed the livelihood of many thousands of people. They, emigrating to Brazil, carried the pest there, and it is to-day as great a scourge in Brazil as in Portugal or France. It has also been introduced into other countries, notably Spain, South Africa, and Australia, where it has become a plague of the first magnitude. It has cost France hundreds of millions of dollars, and the people are still fighting it at a heavy cost. The Governments of Germany and Russia, profiting by the experience of France, have wisely adopted energetic measures to stamp it out wherever it appeared, and it has made no headway in these two countries.

I stated these pests were known in European countries since 1752, and that they have done great damage in various sections of Europe. In this same handbook, from which I quoted a moment ago, there appear many extracts showing what has been observed concerning them by the scientists of various countries, from which I quote:

EUROPEAN RAVAGES.

Insects have been scientifically named only since 1758, and therefore their ravages before that date can not always with certainty be ascribed to any definite species. Since then, however, the recorded observations of competent observers show that the gypsy moth has appeared in enormous and destructive numbers in some part of Europe nearly every year. The following, selected from among many other definite records, will give a fair idea of the destructiveness of the gypsy moth in Europe:

THE PEST OF THE FRUIT GARDEN.

1752.—From an account of gypsy-moth ravages, by Jacob C. Schäffer:

"The quick increase and great harmfulness of some sorts of caterpillars were already known to me, * * * but alas, all the ideas which I had entertained heretofore were as nothing to the spectacle which my eyes now beheld; I found, not only in many places in Saxony, but in Zeitz, Altenburg, Naumburg, Sangerhausen, and other counties, that the trees in gardens and vineyards, the bushes in fields, yes, even whole forests, were stripped of their leaves. The branches and limbs were thickly covered with caterpillars instead of leaves, and the caterpillars also lay in hosts upon the ground."

1781.—From C. G. Rimrod, pastor of Quenstedt, in the dukedom of Mansfeld, Germany:

"In the beginning of July, on returning home from a week's absence, I found my whole orchard presenting a winter's appearance in the middle of summer; the white linen hung out to dry in the yard was entirely blackened by the caterpillars. * * * The caterpillar which has thus devastated the fruit trees in my neighborhood and destroyed the hopes of our orchardists is no new monster in nature (but well known). * * * I see nothing which can reconcile the gardener or economist to this hateful insect."

1794.—Panzer (Germany) says:

"These caterpillars appeared for many years in phenomenally frightful numbers, and destroyed our fruit trees, to the utmost misfortune of their owners."

1804.—"On account of its large broods and great voracity the gypsy moth is a formidable insect, against which very active measures must be taken. Linnæus calls it the pest of the fruit garden." (Bechstein, Leipzig.)

EXTREME DEVASTATION OF FOREST TREES AND CROPS.

1817.—"The fine cork oaks which extend from Barbaste to Podenas (France) are completely devastated by the caterpillars of the gypsy moth, which have destroyed not only the leaves, but the acorns. This sort of caterpillar is not at all particular about its food, but is satisfied with anything, feeding, indeed, on nearly everything that possesses leaves. It has attacked our corn and millet, our pastures, our few vines, and our fruit trees in general. The houses near infested places are filled with insects, and can no longer furnish the unfortunate owners with dwelling places." (From French journals of the time, quoted by Prof. E. Henry and others.)

1828.—Daudeville, speaking of the gypsy moth, says that over one district (near St. Quentin, France) of about 60 square miles "the insatiable insects stripped the trees bare as in winter, and attacked not only the leaves, but the buds, blossoms, and fruit of the trees, and, as a result, many trees died."

1837–1839, 1842.—"The gypsy moth completely devastated in three years a region around Toulouse of about 230 square miles [about the extent of the whole region in Massachusetts which has so far been infested by the gypsy moth]. The hosts of caterpillars at this time made, in feeding, an ominous noise, plainly audible from a distance." (Joly.)

ENORMOUS HORDES—TREES KILLED.

1851–1853.—Abstract of account of Doctor Gerstäcker, Germany:

"Of destructive caterpillars this caterpillar may be mentioned first as being the largest and most ravenous. I know of instances in which many trees—beeches and others—have died from the effects of its ravages. In the great devastation of the Zoological Gardens at Berlin in 1851–1853, the gypsy moth caterpillar attacked all sorts of trees and shrubs, both native and foreign."

1852.—A vast army of gypsy moth caterpillars, having stripped the foliage from the trees in the provinces of Kazan, Kishenev, and Ekaterin, betook themselves to the young shoots and completely ruined many trees. (Keppen, Russia.)

1861.—Gypsy moths were seen marching in armies from the mountains of Majorca, the trees of which, including evergreens, they had completely stripped. (Homeyer.)

1868.—The gypsy moth every year causes much damage, and in certain cases it becomes a veritable plague to agriculture. (Blanchard, Paris.)

1867–1869.—In the provinces of Kazan, Samara, and Pensa (Russia), forests, orchards, nurseries, and gardens suffered a most shocking devastation by the caterpillars, whose numbers were frightful to contemplate. By June great forests looked bare as in winter, and in places the gypsy caterpillars, dying from starvation, formed putrid masses which the police were forced to order removed. (Keppen.)

1869.—So numerous were the caterpillars of the gypsy moth that no tree or shrub was spared; they all stood leafless, pointing their bare branches like fingers of warning at the beholder, as if they begged for his protection against such a destructive enemy. (Ratzeburg, Germany, in Die Waldwerderber.)

1871.—These caterpillars stripped the forests of Chianti, Italy, to an extent and with a severity that was frightful. Many of the oaks were destroyed. (Appelle Del.)

1871.—The gypsy-moth caterpillar not unfrequently appears in the Crimea in enormous hordes. During 1871 it nearly destroyed the gardens of the Crimea. (Porchinsky.)

1872.—The damage done by the gypsy moth in 1872 was great in Sarne, province of Posen, especially so among the fruit trees, of which many died. (Pabst, Germany.)

1878.—The caterpillars so abounded in the vicinity of Zmiev, Russia, that in migrating from one forest to another they marched over and literally covered the walls of the houses lying in their way. (Yaroschev.)

VAST REGIONS OVERRUN.

1879–80.—Nine provinces of Russia (covering a territory as extensive as all our Atlantic coast States, from Maine to Florida, inclusive) were overrun by the gypsy moth in 1879–80. (Gazen and other authorities.)

1880.—The gypsy moth caused the complete failure of the chestnut crop about Florence. 1882.—It stripped the forests of northern Italy. 1883–1889.—It devastated the woods of Tuscany. The gypsy moth is at times a veritable scourge in Italy. (Antonio Alio.)

1890.—In the forest of Perlacher, Germany, the number of caterpillars massed on the tree trunks bordered on the infinite. The ground was literally covered to a considerable depth with the manure constantly dropped by the caterpillars. (Eckstein.)

DRIVEN FROM THEIR HOMES.

1891.—In and about the park adjoining the Royal School of Agriculture the invading gypsy-moth caterpillars, having eaten the forest leaves, went to the gardens, grasses, herbs, and hedges, and even into houses, filling every crevice, climbing to the roofs, compelling the inhabitants to leave their homes. (From Bulletin No. 12 of the Royal Superior School of Agriculture, Portici, Italy.)

1891–92.—In the government of Warsaw, Poland, the gypsy moth appeared in immense numbers. The fruit trees of Warsaw were so injured that they bore no fruit. (Nasonov.)

1893.—It is hardly possible to enumerate here all the plants that the gypsy-moth caterpillar eats. This caterpillar feeds on almost all leaf-bearing trees, and even on evergreens, and is the arch enemy of horticulture. (Doctors Judsich and Nitsche, Germany.)

1895.—When the gypsy-moth caterpillars have eaten bare the forest trees * * * they move to the fields of grain, destroying oats, barley, and wheat. Considering their voracity and large size, it is easy to see the immense damage they cause in the foliage of trees when appearing in such enormous numbers, as was the case in 1894. (K. E. Lindeman, Russia.)

1897.—The latest official information at hand indicates that about a million acres of Government forest in Russia are now overrun by the gypsy moth, exclusive of the infestation of private holdings, which must be of vast extent.

You will notice that in 1891 in Italy these moths became so numerous that they drove the people from their homes. That is not an exaggeration, because we have had that same condition of affairs in Massachusetts. These caterpillars have swarmed about residences in such numbers that people have been obliged to move. They have depreciated the value of real estate, for people would not live in houses that were in these infected districts on account of the terrible nuisance of these caterpillars, which crawled over the house, into the doors and windows, even getting into the beds, and were an unendurable nuisance generally. Professor Kirkland said before the Committee on Agriculture:

The amount of harm done was simply tremendous. Real estate was made unrentable and in some places unsalable. Mortgages were foreclosed on property because tenants could not be found for it, and the havoc wrought in fruit and shade trees has been pitiful.

The State of Massachusetts has heretofore called the attention of the National Government to the conditions existing there with regard to the gypsy moth, but nothing has been done. In 1898 the legislature memorialized Congress, but the matter received no attention here. Again, last year a bill was introduced by me providing for some national assistance. As a result of that effort the agricultural appropriation bill of 1905 carried a provision of $2,500 for the investigation and introduction of parasites and other natural enemies of the gypsy and brown-tail moths. At the same time the State of Massachusetts had an appropriation of $10,000 a year running for three years—1905-6-7—for the same purpose, and out of that $10,000 appropriated by the State of Massachusetts $5,000 was set aside to be expended under the direction of Professor Howard, head of the Bureau of Entomology of the Department of Agriculture. Professor Howard went abroad himself, if I am not mistaken, and found what were thought to be parasites of the gypsy moth, and with the money of the State of Massachusetts brought over a number of those parasites, which are now being propagated in Massachusetts at the expense of the State, so that up to the present time all that the National Government has done in this regard has been to pay, out of an appropriation of $2,500, the bare traveling expenses of one of its scientists to make this investigation—the cost of collecting, transporting, and propagating the supposed parasites being borne wholly by the State of Massachusetts. But the State of Massachusetts did not stop with the appropriation of $10,000 a year. The same act which made that appropriation went further. It declared by statute law the gypsy moth to be a public nuisance and appropriated $75,000 for the year 1905, $150,000 for the year 1906, and $75,000 for the year 1907 for the purpose of extermination and control, this being in addition to the $10,000 a year for three years for parasite work, making $330,000 that the State of Massachusetts had obligated and is now herself expending in the attempt not only to exterminate this pest within her own borders, but to prevent its spread to the other States of the Union.

That act of 1905 was the most comprehensive and the most far-reaching that our State had ever enacted with regard to this insect. It declared the gypsy and brown-tail moths to be a public nuisance, and provided that communities and individuals must suppress the nuisance. If they do not suppress it, then there are provisions in the statute for public officials to go onto the premises, do the work, and charge up the cost to the owner, the expense to be collected in the form of taxes and to constitute a lien upon the land. There are also provisions in the law compelling the local communities to take this work in hand, dividing them into three classes, according to their wealth, and providing that when they shall have expended a certain amount of money in any given year on this work they shall be reimbursed by the State a certain percentage of all expenditures over that amount. A grave difficulty has developed in handling this question of extermination. The moths get into a woodland lot. The wood and the land itself are not particularly valuable, yet for the owner to undertake to exterminate the pest would cost more than the value of his land. Now, that statement is not at all an exaggerated one, because right in the city of Medford, which issues this pamphlet to which I have before referred, one public-spirited citizen, who happens to be a very wealthy man, endeavored to combat the gypsy moth, which attacked his premises. He has, I am informed, spent $70,000 already on that work, and he has not succeeded yet in fully exterminating them. He made the statement to Professor Marlatt, who was sent up to Massachusetts at my request in 1904 to investigate the spread of this insect, that he was paying out annually in his effort to exterminate the moth more than the value of his land. With that condition of affairs it can be readily seen how difficult it is to stop the spread of such an insect as that, because not all the people owning property attacked by it are millionaires or in a position to expend annually more than the value of their land in their effort to prevent the further spread of this plague. What we are asking the National Government to do is to assist us along the lines of quarantine work. We want the National Government to come in and draw a quarantine line around these infected areas wherever they appear in the various States, prevent the further spread of the insect, and leave us to fight it inside of that quarantine. And we think we are not making an unreasonable request; that we are not asking the Government to do something which it has not done under almost similar conditions, but in another line of the work of the Department of Agriculture.

You will all remember that about three years ago there was an outbreak of the foot-and-mouth disease in the vicinity of Boston. The Department of Agriculture, through its agents, came in and established a quarantine to prevent the further spread of the disease. But they did not stop there. They did something we are not asking the Department to do. They went inside of our quarantine lines, they went to the barns and the pastures of the farmers and dairymen within that region and slaughtered every animal they thought was infected with this foot-and-mouth disease.

They came right in there and took that work in charge and effectively stamped it out. Now, if for the protection of the animal industries of this country the Government can go in, as it does go in, to different localities and quarantines against further spread and also stamps out the disease within the infected area, why should not the Government step in when a serious pest like the gypsy moth threatens the whole of the United States—threatens every agricultural interest in the entire country.

I stated a moment ago that these insects eat everything that grows in the State of Massachusetts. They do, with one exception. They seem to have the discrimination not to eat the onion, but they eat every other plant, every other vegetable, every other tree. There is no end to what they will eat, and an effort was made to find out some of the things they would feed on growing outside of the State of Massachusetts. The scientists conducting these experiments sent down into the Southern States, had some cotton plants brought up with the cotton in the boll, if that is the proper term, put these insects upon the cotton plant, and they ate up everything, boll, leaves, stems, and everything that could be eaten about those cotton plants.

Our friends from the South think they are having great trouble with the Mexican cotton-boll weevil. I want them to consider what the effect would be if these gypsy moths were carried into the cotton belt, as is more than likely if their further spread is not checked. As to the imminence of that danger, I refer you to the letter from Mr. Davis, of Rhode Island. What would be the effect on the cotton industry of the South? I want the members of the committee to consider what the effect would be if these insects got over into New York, Pennsylvania, Delaware, or into any of the States in the East that have great agricultural interests. Think what would happen to the peach crop of Delaware, with the gypsy moth domiciled in the peach orchards.

Mr. SPERRY. Do they eat tobacco?

Mr. ROBERTS. I am given to understand that they do eat tobacco plants. They eat everything that grows in Massachusetts, I am told, and we grow tobacco up in the Connecticut Valley.

It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, this is one of the most worthy objects in this whole agricultural bill. I want the members of this committee to consider just for a moment what incalculable benefit would have accrued to the Government of the United States and to the people of the United States had the Department of Agriculture stepped into the State of California when the San Jose scale first made its appearance there in 1870 and stopped its further spread. The orchardists all over the United States would not now be troubled with a pest which causes them hundreds of thousands of dollars of damage annually. Consider for a moment what a blessing it would have been to the agricultural interests of this country if the Government had gone into the State of Colorado when the potato bug first made its appearance there, quarantined it where it appeared, and prevented its spread from one ocean to the other. Consider for a moment the benefit that would have accrued to the cotton growers of this country if the Government had gone into the State of Texas when the cotton boll weevil made its appearance there in 1894, quarantined it, and stopped it from spreading. We should have saved hundreds of thousands of dollars of public money that is now being and will hereafter be appropriated to control and exterminate that pest, and we would have saved millions of dollars yearly to the growers of cotton.

I assert, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the Government owes it as a duty to the people of this country when a pest of this nature appears, one that is likely to spread and will, if not checked, overrun the country, causing damage and ruin in its wake, to step in and stop its further spread. You can not expect the people of one State to look out for the people of all the States, to stop the spread of these insects that appear within their borders. We have done in Massachusetts the very best we could to exterminate an insect and prevent its spread beyond our own borders, but it is not in the nature of things for any one State to handle a pest of this sort and to prevent its going to other parts of the country. [Applause.]

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. Chairman, while I am not a member of the Agricultural Committee, I feel the deepest interest in all that pertains to agriculture and to any legislation looking to its advancement.

I desire to direct special attention to a certain provision of the agricultural bill, and incidentally to refer to the general matter of appropriations for agricultural purposes.

The item of the agricultural appropriation bill which authorizes the expenditure of $20,000 to "further develop the dairy industry of the Southern States by conducting experiments, holding institutes, and giving object lessons in dairying," a separate proposition incorporated in the bill at the instance of my colleague [Mr. LEVER], is a good measure, and I wish to express my heartiest indorsement of it. The only objection that I have to the measure is that the amount appropriated is too small. But many measures which prove to be of the greatest importance have had just such a small beginning, and so this one, once its advantages have been impressed upon the public mind, may find more liberal support in Congress.

There are many advantages which peculiarly recommend the South as a dairying section, and that this is not one of its chief industries to-day is due more to the lack of information on the subject than to any other cause.

Perhaps one of the greatest advantages that the South offers as a dairying section is the cheapness of land and the sparseness of its population. Pasture lands are necessary for profitable dairying, and pasture lands come pretty high at forty and fifty dollars per acre, the common price in populous sections.

In South Carolina we have some 19,000,000 acres of land, of which only about 6,000,000 acres are in cultivation, and South Carolina, perhaps, offers little advantage over other Southern States in this particular. More than two-thirds of our land is idle, in a measure unprofitable, for lack of sufficient farming population. A large per cent of this land is well adapted to pasturing for beef and dairying purposes. If only our farmers could be brought to realize the profits of dairying as an independent industry, these lands, now unprofitable, would furnish a new source of wealth to that section; or if dairying could be carried on more extensively and more systematically as an adjunct to the well-conducted farm, the advantage to the farmer in land building as well as in receipts from dairy products would make it well worth his while.

Most of the Southern States have a luxuriant growth of natural grass that is green nine or ten months of the year, and in my own State Bermuda and many other introduced grasses grow in perfection. The hay from this Bermuda grass is unexcelled in the world. This I can personally vouch for.

While grass alone may not be relied on for profitable dairying it is an essential, and properly used with cotton-seed hulls and meal produces splendid results. The natural grasses of South Carolina would furnish ample pasturage for great herds of cattle ten months in the year. No extensive effort has ever been made to grow winter grasses, but in thousands of yards and lawns may be seen a practical demonstration of the fact that blue grass and lawn grass both grow there beautifully under proper conditions.

The great difficulty with our southern people has been the one-crop idea; and so profitable has been this crop for the past few years that they have not felt the necessity of diversification. The man who is doing well raising cotton never thinks that he might do better raising something else.

Even the local demand for dairy products in the South far exceeds the supply, to say nothing of the demand, at most profitable prices, coming from our large cities. It would be hard to find a small town in the South that has not had its periodical butter famines, and yet nature has made this a favored spot for the production of that article.

Much in the way of object lessons has been done by Clemson Agricultural College, which has resulted in higher grades of cattle in the counties surrounding the college, and in better and more profitable use of the products. In some of the counties of my district, for instance, individuals and corporations are successfully manufacturing cheese, for which they find a ready market.

Dairying is a growing industry. The proceeds from this source during the year 1905, were, in round numbers, $650,000,000, and the demand far exceeds the supply. With the possible exception of the corn crop, no single farm product reaches this stupendous amount. The South could easily add at least 30 per cent to this amount without the loss of a single dollar from its present sources of revenue. The Government could not spend money to better advantage than in encouraging this industry there, and in instructing the people in its proper management.

For agricultural purposes I favor the most liberal appropriations. The products of the soil, and that which goes with the ordinary farm, constitute the basis of our wealth; all else is but so much margin on the crude products. What blood is, coursing through the veins and arteries of the human system, that the farm product is distributed through the great railroad lines of this country. Each carries in its composition the life-sustaining essence.

The various farm products of the United States last year aggregated the stupendous sum of $6,415,000,000, and each year brings an increase of over $250,000,000. Literally we feed and clothe the world, furnishing, as we do, more than 30 per cent of the grain, a still larger per cent of the meat, and fully 80 per cent of the cotton of the world. In the past six years the farmers have secured a balance of trade amounting to $5,635,000,000.

The Government is year by year "lengthening its cords and strengthening its stakes." Is it not the part of wisdom to lend every encouragement to that which constitutes the basis of its strength, if not its very life? Surely, "there is a giving that enricheth and a withholding that impoverisheth."

Although agriculture stands incomparably first in the production of wealth, it occupies the lowest place in the scale of appropriations. A statement prepared by Senator ALLISON, covering the average annual appropriations as well as the aggregate appropriations for various purposes for the past six years, will doubtless prove of interest, and hence I give it here:

Purpose of appropriation.	Total for six years.	Annual average.
Appropriation for all purposes	$4,594,225,982	$749,037,663
Post-Office Department	882,966,168	147,161,028
Pensions	846,791,090	141,131,848
Army	545,746,106	90,957,684
Navy	502,317,683	83,719,615
Sundry civil expenses	327,401,735	54,566,956
Legislative expenses	159,456,711	26,576,118
River and harbor	115,743,786	19,290,636
Indians	52,777,576	8,796,262
Fortifications	43,501,095	7,250,182
Agriculture	32,545,080	5,424,180

Occupying the position of the first nation of the world as a producing people, we are almost parsimonious in the appropriations which go to build up the farming interests.

With farming interests more extensive than those of benighted Russia, we spend less than one-third the amount expended by that country for agricultural purposes. A comparative statement of the amounts spent by the leading powers shows this Government up in very bad light. Russia spends $25,000,000 annually; France, $9,000,000; Austria, $9,275,000; Hungary, $9,400,000; while the United States, with its vast area and diversified farming, calling for the most scientific methods, spends less than $7,000,000. Such has been the yield of our virgin soil, no matter how unscientific our methods, that the Government for many years overlooked the necessity of establishing an Agricultural Department worthy of the name.

From the formation of the Government the demands of agriculture have been forced, inch by inch, upon the unwilling ears of Congress. There was not even an agricultural bureau until 1839; and after that time, even to the year 1889, owing to inadequate appropriations, it was little more than a bureau. In 1889 the real life of the Agricultural Department began, and with it began a new era in American farming.

It is a mistake to consider the agricultural appropriation a gift to the farmer. It is, in fact, but a loan, for which the nation is indirectly reimbursed a hundredfold.

Returning to the proposition of dairying in the South, let me say that the Government has here the opportunity to open up a vast field of wealth. It is to be hoped that the amount appropriated as an experiment in this line will be passed without opposition. It is too small, but it may serve to demonstrate the necessity for even more extensive work along this line in the future. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

For Bureau of Animal Industry: To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to undertake experimental work in the cooperation with State authorities in eradicating the ticks transmitting southern cattle fever, $65,000, of which sum $20,000 shall be immediately available.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I want to insert a committee amendment after line 15.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 15, page 55, after the word "available," insert the following: "For the Bureau of Forestry, for the erection of a wire fence and necessary sheds on the Wichita forest and game preserve, to provide a range for the buffalo herd presented by the New York Zoological Society, and to provide for the maintenance of said herd, $15,000; of which sum not to exceed $500 shall be expended in building."

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEPBURN. I want to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill if he wants these two lines to remain in the bill, and what use are they?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Simply so that the committee and the House may know what the total amount appropriated by the bill is.

Mr. HEPBURN. Having served that purpose, you do not want them as a part of the law?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I should think it would answer a useful purpose in giving the amount appropriated by the bill.

Mr. HEPBURN. I do not see how.

Mr. WADSWORTH. By leaving it in you have in the two lines the amount appropriated, and to obtain it otherwise you have to add item by item and paragraph by paragraph, while this adds them in two lines. I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk may change these totals according to the figures.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will make the corrections.

The Clerk read as follows:

The total amount of this bill is $7,481,440.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is the total of the bill.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may extend my remarks in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill with amendments to the House; and, pending that motion, I desire to give notice that a yea-and-nay vote will be asked for on the free-seed item.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose, and Mr. FOSTER of Vermont, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 18537, and had directed him to report the same with amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to, and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I ask a separate vote on the seed-distribution item.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any other amendment? If not, the vote will be taken on the remaining amendments in gross.

No other separate vote being demanded, the question was taken on the other amendments in gross, and they were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman demands a separate vote upon the amendment which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk proceeded to read the amendment.

The SPEAKER. By unanimous consent, the reading of the amendment will be dispensed with. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 153, nays 83, answered "present" 10, not voting 135, as follows:

YEAS—153.

Adamson	Bennett, Ky.	Burnett	Chapman
Aiken	Bishop	Burton, Del.	Clark, Fla.
Allen, Me.	Brantley	Calder	Clark, Mo.
Barchfeld	Broocks, Tex.	Calderhead	Cole
Bartlett	Brownlow	Campbell, Ohio	Conner
Beall, Tex.	Brundidge	Candler	Crumpacker
Bell, Ga.	Burgess	Chaney	Curtis
Darragh	Hale	McKinney	Schneebeli
Davis, W. Va.	Hamilton	McLain	Shackleford
Dawes	Hay	McMorran	Shartel
Dawson	Heflin	McNary	Sims
De Armond	Henry, Tex.	Macon	Smith, Cal.
Deemer	Hepburn	Maynard	Smith, Md.
Dickson, Ill.	Hill, Miss.	Meyer	Smith, Tex.
Dixon, Ind.	Hinshaw	Michalek	Smyser
Dunwell	Hopkins	Moon, Pa.	Southall
Ellerbe	Howell, Utah	Moon, Tenn.	Sparkman
Ellis	Huff	Mouser	Spight
Finley	Humphreys, Miss.	Murphy	Stanley
Flack	Hunt	Nevin	Steenerson
Flood	James	Palmer	Sulloway
Floyd	Johnson	Pearre	Talbott
Fordney	Jones, Va.	Powers	Taylor, Ala.
Fowler	Kennedy, Nebr.	Pujo	Taylor, Ohio
French	Kinkaid	Rainey	Thomas, N. C.
Fuller	Klepper	Randell, Tex	Tirrell
Gaines, Tenn.	Kline	Reeder	Townsend
Gardner, Mich.	Knowland	Reid	Trimble
Gardner, N. J.	Lacey	Rhinock	Underwood
Garner	Lafean	Rhodes	Watkins
Garrett	Lamb	Richardson, Ala.	Webb
Gilbert, Ind.	Landis, Chas. B.	Richardson, Ky.	Weems
Gill	Landis, Frederick	Rixey	Wiley, Ala.
Gillett, Cal.	Lever	Robertson, La.	Williams
Glass	Lewis	Robinson, Ark.	Wood, Mo.
Graham	Lindsay	Rucker	Woodyard
Gregg	Little	Russell
Gronna	Livingston	Ryan
Gudger	Lloyd	Samuel

NAYS—83.

Acheson	Draper	Kitchin, Claude	Pollard
Adams, Pa	Driscoll	Kitchin, Wm. W.	Prince
Adams, Wis.	Esch	Knopf	Rives
Alexander	Fitzgerald	Lawrence	Roberts
Bartholdt	Foss	Lilley, Conn.	Scott
Bates	Foster, Vt.	Littauer	Smith, Iowa
Birdsall	Fulkerson	Littlefield	Southwick
Bonynge	Gillett, Mass.	Lorimer	Sperry
Bowersock	Goebel	Loudenslager	Stafford
Brick	Graff	McCall	Sullivan, Mass.
Brooks, Colo.	Grosvenor	McCarthy	Sulzer
Burke, Pa.	Haskins	McCreary, Pa.	Tawney
Burton, Ohio	Haugen	McGavin	Thomas, Ohio
Butler, Pa.	Hayes	McLachlan	Vreeland
Capron	Henry, Conn.	Murdock	Wachter
Cocks	Howell, N. J.	Needham	Wadsworth
Cooper, Pa.	Hubbard	Olcott	Waldo
Cooper, Wis.	Hull	Page	Wanger
Cousins	Kelfer	Parker	Weeks
Dalzell	Keliher	Payne	Wilson
Dixon, Mont.	Ketcham	Perkins

ANSWERED "PRESENT"—10.

Boutell	Greene	Madden	Stephens, Tex.
Currier	Hoar	Mann
Goulden	Jenkins	Olmsted

NOT VOTING—135.

Allen, N. J.	Dresser	Lee	Scroggy
Ames	Dwight	Le Fevre	Sheppard
Andrus	Edwards	Legare	Sherley
Babcock	Fassett	Lester	Sherman
Bankhead	Field	Lilley, Pa.	Sibley
Bannon	Fletcher	Longworth	Slayden
Bede	Foster, Ind.	Loud	Slemp
Beidler	Gaines, W. Va.	Lovering	Small
Bennet, N. Y.	Garber	McCleary, Minn.	Smith, Ill.
Bingham	Gardner, Mass.	McDermott	Smith, Ky.
Blackburn	Gilbert, Ky.	McKinlay, Cal.	Smith, Samuel W.
Bowers	Gillespie	McKinley, Ill.	Smith, Wm. Alden
Bowie	Goldfogle	Mahon	Smith, Pa.
Bradley	Granger	Marshall	Snapp
Broussard	Griggs	Martin	Southard
Brown	Hardwick	Miller	Sterling
Buckman	Hearst	Minor	Stevens, Minn.
Burke, S. Dak.	Hedge	Mondell	Sullivan, N. Y.
Burleigh	Hermann	Moore	Towne
Burleson	Higgins	Morrell	Tyndall
Butler, Tenn.	Hill, Conn.	Mudd	Van Duzer
Byrd	Hitt	Norris	Van Winkle
Campbell, Kans.	Hogg	Otjen	Volstead
Cassel	Holliday	Overstreet	Wallace
Clayton	Houston	Padgett	Watson
Cockran	Howard	Parsons	Webber
Cromer	Hughes	Patterson, N. C.	Weisse
Cushman	Humphrey, Wash.	Patterson, S. C.	Welborn
Dale	Jones, Wash.	Patterson, Tenn.	Wharton
Davey, La.	Kahn	Pou	Wiley, N. J.
Davidson	Kennedy, Ohio	Ransdell, La.	Wood, N. J.
Davis, Minn.	Knapp	Reynolds	Young
Denby	Lamar	Rodenberg	Zenor
Dovener	Law	Ruppert

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

For the session:

Mr. SHERMAN with Mr. RUPPERT.

Until further notice:

Mr. HITT with Mr. LEGARE.

Mr. CROMER with Mr. VAN DUZER.

Mr. JENKINS with Mr. SMITH of Kentucky.

Mr. OTJEN with Mr. PADGETT.

Mr. MANN with Mr. HOWARD.

Mr. WATSON with Mr. SHERLEY.

Mr. MORRELL with Mr. SULLIVAN of New York.

For this day:
Mr. BINGHAM with Mr. HEARST.
Mr. BABCOCK with Mr. COCKRAN.
Mr. BEIDLER with Mr. BANKHEAD.
Mr. BUCKMAN with Mr. BUTLER of Tennessee.
Mr. BURKE of South Dakota with Mr. CLAYTON.
Mr. DENBY with Mr. MCDERMOTT.
Mr. BURLEIGH with Mr. BYRD.
Mr. LONGWORTH with Mr. BOWIE.
Mr. CAMPBELL with Mr. DAVEY of Louisiana.
Mr. KAHN with Mr. GARBER.
Mr. KENNEDY of Ohio with Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky.
Mr. KNAPP with Mr. GRANGER.
Mr. LE FEVRE with Mr. GILLESPIE.
Mr. MCCLEARY of Minnesota with Mr. GOLDFOGLE.
Mr. MARSHALL with Mr. LESTER.
Mr. MILLER with Mr. HARDWICK.
Mr. MUDD with Mr. LAMAR of Florida.
Mr. SIBLEY with Mr. MOORE.
Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH with Mr. PATTERSON of North Carolina.
Mr. WILEY of New Jersey with Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee.
Mr. RODENBERG with Mr. TOWNE.
Mr. CASSEL with Mr. WEISSE.
Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH (for) with Mr. SHEPPARD (against).
Mr. LOUD with Mr. ZENOR.
On this vote:
Mr. CURRIER (for) with Mr. BURLESON (against).
Mr. ALLEN of New Jersey (for) with Mr. DALE (against).
Mr. STEPHENS of Texas (for) with Mr. OVERSTREET (against).
Mr. SOUTHARD (against) with Mr. PATTERSON of South Carolina (for).
Mr. DAVIDSON (against) with Mr. LEE (for).
Mr. JONES of Washington (against) with Mr. SLAYDEN (for).
Mr. LILLEY of Pennsylvania (for) with Mr. BENNET of New York (against).
Mr. HOAR (against) with Mr. HOUSTON (for).
Mr. GREENE (for) with Mr. AMES (against).
Mr. BOWERS (for) with Mr. GOULDEN (against).
Mr. DRESSER (against) with Mr. ANDRUS (for).
Mr. BOUTELL (against) with Mr. GRIGGS (for).
Mr. BROWN (against) with Mr. POU (for).
Mr. MCKINLEY of Illinois (for) with Mr. BRADLEY (against).
Mr. HILL of Connecticut (against) with Mr. FIELD (for).
Mr. MADDEN (against) with Mr. WALLACE (for).
Mr. BEDE (against) with Mr. RANSDELL (for).
Mr. LAW (for) with Mr. PARSONS (against).
Mr. DWIGHT (for) with Mr. BROUSSARD (against).
Mr. FASSETT (for) with Mr. BANNON (against).

Mr. CURRIER. I should like to inquire if the gentleman from Texas, Mr. BURLESON, is recorded as voting?

The SPEAKER. He is not recorded.

Mr. CURRIER. I am paired with the gentleman. If he had been present he would have voted "no" and I would have voted "aye." I wish to have my name called and to be recorded as "present."

Mr. MADDEN. I should like to know if the gentleman from Arkansas, Mr. WALLACE, is recorded as having voted?

The SPEAKER. He did not vote.

Mr. MADDEN. I voted "no." I am paired with the gentleman and wish to withdraw my vote and to answer "present."

Mr. GREENE. Is the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. AMES, recorded?

The SPEAKER. He is not recorded.

Mr. GREENE. I voted "aye," and I wish to withdraw my vote and to answer "present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The announcement of the result was received with applause.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. WADSWORTH, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I made some remarks on the agricultural appropriation bill, on the subject of good roads. I ask leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

FOREIGN-BUILT DREDGES.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 395) concerning foreign-built dredges, with Senate amendments thereto.

The Senate amendments were read.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I move that the House disagree to the Senate amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I move that the House ask for a conference.

The motion was agreed to; and the Speaker announced as conferees on the part of the House Mr. GROSVENOR, Mr. MINOR, and Mr. SPIGHT.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. WACHTER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 11796. An act for the diversion of water from the Sacramento River, in the State of California, for irrigation purposes;

H. R. 14989. An act granting an increase of pension to Arcatie E. Thompson;

H. R. 14990. An act granting an increase of pension to Lucius D. Whaley;

H. R. 14993. An act granting an increase of pension to Riley M. Smiley;

H. R. 15007. An act granting an increase of pension to Henry Hares;

H. R. 15011. An act granting an increase of pension to John Eldridge, jr.;

H. R. 15024. An act granting an increase of pension to Henry C. Keyser;

H. R. 15050. An act granting an increase of pension to William H. Near;

H. R. 15061. An act granting an increase of pension to Ethan Allen;

H. R. 15119. An act granting an increase of pension to Cornelius Westman;

H. R. 15216. An act granting an increase of pension to Truman C. Stevens;

H. R. 15240. An act granting an increase of pension to James W. Fowler;

H. R. 15256. An act granting an increase of pension to Benjamin F. Green;

H. R. 15277. An act granting an increase of pension to George W. Pierce;

H. R. 15380. An act granting an increase of pension to Valentine Gunselman;

H. R. 15396. An act granting an increase of pension to John T. Jacobs;

H. R. 15416. An act granting an increase of pension to Ann R. Nelson;

H. R. 15484. An act granting an increase of pension to Robert Dick;

H. R. 15487. An act granting an increase of pension to Truman Aldrich;

H. R. 15548. An act granting an increase of pension to Jacob Ferber;

H. R. 15616. An act granting an increase of pension to Pleasant Calor;

H. R. 15621. An act granting an increase of pension to Caleb M. Tartar;

H. R. 15670. An act granting an increase of pension to Daniel E. Durgin;

H. R. 15683. An act granting an increase of pension to Thomas Brown;

H. R. 15701. An act granting an increase of pension to William Brown;

H. R. 15717. An act granting an increase of pension to Ebenezer A. Rice;

H. R. 15780. An act granting an increase of pension to Peter Cole;

H. R. 15794. An act granting an increase of pension to Samuel Pepper;

H. R. 15835. An act granting an increase of pension to George M. Thompson;

H. R. 15840. An act granting an increase of pension to Edgar B. Hughson;

H. R. 15863. An act granting an increase of pension to William Louther;

H. R. 15894. An act granting an increase of pension to Alma L. Wells;

H. R. 15928. An act granting an increase of pension to Herbert D. Ingersoll;

H. R. 15982. An act granting an increase of pension to Henrietta W. Wilson;

H. R. 15956. An act granting an increase of pension to Walter F. Bean;

H. R. 16023. An act granting an increase of pension to Sheldon B. Fargo;

H. R. 16024. An act granting an increase of pension to Katie B. Meister;
H. R. 16179. An act granting an increase of pension to William N. J. Burns;
H. R. 16182. An act granting an increase of pension to Samuel F. Williams;
H. R. 16190. An act granting an increase of pension to James T. Caskey;
H. R. 16210. An act granting an increase of pension to Abraham G. Long;
H. R. 16250. An act granting an increase of pension to Augustus J. Morey;
H. R. 16266. An act granting an increase of pension to Margaret A. Rucker;
H. R. 16296. An act granting an increase of pension to Henry C. Coffin;
H. R. 16334. An act granting an increase of pension to Enos Day;
H. R. 16376. An act granting an increase of pension to Joseph Muncher;
H. R. 16428. An act granting an increase of pension to Edwin Hicks;
H. R.16433. An act granting an increase of pension to Marius S. Cooley;
H. R. 16437. An act granting an increase of pension to Samuel H. Frazier;
H. R. 16442. An act granting an increase of pension to John A. Powell;
H. R. 16445. An act granting an increase of pension to Henry H. Sibley;
H. R. 16454. An act granting an increase of pension to Samuel E. Carlton;
H. R. 16455. An act granting an increase of pension to John Long;
H. R. 16504. An act granting an increase of pension to Thomas W. Barnum;
H. R. 16514. An act granting an increase of pension to John W. Barton;
H. R. 16523. An act granting an increase of pension to Charles P. Hopkins;
H. R. 16578. An act granting an increase of pension to Edward Lilley;
H. R. 16583. An act granting an increase of pension to David R. Walden;
H. R. 16650. An act granting an increase of pension to Robert B. Williby;
H. R. 16985. An act granting an increase of pension to Gilson Lawrence;
H. R. 17028. An act granting an increase of pension to Lorenzo D. Hartwell;
H. R. 17194. An act granting an increase of pension to Jennie White;
H. R. 17235. An act granting an increase of pension to Martha Howard;
H. R. 17274. An act granting an increase of pension to Andrew J. Mosier;
H. R. 17589. An act granting an increase of pension to Sidney A. Lawrence;
H. R. 17608. An act granting an increase of pension to Sidney S. Brewerton;
H. R. 8997. An act to regulate the practice of pharmacy and the sale of poisons in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; and
H. R. 18709. An act making additional appropriations for the public service on account of earthquake and attending conflagration on the Pacific coast.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee as indicated below:

S. 5811. An act to amend section 3646 of the Revised Statutes of the United States as amended by act of February 16, 1885, as amended by act of March 23, 1906—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the bill (H. R. 18030) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. LACEY in the chair.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, no requests have been made to me for time for general debate on this bill, and hence I have no objection to the bill being now read under the five-minute rule, with the understanding, however, that no objection shall be made if a Member wants an extension of time; and I understand that this plan is agreeable to the gentleman from Iowa who is in charge of the bill. This bill comes from our committee with a unanimous report. I do not think there is a single provision in it that can be objected to successfully.

Mr. HULL. There will be no trouble about that. I think there is no disposition, Mr. Chairman, for general debate at this time, and I ask that the reading of the bill be commenced under the five-minute rule.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I do not see how the gentleman from Iowa can make that agreement, for any one of the 386 Members can knock it out.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa to dispense with the first reading of the bill and that the reading of the bill be commenced under the five-minute rule? The Chair hears no objection, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the bill, and read as follows:

For completing the necessary improvements at the United States Military Academy at West Point, N. Y., in accordance with the general plan approved by the Secretary of War, the limit of the total expenditure for this work fixed in the act of Congress approved June 28, 1902, is extended $1,500,000, and the Secretary of War is authorized to proceed with the work under the conditions already prescribed for it by law: Provided, That all limitations and restrictions in the act approved June 28, 1902, shall apply to this increased authorization.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on this section. I observe that the limit of the amount appropriated under the act of Congress of June 28, 1902, is extended $1,500,000.

Mr. HULL. Yes; that is right.

Mr. PALMER. The amount appropriated by that act was $5,500,000.

Mr. HULL. That is right.

Mr. PALMER. As I understand, this $1,500,000 is in addition to the $5,500,000 appropriated by the other act.

Mr. HULL. Yes.

Mr. PALMER. I notice by the act that before any money could be expended under it the Secretary of War was required to "procure complete plans covering all the necessary buildings and improvements and for each and every purpose connected therewith, which plans shall involve a total expenditure of not more than $5,500,000."

Now, I suppose the Secretary of War, in compliance with that very just act of Congress procured complete plans covering all the necessary buildings and all the necessary improvements, and the inquiry I want to make is how it happened that since 1902 the cost of those buildings has been increased $1,500,000?

Mr. HULL. In reply to the gentleman from Pennsylvania I will state that the original act made a great many restrictions, and among others that no architects could be employed on a percentage basis, as was employed on the other academy in the United States. The Secretary of War called into consultation eminent architects, and after explaining the situation to them, finally succeeded in getting them to go into the business of submitting plans. The plans that were submitted all exceeded the original amount fixed in the act. No work would have been done if it had not been for the appropriation carried in this bill in different years, waiving original restriction. We had the right to let them go on with the work as far as the plans were perfected, and in order not to delay further this matter, if this authorization is not given I should say that they would go on with the work until they do conclude the amount fixed in the act. The act would be set aside whenever the Congress makes an appropriation going one step beyond the $5,500,000, and this Congress would have a right on this bill to-day to appropriate $8,000,000 absolutely for buildings at West Point, and no point of order would lie against it, because we have the same right in continuing these buildings that the Naval Committee has in the construction of ships. Of course, on its merits Congress could fix any amount a majority would favor. We can make the appropriation, or authorization, and I do not believe that it is subject to a point of order. Congress always has the discretion to say whether or not it will give a certain amount of money for a certain purpose. It may increase or diminish it from time to time, as the judgment of Congress may determine.

Now, I want for the information of the committee, and the information of my friend from Pennsylvania, to call his attention to a part of a document submitted to the Committee on Military Affairs—Document 648.

There has been diverted out of the original amount for buildings at West Point as provided for by Congress $546,000 for water rights and other purposes. In other words, the committee that visited West Point two years ago found a deplorable condition in respect to their water supply and made an exhaustive examination of the watershed that could be made available at West Point, and at a large expense, going off several miles, secured a supply that will be abundant for all time. Before that they had been using makeshifts to supply West Point. If they were a little short this year, they would take in another little stream that was liable to dry up in another season. It did not meet the demands, and finally Congress took hold of it and did appropriate enough money to supply a permanent water supply. That $546,000 was diverted by act of Congress on the Military Academy bill, not by the Secretary of War. The full list of buildings is set out in this document, after having been figured over by the War Department, by engineers, by the academic board, and all parties interested in the matter, and I want to say to the gentleman that in this matter the very greatest economy has been manifested by the authorities. They have opened a stone quarry and are running it with the labor from the posts, supplying the stone that enters into the construction of these buildings. They have saved in many ways more than the cost of several of these buildings by their economy.

Mr. HAY. Is it not true that the large increase in the cost of building materials is one reason for this?

Mr. HULL. Yes.

Mr. HAY. And is it not absolutely necessary to continue this plan to complete it to appropriate this sum of money?

Mr. HULL. They can not possibly complete the plan without it, and I thank the gentleman for calling attention to it.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to a question?

Mr. HULL. Yes.

Mr. OLMSTED. The Congressional Library over here, which is the pride of our country, cost about $6,000,000.

Mr. HULL. Yes.

Mr. OLMSTED. The State of Pennsylvania is just building and will dedicate in October a magnificent capitol, with offices for all of its State officers, at a cost of $4,000,000.

Mr. HULL. Yes.

Mr. OLMSTED. What kind of buildings are these to be that are to cost an aggregate of $7,000,000 at West Point?

Mr. HULL. If the gentleman will read this document he will find out. I will say that there is no parallel whatever in the cost of different buildings.

Mr. OLMSTED. I know there is enough parallel so as to make it possible to cover the ground with marble palaces up there at $7,000,000.

Mr. HULL. The State, War, and Navy building, as I understand it, cost $15,000,000. This Capitol, I think, cost more than $30,000,000, so that I can not see that that has anything to do with this. Here is the full list, providing for a large number of officers, enlisted men, and cadets.

Mr. HAY. What is this office building that is being put up over here to cost? Is it not $3,000,000?

Mr. HULL. That, I think, is to cost only two millions and a half.

Mr. PALMER. How many cadets are there at West Point?

Mr. HULL. There is one for every Congressional district, one for every Territory, ninety for the Senate, and forty for the President.

Mr. PALMER. Well, that is a few more than there are Congressmen.

Mr. HULL. And we have in addition to that some that we authorize by special resolution from other countries.

Mr. OLMSTED. About 500 in all.

Mr. HULL. Oh, there are more than 500, but West Point cares for more than cadets.

Mr. HAY. Then there is a population there of 3,500 people.

Mr. PALMER. Well, the committee is not providing buildings for the population?

Mr. HAY. Yes; of course—for the Army service. We have to provide that.

Mr. HULL. There is an artillery detachment there, a cavalry detachment, an infantry detachment, an engineer detachment, and there are other offices of the medical and every other corps of the Army. There is also a large corps of instructors, and we have the best equipped Military Academy in the world, and I am surprised that any gentleman from Pennsylvania would raise a question of this character, because Pennsylvania is supposed to be quite a progressive State.

Mr. OLMSTED. But we do things there at so much less expense proportionately.

Mr. HULL. Well, that has not heretofore been the State's reputation, judging from some testimony from Philadelphia.

Mr. PALMER. This act of 1902 was intended undoubtedly in its appropriation of $5,500,000 to cover the cost of these improvements.

Mr. HULL. Yes.

Mr. PALMER. It appropriated $100,000 for water supply.

Mr. HULL. Yes; and took it out of this. The next Congress took it out of this.

Mr. PALMER. The act reads as follows:

To increase the efficiency of the United States Military Academy at West Point, N. Y., and to provide for the enlargement of buildings and for other necessary works of improvement in connection therewith, and to provide for an increased water supply at a cost not to exceed $100,000, made necessary by the increased number of cadets now authorized by law, immediately available and to remain so until expended, $2,000,000: Provided, That before any part of this amount is expended, except so much as may be necessary to provide an immediate increased water supply; to install a heating and lighting plant, and to complete the improvements begun on the cadet mess building, complete plans shall be prepared and approved by the Secretary of War, covering all necessary buildings and improvements at West Point, and for each and every purpose connected therewith, which plans shall involve a total expenditure of not more than $5,500,000, including the sum herein appropriated: Provided further, That after the preparation and approval of the plans herein provided, the Secretary of War is authorized to enter into a contract or contracts for any part or all of the improvements herein authorized within the said limit of cost, to be paid for from the appropriations annually made for this purpose: Provided further, That no money shall be expended or obligation incurred for architects after the plans for improvements above provided for have been approved by the Secretary of War, except, that the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to employ, in his discretion, a consulting architect at a compensation not exceeding $5,000 per annum.

Now, there was authority for the Secretary of War to procure complete plans and enter into a contract, the total cost of which should be $5,500,000, which almost anybody would say was an adequate sum for that purpose. Now, it appears that somehow or other, by some method that has not been explained yet, this sum of $5,500,000 has been already exceeded by $1,500,000.

Mr. HULL. No; not at all. I will say to the gentleman that we have not appropriated yet near the amount of $5,500,000. This is simply an authorization to adopt a certain plan.

Mr. PALMER. At any rate, if you have not spent that yet you propose to expend, in addition to the $5,500,000, $1,500,000 more?

Mr. HULL. Yes; and it should be done.

Mr. PALMER. And you propose to put that expense on the United States on an appropriation bill. You have not laid before the House or any committee of Congress any facts which warrant or authorize this expenditure. It is one of those methods by which an improvement is begun and by which some officer of the United States—the Secretary of War or somebody—goes on and incurs obligation beyond that which Congress has authorized, set up his judgment against the judgment of the Congress of the United States, and then comes in and on an appropriation bill asks Congress to shut its eyes and swallow the whole job without any investigation. My point is this: That if this $1,500,000 is necessary for the construction of these buildings, it is also proper that the necessity should be judged of by this Congress, and not by the Secretary of War.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. HULL. Just one word and I will yield.

Mr. HAY. I just wanted to ask a question.

Mr. HULL. All right.

Mr. HAY. Is it not a fact when those plans were originally proposed that the Committee on Military Affairs reported $6,500,000?

Mr. HULL. Yes.

Mr. HAY. And that a million of that was stricken out on the floor?

Mr. HULL. That is correct.

Mr. HAY. And $500,000 of this money has been diverted to some other purpose——

Mr. HULL. Five hundred and forty-six thousand dollars.

Mr. HAY. So we are really now asking what was contemplated in the original bill.

Mr. HULL. Now, Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will allow me I will give this information. I do not wish to cut off any time for debate at all, but, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman raises the point that this ought to have been submitted to some committee of the House. Well, with all due respect to the gentleman, I have been laboring for some sixteen years under the impression that the Committee on Military Affairs was one of the committees of this House, and sometimes I have taken great pride in it.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. HULL. Just one moment further; and if he will read the report of the full hearings before the committee he will see it was gone into very exhaustively, and that we are, I believe, prepared to furnish him the proof that this authorization is necessary.

Mr. PALMER. In answer to the question of the gentleman from Virginia; it was stated the Committee on Military Affairs reported in favor of an appropriation of $6,500,000, and this House cut off a million.

Mr. HULL. Yes; it did.

Mr. PALMER. Very well.

Mr. HULL. If you will turn back to the old debates on that subject you will see it is said it is better to limit it as much as possible, because when the time came the House could grant the additional amount.

Mr. PALMER. Whether that time has come or not can only be ascertained when the facts in relation to this business have been laid before the Military Committee or some other committee of this House. The House judged that $5,500,000 was enough for this improvement, and I guess they were right, but now somebody or other—I do not know who—has increased this cost $1,500,000, and, I say, without any right or authority to do it. There was $100,000 appropriated for the waterworks, and that was supposed to be enough at the time, and if somebody has spent $550,000 on the waterworks that is another outrage.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, Document No. 648 sets out in full the whole list of buildings, the cost, the architect's estimate, and the total amount required by the working plans. Now, I want to say to the gentleman and to the committee that we had something of this same nature with the Naval Academy, and I do not refer to that now to criticise them at all, but the original limitation of that, as I understand, was $8,000,000. They found their plans were exceeded, and they came in for an additional $4,000,000, which was given on the appropriation bill, after a contest.

This is virtually putting back the amount, as the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] so well says—the total amount that was originally estimated by the committee after investigation, and after all the evidence that could be gotten was given. And it would be impossible for the Government of the United States to complete these buildings at what is now proposed if it were not for the fact that I have before alluded to, that they have opened up their own quarries and have the purchase and shipment of their building stone, and that has to some extent offset the great additional cost of building material. But it is a proposition that to my mind is in order on the bill and should commend itself to the good judgment of every member on the committee.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HULL. Certainly.

Mr. FITZGERALD. In order that I may get this in my mind correctly, I desire to ask this question: Did the Secretary of War have plans prepared in accordance with this act of 1902?

Mr. HULL. Yes. Secretary Root commenced it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Did he have plans prepared for the complete improvement at the academy?

Mr. HULL. He had the plans completed and adopted——

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the gentleman will answer my question I will get to the point I want to find out.

Mr. HULL. Let me get at it in my own way, though, please. I am not answering yes or no. I am not exactly on the witness stand, but I am ready to give testimony. He had prepared plans and they were adopted, but they were not all figured out as to the total cost at the time they were adopted. When they went over the architect's plans they found it to be necessary to drop out some of the buildings to bring them within the amount originally authorized by Congress.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What I want to find out is this, and if I am correct in my opinion of what has happened, it merely confirms my belief that the then Secretary of War, the present Secretary of State, has on many occasions shown an utter indifference to limitations placed upon his official acts by Congress. I understand, if I gather correctly, that Congress authorized the obtaining of plans for a complete new Military Academy. The buildings contemplated by these plans were to cost complete $5,500,000; that plans were prepared, and that when estimates were received it was ascertained that the buildings could not be completed within the limitations fixed by Congress, and that thereupon, without reporting that fact to Congress, the Secretary of War entered into contracts——

Mr. PRINCE. Oh, no.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Let me state it, and the gentleman can correct me if I am wrong. He started to do certain work.

Mr. HULL. He has not even done that.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What did he do?

Mr. HULL. He has only made contracts from year to year under the authorization, and not spent a dollar more than Congress authorized for this year.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the law contemplated that this plan should be complete and cover buildings that would cost, complete, $5,500,000, with $2,000,000 to be available when the plans were approved; that would enable the completed new Military Academy to be built for $5,500,000. When those plans were approved the Secretary had the right to enter into certain contracts, but, with the information before him that the completed plans could not be carried out for $5,500,000, he entered into a contract to do a certain amount of the work up to the $2,000,000, utterly ignoring the limitation fixed by Congress.

Now, it may be that it is proper and necessary to increase the limit of cost; but it is utterly indefensible for this executive officer to flaunt the action of Congress in its face and proceed regardless of the law; and this is one of the things, if I remember correctly——

Mr. PARKER. Will the gentleman wait for the answer, that it was not done?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman from Iowa has not asked me to wait. This is one of the things that compelled Congress, if I recollect correctly, to make it a criminal offense to repeat just such a performance.

Mr. HULL. Well, the gentleman's speech would be fine, but is not based on any facts. I ask that the Clerk may read this letter from the Superintendent of the Academy.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I stated the facts, and I have been listening to the gentleman's explanation.

The Clerk read as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 3, 1906.

The CHAIRMAN COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS,
House of Representatives, U. S. A.

DEAR SIR: Having reference to my testimony at your recent hearing on the Military Academy bill for the next fiscal year. I have the honor to request that I be permitted to submit a short supplementary statement bringing out more clearly than I did at my hearing a matter having an important bearing on the recommendation that the limit of appropriation for the improvement at West Point as at present fixed be extended in order to permit the carrying out in full of the general plan the Secretary of War has approved.

I wish particularly to state that in all of the steps taken to formulate the complete plan required by the act of 1902 faithful and earnest endeavor was made by all the authorities concerned to create a plan giving the improvements, demonstrated to be necessary, which could be executed within the appropriation made, and as further evidence of this fact I ask attention to page 2 of the attached rules, which governed the architectural competition held for the preliminary general plan. An examination also of this latter plan will show that the amounts originally allotted for each of the necessary buildings and the other improvements were scaled down proportionally to accomplish the purpose named.

In the subsequent work of developing this preliminary plan into the prescribed general plan when detailed consideration of individual buildings, their necessary capacity, arrangements, and estimated cost was had, it became apparent that buildings satisfactory in capacity in each instance could not be built within the limit fixed, and this notwithstanding the fact that every possible and rightful economy was rigidly insisted upon at all times.

It was then at this time that the policy, clearly authorized in the statute, was adopted of planning buildings, each of a satisfactory capacity, and building as many of such as the appropriation would permit. The reverse of this procedure would have resulted in erecting buildings which could be shown beforehand would be of unsatisfactory capacity when completed.

Very respectfully,

A. L. MILLS,
Brigadier-General, United States Army.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does not the gentleman think that that letter confirms my statement of what has been done in this case? I am confident it does.

Mr. HULL. I want to say to the gentleman that they have not bound the United States for a single contract beyond the $5,500,000; and they can not, nor will they. Before these plans were originally adopted they were submitted to the committee and looked over very fully before the original act was passed. But, naturally, we had not the information that the Engineer Corps had at the time. It is true that there were many who believed that the Engineer Corps, being purely Army officers, were not the ones to finally pass upon it; and we authorized the Secretary of War to employ architects, not on the same basis of 5 per cent at all, but on such basis as he could make with them. At first they refused to act, but eventually the architects, as a matter of pride in the academy, did submit their plans, changing somewhat the plans of the Army Board of Engineers; made it a better plan, according to all the statements at this time. Now, as to just how much that would cost, running over a period of eight or nine years, it was impossible to tell with anything like absolute accuracy. If they go on with the plan agreed upon, it will increase the cost by authorizing it now; but unless Congress gives authority they have no power to do it, in my judgment. But after they have expended $5,500,000 the committee has the right and Congress has the power to act and appropriate $1,000,000 a year for as many years as it pleases for the additional buildings. They have got the plans, the architects' fees have been paid, and, if Congress wants an economical administration of affairs, it will authorize the continuance of the work without waiting four or five years from now to authorize additional expenditures.

Mr. PALMER. This bill appropriates $1,000,000 to be expended.

Mr. HULL. Under the present authorization.

Mr. PALMER. So that if this provision for expending the sum of $1,500,000 goes out of the bill it will not do any harm.

Mr. HULL. It does do harm not to authorize the adoption of completed plans. It makes no difference as to the appropriations carried for the ensuing fiscal year.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania simply reserve the point of order?

Mr. PALMER. I have reserved it, but when the proper time comes I expect to make it, after I have got the facts of the case. As I understand it, the chairman of the committee says that $500,000 of this money was diverted to the water supply. How could that be?

Mr. HULL. Not all for the water supply.

Mr. PALMER. I supposed that $500,000 was appropriated for the water supply by Congress if that amount was spent.

Mr. HULL. No; that was diverted out of the appropriation.

Mr. PALMER. Then this Secretary of War was authorized and required, after he made his complete plans, to make a contract for the entire building, which was not to cost more than $5,500,000. Now, if he had done his duty, if he had made his contract, then there would not have been any question about the cost of materials, and if he had obeyed the act of Congress, of course he would not have paid any attention to the pride of the architects, but he would have built the buildings for the $5,500,000, and I submit that for $5,500,000 he could build quite a shanty to cover the cadets at West Point or anywhere else.

Mr. CAPRON. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. PALMER. Yes.

Mr. CAPRON. There seems to be an impression in the gentleman's mind that this is an appropriation to build another building.

Mr. PALMER. No; it is a series of buildings.

Mr. SULZER. In fact, it is an entire rebuilding of the West Point Military Academy.

Mr. CAPRON. The Secretary of War has submitted several classes of buildings. He may drop out one or two or five or ten in order to bring it within the specific amount of the appropriation. He closes his letter upon the subject by saying:

The work of the building—

That is, of carrying out the whole scheme which it has been the purpose of Congress to build—

The work of the building probably can not be completed before 1912, and it is to be hoped that within this period the additional necessary money may be made available for carrying out the entire approved plan.

The approved plan is a scheme for building a magnificent city, not a building, and, if the gentleman will permit me, that includes a considerable list of buildings—like cadet barracks, $275,000; sixteen sets of officers' quarters, $180,000; power house and distributing system, $600,000, which is being built as a part of the original scheme, and it is all here in the communication from the Secretary of War, and if the gentleman will spend his next ten minutes sitting down and reading it instead of standing up and talking he will agree with the proposition of the committee on this subject.

Mr. PALMER. I will say to the gentleman that my mind works when I am standing up. I do not at all doubt that the Secretary of War and the architects, who have pride in the business, are contemplating a magnificent series of structures. I have no doubt also that they do not care one continental cent how much it will cost, either. They have not paid the slightest attention to the act of Congress. That is what I am complaining about.

Mr. CAPRON. Does the gentleman understand that they have not paid every attention to the act of Congress providing for the reconstruction of the Military Academy?

Mr. PALMER. They have not paid the slightest attention to it.

Mr. CAPRON. They have not yet expended the money.

Mr. HULL. Do you not think they have done pretty well to save over $4,000,000 as compared with the other academy?

Mr. PALMER. That is a good deal like Micawber paying his notes, is it not?

Mr. HULL. There is not much extravagance in it.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, it is not my purpose now to discuss the point of order that the gentleman from Pennsylvania has reserved, because, in my opinion, this appropriation is not subject to a point of order. It is a continuing appropriation for a public improvement, and under the rule is not subject to a point of order.

Now, let me say a few words in regard to the necessity for this appropriation. I desire to say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania and to the Members of this House that this appropriation is for a very important public work that must go on and must be finished, and the necessity for it must be apparent to every man who will give the matter the slightest investigation. This appropriation will conclude the work, and the West Point Military Academy will be complete in all its buildings and the finest institution of its kind in the world. I take a deep interest in this matter, a just pride in our splendid academy, and I believe it will be a sad mistake—a penny-wise and pound-foolish performance—if this necessary appropriation to finish the work now going on at West Point is stricken out of this bill. The work is being done, and sooner or later Congress must pay for it. This whole matter is strongly recommended by the Superintendent, a most efficient and reliable officer and a very excellent gentleman; in fact, one of the best superintendents the Military Academy has ever had—Gen. A. L. Mills. It is approved by the War Department, and that great Department of the Government is at present in charge of one of the best and one of the greatest Secretaries of War this country has ever had—William H. Taft—a careful, honest, and conservative official, who knows how very important it is to this institution that this appropriation be made.

Mr. Chairman, when the original appropriation was considered, the Committee on Military Affairs recommended and reported an appropriation of $6,500,000 for this entire work, and this amount, it was estimated then, would complete the new buildings and all the other improvements in accordance with the plan and scope of the Government, and if that appropriation had passed it would have been entirely sufficient for all purposes.

When, however, the matter came up in the House the appropriation was cut down $1,000,000, because all the money was not just then required, and it was stated at the time that if the additional million was required Congress could subsequently appropriate it. That was the understanding——

Mr. PALMER. Who made that understanding?

Mr. SULZER. It was stated here on the floor—the RECORD will show it.

Mr. JOHNSON. Does the gentleman argue, as a legislator, that Congress is bound by some sort of a promise made by some other Congress?

Mr. SULZER. These continuing appropriations are often made by Congress, especially in river and harbor work and other public improvements.

Now, Mr. Chairman, West Point is one of our great institutions—the greatest and best military school in the world. Every American takes a just pride in this enduring and efficient Army Academy.

These new buildings which are being erected there are absolutely necessary for the health and comfort and accommodation of the cadets and officers and soldiers and other employees. Up to the time of this work very little money had been spent on improvements in fifty years. The old buildings were dingy, cramped, crowded, and unhealthy. They had become wholly unfit and unsuitable. This work had to be done or the very object of the academy would fail. This whole matter has been carefully considered, and these improvements must be made in the interest of the general welfare and proper and economic administration of the academy at West Point. This money is necessary in order to carry out and complete the work authorized to be done and now going on. The money must be appropriated and that's all there is about it.

Mr. PALMER. Why have we got to appropriate it? Because the architects' plans demand it?

Mr. SULZER. Because the work is necessary—the improvements urgently demanded and authorized—the work going on, and must be finished sooner or later.

Mr. PALMER. What other reason is there?

Mr. SULZER. Good business reasons, sound common sense, and because the plan and scope have been approved and carried out in part. We started and authorized these improvements. It is too late now to——

Mr. PALMER. Who approved it?

Mr. SULZER. Congress approved it, and——

Mr. PALMER. No; Congress never approved it; all they approved was a set of buildings, to cost $5,500,000. The architects and the Secretary of War have approved the scheme that is to cost $7,000,000.

Mr. SULZER. The gentleman is quite in error. The amount originally required was $6,500,000, and only about $5,000,000 of this amount has been available. This appropriation of $1,500,000 completes the original estimates. This entire matter has been carefully considered by the Committee on Military Affairs, and this appropriation is approved by every member of that committee. The report of the committee is unanimous, and if there was anything about it that was susceptible to any criticism whatever on account of unnecessary expense I would be the first man on the Committee on Military Affairs to get up and object.

Mr. Chairman, as a member of the Military Affairs Committee, I have been to West Point and have investigated these improvements, and know something about this matter. I believe that the work that is being done is being honestly done; that it is a most important and necessary work, and that it is being done in the most economical manner. These necessary improvements redound to the credit of the officials that have charge of the matter, and their early completion will reflect glory on our entire country and benefit every Congressional district, because every Congressional district has a representative at the Academy.

We should do justice to West Point. Before these improvements were commenced the academy was overcrowded, the buildings old, unsuitable, and unhealthy. These improvements had to be made, these new buildings had to be built, or the academy ultimately had to be abandoned. That is all there is to it.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. SULZER. I yield to the gentleman for a question.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. What amount of money will be required to complete the buildings?

Mr. SULZER. The additional amount appropriated in this bill—a million and a half.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Will you be perfectly satisfied with that?

Mr. SULZER. That is the amount required to finish the work now being done.

Mr. PALMER. Will the gentleman from New York yield for a question?

Mr. SULZER. I will with pleasure in a few moments. I say to the gentleman that this amount of money will complete all the new buildings, and there are several new buildings. I say further that of the amount originally called for $1,000,000 was taken off in the House at the time the bill passed, and about $500,000 was used for a new water plant and reservoir. This whole matter is a business matter—a public necessity—if we intend to keep up the efficiency of the academy, and I am surprised that the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania, who, in my opinion, is inclined to be a broad-minded statesman, should quibble about it and make a point of order against it, because it is absolutely necessary, and we must make and pay for these improvements.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SULZER. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. When was the first appropriation made for these buildings?

Mr. SULZER. 1902.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. And the plans were then made?

Mr. HULL. Yes; that was the time of the authorization.

Mr. PARKER. I will state that all in order; I have it here.

Mr. SULZER. The act was originally passed in 1902, authorizing these improvements. The work has been going on ever since, and it requires about $1,500,000 to complete everything—to make the academy the best in all the world. This sum of money is the balance to finish these authorized and partially completed improvements.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Appropriated for a general plan?

Mr. HULL. No, sir; there was nothing appropriated then.

Mr. PALMER. I beg the gentleman's pardon; there was $2,000,000.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Was it a general plan?

Mr. SULZER. That act authorized a general plan.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Then, as I understand it, this is to complete the general plan.

Mr. SULZER. Quite so; and we must, it seems to me, do so. I will now yield to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER], and all I want to say in conclusion is that I am earnestly and sincerely in favor of this necessary appropriation, and I hope the House will approve it and stand by the committee, the Secretary of War, and General Mills, the praiseworthy Superintendent of the Military Academy.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, after the words that came from the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] attacking the Secretary of War, it is due to that Secretary of War, now the Secretary of State, as well as to this committee, to state the law and what Congress has done. In the year 1902 the provision already read was passed. It did provide that no work should be done until complete plans had been made, prepared, and approved by the Secretary of War, covering all necessary buildings and improvements at West Point, and for each and every purpose connected therewith, which plans should involve a detailed expenditure of not more than $5,500,000, including the sum then appropriated.

That was in 1902. There is no one in this House who does not know that expense of building very largely increased after 1902. No one can consider this matter without seeing that ordinarily general plans would be prepared and approved, and then detailed plans would have to be gone into in order to get at the expense, but meanwhile Congress increased the number of cadets at West Point, and they were being crowded in their barracks, so that they were living three in a room. That fact was reported to the House, and in the year 1904, it being absolutely necessary for the accommodation of the boys at West Point, Congress modified that law and provided that in carrying out the provisions of the act of June 28, 1902, after general plans—not specific—have been prepared and approved by the Secretary of War "he may proceed with the necessary construction of cadet barracks and such buildings as shall be needed to replace barracks removed in such construction of cadet barracks upon detailed plans approved by him before the completion of detailed plans for the whole work, provided that the limit of cost is not increased thereby." That is to say, as to other buildings he must have detailed plans before he went ahead.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there? The provision he has read authorized him to go ahead with the buildings for the barracks without detailed plans, provided the limit of cost was not increased. Is that right?

Mr. PARKER. I did not state that at all.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am asking what the gentleman read.

Mr. PARKER. I read it once and I will read it again.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Just the last part of it.

The CHAIRMAN. From what does the gentleman from New Jersey read?

Mr. PARKER. The appropriation act of 1904. That act provided that, in carrying out the act of 1902 after general plans "have been prepared and approved by the Secretary of War, he may proceed with the necessary construction of cadet barracks and such buildings as shall be needed to replace the barracks removed in such construction of cadet barracks upon detailed plans approved by him before the completion of detailed plans for the whole work, provided that the limit of cost is not increased thereby." He did not go ahead without authority of Congress. That work was done by the authority of Congress.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PARKER. I would rather get through with the statement first, unless it is on this particular point.

Mr. MADDEN. I just wanted to ask whether or not, if the authority granted to the Secretary of War limited him to the expenditure of $5,500,000, how he secured the authority that increased that cost to $7,000,000?

Mr. PARKER. He has not got it yet.

Mr. PALMER. That is what they are trying to get.

Mr. PARKER. The authority given to him, however, was that, while the limit remains the same, he could go ahead with the cadet barracks and necessary buildings, making the other buildings come within the $5,500,000.

Mr. HULL. Or else not build.

Mr. PARKER. But he could go ahead with the cadet barracks anyway, without any restriction, as long as he did not exceed that amount.

Mr. MADDEN. Always assuming that he could not exceed the authorization for the expenditure of $5,500,000.

Mr. PARKER. That is so as far as that act is concerned, but

I will bring the gentleman's attention to another act, if he will wait a moment.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, as I recall it, the Secretary of War was specifically authorized to undertake, first, such buildings as were urgently required to meet existing conditions at the academy.

Mr. PARKER. Although he had not completed his detailed plans.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Although the detailed plans for the whole scheme had not been completed—such buildings, for example, as barracks.

Mr. PARKER. Yes.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Where the young men were crowded in an unhealthy and insanitary way.

Mr. PARKER. Yes.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Now, did that permission, given him to undertake those buildings at that time and under those conditions, result in unavoidably increasing the cost of the construction of the whole to some extent—has it not done so?

Mr. PARKER. I am not inclined to think it has. I think the construction was of the very cheapest fashion that any such buildings could be put up, and although it is a large expense it is large only because they are large buildings. The increase in the cost comes from the rise in the price of building materials since the general plans were adopted.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. PARKER. I will not be interrupted at this present moment, because I want to get to another law, and I can not get things in order if I am interrupted now. In the year 1905 it was further found that other buildings than the cadet barracks were necessary, and that the work had to go ahead, and therefore another modification of this act was made on the appropriation bill of that year, which is much broader than it was before. It reads as follows:

> In carrying out the provisions of the act of June 28, 1902, after general plans have been prepared and approved by the Secretary of War, he may, within the limit of cost fixed, proceed with their execution in such order as the detailed plans may be approved by him and in such manner, by contract or otherwise, as he may see fit.

He was thereby authorized to construct such buildings as he could construct within $5,500,000, leaving other buildings to be considered by Congress. I will read that over again. It says this:

> In carrying out the provisions of the act of June 28, 1902, after general plans had been prepared and approved—

General plans never give you the cost, detailed plans are necessary to that—> by the Secretary of War he may, within the limit of cost fixed, proceed with their execution in such order as the detailed plans may be approved by him, and in such manner, by contract or otherwise, as he may see fit.

That authorizes him to do what he said he did, get the cheapest and best plans he could, proceed with the necessary buildings, and if necessary leave out some because he could not construct them within that limit. It says he may proceed. Now he comes frankly to Congress and says this work is to be continued, and he tells Congress this: When this work was first estimated it was estimated to cost $6,500,000. Five million five hundred thousand dollars was all that was appropriated, and $500,000 of that sum, in round numbers, has been taken out and put to the purchase of the best improvement ever done for West Point, and which was not included in these plans at all, namely, the acquisition of 20 square miles of watershed for the obtaining of pure water for West Point, the best thing that was ever done for that place.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, can I interrupt the gentleman at that point?

Mr. PARKER. In a moment; wait until I get through.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. But I want to ask a question at that particular point.

Mr. PARKER. And considering the rise in building material, they have found that in spite of that rise by making economies in various directions they can get through really for the same amount of money that was asked in the beginning, and they come to Congress and say the completion of these plans will cost so much and we have to enlarge that limit. Now, as to the point of order. That limit is not a limit upon us. It is a limit upon the man to whom the appropriation is given; but, nevertheless, it is a limit which can be removed, just as we can make any new legislation. It is fair that it should be removed and it is not exactly fair without reading or remembering these different provisions of Congress that Members of Congress should accuse the Secretary of War——

Mr. MADDEN. I would like to ask the gentleman a question——

Mr. PARKER. In one minute. Should accuse the Secretary of War of bad faith. Now, I will yield to the gentlemen who desired to ask me questions, and the first person who asked me to yield was the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I simply wish to say to the gentleman I do not desire to ask a question, but to say I did not accuse the Secretary of War of bad faith; but I will state later what I do accuse the committee of, and will reiterate that statement in the light of the gentleman's own statement.

Mr. PARKER. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Is it not a fact that when we were building the Annapolis Academy we first appropriated $8,000,000 for improvements, and the Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Moody, came up to Congress and called for $2,000,000 more, saying that the building-material fraternity had put the price of building material up to such an extent that he would not go ahead until we gave him $2,000,000 more, which we gave?

Mr. PARKER. I have no knowledge of that.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. That is a fact. This is the second offense the steel trust is putting on the Federal Government.

Mr. PARKER. I thank the gentleman for the suggestion.

Mr. MADDEN. I just wanted to ask the gentleman if he could tell the committee what increase there has been in building material since 1902, if he knows?

Mr. PARKER. I can not give the details. I know very well that in everything that I have tried to do since 1902 there has been an increase in price.

Mr. SULZER. Let me say to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES] that this is not a question of the increased price of material at all. It is simply appropriating the balance of money to carry out the original plan. Congress originally appropriated money for the purpose, but not enough.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Are we still going to keep on feeding these steel robbers and rob the Treasury?

Mr. SULZER. That is not the question, or what we are doing at all.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Put a lot of them into the penitentiary and then we can erect buildings cheaper.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman made a statement to the committee a moment ago that this additional appropriation is requested because of the advance in the price in building materials since 1902, and in response to a question as to what the increase in the price of building was, he says he does not know.

Mr. SULZER. Who says that?

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman.

Mr. SULZER. What gentleman?

Mr. MADDEN. And I wish to say in reply to that, as an experienced handler of building materials, that there has been no increase in the price of those materials since 1902.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I am not a builder of that sort, but I think I can show to-morrow that the gentleman is mistaken. We are being robbed every day, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, it seems impossible to inquire about any great project under way by the Federal Government without being accused of charging some official with bad faith. Despite the very elaborate statement of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER], I am still convinced that the facts in this matter are practically as follows: That in 1902 Congress authorized the Secretary of War to have plans prepared for a complete scheme of improvement at West Point. At that time $2,000,000 were appropriated, to be utilized for that purpose, but with limitation upon the power of the Secretary of War not to expend a single dollar or to enter into a single contract until he had approved the plan for the complete scheme of improvement, at a cost not exceeding $5,500,000. In 1904 it appeared that, on account of the necessity of having certain buildings quickly, Congress authorized the Secretary of War to proceed with certain of the buildings required, without waiting for detailed plans for all the buildings, but that the Congress reiterated the limitation upon his power not to exceed the limit of $5,500,000 in completing the work.

Now, a letter was read here from some official—I forget who——

Mr. PALMER. The Superintendent of West Point.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Superintendent of West Point, in which he stated that after the plans were prepared, after they were approved, if I recall correctly, it was ascertained that if the plans adopted were followed, there would have been insufficient and inadequate facilities, and therefore the plans were changed for certain buildings, and these changes necessitated an increase in cost, and necessarily would make the completed scheme cost more than the amount authorized by Congress, although that was specifically prohibited by law. And, without getting the approval of Congress for a change or for an increase in the cost, without asking Congress to authorize the changes entailing additional expense, contracts were made to do as much as could be done with the amount available. That is practically the effect of the statements of the letter just read; while members of the committee may shake their heads, Members not on the committee, so far as I can find out, view this matter the same way that I do.

I stated that the then Secretary of War had manifested a disposition, which he has since manifested, to utterly ignore or be indifferent to limitations placed upon him by Congress, and I need only to recall the fact that he wrote a letter to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations this year in which he blandly suggested that an act of Congress to prevent the creation of deficiencies should not apply to certain contingent funds of his Department, if it were ever intended that it should.

I do not care whether it is pleasant for any official or any official's friends to hear criticisms of their official conduct. I intend to criticise such actions as those mentioned whenever they are called to my attention or wherever I can find out about them. It seems, let me add, that the House reduced the limit of cost of these buildings, as recommended by the committee, by $1,000,000, yet because some gentlemen stated on the floor that if it were necessary afterwards the limit would be increased, it seems that some official undertook to believe that the statements—the irresponsible statements, if you please—of Members of the House, in the RECORD, were binding on him, and not the law as enacted by the Congress.

I believe that this work has been conducted in violation of law. I believe the attention of the country should be called to it. I suppose it is necessary now to change the limit of cost and eventually appropriate the additional money to complete the work, the same as it was for the Naval Academy. It is necessary to increase the limit of cost, but that does not deter me from criticising those whom I believe to be responsible for the situation. I have great pride in the Military Academy. I have spent many pleasant days in recreation in the waters about it and in the surrounding country.

I have spent considerable time at the academy. I should like to see continued there what is there now—the finest military school the world knows. I desire to see adequate and proper facilities for the young men who are to be educated; but even to accomplish these things I will not sit silent and not protest against the action of officials who appear to desire to accomplish their purposes regardless of what the law is, or what they are authorized to do under the law.

It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that if Members were more free in calling attention to the action of officials of the executive department, and more careful to compel them to obey the law and come here for authority to act in all matters properly controlled by the Congress, there would be less necessity for criticism. I do not charge the Secretary of War with bad faith. I charge him with ignoring the limits put upon his power by Congress. I believe now that I stated the facts to be as they actually existed, and in doing what he did he must have ignored the law and ignored the limit placed upon his power. It is against such action on the part of officials that I protest.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I think that no Member of this House will deny that the gentleman from New York does good public service when he directs the attention of Congress and the country to a violation of the law, either in the letter or spirit, by any executive official of the Government, however highly he may be placed. I entirely sympathize with him in the criticism. It is unfortunate that in the past we have had officers who disregarded limitations fixed by Congress upon the cost of public buildings and other public work. About a year ago I myself, as an illustration of this idea, conceived it to be my duty to call the attention of the House to a remarkable increase of cost upon one public building erected for the use of the Army under the supervision of the Corps of Engineers. It increased by 100 per cent before we completed it over the figures originally given to us as its ultimate probable cost. In this case, I am pleased to say, the increase has not been so large; and I occupy this position with reference to this particular improvement:

In the beginning, when the project for the enlargement and improvement of West Point was undertaken, I believed the proposed large cost fixed for it was unnecessary. I did not believe that the Naval Academy should have had as much money as Congress gave it; and I did not believe that the Military Academy should have had as much money as we agreed to give it. But we did agree to give it, as the bill emerged from the committee, $6,500,000. As it passed the House the amount was decreased to $5,500,000. Of that sum $546,000 was set apart for the development of the water supply or acquisition of its source.

Then, Mr. Chairman, the exigencies of the situation required that there should be immediately undertaken the construction of barracks and quarters for the accommodation of the increased number of cadets authorized by Congress. Every Member of this House who has ever been at the Military Academy knows that for years there has been crowded into practically every room of the barracks three cadets; and the common sense and experience of every Member of this House will tell him that that was not a wholesome or desirable condition; and because of that fact, the Secretary of War, notwithstanding the fact that the whole scheme of improvement had not been made and agreed upon, was authorized to undertake the immediate construction of these urgently needed buildings.

Now, Mr. Chairman, these buildings were built according to the design of the architect, honestly built I do not doubt; as economically built as any Government work is ever done. Superb structures are being made, in every way meeting the requirements of the Military Academy; but, sir, they are costing a considerable amount of money, and it is now evident that the entire scheme for the Academy can not be completed within the limit of cost fixed by Congress.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question there? I see you have used the word "extend" in the paragraph. Does that mean an extension of the building or an extension of the appropriation?

Mr. SLAYDEN. If it is to extend the buildings, it involves extending the appropriations, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Another question is this, so that I may have it in mind. I think that the gentleman is very fully informed on the subject. If this money should be appropriated, it would carry out the general purpose or plan made by the War Department——

Mr. SLAYDEN. Oh, yes, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. And that plan as made by the War Department is in violation of the limitation put upon it by act of Congress?

Mr. SLAYDEN. That is a question of fact, as to whether or not they can erect buildings after the plan agreed upon, which they hoped could be built within the limitation. Whether it can be done or not I can not answer, and I do not suppose there is any man who can answer the question absolutely at this time. I believe they have shown that it can not be done within the original limit of cost, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. MADDEN. Are they endeavoring to erect more buildings now than were contemplated in the general scheme?

Mr. SLAYDEN. I think not. I think, indeed, they are erecting less.

Mr. MADDEN. That would involve an expenditure of 25 per cent more than the original estimate.

Mr. SULZER. The estimate originally made was for this amount. That is where the gentleman is in error.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I will say to the gentleman that $500,000 of the appropriation has been used for the development of the water supply.

Mr. MADDEN. Then it would be an expenditure of about 20 per cent more than the original estimate?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Nineteen or 20 per cent more than the appropriation.

Mr. MADDEN. If the gentleman will allow me, it seems to me the man who made the plans and estimate of the cost ought to be able to make a closer estimate than what he has actually made.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, in reply to the gentleman from Illinois, I will say that I congratulate myself and the House upon the fact that we can get within 20 per cent. My observation of the tremendously had shot made by the Army officers who built the War College and the Engineer School convinced me that when we can build under the supervision of architects and the administration of an efficient and intelligent officer, such as we have at the Military Academy, we get very much nearer the estimates than we did under the old plan.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on the paragraph in line 9 to line 20, on page 29, that the extension of $1,500,000 beyond the act of June 28, 1902, is contrary to law and can not be carried on an appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. HULL. I want to say a word on the point of order.

Mr. SULZER. I want to be heard on the point of order.

Mr. HULL. I want to ask the Chair if he has considered the fact that the provision in the rule in regard to increased appropriations did not apply in this case. This limitation is on the appropriation bill which carries the appropriation for the building. The decision in the Digest referred to a different class of buildings. The Committee on Buildings and Grounds fixed the cost of a public building. Of course, the Committee on Appropriations could not increase the amount. In this case the Military Committee has exclusive jurisdiction.

The CHAIRMAN. It is law, notwithstanding.

Mr. HULL. It is law according to some Chairmen, and it is held by other Chairmen that no law is made by an appropriation act unless it includes the word "hereafter."

The CHAIRMAN. It is in the appropriation bill, it is true, but it is general law, and this bill provides that the limit of total expenditure for this work fixed in the act of Congress of June 28, 1902, is extended. The bill itself states that it is fixed—fixed by a previous law. It is also fixed by the act of 1904 and also by the act of 1905, so that there are three different bills fixing the cost not to exceed five and a half million dollars. If there is no existing law on the subject, then this bill creates a law, and if there is an existing law then this bill changes it. In either event it is new legislation.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I desire briefly to discuss the point of order. Let me read Rule XXI, section 2.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is familiar with the rule.

Mr. SULZER. It says:

No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress; nor shall any provision changing existing law be in order in any appropriation bill or in any amendment thereto.

Mr. Chairman, the matter under consideration is this appropriation for a public improvement, and this is a continuation of the original appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. Congress has already fixed a limit to that improvement by specific law.

Mr. SULZER. It does not say so in the act of 1902.

The CHAIRMAN. This bill to which the point of order is made recites that limit.

Mr. SULZER. There is nothing in the original law that puts a limit on the cost. That act appropriated an amount of money, and this appropriation is a continuation of an appropriation for public works now in progress.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would call the attention of the gentleman from New York to the fact that this is not a continuation of the appropriation. This is a change of limit. It says that the limit is extended $1,500,000. It is not an appropriation for a million and a half of dollars, but it is a change from the limit of $5,500,000 to $7,000,000.

Mr. SULZER. It is an extension or continuation. They might have used the word "continuation" in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no appropriation in this paragraph. It only changes the previous limit fixed by Congress.

Mr. SULZER. There was no limitation in the original act fixed by Congress. That act does not say that the amount then appropriated should be limited to that amount of money for these improvements at West Point. All the law said was that such an amount was appropriated. This is a continuation of the original appropriation for public improvements now going on, and under this provision of the rule it seems to me the point of order is not well taken.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. This is clearly a change in existing law. The paragraph says that it is to "extend" or increase the limit of the appropriation made by existing law. To extend the existing law we must change it, and in this case by increasing the appropriation $1,500,000, making the total appropriation $7,000,000, I believe. This increase is needed, we are told, because building material has increased in price.

But, Mr. Chairman, I do not care particularly to discuss the question of the point of order. I simply want to call the attention of this honorable body to one fact and then I am done. As I said a few moments ago to the gentleman from New Jersey, this is the second time the steel trust and other trusts, singly or combined, have held up the Government and forced increased appropriations. I certainly hope the Attorney-General of the United States will at once investigate this matter, if not to save the people, to save the Treasury from being emptied by unlawful combinations.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule on the point of order.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the Chair to the words of the act of 1902, and if the Chair will read the provisions of that act the Chair will see that there is no limitation in it and that this appropriation is a continuation of the former appropriation and is for a public improvement. Hence it comes within the rule and is not subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. It is a sufficient answer to that to say that if the former act did not fix a limitation this act does; if there is no limitation this creates one, and that is a change of existing law. If there is a limitation, this enlarges it. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. SULZER. Well, I am sorry; but I suppose there is nothing to do but gracefully submit to the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. LACEY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 18030—the Military Academy appropriation bill—and had directed him to report the same back without amendment with the recommendation that it do pass.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reports that that committee has had under consideration the bill H. R. 18030, the Military Academy bill, and has directed him to report the same back without amendment with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, did I not understand that a point of order was sustained to the last paragraph of the bill?

The SPEAKER. Paragraphs that go out on points of order are not reported. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The question was taken; and the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HULL, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

JAMES D. VERNAY.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following resolution, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate bill (S. 2325) entitled "An act for the relief of James D. Vernay be returned to the Senate, pursuant to their request by Senate resolution of April 24, 1906.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I object. I will state to the Speaker that I shall not have objections right after the statehood conference report comes in.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi objects.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the following request, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. HOUSTON, of Tennessee, requests leave of absence for ten days, on account of important business.

The SPEAKER. The question is on granting the leave of absence.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, is there any motion before the House? Did anybody make a motion?

The SPEAKER. Strictly speaking, no.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the request be granted.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the request be granted.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that the habit has been not to wait upon formal motion in respect to matters that are granted as matter of course.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the request be granted.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Mississippi, who is now recognized by the Chair, that the request be granted.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT.

Then, on motion of Mr. HULL (at 4 o'clock and 56 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned until to-morrow, at 12 o'clock m.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, submitting an estimate of deficiency appropriation for transportation of minor coins—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a letter from the Acting Secretary of War submitting an estimate of appropriation for the relief of Cornelio Alcantara—to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior submitting an estimate of appropriation for reproducing official records of the land office at San Francisco—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior submitting an estimate of appropriation for survey of boundary line between Idaho and Montana—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 5979) to grant the thirty-sixth section of public lands in each township to the State of Arkansas for school purposes, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3707); which said bill and report were refered to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. ALEXANDER, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 3436) to provide for the settlement of a claim of the United States against the State of Michigan for moneys held by said State as trustee for the United States in connection with the St. Marys Falls Ship Canal, reported the same, together with the minority views, without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3710); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

Mr. GUDGER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 18319) granting an increase of pension to Newton Kinnison, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3706); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. LACEY, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 1725) granting certain land to the Missionary Baptist Church, of Rock Sink, Fla., reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3708); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. PARKER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 2325) for the relief of James D. Vernay, together with the request of the Senate for the return of said bill, reported the same, accompanied by a report (No. 3709); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. HIGGINS: A bill (H. R. 18891) to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph and telephone line in the district of Alaska—to the Committee on the Territories.

By Mr. MURPHY: A bill (H. R. 18892) to remove the restrictions on the alienation of land in the Choctaw, Chickasaw, Cherokee, Creek, and Seminole nations, Ind. T.—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. KLEPPER: A bill (H. R. 18893) for the improvement of the Missouri River near Camden, Ray County, Mo.—to the Committee on Levees and Improvements of the Mississippi River.

By Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH: A bill (H. R. 18894) to amend section 653 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia, relative to assessment life insurance companies or associations—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. PAYNE: A bill (H. R. 18895) to provide for the reimbursement of the United States for expenses incurred in inspecting and stamping distilled spirits contained in rectifiers' and wholesale liquor dealers' packages—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania: A bill (H. R. 18896) granting an increase of pension to Samuel Smith—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BENNETT of Kentucky: A bill (H. R. 18897) granting an increase of pension to R. A. Hillman—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BONYNGE: A bill (H. R. 18898) granting an increase of pension to Sophia A. Brown—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. COLE: A bill (H. R. 18899) granting an increase of pension to John Watters—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GRAHAM: A bill (H. R. 18900) correcting the military record of E. J. Kolb, alias E. J. Kulb—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. GREGG: A bill (H. R. 18901) granting an increase of pension to John E. English—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HOPKINS: A bill (H. R. 18902) granting a pension to Cornelius Meek—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. JOHNSON: A bill (H. R. 18903) granting an increase of pension to Julia A. Abney—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. LEVER: A bill (H. R. 18904) granting an increase of pension to Henrietta G. Carter—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. MANN: A bill (H. R. 18905) granting an increase of pension to Samuel H. Davis—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MURPHY: A bill (H. R. 18906) for the relief of J. M. Rodgers—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. NEVIN: A bill (H. R. 18907) granting a pension to John Moore—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 18908) granting an increase of pension to Ferdinand Schlegel—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 18909) granting an increase of pension to Peter Farley—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. PAYNE: A bill (H. R. 18910) granting an increase of pension to Philo E. Davis—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. PEARRE: A bill (H. R. 18911) granting an increase of pension to Frances Becker—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. POLLARD: A bill (H. R. 18912) granting a pension to John E. Latta—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SMITH of Iowa: A bill (H. R. 18913) granting an increase of pension to George W. Hilling—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SMITH of Maryland: A bill (H. R. 18914) for the relief of Joseph Flewheart—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. WEBB: A bill (H. R. 18915) granting an increase of pension to William R. Watts—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WOOD of Missouri: A bill (H. R. 18916) granting a pension to Mary A. Laurient—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 18917) granting an increase of pension to John Martin—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of bills of the following titles; which were thereupon referred as follows:

A joint resolution (H. J. Res. 57) extending the provisions of the act of June 27, 1890, to include the officers and privates of the Eighteenth and Nineteenth Regiments Kansas Volunteer Cavalry and the widows and minor children of all such persons—Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 12330) granting an increase of pension to Hester A. Van Derslice—Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 17934) granting an increase of pension to Thomas J. Byrd—Committee on Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 18677) granting a pension to Martin A. Luther—Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, the following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. ALEXANDER: Petition of the Buffalo (N. Y.) Foundrymen's Association, for two classes of mail matter only—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. ANDREWS: Petition of citizens of Raton and Las Vegas, N. Mex., against religious legislation in the District of Columbia—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. BATES: Petition of Grange No. 838, of Shadeland, Pa., for the Heyburn pure-food bill—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, petition of the Society on Political Study, of New York City, for bills S. 50 and H. R. 4462 (the child-labor bills) and S. 2962 (the children's bureau bill)—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. BELL of Georgia: Paper to accompany bill for relief of Russell Savage—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, paper to accompany bill for relief of Elizabeth S. Mullins—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BENNETT of Kentucky: Paper to accompany bill for relief of Susan Hardin—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, paper to accompany bills for relief of William H. Tritts, Lemuel Johnson, and William J. Meadows—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BURLEIGH: Petition of Lamoine (Me.) Grange, No. 64, for repeal of revenue tax on denaturized alcohol—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. COLE: Petition of citizens of the Eighth Congressional district of Ohio, against the ship-subsidy bill—to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

By Mr. DUNWELL: Petition of the Society for Political Study, of New York City, for bills S. 50 and H. R. 4462 (child labor in the District of Columbia) and for S. 2962 (children's bureau in the District of Columbia)—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Also, petition of the Associated Alumnæ of the Normal College of New York City, for the pure-food bill—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, petition of the Brooklyn League, Temple Bar, for the reconstruction of Fort Hamilton post on the lines recommended by Gen. F. D. Grant—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. ESCH: Petition of the Society for Political Study, of New York City, for bills S. 50 and H. R. 4462 (child labor in the District of Columbia) and S. 2962 (children's bureau)—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. FLACK: Petition of Gouverneur (N. Y.) Grange, No. 303, against the ship-subsidy bill—to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

By Mr. FLOYD: Paper to accompany bill for relief of William C. Mahaffy—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. FULLER: Petition of the Rockford (Ill.) Manufacturers and Shippers' Association, against anti-injunction legislation—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. GOULDEN: Petition of James M. Ginn et al., of St. Luke's Council, No. 438, Knights of Columbus, for bill H. R. 13309, relative to a suitable memorial to the memory of Christopher Columbus—to the Committee on the Library.

By Mr. HOPKINS: Paper to accompany bill for relief of Cornelius Meek—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HOWELL of Utah: Petition of the Telluride Powder Company, of Utah and Colorado, for the Littauer bill (the metric system)—to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

Also, petition of the Y. L. M. I. A., of Salt Lake City, for an appropriation to investigate the industrial condition of women in the United States—to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. JOHNSON: Paper to accompany bill for relief of Julia A. Abney—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. LACEY: Petition for an amendment to the pension laws, giving arrears back to the date of discharge at $8 per month for soldiers 70 years old and $4 additional pension after 70 years of age—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MAHON: Paper to accompany bill for relief of John D. Baker—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, petition of citizens of Huntingdon, Pa., against sale of liquor in Government buildings—to the Committee on Alcoholic Liquor Traffic.

By Mr. MANN: Paper to accompany bill for relief of Samuel H. Davis—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. NEVIN: Petition of Thomas J. Littlejohn and 6 others, for legislation to pay $2 per day to ex-Union soldiers while confined in Confederate prisons—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. NORRIS: Petition of the Lincoln (Nebr.) Credit Men's Association, against repeal of the bankruptcy law—to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee: Petition of citizens of Lebanon, Ky., for an appropriation to acquire a right of way and to build a road from the town of Lebanon to the national cemetery—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, petition of the National Business League of Chicago, Ill., against anti-injunction legislation—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of Russe & Burgess, of Memphis, Tenn., for the reclassification of mails and for two classes of mail matter only—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, petition of the Society for Political Study, of New York City, for bills S. 50 and H. R. 4462 (child labor in the District of Columbia)—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. PEARRE: Petition of John F. Reynolds Post, Grand Army of the Republic, to accompany bill for relief of Frances Becker, widow of Ferdinand Becker—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. PUJO: Petition of the Deep-Water Convention held at Morgan City April 10, 1906, for an appropriation to procure and keep a depth of 20 feet of water through the channel of the Atchafalaya River—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Also, petition of the Southern Cypress Manufacturers' Association, against bills H. R. 4445 and 9328 (the anti-injunction bills; the Little and Gilbert bills)—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of the executive council of the American Federation of Labor, against bill H. R. 5281 (the pilotage bill)—to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

Also, petition of the Southern Cypress Manufacturers' Association, for an appropriation to obtain and maintain deep water in the Atchafalaya River—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. SCHNEEBELI: Petition of Washington Camp, No. 451, Patriotic Order Sons of America, of Weaversville, Pa., favoring restriction of immigration—to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

Also, petition of the National Business League, of Chicago, Ill., against anti-injunction legislation—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of the National Board of Trade, of Philadelphia, Pa., for the ship-subsidy bill—to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

Also, petition of the T Square Club, of Philadelphia, Pa., for preservation of Niagara Falls—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Also, petition of the Trades League of Philadelphia, Pa., against the Little and Gilbert bills, relative to immunity to labor organizations in disputes—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of the Indian Association of Bethlehem, Pa., for legislation for the California Indians—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Also, petition of the Western Pennsylvania Branch of Consumers' League, for legislation to regulate child labor in the District of Columbia and for a children's bureau—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. SMITH of Kentucky: Paper to accompany bill for relief of John C. Vanfleet—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, paper to accompany bill for relief of Clifford Haddoct—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SULLIVAN of New York: Petition of 65 prominent women of Molly Pitcher Council, of New York City, for restriction of immigration—to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina: Paper to accompany bill for relief of heirs of Micajah Hardesty—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. WOOD of Missouri: Petition of Limbante & Raffaele, for the Littauer bill (the metric system)—to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, May 3, 1906.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. EDWARD E. HALE.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. LODGE, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Journal stands approved.

MILITIA ORGANIZATIONS IN CIVIL WAR.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 18th ultimo, a report from the Military Secretary of the Army, containing a list, arranged by States, showing which of the military organizations accepted into the service of the United States during the civil war were so accepted as militia organizations; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 18030. An act making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 18537. An act making apropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. SCOTT presented a memorial of Bluestone Council, No. 110, United Commercial Travelers of America, of Bluefield, W. Va., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to consolidate third and fourth class mail matter; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented a petition of sundry pharmacists and physicians of Jefferson County, W. Va., praying for the adoption of certain amendments to the present patent law; which was referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. SMOOT presented a petition of sundry citizens of the State of Utah, praying for the enactment of legislation to consolidate third and fourth-class mail matter; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. GALLINGER presented a petition of the Board of Wardens of the Village Improvement Society, of Franklin, N. H., praying for the enactment of legislation to prevent the impending destruction of Niagara Falls on the American side by the diversion of the waters for manufacturing purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of the Board of Wardens of the Village Improvement Society, of Franklin, N. H., praying for the enactment of legislation to establish national forest reserves in the Southern Appalachian and White Mountains; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Washington, D. C., and the petition of Donald MacPherson, of Washington, D. C., praying for the enactment of legislation to regulate the operation of street railways in the District of Columbia; which were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented a petition of the North Capitol and Eckington Citizens' Association, of Washington, D. C., praying for the enactment of legislation to require street railway companies in the District of Columbia to sprinkle along their tracks; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented sundry papers to accompany the bill (S. 5802) to correct the military record of Mirick R. Burgess; which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. BURKETT presented sundry affidavits to accompany the bill (S. 5602) granting an increase of pension to Alexander Brady; which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. STONE presented a petition of sundry citizens of St. Louis, Mo., praying for the enactment of legislation to remove the duty on denaturized alcohol; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of Colonel Louis A. Craig Camp, Army of the Philippines, of Kansas City, Mo., praying for the enactment of legislation granting special medals to officers and enlisted men who served beyond their legal enlistment in the war with Spain; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a petition of Frank P. Blair Post, No. 1, Department of Missouri, Grand Army of the Republic, of St. Louis, Mo., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the purchase of the Wilsons Creek battlefield, in that State, for use as a national park; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a petition of St. Louis Chapter, American Institute of Architects, of St. Louis, Mo., praying for the enactment of legislation to remove the duty on works of art; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a memorial of Local Division No. 338, Amalgamated Association of Street and Electric Railway Employees, of Springfield, Mo., remonstrating against the repeal of the present Chinese-exclusion law; which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented sundry petitions of citizens of St. Louis, Mo., praying for an investigation into the existing conditions in the Kongo Free State; which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a memorial of Ozark Council, No. 58, United Commercial Travelers of America, of Springfield, Mo., and a memorial of sundry citizens of St. Louis, Mo., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to consolidate third and fourth class mail matter; which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. DOLLIVER presented sundry papers to accompany the bill (S. 423) to recognize the military services of George R. Burnett, late first lieutenant, Ninth United States Cavalry; which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. LODGE, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2241) granting an honorable discharge to Benjamin F. Helmick, reported adversely thereon, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. SCOTT, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally with amendments, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 3728) granting a pension to William H. Winans; and

A bill (S. 2179) granting an increase of pension to S. Annie Gregg.

Mr. SCOTT, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them each with an amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 3649) granting a pension to Sarah Agnes Sullivan; and

A bill (S. 3270) granting an increase of pension to William H. Richardson.

Mr. SCOTT, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 17586) granting a pension to Harriet A. Morton; and

A bill (H. R. 17085) granting an increase of pension to George W. Olis.

Mr. DOLLIVER, from the Committee on Education and Labor, to whom was referred the bill (S. 5665) to regulate the employment of child labor in the District of Columbia, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. HEMENWAY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 11543) to correct the military record of Benjamin F. Graham, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. PENROSE introduced a bill (S. 6005) granting an increase of pension to John G. Bridaham; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 6006) granting an increase of pension to William H. Crouch; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. ALGER introduced a bill (S. 6007) to correct the military record of John J. Waters; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. McCUMBER introduced a bill (S. 6008) granting an increase of pension to Joseph Lamont; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SCOTT introduced a bill (S. 6009) for the relief of St. John's Episcopal Church, of Charleston, W. Va.; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 6010) for the relief of Hector Bell; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. BURKETT introduced a bill (S. 6011) granting an increase of pension to Isaiah De Puy; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MONEY introduced a bill (S. 6012) for the relief of James H. Shannon; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 6013) for the relief of Julia D. Harris, administratrix of the estate of Stephen Daggett, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 6014) for the relief of the estate of Emanuel M. Solari, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. MORGAN introduced a bill (S. 6015) to carry out the findings of the Court of Claims in the case of Mrs. Frances A. Moore; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 6016) for the relief of Le Vert & Masten; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. STONE introduced a bill (S. 6017) granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth F. Snyder; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 6018) granting an increase of pension to Henry Pensinger; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 6019) granting a pension to Harriet O'Donald; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 6020) for the relief of Clay Taylor; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 6021) for the relief of the estate of Charlotte A. Armstrong, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. ALDRICH introduced a bill (S. 6022) to amend section 6 of an act entitled "An act to define and fix the standard of value, to maintain the parity of all forms of money issued or coined by the United States, to refund the public debt, and for other purposes," approved March 14, 1900; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. McCUMBER introduced a bill (S. 6021) to amend section 21 of chapter 252 of the act approved May 28, 1896, entitled, "An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907, and for other purposes;" which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

REGULATION OF RAILROAD RATES.

Mr. TILLMAN. I submit an amendment to the rate bill. I ask that it be read.

The amendment was read, and ordered to lie on the table and to be printed, as follows:

In section 4, on page 11, at the end of line 9, add:

"If such court shall find that the order was beyond the authority of the Commission or was a violation of the constitutional rights of the carrier it shall issue an injunction against the enforcement thereof: Provided, however, That no such injunction shall be issued as a preliminary or interlocutory proceeding."

Mr. STONE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 12987) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, and all acts amendatory thereof, and to enlarge the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission; which was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. ANKENY submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $750 to reimburse John M. Hill, late register of the United States Land Office at Walla Walla, Wash., for clerk hire, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $9,000 for paving South Carolina avenue from Thirteenth street to Fifteenth street SE., intended to be proposed by him to the District of Columbia appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

HEARINGS BEFORE COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS.

Mr. SCOTT submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds hereby is authorized to employ a stenographer to take hearings upon such matters as may be referred to the committee for its consideration, the expense to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

FOREIGN-BUILT DREDGES.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 395) concerning foreign-built dredges, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, agree to the conference asked by the House of Representatives, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice-President appointed Mr. FRYE, Mr. GALLINGER, and Mr. BERRY as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

PROPOSED INVESTIGATION OF METROPOLITAN POLICE.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day.

The SECRETARY. Senate resolution 126, by Mr. TILLMAN——

Mr. TILLMAN. I should like to have the resolution go over and lie on the table without losing its place or its rights until such time as I see fit to call it up.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

H. R. 18030. An act making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

H. R. 18537. An act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

REGULATION OF RAILROAD RATES.

Mr. TILLMAN. I ask that the unfinished business be laid before the Senate.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12987) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, and all acts amendatory thereof, and to enlarge the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, in the remarks I made in the earlier stages of the consideration of the pending bill I expressed some doubts about the right of Congress to deprive the courts of the power of issuing preliminary or temporary or interlocutory injunction. Since then I have given the question more thought and consideration, and I propose briefly to state the reasons why I conceive Congress has not the right to deprive the courts of that power, and I shall do it in as brief and concise terms as possible.

Can courts of equity in a case in equity of which they have jurisdiction be divested of the power to grant relief by temporary injunction in a case justifying such relief according to the established principles of equity? This is, in substance, what is involved in the amendment and the contention of the Senator from Texas. And as he bases his claim and contention upon the power of Congress to withhold jurisdiction, in whole or in part, from the inferior courts, I shall briefly discuss the subject in a general way before coming down to the ultimate point in controversy.

Under the Constitution, "the judicial power of the United States is vested in one Supreme Court and in such inferior courts as Congress may from time to time ordain and establish." This paragraph vests the judicial power in two kinds of courts, to wit, a Supreme Court and inferior courts, but neither of these courts could well exist without the affirmative action of Congress. There could not well be a Supreme Court until Congress prescribed the constituent elements of the court—that is to say, the number of judges—for the Constitution is silent on that point. While the President can appoint the judges, the power is not committed to him to determine whether the court shall consist of one or more judges, or, if more than one, of how many. And hence we find the judiciary act of 1789 prescribing that the court "shall consist of a chief justice and five associate justices." The act of 1802 added another associate justice, and by the act of 1837 two additional associate justices were added, making eight in all—the present composition of the court. Without such legislation there could not well be a Supreme Court.

If Congress could allow the power to establish inferior courts to remain dormant, so it could also allow the power of prescribing and defining the composition of the Supreme Court to remain dormant, and thus through legislative inaction the whole judicial power of the United States would be in abeyance, and one great department of the Government would not be put in operation. In a limited class of cases the original jurisdiction is with the Supreme Court; in all other cases it is in the inferior courts to be established by Congress. Congress has not only the power to create these inferior courts, but also the power to prescribe the cases over which they shall have jurisdiction.

After the Supreme Court has been established Congress can not deprive it of its original jurisdiction, but it can deprive it of all appellate jurisdiction by failing to establish inferior courts.

Congress can not only allow the judicial power to lapse and be dormant by failing to establish inferior courts, but it can also allow the larger share of this power to lapse and be dormant by failing to vest such inferior courts with jurisdiction in a large class of cases, and so a large portion of the judicial power would be in abeyance, and thus the judicial department would be to a large extent dismantled and to that extent the people of this country would be deprived of the inalienable right, which pertains to every free, civilized, and enlightened government, to have their controversies settled and adjusted by peaceful methods rather than by brute force and violence, as in the primitive state of our race.

The Constitution of the United States is not a self-executing instrument. It is only a people, able, willing, and ready to accept and act under its provisions, that can breathe life into it and make it a living reality. The people might refuse to elect Senators and Representatives in Congress, or Senators and Representatives might refuse to meet and act. In either case the legislative power would be in abeyance, and the legislative department would be entirely dormant. So the people might refuse to elect a President and Vice-President, or these officials or any of those in whom the Presidential succession would vest might refuse to serve. In either case the executive department would be vacant, and to that extent the Government would be dismantled.

While the mere physical power exists to do all these things that I have mentioned, it would be a most violent presumption to assume that such power would be exercised to the extent I have suggested, for it would amount to a dismantlement of our Government. It would involve a gross violation of legal and moral duty—such a violation of duty as is foreign to the people, the officials, and the institutions of this country.

"The judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one Supreme Court and in such inferior courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish. * * * The judicial power shall extend to all cases in law and equity arising under this Constitution, the laws of the United States, and treaties made," etc. These are the mandates of the Constitution to us as legislators. "The judicial power shall extend to all cases in law and equity," etc. And this power can not be thus extended unless we create "such inferior courts" and vest in them the jurisdiction, minus the original jurisdiction of the Supreme Court, of "all cases in law and equity arising under this Constitution," etc.

For us as legislators to refuse or neglect to put this power of the Constitution into effective operation is to refuse and neglect to perform our moral and legal duty. When we enter upon our duties in this Chamber, we take an oath to support the Constitution of the United States and to faithfully discharge the duties of our office. We do not support the Constitution of the United States and we do not faithfully discharge our duties if we allow a material portion of the judicial power of the United States to remain dormant and in abeyance, and thus deprive the people of the United States of a part of the judicial remedies which the Constitution accords them.

We may have the physical power, but we have not the moral or legal right to deprive the people of this country of a tribunal in which "all cases in law and equity arising under the Constitution, etc.," can be tried and determined.

Mr. President, I do not make these observations because Congress has failed to provide the proper courts and to equip them with the requisite jurisdiction. Congress has, except in a class of minor cases, invested the circuit court with ample original jurisdiction. It has extended to this court the judicial power contemplated by the Constitution. I have made these remarks rather in response to the general contention and argument of the Senator from Texas.

But coming to the precise point and gist of the amendment of the Senator from Texas and his argument in support thereof, as I understand it, it is this:

He would confer upon the circuit court of the United States the right, by an original suit in equity, to review the action and order of the Commission, but he would withhold from the court the power to grant a temporary injunction in such a case.

To show where this contention would lead to we must recur to the Constitution. That instrument uses the terminology of the common law as it existed when the Constitution was framed. Thus, all criminal cases must be tried by a jury, and suits at common law, where the matter in dispute exceeds $20, must be tried by a jury. Now, the Constitution does not describe of what a jury consists, or what the term "verdict" implies. To ascertain these facts we recur to the common law, and there we find that a jury consists of twelve men and that the verdict must be unanimous instead of a mere majority. So the Constitution declares that "the judicial power shall extend to all cases in law and equity." Now, the Constitution does not define what a "case in law" is, or what a "case in equity" is, nor what the difference is between the two. To ascertain these facts we must recur to the common law and equity jurisprudence prevailing at the time the Constitution was framed. As all lawyers know, there was then, and still is, a deep and broad difference between the two classes of cases, and this difference is so pronounced that even in those States where both classes of cases are tried in the same court, upon the same form of pleading, and in the same action—which is not the case in the courts of the United States—the real distinction between the two classes of cases has not been obliterated, especially in the matter of relief sought and accorded. As to this, the distinction still remains.

A United States court trying a case in equity sits as a court of equity and administers equitable relief. A court of equity, from the very inception of equity jurisprudence, not only granted relief by a permanent injunction, but also by a temporary injunction. The latter was oftentimes necessary to make the former of any value. There were many cases where it was necessary, in order to give proper and effective final relief, that the property, or subject of litigation, should be preserved intact until the final disposition of the case, for without such temporary stay the final relief might prove abortive or incomplete, and it might be impossible to restore the parties to that condition in respect of the subject of litigation, which the court, by its final decree, might determine to be just and proper.

Judge Story in his commentaries on equity jurisprudence points out the distinction between cases in equity and at common law in the following language:

> In England and in the American States, which have derived their jurisprudence from that parental source, equity has a restrained and qualified meaning. The remedies for the redress of wrongs and for the enforcement of rights are distinguished into two classes. First, those which are administered in courts of common law; and secondly, those which are administered in courts of equity. Rights which are recognized and protected, and wrongs which are redressed by the former courts are called legal rights and legal injuries. Rights which are recognized and protected, and wrongs which are redressed by the latter courts only are called equitable rights and equitable injuries. The former are said to be rights and wrongs at common law, and the remedies therefor are remedies at common law; the latter are said to be rights and wrongs in equity, and the remedies therefor are remedies in equity. * * * The remedies in courts of equity are often very different in their nature, mode, and degree from those of courts of common law, even when each has a jurisdiction over the same subject-matter.

Relief by injunction is one of the remedies frequently invoked and accorded in cases in equity. Its object is to prevent rather than to redress a meditated or threatened wrong, and it is oftentimes of as much importance to grant the relief during the pendency of the suit as at the end of the final hearing, especially where the litigation may be prolonged. The object of an interlocutory injunction is to preserve the "status quo," to maintain the subject of litigation intact, so that the final relief may not prove abortive. Justice Miller, in the case of the United States v. Duluth (1 Dillon, 469), lays down the rule in such cases as follows:

> When the danger or injury threatened is of a character which can not be easily remedied if the injunction is refused, and there is no denial that the act charged is contemplated, the temporary injunction should be granted, unless the case made by the bill is satisfactorily refuted by the defendant.

In a case in equity the court has the power, where the facts warrant, to grant relief by interlocutory as well as by final injunction. Both forms of remedy may be essential and necessary in many cases in order to afford complete and adequate relief.

In its ultimate analysis, the Senator from Texas, while he proposes to give a court of equity jurisdiction of a case in equity, to wit, a case reviewing the action of the Commission, yet he also proposes that the court shall only have power to grant a part of the equitable relief that pertains to such a case. In other words, while he would give the court jurisdiction of the case, he would say to the court that, while you may try and determine this case, yet there is a part of the equitable relief which under the well-known principles of equity jurisprudence appertains to such a case I will not permit you to grant. And this is nothing more than dictating to the court the amount of relief it shall be privileged to grant. And clearly this would be unconstitutional, for it would be a denial of "due process of law," prohibited by the fifth amendment to the Constitution. While it might be possible, by legislation, to withhold jurisdiction from the court of such a case, yet after jurisdiction has once been conferred, it is not in the power of Congress to limit the court in the relief which it may grant. Congress may confer or withhold jurisdiction of a given case or given class of cases, but when once jurisdiction of a case is conferred upon an appropriate court that court becomes possessed of the full judicial power of the United States over that case, be it an action at law or a suit in equity; and that power as to a case in equity includes the power to give not merely limited or partial relief, but to give every form of equitable relief which was in vogue and prevailed when the Constitution was adopted.

The judicial power over a case within the jurisdiction of the court can not be circumscribed or limited by any action of Congress.

There is, besides what I have already urged, another constitutional restraint upon us in this matter. It is conceded on all sides that we can not permanently deprive the carrier of his property without just compensation, and if we can not do it permanently, manifestly we have not the right, by legislation, to deprive the carrier of such compensation for a limited time; and to deprive the court of the power to grant a temporary or interlocutory injunction might, in such a case, deprive the carrier of his property without just compensation during the pendency of the case, be the time long or short.

To my mind it seems clear, and I have sought to reach a different conclusion, that the proposed amendment of the Senator from Texas, so far as it attempts to withhold from the court the power of granting a temporary or interlocutory injunction, is, both under Article III of the Constitution and the fifth amendment, manifestly unconstitutional, and therefore should not be ingrafted upon the bill. I can readily see how the carriers are likely to resort to this remedy in many cases, and how courts, through ignorance, indifference, or sympathy, may be swift and reckless in granting such relief, and therefore I should be very glad indeed if it were in our power to prevent such recourse to the courts, for I realize how many Commission rates may be thus temporarily hung up and placed in abeyance by the courts. Yet baneful and discouraging as all this may be, I can not see my way clear to do what I conceive the Constitution forbids me to do.

While there are many reforms in the matter of rate regulation that seem necessary and urgent to the public and to those who have their welfare at heart, that are not included in this bill, yet as the great system of "common law" was built up gradually and by piecemeal, so in this matter of statutory reform of rate regulation we can not expect or hope to effect complete reform at one bound. We shall have to accomplish the task gradually and by piecemeal.

This bill accomplishes two great reforms, two great results. First of all, it invests the Commission for the first time with the rate-making power—the vital and controlling principle of all rate regulation. Second, by the broad definition given of the term "transportation" it eliminates many schemes and methods by which extra and unreasonable rates and charges are imposed. These are great reforms. And if we can give the people these results we shall have accomplished much, although we may not have gone to the length that many honest reformers desire.

A meritorious measure may be sometimes loaded down with amendments that in themselves may not be bad—indeed, may be meritorious—and yet they may serve to embarrass and weigh down the measure so that its legislative journey may become harder and more difficult. I hope that this may not be done in this case, and that all those who favor vesting the Commission with the rate-making power will practice as much self-restraint and self-denial in the matter of amendments as possible.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, some time since, when the subject of judicial power and jurisdiction was under discussion, I announced it to be my belief that the trouble which the Senate has met with in coming to a friendly understanding or agreement in regard to the judicial-review feature of the pending bill was that the people of the country had lost faith in the Federal judiciary. It was a broad statement of my own personal opinion. I was taken to task about it. One Senator after another spoke of the difference existing in the territory from which he came and paid high compliments to the judges.

Among other things, I thought it would be a healthy and proper thing for the people of the country as well as the Senate to be made familiar with some of the actions of some of the judges who are occupying seats for life on the bench. I have had but little time to devote to it, but I have gathered together from one source and another half a dozen or more instances of various transactions in which the judges are involved, and I have felt that it would be justifiable under the circumstances to put these facts in the RECORD.

I want to say, before I do this, that I do not belong to the class, if there be one, which holds all of the judges, or even a majority of them, in contempt or distrust. I believe we have a Supreme Court composed of as high, honorable, and patriotic men as any other like tribunal in the world. They have changed front or reversed themselves and wobbled about a little on certain important questions, but I am willing to say that I think the judges of that court have always been actuated by pure and honest motives.

We have very many great and good judges on the circuit and district benches of the courts of the United States, and they are not confined to any particular section, because we have some of this high type of men in the South. We have unfortunately a larger percentage of those who by the records as I will produce them have been guilty of some very questionable and discreditable acts.

I am specially influenced in making this presentation of the misdeeds and mistakes, to say nothing worse, of some of the judges by reason of the fact that we have had very long and learned and eloquent speeches here day after day, hour after hour, in which the country is told and the Senate is pleaded with to stand by the court, to trust it, to believe in it, not to rob it of any of its powers or functions; and there have been pleas for the exercise of this power of injunction, based on the theory, and the contention that to rob these judges or to take from them by Congressional action the power to interfere in behalf of the railroad (for that is the subject we are discussing), one Senator said, would be Jacobinism and it would be to create anarchy. Other Senators have declared that it would be to jeopardize this bill and render it unconstitutional, and all that kind of thing.

When the Interstate Commerce Commission shall be filled out, as the bill provides, to the number of seven, and the salaries increased so as to command the very highest quality or type of talent that we can get in this country, it will be a body so high in dignity that it will compare favorably in the minds of every thoughtful person with any tribunal in the land.

But we are told that the body thus composed may make mistakes; that it may be led off to issue orders affecting the property of the railroads, which would jeopardize their very existence and would be confiscatory of their property, and that therefore we must leave untouched in the hands of the judges the powers in equity which they have hitherto exercised of granting these temporary restraining orders and temporary injunctions upon the flimsiest and slightest kind of a hearing, and then have the machinery of the Interstate Commerce Commission stopped, have its orders suspended, and let the courts take their own time to settle the issues.

Mr. President, I propose to show that some of the judges are not infallible; and I remind the Senate that, measured by the standard of money (the district and circuit judges receive, I believe, only $6,000), there is no justification for this dread and no good reason for the feeling that there would be any harm done if Congress should limit and restrain the judges from exercising an unbridled and ofttimes, I am afraid, prejudiced view in favor of the railroads. I believe it is good for the country to realize that some of the judges right now on the bench vested with this power, exercising it whenever opportunity offers, have shown themselves wholly disqualified and unfit to be trusted with such authority.

That being the case, the question for the Senate to determine is whether or not the damage which will come, the harm that will result to the country, will not be greater if we leave the court untrammeled than it would be if we put such limitations upon the action of the judges as will prevent them from lending their aid to interminable delays and to the denial of justice.

To illustrate how prone to error and how hard it is for men to agree, and courts as well, and to show the utter absurdity of the contention that the judges are higher creatures—purer, nobler, and more to be trusted than other men—I wish to read a brief extract from one of the New York papers—I think the Saturday Evening Post—published a little while ago. It is headed "When doctors disagree."

The census is silent as to the annual emoluments of the legal profession in the United States, but the sum total must rank somewhere between dairy products and the hay crop.

Either of which, as you all know, runs up into the hundreds of millions of dollars.

Nobody with an economic conscience would seek to lay rash hands upon so vast an industry; but its theoretic basis needs reorganization.

The fee is paid and accepted in the complimentary assumption that the lawyer knows what the law is; but every day brings its depressing evidence that, in fact, the lawyer does not know and can not possibly know.

To take only one day's evidence, the Supreme Court of the United States, four out of the nine justices dissenting, has declared unconstitutional a New York law limiting the hours of work in bakeries. The highest court of New York, three out of seven justices dissenting, had declared the same law constitutional. Thus sixteen of the most eminent judges in the land—nine of the Federal Supreme Bench and seven of the New York court of appeals—have passed upon this law, and seven of the sixteen were wrong about it. If that is the proportion of error among the highest judges, what chance has the poor, busy barrister to be right?

Almost at the same time the Federal tribunal handed down a decision in a railroad land-damage case, also from New York. On the same set of facts the New York court of appeals had once held against the railroad. In this particular case the lower court held against the railroad; then the court of appeals, by a divided bench, held in favor of the railroad. The Washington court, four of the nine justices dissenting, reversed the court of appeals which had previously reversed itself, and upheld the lower court. In the famous Northern Securities case four of the nine Supreme Court justices dissented, and a fifth, while casting the determining vote which settled what the law is, reached his conclusions on grounds different from those taken by his colleagues of the majority.

The law must and will be upheld. It means civilization. It is civilization. Whoever raises a hand to it save by way of kindness is a public enemy. But the assumption that any merely finite being can tell you what it is can not be tolerated. If you must pay somebody because you think he can tell you what the law is, go to a fortune teller or a spiritualistic medium. The knowledge you seek lies beyond the bounds of the tangible. Pay your lawyer, if you will, as your philosopher and friend, and the less he tells you of what he knows about the law the better friend he will be.

Mr. President, that is a very sarcastic and unpleasant arraignment of these high fellow-citizens of ours, the men whom we are all trained from childhood and have for the last one hundred and twenty-five years been taught to look up to as the persons in whose brains and hearts the determination of causes and cases as to their righteousness or injustice should be settled; yet in this instance we have seen how they differed and how impossible for them to agree on the same statement of facts. Then we had a strong illustration of this same trouble in the decision on the income tax. That taxation had been held to be perfectly legitimate and constitutional for a century or more, and yet here a few years ago a hearing was had on it by the Supreme Court. It was given out by the newspapers that the court was divided; that the majority upheld the constitutionality of the law; but the opinion was not handed down. A rehearing having been asked for, the rehearing was argued some months later than these newspapers gave out the statement, and one of the judges changed his mind, having in the first count, or ballot, agreed that the law was constitutional, but he had found some reason to change his opinion. Anyway, by a decision in which there was simply one in the majority, the decisions of all of their predecessors for a century were reversed and the law was declared to be unconstitutional. The country submitted, because the court of last resort had so decreed.

Yet when we simply ask here—some of us, at least—that there shall be a limitation on the minor courts, the subordinate courts, the courts we ourselves create, looking to the granting of immediate and practical relief to the business interests of the country when shippers go before the railroad commission compiaining about injustice and wrong from which they are suffering, Senators argue and plead here for a continuance in the hands of these judges of this great power and authority to exercise the functions of chancery and equity and to grant preliminary decrees suspending the order until the court—this infallible court spoken of, nothing about the other influences—shall determine whether the rate is right, just, reasonable, and lawful.

I can not myself, Mr. President, be converted to the idea that there is anything holy about a judge. He is entitled to great respect, and is always given it if he is at all worthy, but he is still nothing more nor less than a man; and when I see how easy it is for these great and high judges, against whose character and integrity of purpose not a whisper has ever been breathed that I know of—the court of appeals of New York and the Supreme Court of the United States—when I see how they differ and how they change sides, and yet the vote of one man, who, it may be, on that occasion had indigestion or something wrong with his stomach, which deranged his mind in the night, changed the whole law of the land—I say I can not subscribe to the doctrine that these men are infallible or that they are to be any more trusted than the railroad commission.

If it shall be contended that it is necessary for us to incorporate in this bill such a provision as that which I introduced this morning, and which has been introduced in other shape by others, in which it is forbidden for these courts to issue preliminary or interlocutory decrees—if, I say, it is argued that such a provision will make the law unconstitutional, why, I say, let us try it and give the people the benefit of the doubt as to whether or not the commission will be wrong—at least, until the judge has tried it. Let the judge meet it; give the railroad the opportunity to go into court and produce the facts; let the judge determine once for all, but let him hear before he determines. That is all we ask. Some Senators say we can not do that; other Senators say we do not want to do that; and so the people will watch to see how they vote, and determine for themselves whether or not they like it.

But some other things are said in connection with this which are not very pleasant, although what I have just read is not pleasant—this division of eight to eight of two supreme court benches, and the balance so evenly rocked up and down that no one can say which eight were right.

I will pass on to some other arraignments of the bench, whose transactions have shown that they are not only not infallible, but apparently not incorruptible. The first one I come on, however, will cause you to laugh a little, because it is not such a very serious case. It is from the New York World of March 30. It is headed:

IOWA AMAZED AT FEDERAL JUDGE—M'PHERSON CLUNG TO TABLE AT BANQUET AND MADE INCOHERENT SPEECH.

[Special to The World.]

DES MOINES, March 29, 1906.

Iowa Republicans are stirred by the publication of the circumstances that brought about the introduction of a resolution before the Council Bluffs Business Men's Federation demanding the removal from the Federal bench of Smith McPherson, who was appointed judge of the southern district of Iowa while representing the Ninth Iowa district in Congress.

The charge made concerns Judge McPherson's condition while addressing a banquet given by Council Bluffs merchants in honor of Governor Cummins. Judge McPherson is an extreme "stand-patter" and an implacable foe of Governor Cummins. He was scheduled to respond to one of the toasts, preceding the governor. He seemed to cling to the table for support while speaking and talked in what is declared to have been a rambling and incoherent manner.

He remarked that one was not allowable to choose the company he should keep. Could he have done so, he declared, he would have kept far away from Council Bluffs, for he always detested the town. So, too, in politics, he had no time for reforms or reformers. He thought it an outrage that so-called and self-styled Republicans should advocate reforms that really branded them as Democrats and were at variance with traditional Republican teachings. He ignored the topic that had been assigned to him, because unintelligible, and wound up by usurping the function of the toastmaster and introducing the governor himself. The governor ignored the circumstance, and in his speech made no attempt to reply to anything McPherson had said.

The Council Bluffs business men were indignant, and at a meeting next day a resolution was introduced demanding the impeachment or removal of McPherson. A subcommittee named to consider this resolution permitted it to die, taking the position that, McPherson's act having been outside his official duty, President Roosevelt could not be expected to take cognizance of it.

Of course it is very absurd to think that the President could do anything more than lecture him, as he did Judge Humphrey the other day, because, being appointed for life, he can only be removed by impeachment if this little peccadillo of being unable to stand up without clinging to a table warranted anything like that, and I do not see what the President has to do with it. This article goes on to state:

This matter has been published extensively in Iowa without, so far as known, enlisting a denial.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. TILLMAN. Certainly.

Mr. CARTER. One of the most appropriate rules I have ever known is that announced by the Gridiron Club at its dinners, to wit, "Ladies are always present; reporters never present." This report by a certain gentleman who invited Judge McPherson to a dinner in Council Bluffs certainly was ill timed, and the subcommittee referred to treated the matter with just and proper contempt. Smith McPherson, the judge referred to, I have known for many years. He is a man of great learning and unquestionable and unquestioned probity of character. That he behaved like a good fellow in the city of Council Bluffs at a dinner simply shows that he is human and was inclined to enter into the spirit of the occasion. I have never heard anyone intimate that Judge McPherson was given to excess in the matter of imbibing at banquets or elsewhere. I think the article suggested by the Senator from South Carolina was a joke to begin with, treated as a joke at Council Bluffs, and will be so treated everywhere where the people have knowledge of Smith McPherson and the good fellows who were at that banquet.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I am entirely willing that it should go that way, but, as the Senator from Montana has volunteered, will he take it on himself to tell us what he knows about this?

Mr. CARTER. I know quite as much as the Senator from South Carolina knows, and he gets his information from the clipping he read, I suppose.

Mr. TILLMAN. That is all.

Mr. CARTER. That is all.

Mr. TILLMAN. I am content to leave it that way. I have nothing against Judge McPherson, nor against any of these judges, for that matter. But suppose that night after leaving the banquet Judge McPherson had been approached by a warm personal friend, like my colleague from Montana, who had a railroad case pending, and some adroit and well-worded plea made of danger to the corporation unless an injunction was granted then and there, does the Senator contend that Smith McPherson would have been a proper person to have signed such a decree that night?

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. TILLMAN. With pleasure.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I regret that I was absent from the Chamber for a moment when the Senator from South Carolina made his observations in relation to Judge McPherson. In reply to what he has just said I will call his attention to the fact that not very many days ago Judge McPherson, dealing with a railway case, in one of the ablest opinions that has been recently rendered by a district court, declined to follow the famous ruling of Judge Humphrey in the meat-packing case. On the contrary, he rendered judgment requiring a great railroad corporation to meet its responsibilities in the suit pending against it, notwithstanding a specious plea of immunity.

I feel that I ought, in justice to a citizen of my own State, say that, whatever else has been charged against Judge McPherson, he has not been charged in any quarter with a want of judicial fairness or a want of good conscience in the discharge of his duties as a district judge of the United States.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, replying to the statement just made by the Senator from Iowa, I would say to that Senator that I have not reflected in the slightest degree upon Judge McPherson. I merely called attention to a statement coming from his own State, in a special dispatch to the New York World, giving an account of a banquet at which the judge had shown himself not altogether able to stand up without the help of a table, or something like that. But those of us who have attended banquets and know how the thing works are ready to make all due allowance for that. [Laughter.] I had no purpose, as I said in the beginning, other than to start this little recital of mine, which will grow more tragic as it goes on, with something that is light and airy to give the Senate an opportunity to smile. That the judge has since refused to lend himself to following Judge Humphrey's decree possibly ought to strengthen me in my estimation, because, without being a lawyer and without having taken the trouble to examine into the matter at all, I imagined that Judge Humphrey's decision was good law. But whether it be or not, the point I am trying to make is that these judges, vested with great power, having their offices for life, ought not to be trusted too far, when the Senate has an opportunity in this bill which we are considering to clip their claws just a little bit. As I go on I hope I shall show stronger reasons why the proposed amendment which I submitted should go into the bill and become a law rather than this mere joke, I might say, at Judge McPherson's expense.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. TILLMAN. Certainly.

Mr. PERKINS. I want to say a word to my friend from South Carolina in reference to Judge McPherson, as the Senator has, by inference, at least, reflected upon his habits. It was my good fortune for four years, while I was a Member of the House of Representatives, to be associated with Judge McPherson and to board at the same hotel with him. He is a gentleman of culture and of education, and no one stands higher in the profession of the law than does the judge. As for his personal habits, he was a teetotaler, and he set an example which I wish I could have followed as closely as he did. If he has changed in that respect he has only departed from the line he laid down as a rule and guide to his conduct.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, whatever may be the outcome of this little excursion of mine into the field of judicial peccadillos, probably this publicity which has been given to Judge McPherson's first lapse will warn him to sin no more forever in that regard, especially at banquets. If it shall have that salutary effect, he will go on and probably from this time forward continue to give opinions that are lucid and powerful and strong in upholding the law as it is, not as the judges make it. That is all any judge ought to try to do, and it is all I want any of them to do.

The next batch of matter which I will present for the information of the Senate deals with another friend of the President, this time a real friend, whose opinions he quoted with unction and with great approval, thereby reversing his procedure in the Humphrey case. I read an extract, which I have had copied in typewritten form in order to condense it, from the Kansas City Times of January 29, 1906:

From the Kansas City Times of January 29, 1906, we are informed that the State game warden, J. H. Rodes, intercepted a basket containing "two geese, nine snipe, and half a dozen prairie chickens." The snipe and geese were returned to the party having them in charge, but the prairie chickens he confiscated, it being the close season for this game. J. H. Durkee, coal dealer, of Kansas City, was the party having this game in charge.

We quote from the newspaper's report on the above date (Kansas City Times):

"The game was not mine," said Mr. Durkee last night. "I had taken it to the train at the request of a friend of mine who wanted the party to have the birds. I have always been active in upholding game laws and went to Jefferson City last winter in the interest of this very measure. I regret very much that the matter should be given any notoriety."

The party left last night in Mr. Lathrop's private car, attached to the Santa Fe train leaving at 10.30 o'clock. The party consisted of:

Judge Smith McPherson, United States district judge for the southern district of Iowa.

Judge John F. Philips, United States district judge for the western district of Missouri.

Judge John C. Pollock, United States district judge for Kansas.

Samuel W. Moore, general solicitor for the Kansas City Southern Railroad, Kansas City.

Judge O. M. Spencer, general attorney for the Burlington, St. Joseph.

Gardiner Lathrop, general solicitor for the Santa Fe system, Chicago.

Dr. Jabez N. Jackson, Kansas City.

W. N. McLeod, one of Senator WARNER'S law partners.

The next day's issue of the Kansas City Journal gives the same list of persons as constituting the party. From the Kansas City Star of January 30 we find that the having of these prairie chickens in his possession cost Mr. Durkee $35.65.

For a number of days the matter seems to have been discussed, and finally, on February 18, at the regular weekly session of the municipal university, in the university building, Judge J. McD. Trimble, referring to the pleasure trip to Tampico, which three Federal judges took as the guests of Gardiner Lathrop and two other general solicitors for railroads, said (Kansas City Times, February 19):

"'I do not think there was anything like corruption intended or apprehended in the invitation and its acceptance,' said Judge Trimble. 'I do not believe that any one of the three judges who was thus entertained would consciously allow the recollection of social favors to influence him in the conduct of cases in which his hosts were interested. I believe if the thought had occurred to them that the public might put an adverse construction upon the affair not one of those judges would have dreamed of going off even on a pleasure jaunt with railroad attorneys. But the fact remains that no matter how disinterested were their motives the action begets distrust in the public mind, and that is enough to condemn it.'"

Judge Trimble dwelt upon the high standing of all the men in the Tampico party, and that by reason of their ascendency the affair gained greater significance. He said that but for a minor episode, the confiscation of a deputy game warden of six birds intended for the private car, the fact that three Federal judges were being entertained by the general solicitors of three railroads probably would never have become public knowledge.

"The distinguished guests were judges in the districts in which one or all of the three railroads represented by the hosts operate. I do not hesitate to say that I believe that those general solicitors would not have invited the men they did had not those men been judges. No doubt the invitation was fairly, innocently worded.

"But the men of the caliber of the three judges in question ought and must have known that there was dope in the middle of the sugar-coated bait that was held out to them. While the dope may and probably will not poison them, the people believe it will. Such an affair as the Tampico pleasure jaunt begets in the people a disregard for judges and a consequent disregard for laws. The courts are ours; the laws are ours; we made them both and can unmake them at will."

Judge Philips evidently noted this comment of Judge Trimble, and in the Kansas City Star the afternoon of February 19 writes an open letter over his signature, which was given the prominence it deserved by being placed in the third column on the front page. The entire letter follows:

"TO THE STAR:

"In view of the prominence given to 'that Tampico trip' in the Times of this morning I feel constrained to depart from my customary course of silence affecting my conduct as judge, or in any matter official, by begging sufficient space in your paper to make a plain statement of facts.

"Responsive to the intense spirit of demagoguery of the hour, a pleasure trip of personal friends is sought to be colored with a sinister purpose on the part of Gardiner Lathrop, as solicitor of the Santa Fe Railway Company, to place under obligation three Federal judges. In justice to him and the truth I state that the fishing excursion to Tampico was entirely of my invitation.

"For four years past I had heard of the rare sport of tarpon fishing at that place. I had enjoyed the recreation of like sport at Aransas Pass and desired to test Tampico. As both Mr. Lathrop and his law partner, Samuel W. Moore, had also fished at Aransas Pass, some months ago we discussed together our desire to go to Tampico whenever conditions made it practicable. We agreed that if we could get away this month, deemed most favorable for the sport, we would go provided a companionable party could be organized. As this month approached I renewed the suggestion, and obtained Mr. Lathrop's consent if he could get away from his work.

"As I was considered the originator of the excursion he left it largely to me to make up the personnel of the party. I had visited the Yellowstone Park in company with Judge McPherson.

It seems that these two judges especially love to roam around on private cars of railroad magnates.

"My personal knowledge of his rare character and social qualities brought him to view, and I urged him to become one of the party, and he did so. Judge Pollock was holding court in my district, while I was doing work on the court of appeals and circuit. As he is especially fond of the sports of the field and streams, I urged him to go, and he consented. Judge Spencer for a quarter of a century has been my personal friend. A more delightful traveling companion, a more unselfish, big-hearted man does not live. I urged him to go, and he consented. I also invited Doctor Heddons, of St. Joseph, to go. I had traveled with him through Yellowstone Park and knew his worth. He could not go. I invited our fellow-townsman, Dr. Jabez Jackson, and he went, as our 'friend and physician.' Mr. McLeod, attorney of this city, my close personal friend, joined us.

"It is true that we rode in a special car, just as I would have gone fishing in a private wagon of a friend, standing my proportion of the 'grub and bait.' From its inception to its close the 'outing' was distinctly social in its makeup and character. Whenever I shall avoid my friends of long standing, and they me, because they are lawyers representing railroads, and because I am a judge, I shall despise myself and the office. If anyone thinks that such personal friendships and intercourse can not be indulged without judicial corruption, subserviency, or sinister design, I only beg to be allowed to indulge the opinion that such a person judges others by his own conscious lack of virile virtue and integrity. From a lifelong acquaintance with Gardiner Lathrop, I entertain such opinion of his character and his ideals that I believe him incapable of doing aught to unduly influence a judge or to pervert justice.

"Very respectfully, JOHN F. PHILIPS."

Mr. President, there are two editorials here from the two Kansas City papers. They deal with some questions of railroad litigation and other matters, and it would take too long to read them, but with the consent of the Senate I will ask to incorporate them in the RECORD.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[Editorial.]

PRAIRIE CHICKENS AND TARPON FISHING—HOW BY MERE CHANCE THE LIGHT WAS TURNED ON THE RAILWAY SPECIAL CAR JUNKET OF THREE FEDERAL JUDGES.

A luxurious, tarpon-fishing junket from Kansas City, Mo., to Tampico, Mexico, upon which three United States district judges, McPherson, Phillips, and Pollock, presiding, respectively, in Iowa, Missouri, and Kansas, were the guests in the special car of Mr. Lathrop, general solicitor of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe, began with the departure from Kansas City on January 28 of Mr. Lathrop's palace on wheels, with its well-stocked larder and buffet and an unlimited supply of "transportation." General Solicitor Lathrop was assisted in entertaining the eminent jurists by Judge O. M. Spencer, general attorney of the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad Company, and by Judge Moore, general solicitor for the Kansas City Southern.

The peculiarly interesting features of this spectacular pleasure jaunt of these three Federal district judges as the guests of three leading railroad attorneys might never have been brought to public attention, and the subsequent close scrutiny and scorching criticism which have attached to it, but for the fact that a bunch of prairie chickens, which by Judge Spencer's direction were being conveyed to Mr. Lathrop's car to be presented to that gentleman to grace the Lucullan feasts of its dining tables, fell into the hands of the State game warden and were confiscated by him, it being the closed season for prairie chickens, and the person in whose possession they were found fined $35.65.

In these days, when the regulation of railroads and the relations of railroads to the courts are the subject of universal consideration, it is not strange that this fishing bee of railway attorneys and Federal jurists has created no little comment and distrust in the public mind, the more so in view of the fact that the railroad solicitor's three jurist guests were the presiding judges in the three districts in which one or all of the three railroads represented operated.

Such an affair as the Tampico expedition and the preliminary contemptuous violation of the game laws by Judge Spencer had the effect of exciting the people to disregard for judges and laws.

The people realize that three general solicitors of railways would not have invited the three men who were their guests had the latter not been judges. As was said by Judge Trimble, a distinguished jurist of Kansas City, "Men of the calling of the three judges in question ought to, and must have, known that there was dope in the middle of the sugar-coated bait which was held out to them. While the dope may, and probably will, not poison them, the people will believe it will."

Antipass legislation seems to be a farce, and the administration of justice between the people and the railways but a pipe dream, in view of such spectacles as this, of three Federal judges accepting from railroads which had but recently been before them charged with violation of the law not only free transportation, but free lodging, free drinks, free cigars, and all the rest that goes with the blow-outs of railway magnates. The acceptance and use of the ordinary everyday railway pass, paid for by the common people, who have to put up good money for transportation, when compared with such junketing as was participated in by Federal Judges Phillips, Pollock, and McPherson is but as petty larceny compared with breach of trust and burglary.

Doubtless the judges returned from the blue waters of the Gulf greatly refreshed in body and invigorated in mind by their close communion and association with the railway attorneys who were their compagnons du voyage, but they will need all their strength and vigor to explain some things to the people, who have conceived a most persistent interest in judicial tarpon-fishing junkets personally conducted by railroad attorneys.

The prairie-chicken incident by rare chance cast illumination upon the journeyings of the special car, and in the same light it may be interesting to look over the past as well as the future decisions of the three judges in connection with controversies in which certain railways are involved.

[Editorial.]

A flagrant case of accepting free transportation and other favors from railroads by United States judges has recently come to light. Judge Philips, of the western district of Missouri, was tendered by the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railroad Company, through Mr. Gardiner Lathrop, general solicitor, the use of a private car for a junket fishing trip to Mexico, and given carte blanche in choosing his companions on the trip. Acting upon this Judge Philips invited Judge McPherson, of the district of Iowa, and also Judge Pollock, of the district of Kansas—all district judges of the United States. In the same party were Judge Spencer, general attorney of the Burlington, and Judge Moore, general solicitor of the Kansas City Southern.

The peculiarly interesting feature of this spectacular pleasure jaunt of the three Federal district judges, as the guests of three leading railroad attorneys, might never have been brought to public attention, and the subsequent close scrutiny and scorching criticism which have attached to it might have been avoided, for the fact that a bunch of prairie chickens, which by Judge Spencer's direction were being conveyed to Mr. Lathrop's car to be presented to that gentleman to grace the Lucullan feasts of its dining tables, fell into the hands of the State game warden and were confiscated by him, it being the closed season for prairie chickens, and the person in whose possession they were found was fined $35.65.

Judge Philips was criticised in the papers, but so obtuse are his perceptions that he seeks to justify this on the ground that it was a mere matter of personal favor. In his public statement over his own signature in the Kansas City Star of February 19, 1906, he states that each paid for his own "proportion of the grub and bait," and scoffs at the idea that anybody could be influenced by any such courtesy.

A decent regard for the ermine which they wear should have prevented these judges from even incurring the risk of public criticism. That law which they violated might at any time come before them for interpretation and enforcement.

Judge Philips had this law before him for construction only a short time prior to his going on this junketing trip, and strangely enough it appears that one of the defendants at that time was E. H. Ripley, president of the railroad company whose hospitality the court was so soon to accept. Another one of the defendants was Paul Morton. It is unnecessary to add that to these defendants a clean bill of health was given.

Judge Philips's record for years shows that the majority of cases in which corporations were parties before him were decided favorably to the corporations. Judge McPherson held in a case where a railroad company was defendant that a tender—a car carrying fuel and water for a locomotive—was not a car within the meaning of the safety-appliance act. The Supreme Court says a tender is a car.

Is it any wonder that the people have a distrust of the Federal judiciary, when their rights as distinguished from the demands of the carriers are to be passed upon by such judges as those carried by the Santa Fe private car? Can it be doubted that Judge Philips is unfitted longer to sit upon the bench, when litigants have reason to fear his decision whenever one of the parties is a railway company and when that litigant has not a railroad and a private car to place at the disposal of his friends?

Mr. TILLMAN. As I said, Mr. President, Judge Philips was quoted with great unction and satisfaction by the President in that now famous case of the Santa Fe road, in which he went out of his way to declare that Mr. Paul Morton was absolutely free from any suspicion of wrongdoing in the way of rebates and all that kind of thing, and the President adopted that view, as I said, with great satisfaction, and sent a special message or gave out a report or something here which was printed; and as the Executive now seems to be indulging in a different policy from that of any of his predecessors, in lecturing a judge who happens to give an opinion that does not suit him, it is very well for lawyers who want to examine into the merits of the two cases to compare Judge Philips's opinion in the Santa Fe case with Judge Humphrey's in the meat packers' case, and see which one of them is the better lawyer. I do not know.

I will just remark that while Senators and others sometimes ride in private cars of railroad magnates—I have done it—and sometimes ride on free passes—I have done it—we are not to be supposed to be debauched by any little courtesy like that, and probably these judges are equally innocent. But as they hold such immense power, very much greater than any we hold, it might be just as well for them to keep themselves, like Cæsar's wife, above suspicion, and not run into temptation and things like that. I have put this record in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD with a view of framing an admonishment. My friend on my left corrects me by saying, "Like Cæsar wanted his wife to be." I believe he did divorce her because he had some suspicion. I correct it very gladly, because I should like to have our judges not only upright, but to lead so clean and high a life and apart from temptation that a suspicion that they are wrong or are likely to go wrong will never be indulged in by any dirty newspaper reporter or editor. [Laughter.]

Now we get down to something a little more serious. Swinging on down the other side of the Mississippi River—I am running this thing geographically—I will come to a case in Texas. I have heard a great deal about "due process of law," and that if we take certain action here it will be a denial of due process of law, and that it will render this bill unconstitutional if we incorporate in it provisions of that character.

I am getting a little tired of reading, and I will ask the Secretary to read what is in the shape of a petition addressed to the two Senators from Texas now in this Chamber, and to the entire Texas delegation in the House, pleading for redress of a grievance in regard to the action of one Judge McCormick, circuit judge in Texas.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator wish to have it all read, or only the part that is marked?

Mr. TILLMAN. Read it all, from A to Z.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

To honorables C. A. CULBERSON, J. W. BAILEY, THOMAS H. BALL, SAMUEL B. COOPER, R. C. DE GRAFFENREID, JOHN L. SHEPPARD, C. B. RANDELL, DUDLEY G. WOOTEN, ROBERT L. HENRY, S. W. T. LANHAM, A. S. BURLESON, GEORGE F. BURGESS, RUDOLPH KLEBERG, JAMES L. SLAYDEN, and JOHN H. STEPHENS, Senators and Members of the House of Representatives from Texas in the Congress of the United States:

We, the undersigned petitioners, respectfully show that they filed suits in the district court of Grayson County, Tex., in September, 1888, against the St. Louis, Arkansas and Texas Railway Company for damages on account of a breach of a contract. One of these suits, to wit, that of C. W. Batsell, was, by consent of parties, made a test case, since the same questions were involved in all the cases. On a trial of said Batsell case in said district court a demurrer of the defendant having been sustained, the said case was appealed to the appellate court, and on October 11, 1895, said cause was reversed and remanded by the appellate court to the said district court for trial on its merits. Thereafter an amended petition was filed in said cause where all your petitioners were made parties to said cause, and also additional parties defendant were made, including the St. Louis and Southwestern Railway Company and the bondholders of said company; and your petitioners sought to foreclose a lien on certain real estate situated in the State of Texas. Thereupon some of the defendants filed an application and bond for the removal of said cause to the circuit court of the United States in and for the eastern district of Texas, sitting in the city of Paris. Said application was granted by said district court and an order made removing said cause to said United States court on the 7th day of December, 1897, and ever since that time said cause has been pending in said circuit court of the United States. The Hon. D. E. Bryant, one of the judges of the said circuit court by virtue of being the judge in and for said district, has continuously held himself to be disqualified to try said cause or to make any order therein by reason of his having been counsel in said cause. Your petitioners, through the said C. W. Batsell, have made repeated applications to the Hon. A. P. McCormick, circuit judge of the United States in and for the fifth circuit, of which this State forms a part, either that he, the said McCormick, should sit and try the said cause or designate some other district judge of the United States to sit in lieu of said Bryant, as we are informed the said circuit judge has power to do. But the said Hon. A. P. McCormick refuses to do either on the ground, as he states, that he does not deem that the public good requires such action on his part.

Your petitioners show that by reason of said McCormick's action they are deprived of an opportunity to be heard in the courts of their country in what they verily believe is a just cause, and they are thereby deprived of justice. Your petitioners would be loath to believe, and they do not claim that the said McCormick, in pursuing said course, is actuated by any other than a sense of duty as he sees it, but your petitioners respectfully represent that they believe that he is mistaken, and that the highest public good in a free government requires that every citizen, no matter how humble his condition, should have an opportunity to be heard in the courts of his country, and they believe that no judge, whether Federal or State, should have the power to prevent such a hearing.

They are informed that there are other causes pending in this State which are in the same condition as their cause, and that the said McCormick has pursued the same course in them.

Wherefore your petitioners pray that you, as their representatives, take such action as you may deem best to give your petitioners and others who may be in the same condition relief.

C. W. BATSELL.	R. WALSH.
W. H. LANKFORD.	JOT GUNTER.
H. L. HALL.	JOHN SUMMERFIELD.
J. IRA HALL.	ZAUK & KRUEGER.
L. F. ELY.	E. F. HALSELL.
M. H. ANDREWS.	J. W. ODNEAL.
A. R. ANDREWS.	D. FOWLER.
TURNER WILSON.	A. A. FIELDER.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, it will be observed that Judge McCormick has absolutely refused for the last six years, I think it is, and if not, the Senator from Texas will correct me, to order any other judge to hold court for the purpose of trying this case. The case was transferred to this court by a judge who was himself disqualified. There have been two instances in which judges have offered to swap, to change places, to get there in order to relieve this condition or paralysis in which the course of justice is involved there, but McCormick, for reasons known only to himself, will not permit the case of the complainants, which is against two railroads or three railroads, to be tried, and he has held it in that condition for six years.

Now, what would a judge like that do when a case involving the rate-making power over those roads or others in his jurisdiction is brought before him, and an effort made to get him to suspend the rate and let the Commission go out of business so far as that decree is concerned, and let the shippers whistle for a final settlement? This is a view I wish Senators to take and to consider. It is whether you propose to keep out of this bill such a provision as will stop judicial tyrants from such transactions as that—a denial of justice. I do not know why nothing has been done here in this Texas case. I understand from some other source that a bill passed the House, I think, but that it is sleeping in the Judiciary Committee of the Senate. The senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] can probably tell me, if he sees fit, what is its exact status.

Mr. CULBERSON. I did not hear the question of the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. TILLMAN. I was merely trying to elucidate the situation in regard to this petition, which seems to deal with a very great wrong and grievance in regard to Judge McCormick's refusal or denial of an opportunity for these cases to be tried, and I have information, which I get in a private letter, that the House passed a bill which looked to giving relief in this case, but that the matter has never been acted on by the Senate.

Mr. CULBERSON. I do not remember, Mr. President, whether this particular question has ever been brought to the attention of the Committee on the Judiciary since I have had the honor to be a member of that committee. When a copy of the petition was read—it is manifestly, of course, an old one—I was trying——

Mr. TILLMAN. It is an old petition, dating back to the time when this thing first occurred, in 1897 or 1898.

Mr. CULBERSON. I say it is manifestly an old one, because some of the Members of the House named have long since ceased to be Members of the House, and some even have moved out of the State of Texas. I was trying to recall the circumstances of my having received a copy of it. I have not yet been able to recall it. I presume I did receive a copy, as my name appears as one of the persons to whom it is addressed. But so far as I now remember, I do not recall the circumstance of a bill having been presented to the Committee on the Judiciary since I have been a member of it.

Mr. TILLMAN. I may be in error. I heard that. It does not concern this matter anyhow. It is not a question whether these facts are true.

Returning back up the Mississippi—as I said, I am treating this matter geographically—I come to a rather famous case of extraordinary judicial action in the receivership of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company. I have here a report, prepared by Mr. Boatner, from the Committee on the Judiciary in the House, submitted to the House in 1893. I have condensed it for the purpose of presenting the facts, and I will ask the Secretary to read the statement of facts as set forth in the paper which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

James G. Jenkins was commissioned a circuit judge of the United States for the seventh circuit (Illinois, Indiana, and Wisconsin) March 23, 1893.

August 15, 1893, Judge Jenkins, in the circuit court of the United States for the eastern district of Wisconsin, in the case of the Farmers Loan and Trust Company v. the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, made an order putting the railroad company into the hands of three receivers—Thomas F. Oakes, Henry C. Payne, and Henry C. Rouse.

August 17, 1893, the receivers ordered a reduction of from 10 to 20 per cent in the salaries of all employees of the road whose annual compensation amounted to $1,200 or more, the reduction to take effect from August 15.

August 25, 1893, the receivers made a further reduction of wages, as shown in the following order adopted by them:

"Ordered, That a further reduction be made in salaries and wages of employees of 5 per cent of all salaries aggregating $50 per month and under $75, and that a 10 per cent reduction be ordered to apply on all salaries from $75 to $100 per month. This order to take effect at once."

October 28, 1893, the receivers, abrogating and canceling all existing rates of pay, adopted an entirely new schedule of wages, which made still further reductions in the pay of all employees of the road. The receivers declared that the new schedule of wages should go into effect and be operative on and after January 1, 1894.

The receivers' order of October 28, 1893, having created great dissatisfaction among all classes of employees of the road—engineers, firemen, train men, train dispatchers, telegraphers, conductors, switchmen, etc.—the receivers, December 18, 1893, filed a petition in court asking authority to enforce their new schedule of wages and praying for an injunction to accompany the same, and the court forthwith (December 19, 1893), on the ex parte application of the receivers, made an order (p. 3 of House Rept. 1049, Fifty-third Cong., 2d sess.) adjudging and decreeing that the receivers "be, and they are hereby, authorized and instructed to put in operation and maintain upon the Northern Pacific Railroad the revised schedule and rates, more specifically in said petition described and ordered by said receivers to take effect January 1, A. D. 1894, and for that purpose and to that end their action in abrogating and revoking the schedules in force on said railroad at the time of their appointment as such receivers, August 15, A. D. 1893, is hereby confirmed."

And the court likewise, on December 19, 1893, further adjudged and decreed (p. 3 of H. Rept. 1049, 53d Cong., 2d sess.) "that the said receivers, Thomas F. Oakes, Henry C. Payne, and Henry C. Rouse, are entitled to a writ of injunction, as prayed for in their said petition, and the clerk of this court is hereby directed to issue the same in due form, under the seal of this court, and to deliver the same to the marshal for execution, who is hereby ordered to protect the receivers of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company in their possession of the property of the Northern Pacific Railroad and in their operation thereof."

The injunction as prayed for (which the court thus granted) is seen in the second prayer (pp. 4–5 of H. Rept. 1049, 53d Cong., 2d sess.) of the receivers' petition. It contains, among other things, a prohibition to the employees of the road "from combining and conspiring to quit, with or without notice, the service of the receivers, with the object and intent of crippling the property in their custody, or embarrassing the operation of said railroad, and from so quitting the service of said receivers, with or without notice, as to cripple the property, or to prevent or hinder the operation of said railroad."

December 22, 1893, the receivers presented a supplemental petition to the court setting forth that their employees were contemplating a strike for the purpose of preventing the proposed reduction of wages, and averring the belief of the receivers that the employees of the road would obey the orders of the executive heads of their respective labor organizations rather than the order of the court already made, if such executive heads should order a strike, and praying the court to enjoin the officers and agents of the labor organizations and all other persons from ordering a strike, and the court forthwith (December 22, 1893) decreed as requested by the receivers. (For injunction, see pp. 8–9 of H. Rept. 1049, 53d Cong., 2d sess.)

For opinion of Circuit Judge Jenkins on motions to modify his preliminary injunctive orders as above made, see Farmers' Loan and Trust Company v. Northern Pacific Railroad Company (60 Fed. Rep., pp. 803–824.)

For opinion of the circuit court of appeals concerning said injunctive orders, see Arthur v. Oakes, 24 U. S. App., 239–270; 11 C. C. App., 209–228; 63 Fed. Rep., 310–329. The opinion of the circuit court of appeals was written by Circuit Justice Harlan, with whom sat Circuit Judge Woods and District Judge Bunn. The preliminary injunctive orders were purged of the offensive features above mentioned.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, it will be observed that in that case Judge Jenkins appointed three receivers of this railroad system, who under the rulings and law as it was interpreted by the Supreme Court were the servants of the court, and that every employee of the railroad—several thousands of them—became a part of the machinery of the court to run the railroad. So when these receivers reduced wages, and then reduced them a second time, and the men began to combine or to organize to resist this taking of bread out of the mouths of themselves and their families, fearing a general strike, which, I think, had been ordered, which certainly was threatened, the judge issued a decree enjoining every employee from quitting work.

This judge has recently retired. I think I have understood that he left the bench in January. Therefore he can do no more devilment like this. But there are other judges around. I shall not do more here than read the conclusion reached by the Judiciary Committee of the House, which was embodied in a resolution. I have not followed the case or the subject-matter of the case up to date, but I believe it is now considered good law for judges to enjoin people from quitting work. [To Mr. SPOONER.] Is it? The Senator from Wisconsin can enlighten me.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator from South Carolina forgets what is proper, Mr. President, and decent among Senators to challenge me in any such way when he interrogates me——

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. SPOONER. He did that once before.

Mr. TILLMAN. I hope the Senator, before he goes any further—because he has already said two very mean words, and I have a little red blood in me sometimes——

Mr. SPOONER. No more than I.

Mr. TILLMAN. Now, let me disclaim the slightest purpose of in any way reflecting or doing anything but merely asking, as a friend, whose legal knowledge I could always rely upon except on this power of the courts, to set me right. I do not know the present status of the law as the courts have determined it in regard to the power of judges in issuing injunctions against quitting work, and I simply asked as a matter of information.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, when I am engaged in debate I am quite ready, and always have been, to submit to interrogations.

Mr. TILLMAN. Very well. Then will the Senator allow me to withdraw my question and apologize for having intruded upon him?

Mr. SPOONER. I ask no apology from the Senator.

Mr. TILLMAN. Then sit down.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state to Senators——

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator forgets——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from Wisconsin kindly suspend? The rules of the Senate forbid Senators from addressing the Senate without first having had recognition by the Chair.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, who has the floor?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wisconsin had the floor and was interrupted by the Senator from South Carolina without the permission of the Senator or the recognition of the Chair.

Mr. TILLMAN. If the President will allow me, I had the floor and asked a question of the Senator. The Senator rose in answer to the question and did not address the Chair.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Carolina invited the interruption by the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. TILLMAN. I will subside and quit for the time being.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wisconsin has the floor by the courtesy of the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, the Senator from South Carolina accentuates what I regard to be a very great piece of rudeness by ordering me in a mandatory way, after I had addressed the Chair, to sit down.

Mr. TILLMAN. I apologize for that. Does that satisfy you?

Mr. SPOONER. I always grant it.

Mr. TILLMAN. I simply want to get it clear, and I want no contention with the Senator to-day, because he told me he was ill.

Mr. SPOONER. Neither the Senator from South Carolina nor any other Senator, Mr. President, need be in the slightest degree complaisant to me. If he wants a controversy with me, he can have it. I think he wants it.

Mr. TILLMAN. I do not.

Mr. SPOONER. I have sat down, Mr. President, under no orders, but of my own volition.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I want to repeat that in addressing the Senator from Wisconsin in asking for information I had no suspicion that he would take it ill, that he would feel hurt or in any wise evince temper.

Mr. SPOONER. I have not.

Mr. TILLMAN. Well, the Senator must have.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Carolina can not be interrupted except by his consent.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. TILLMAN. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I have not.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, if the Senator had not shown by the use of a word that he was angry, I would not have felt called on to so quickly try to set him straight. He said that something I did was hardly decent. He used the word "decent" in the negative in connection with my action or utterance—in other words, intimating, insinuating, or asserting that what I had done was indecent. Now, if that does not mean anger on his part—the Senator is the very pink of courtesy, as we all know——

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. TILLMAN. Oh, certainly; always.

Mr. SPOONER. Probably the word "indecent" was too strong. I rather think it was. I will withdraw that word and substitute for it the word "rude."

Mr. TILLMAN. Well, being a rude man, and not caring about it, I take that.

Now, Mr. President, having stated the facts, or had them read, and supplementing them by a brief personal statement, I simply wanted to offer in connection with this action of Judge Jenkins the conclusion of the Judiciary Committee of the House in its report which I have quoted, Report 1049, Fifty-third Congress, second session:

Your committee therefore recommends the adoption of the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the action of Judge James G. Jenkins in issuing said order of December 19, 1893, being an order and writ of injunction, at the instance of the receivers of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, directed against the employees of said railroad company, and in effect forbidding the employees of said Northern Pacific Railroad Company from quitting its service under the limitations therein stated, and in issuing a similar order of December 22, 1893, in effect forbidding the officers of labor organizations with which said employees were affiliated from exercising the lawful functions of their office and position, was an oppressive exercise of the process of his court, an abuse of judicial power, and a wrongful restraint upon said employees and the officers of said labor organizations; that said orders have no sanction in legal precedent, were an invasion of the rights of American citizens, and contrary to the genius and freedom of American institutions, and therefore deserving of the condemnation of the Representatives of the American people."

I simply want to repeat, because I should like to have the idea driven home, if by repetition it can be done, should this power be given to a judge who will so far forget the decencies of his profession and of his position as to ignore the law and the rights of his fellow-citizens and attempt, because of the fact of this receivership, to compel several thousand men to remain at work, making them in effect slaves? I want to know what a judge like that would do in this case; and we have had several other injunctions of one kind and another, so much so that the party to which I belong had as one of its platform planks a declaration that government by injunction in the United States should cease. I want to know what a judge like Judge Jenkins would do if a rate made by this railroad commission which we are discussing, displeased these railroads. Would he hesitate a minute to issue his decree ordering the suspension of the rate and declaring that the railroad should run on under its own rates? Would such a decree be a denial of justice if we suspended his power to issue it until after he had heard the case?

That is all we ask. We want to prohibit and prevent these preliminary and interlocutory decrees by a judge who has heard nothing but takes the simple affidavit or complaint of the lawyer of the road who goes to the judge, and the railroad commissioner goes up into the air, and the shipper waits indefinitely, in some instances, as at Titusville, Pa., for an opportunity to get redress, waits like those people in Texas are waiting, seven long years, because one of these judicial high priests, these Brahmins of the inner temple, who are so sacred in the eye of some of our legal friends here, because one of this Sanhedrim or other sacred persons must not be interfered with by Congress, although Congress created the office, and under the Constitution, as we understand it, has the right to say, "You can go so far and no further." We want these judges to try the case and hear it all, and then if they decide that the Commission's act is unlawful, or an invasion of the constitutional rights, issue your injunctions, but do not do it until you have heard the case.

I come now to a different class of judicial tyranny; in other words, the railroad judge. Your railroad judge seems just as incapable of holding the scales evenly and deciding a cause upon its merits as though he had but one side to his head and could look only toward the railroad interests.

This is rather a long recital, but it is pertinent and interesting. In the next case I am informed by a most reliable gentleman, and I am not altogether willing to give his name, although he has not asked me not to do it, for the simple reason I expect this Jeffreys, this judicial tyrant, as I call him, would not hesitate to rule him for contempt, but I ask permission to have the Secretary read the famous contempt case of Josephus Daniels, of the Raleigh News and Observer, in the matter of the receivership of a railroad in North Carolina, in which the road was put under receivership by Judge Purnell, and this editor was cast into prison because he refused to pay a fine of $2,000 for having exercised his right in the editorial columns to comment on it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

FAMOUS CONTEMPT CASE HAS BEEN FINALLY ENDED—EDITOR JOSEPHUS DANIELS, OF NORTH CAROLINA, HAS BEEN RELEASED FROM CUSTODY—FREEDOM GIVEN EDITOR BY JUDGE PRITCHARD—GRAPHIC REVIEW OF REMARKABLE CASE WHICH GREW OUT OF FEDERAL ATTEMPT TO PLACE THE ATLANTIC AND NORTH CAROLINA ROAD IN RECEIVER'S HANDS.

RALEIGH, N. C., June 4, 1904.

As told in the Constitution this morning, the famous contempt case which has torn North Carolina for the past week and which grew out of the editorial criticism of Federal Judge Purnell appearing in the Raleigh News and Observer, was ended yesterday by Judge Pritchard dismissing the proceedings and ordering Editor Josephus Daniels released from further custody.

Editor Daniels had severely criticised, in his paper of Sunday, May 29, the action of Judge Purnell in appointing receivers for the Atlantic and North Carolina Railroad, of which the State of North Carolina is three-fourths owner. Mr. Daniels, who is one of the most prominent citizens of the State and was for a number of years the North Carolina member of the national Democratic executive committee, was fined $2,000 by Judge Purnell for contempt, and on refusal to pay the amount was placed in custody.

The appointment of receivers for the Atlantic and North Carolina road was overruled by Chief Justice Fuller, of the United States Supreme Court, and Judge Pritchard, the new judge of the fourth district, came down from Washington to hear the case.

At 3 o'clock the Federal court room was filled to overflowing with people who were deeply interested in the outcome of the habeas corpus proceedings. The prisoner, Mr. Daniels, in custody of the marshal and accompanied by his attorneys and friends, filed into the court room and in a few moments Judge Pritchard opened court. Marshal Dockery read the writ of habeas corpus and his return thereto and announced to the court that in accordance with the said writ the body of Josephus Daniels was before the court. District Attorney Harry Skinner, at the suggestion of Judge Pritchard, represented Judge Purnell in the hearing.

Judge R. W. Winston, representing Mr. Daniels, made a clear, logical, forceful, and feeling speech, in presenting the reasons why the prisoner should be discharged. He reviewed the statute under which Mr. Daniels was held and the decision of the court on same, and showed with the utmost clearness that Judge Purnell had no jurisdiction and that there was no legal reason why the rule should have been issued or served.

District Attorney Skinner, in answer to Judge Pritchard, stated that Judge Purnell had made an order authorizing the prisoner to appeal and to be discharged upon his perfecting the appeal and giving bond. When this statement was made, Judge Pritchard asked if this order was made before or after the writ of habeas corpus was granted by him (Judge Pritchard). He was informed that the order was made by Judge Purnell, after the writ of habeas corpus had been granted. Judge Pritchard then stated that, in his judgment, the rule and order made by Judge Purnell were not warranted by the law, that the prisoner was entitled to be discharged, and directed the clerk to enter an order discharging him.

When this order was made the marshal found it impossible to keep order in the court room. The intense strain under which people had been laboring ever since the arrest and imprisonment of Mr. Daniels was relieved and pleasure and satisfaction were observed on every face. A stream of friends crowded around Mr. Daniels to shake his hand and to congratulate him on the fact that he had been vindicated in his manly stand for the freedom of the press in North Carolina.

This was Judge Pritchard's first case after he was sworn in as circuit court judge, and his fair and impartial action in discharging and releasing a man who was unjustly imprisoned has made a deep impression on the people of North Carolina.

M'BEE APPOINTED RECEIVER.

The facts leading up to these contempt proceedings form a page in the history of the State which will long be remembered by the people. Several months ago application was made at Norfolk, Va., to Judge T. R. Purnell, United States district judge for the eastern district of North Carolina, for a receiver for the Atlantic and North Carolina Railroad—a railroad in which the State owns nearly all of the stock. This application was made by one Finch. Judge Purnell issued an order at Norfolk appointing McBee receiver of the road, without notice to the State. On the next day Judge Purnell came to Raleigh, and recognizing the fact that he had no right to appoint a receiver when out of the State, made another order again appointing McBee receiver. McBee immediately took charge of the road, and the State at once applied to Judge Simonton to vacate Judge Purnell's order appointing McBee receiver.

Before this application was heard by Judge Simonton warrants were issued for McBee and Finch for criminal conspiracy. This was heard before Judge Walter Clark, chief justice of the supreme court of North Carolina, and it was proven that Finch did not own a dollar in stock of the road and that there was a conspiracy to throw the property into the hands of a receiver. The defendants were therefore bound over to court to answer the charge of conspiracy, which is a felony in North Carolina.

JUDGE SIMONTON DISCHARGES RECEIVER.

When Judge Simonton heard the application to discharge the receiver, the receiver was promptly discharged and the railroad returned to its owners, the State of North Carolina. Judge Purnell expressed himself as "highly indignant," and said that he had been imposed on, and the people of North Carolina thought that this ended the effort of those who were trying to secure possession of the road through the receivership. Such was not the case, however, for a short time since another application was made to Judge Purnell to appoint a receiver for this road. This application was made by one Cuyler, and Finch was made a party thereto. Notice, however, was served on the State when this application would be heard by Judge Purnell, and when the same was heard the State was represented. A bond in any amount to be fixed by the judge, to protect the applicant to the petitioner from any loss he might sustain by permitting the property to remain in the hands of the State, was tendered by the State, but rejected by Judge Purnell. Judge Purnell, however, appointed T. D. Meares and V. E. McBee as receivers of the road, McBee being at that time under indictment found by the grand jury of Wake County for a felony.

The Raleigh News and Observer, which is one of the leading daily papers in North Carolina, of which Josephus Daniels is editor, in commenting on this action of Judge Purnell, made severe editorial comment. The issue of Sunday, May 29, being especially vigorous, so much so that it aroused Judge Purnell very greatly. On Monday he issued an order on Daniels to appear before him Tuesday, May 31, at 10 o'clock and show cause why he should not be attached for contempt of court in writing and publishing the editorials which Judge Purnell complained of. The following are the editorials of Sunday, May 29, which aroused the judge and which he filed:

THE EDITORIAL WHICH GAVE OFFENSE—THE LATEST ACT IN THE ATLANTIC AND NORTH CAROLINA RAILROAD RECEIVERSHIP MATTER.

The fourth act of the Atlantic and North Carolina Railroad receivership play took place in the Federal court building in Raleigh yesterday afternoon, when Judge Purnell appointed T. D. Meares as receiver.

The first act took place in Norfolk, when Judge Purnell appointed V. E. McBee receiver upon the application of Finch, who did not own a share of stock in the road.

The second act took place in the Federal court building in Raleigh, when Judge Purnell, finding that his order in Norfolk was illegal because made outside of the jurisdiction of his court, ascended the bench and made the order over again.

The third act was pulled off with the same scenery some weeks later, when, after the conspiracy proceedings, the judge being "highly indignant," the receivership was vacated, the story of the McBee-Finch game of "bunco" having been exposed.

The fourth act in the same play drew a crowd to the Federal court building yesterday afternoon. It was at once apparent that the judge was determined to appoint a receiver, and after permitting the lawyers to talk a little he made the appointment.

Mr. Meares, who was named as receiver, is the man who was to assist McBee, who was first appointed receiver. Finch, who is now said to own his stock, was made a party. So we see that yesterday's appointment was but the finishing up of what was begun in Norfolk, for McBee and Meares are so close together that if one should be called Tweedledee the other would appropriately be called Tweedledum.

It is to be hoped that those newspapers—only a handful in number—which have been clamoring for Federal judge government of North Carolina affairs are satisfied. They seem to have lost sight of the fact that the State of North Carolina owns two-thirds of the stock in the Atlantic and North Carolina Railroad, and that under the law the board of internal improvements, of which the governor is chairman, is charged with the management of the property. Whether they manage it well or otherwise, they are responsible to the people, whose servants they are, and not to any Federal judge. The Federal court had no call to intervene. There is not an instance of a receivership of large property in this State that has not resulted disastrously. Can we expect any other result in this instance?

As evidence that Cuyler did not bring his suit to protect his $3,700 of stock (if, indeed, he has any stock at all) the State offered to put up a bond, in any sum, to guarantee him against loss. In the State courts a receiver will not be appointed for property if the owners in charge give bond to save a minority stockholder or creditor from any possible loss by reason of continuing in charge. The Federal court ought to, in matters relating to receiverships, in this follow the rules of State courts.

No stockholder up to this hour has ever complained to the board of internal improvements of any wrongful action. Cuyler has voted for every act criticised. Does he own and can he control the stock upon which this suit is predicated? Nobody believes this suit was brought for the correction of any evils, but for an ulterior purpose not now disclosed.

Judge Purnell graciously stated that a meeting of the stockholders to agree upon a lease would not be considered an act of contempt of his court, provided the lease they might agree upon were submitted to him! The day will never come when his permission will be asked by State officials as to how they shall perform the duty imposed upon them by the legislature. There is not a decent citizen of North Carolina who would ever forgive the governor of this Commonwealth if he humiliated it by submitting a lease to any Federal court. Some things are higher than leases and rentals and dollars. One is whether the property of the people shall be governed by servants of their choice or by Federal judges in whose selection they have no voice. If their servants commit mistakes or wrongs, the people can correct them. If Federal court judges, appointed by hostile Presidents upon alien recommendations, commit wrongs, there is no immediate remedy. The legislature has full power to make a thorough investigation into all agreements and understandings which have been entered into, and if the governor should call a special session for that purpose the whole inception of this affair might be laid bare to the public gaze. It would have the power to examine everybody and will probably to so. The full disclosure of all the motives and ulterior purposes behind this application by Finch and Cuyler would be interesting and salutary.

Of course the State appealed. The appointment of a receiver was expected, and the State was ready last night with the papers and the bond. The matter will be heard before the circuit court of June 28. If the owners of three-fourths of a piece of property have rights superior to that of one $3,700 stockholder in a company of $1,800,000, the property will be restored to its owners.

Wrong may triumph for a time, but right will eventually be established. The men who are laughing now will be found weeping when the real truth is brought to light, as it will be as sure as God reigns in the heavens.

In addition to this direct and vigorous editorial drubbing, there appeared on the editorial page of the same issue a number of sharp paragraphic criticisms, among which were the following:

McBee had a job with the Seaboard and lost it. Purnell gave him a short job as receiver. Meares had a job with the Seaboard and lost it. Purnell has given him a job as receiver. Finch had a job with the Seaboard and lost it. Purnell heard his prayer and appointed his friend receiver.

One of the men sentenced to jail for contempt by Judge Peebles is a lawyer of thirty years' active practice. He will escape the penalty. It seems to be the unwritten law of North Carolina that no lawyer shall be convicted in the courts and that no judge shall be impeached. Is that long-standing record to be broken?

People ought to have respect for judicial officers, but judicial officers ought not to be "usurperious and pomperious."

It is a thousand pities that Congress did not impeach that Florida judge before it adjourned. The impeachment of an unworthy Federal judge in the South would be as wholesome as a refreshing rain after a long drought—"as vernal showers to warm flowers."

The next legislature should change the laws for contempt if a judge may fine or imprison a man for giving an affidavit against a judge. If he gives a false affidavit, the libel law is open to a judicial officer as to all others and the person making it can be convicted of perjury.

If every man in North Carolina who has at any time expressed contempt for some act of a Federal or State judge should be sent to jail, the jails would have more people in them than are outside of prison walls.

If any man swears to a falsehood about a judge, he should be punished for perjury, but he should be tried and convicted by a jury of his peers and not summarily punished by the judge interested.

Government by Federal judges was not contemplated by the founders of this Republic.

The State will be astonished to read that Judge Peebles has fined three affidavit makers $250 fine and sentenced them to jail in the contempt case. And now we may look for testimony pro and con as to those affidavits. If this affidavit business continues daily newspapers will have to be printed on a composition of asbestos and rubber. They are too hot for plain paper and too long for any sort that will not stretch.

In the same issue of that paper, in the news column, was an account of the action of Judge Purnell in appointing Meares and McBee receivers of the Atlantic and North Carolina Railroad. The article was headed "The thumb was turned down—In the Federal court arena death was decreed for the Atlantic and North Carolina gladiator." The article began with this comment:

"Once there was a judge sitting in trial of a case. He heard at length, with the utmost attention and patience, the complete argument of the plaintiff, and when the lawyers at last ceased and closed their case, he started to render his judgment, with the utmost confidence. Of course the lawyers on the other side, aghast at such snap judgment, arose as one man and protested that he should hear their side of the case. At last the judge, with some misgivings, however, agreed to hear the other side. He listened to a long argument then, with an air of long-suffering patience and a perplexed look on his face, which gradually grew into a look of dismay. Finally the last lawyer took his seat, and the judge slowly looked around the court room and said: 'Gentlemen, if you had permitted me to announce judgment some time ago, when I wished to, I could have done so, but now you've mixed me all up!'"

Judge Purnell was not like that judge. His mind was made up when he came into the court, apparently, and he appointed a receiver for the Atlantic and North Carolina Railroad Company, at least, temporarily, until the final judgment in this hearing, which he continued before S. C. Ryan, of this city, as special master, to hear the evidence and report before July 15.

In the meantime, Thomas D. Meares, of Wilmington, is appointed receiver to take charge at once, and the restraining order is continued. This, the judge said, will not prevent the stockholders from meeting and determining the question of accepting a lease proposition. Of course, he said, the court could not lease the road, but if the stockholders should decide to lease it, they could submit the proposition to the court, and if the court approves it, the receivership will be vacated. This was stated by the court, because yesterday morning Mrs. F. P. Tucker and Dempsey Wood, private stockholders, represented by Judge T. B. Womack, joined in the suit with the defendant railroad for the purpose of praying for a continuance of this hearing in order that the stockholders might meet and vote to lease the road. Judge Womack will now use every endeavor to bring about a stockholders' meeting as soon as possible.

Counsel for the Atlantic and North Carolina appealed the case to the United States circuit court of appeals at once. The hearing yesterday was over a little after 5 o'clock, and before 7 the appeal bond had been given, the citation by the other side completed, and the hearing of the appeal set for June 28 at Richmond. That is said to be the quickest appeal completed on record.

DANIELS FINED $2,000 FOR CONTEMPT.

The contempt order was served on Mr. Daniels on Monday, and Tuesday morning, in company with his attorneys, he appeared before Judge Purnell and asked for time in which to prepare an answer to the rule to show cause why he should not be attached for contempt. Judge Purnell declined to give time, but finally consented to permit the defendant long enough time for the stenographer to finish his answer, which was being typewritten at that time. Mr. Daniels filed an answer, in which he admitted the publication complained of, but denied that it was libelous, and said that, as editor of the News and Observer, he conceived it to be his duty to freely and fearlessly discuss all matters of a public nature which concerned the people of the State of North Carolina; that the said articles were conceived, prepared, and published by him in order that the people of the State might be informed concerning a matter in which they were vitally interested. He denied that the publication was in the presence of the court, or that the court had jurisdiction to try and punish him for contempt in making said publication. The judge, in an angry manner, announced that "the defendant is adjudged guilty of contempt of this court, and it is a sentence of the court that the defendant pay a fine of $2,000 and stand committed until the fine and costs be paid."

Judge Winston, representing Mr. Daniels, asked the court to hear hear Judge Winston or to look at his authorities, and declined to grant defendant had the right to appeal. The court peremptorily declined to hear Judge Winston or to look at his authorities, and declined to grant an appeal or to fix a bond, and committed Daniels to the custody of the marshal until the fine and costs were paid.

FRIENDS RUSH TO PAY FINE.

No sooner had the notice of a fine of $2,000 fallen from the lips of Judge Purnell than there was a rush of men who fought their way through the dense crowd to be the first to contribute toward the payment of the fine. In a moment men were thrusting big handfuls of bills and checks into Doctor Daniels's lap. For several minutes he was busy declining these well-meant and comforting offers of assistance. It was the crowd's substantial, impulsive method of expressing the opinion that became general on the streets that the fine was one arbitrarily imposed for the courageous performance of conscientious duty.

As soon as sentence was announced, Editor Daniels stated that he would not pay a cent. "I will rot in jail first," he said, and in this determination he was applauded by his friends. He was at once taken into custody by the United States marshal and was held in custody in room 28 at the Yarborough House. Steps were taken at once to secure a writ of habeas corpus.

Editor Daniels stated in his editorial published next morning, written while in the custody of the United States marshal: "I have done nothing to justify the order of the judge under the Constitution and laws of this country. I have written freely, fearlessly, and plainly in criticism of a wonderful act of a Federal judge. If I had written a line less, I would have lost my self-respect, been untrue to my convictions, and unworthy of the position I hold. An editor owes a duty to the public. He has no higher duty than to criticise, 'unawed by influence and unbribed by gain,' the unwise, arbitrary, or injurious public action of public officials. If he fails to criticise such action as that of Judge Purnell on last Saturday, he is not worthy to belong to a profession honored by Seaton Gales, Hale, Englehard, Saunders, Josiah Turner, and other men who have made the annals of North Carolina journalism the brightest page of North Carolina. My criticism of Judge Purnell was true, it was moderate, it was as plain as language could make it. Before I would retract a solitary sentence of that editorial or abuse myself I would rot in a dark dungeon all my days. If editors must crawl in dust before Federal judges and make obeisance to them and permit them to become censors, it must be so declared by the Supreme Court of the United States. Until that tribunal makes that decision I will continue to exercise my right and duty to freely criticise the public action of any official."

The people in every part of the State were aroused by the arrest and imprisonment of Daniels as they have not been since the days of reconstruction, and there is generally held the opinion that Judge Purnell made a very serious mistake in attaching Mr. Daniels for contempt. Letters and telegrams and offers of assistance, financial or otherwise, came to Mr. Daniels from every section of the State.

UNITED STATES SUPREME COURT INTERFERES.

On the next morning after Mr. Daniels had been placed in custody, Chief Justice Fuller, of the United States Supreme Court, made an order vacating Judge Purnell's order appointing Mears and McBee receivers of the Atlantic and North Carolina Railroad, and on giving the bond, the property was taken possession of by the State. The receivers at first refused to surrender the property, and Governor Aycock notified the officials of the railroad company to take possession; that the entire power of the State would be used, if necessary, to put the receivers out and the officers of the railroad in possession of the Atlantic and North Carolina Railroad property. On this sort of an intimation the receiver retired, and the Atlantic and North Carolina Railroad property is now in the hands of its owners.

Attorneys of Mr. Daniels applied to Judge Pritchard, who had just been sworn in as United States circuit court judge, for a writ of habeas corpus, which was issued by Judge Pritchard and set for hearing in Raleigh at 3 o'clock Friday, June 3.

After this writ of habeas corpus was granted by Judge Pritchard Judge Purnell made an order in which he said that he would grant Mr. Daniels an appeal, which right had been denied when he was before the court and his attorneys asked for the benefit of an appeal. The writ of habeas corpus was heard before Judge Pritchard in Raleigh Friday afternoon and the prisoner released (The Constitution, Atlanta, Ga., Sunday, June 5, 1904.)

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I wish to have read also an editorial from The State, of Columbia, S. C., and I do it because it does the fullest possible justice, and not only that, but speaks in the most complimentary way of our former colleague, Jeter C. Pritchard, who was once a Senator here from the State of North Carolina, and is now a United States circuit judge in that State. I am the more gratified because of his action in this case, which shows that he is an ornament to the bench.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

THE RIGHTS OF THE PRESS.

There is no overestimating the importance of the decision of Judge Jeter C. Pritchard in the case of Editor Josephus Daniels.

The setting free of the editor, held by a district judge for contempt of court, has been followed, as promised, by a written opinion from the new circuit judge And that opinion justifies the selection of the ex-Senator as the successor of Simonton. It is a complete yet concise presentation of a most important question—the right of a judge to jail an editor who criticises his judicial acts after the case has been concluded.

The history of this case is familiar. The Raleigh News and Observer severely condemned Judge Purnell for his action in the matter of a receivership for the Atlantic and North Carolina Railroad Company, whereupon Judge Purnell had Editor Daniels arrested and adjudged him guilty of contempt of court, sentencing him to pay a fine of $2,000, and refusing an appeal. Upon a writ of habeas corpus the editor went before Circuit Judge Pritchard, and Mr. Daniels has secured not only his liberty but also a valuable definition of the right of the press to criticise officials, whether they be judges on the bench or what not.

In the synopsis of the opinion published in this paper yesterday, the following must have struck every reader's attention as a declaration sound in law and reason:

"That newspapers sometimes engage in unwarranted criticisms of the courts can not be denied. In some instances they construe the liberty of the press as a license to authorize them to engage in a wholesale abuse of the court, but those instances are rare and do not warrant a departure from the well-settled principles of the law as declared by Congress and construed by the courts. If judges charged with the administration of the law are not to be criticised on account of their official conduct the liberty of the press is abridged and the rights of individuals imperiled.

But Judge Pritchard went further than that. He had already quoted authorities to show that "mere libels on a judge, as a man and an officer, printed in a newspaper, are not contempts;" that a judge must seek recompense for personal criticism in the same way as any other public official or any other private citizen; that while the office is to be respected, the court as a court, yet the judge as a judge and as a man must not expect to be shielded from criticism by the fact that he is in office. Having gone to the law books to show that this has been the ruling wherever the question has come up, and having enunciated the doctrine of liberty of speech as it may affect the bench, as quoted above, Judge Pritchard went on to elaborate that doctrine and to apply it to all public officials, laying down not only the law but the safe policy for officials to pursue as well. He said:

"While all citizens should entertain due respect for the courts of the land, it does not follow that editors and public speakers are to refrain from legitimate criticism of the acts of any tribunal. Such criticism should be invited by public officials in order that the people may fully understand what is being done by those who are acting as their agents in the administration.

"Public questions are generally settled in the right way, and the fact that such is the case is due in a large measure to their free and untrammeled discussion by the press of the country. The courts are constituted for the purpose of protecting the rights and liberties of the individual, and the enactment of any law which gives a judge the power to prevent the free and unrestrained discussion of questions which may come before the court for adjudication would in many instances defeat the very object for which the courts were established."

This is good law, and it is sound political principle. In the Daniels case the liberty of the press was seriously and unreasonably threatened, and it is reassuring to have such a clear, unequivocal declaration of the rights of public journals as Judge Pritchard has given. The News and Observer, the paper directly interested, does not exaggerate when it says:

"The decision of Judge Pritchard will be quoted in every State of the Union, will be printed in the publications of all editorial associations, and will be regarded as the most notable decision affecting the liberty of the press rendered in more than half a century. No one need fear that a decision so essential to the freedom of the press and to individual liberty will lessen the respect of the people for the courts. It will increase their respect a hundredfold. Every editor knows that if he indulges in undeserved criticism of judicial officers his paper will lose power and usefulness. The decision will have the effect of adding to confidence in the judiciary, when men of learning and fitness are wearing the ermine. It will teach that the press has a right, which no judicial officer can summarily take from it, to freely and plainly criticise judges whose conduct demands criticism. It effectually ends petty judicial tyranny and assures to the people a free press—the only safeguard of their liberties."

That is undoubtedly a correct interpretation of the decision's effect. The conscientious editor is as careful not to abuse his privileges and powers as is the conscientious judge—and conscientious editors are about as numerous as conscientious judges. The press as a rule is quick to uphold the majesty of the law, quick to demand respect for the courts, but it is none the less zealous of its rights, which are the palladium of the people's liberties.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, as I said a moment ago, I take great pleasure in having that editorial inserted, because it does ample justice to, and also speaks in the most complimentary way of, former Senator Pritchard, who is now United States circuit judge in that circuit.

I now come to Florida. I could recite a story of some judicial transactions in my own State, that in outrage and tyranny, and everything almost that is indecent, surpass anything that I will put in the RECORD to-day; but the judge is dead, and therefore I have nothing more to say about it. He has settled his account somewhere else.

I have heard of some judicial transactions in Georgia, and one in Kentucky, which, if I had the time to get the facts, would be very interesting reading, as showing the unscrupulousness and criminality of these judges, who, once clothed with authority for life, exemplify the prophecy of Jefferson, that they would reach out and sneak over the fields of jurisdiction, here a little and there a little, like a thief in the night—I am not giving the exact words; I am giving merely the sense—and absorb and cover it all, leaving the States nothing.

I come now to Florida, as I said, and I want to incorporate in this catalogue a transaction of Circuit Judge Pardee in the case mentioned by the distinguished Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] in his speech on the 20th of March, in which the facts are stated thus:

The Florida railroad commission enforces its orders by mandamus instituted originally in the supreme court of the State, and yet Judge Pardee has enjoined the Florida railroad commission and all of the State officials from instituting suit in the supreme court of the State by mandamus to compel the Louisville and Nashville Railroad Company to reduce its passenger fare from 4 cents to 3 cents per mile in Florida, and this injunction was granted upon the affidavit of the vice-president of the Louisville and Nashville Railroad to the effect that the Louisville and Nashville property in Florida is worth at least $5,200,000—this high valuation being essential to their case—and the State produced an affidavit made by the same man one month and twenty-eight days prior to his swearing to the bill, in which affidavit he had sworn that the identical property was not worth exceeding $1,700,000; and yet on this man's affidavit the State was temporarily restrained from instituting mandamus proceedings in the supreme court of Florida to enforce compliance with the rate.

The legislature changed the rate for passenger traffic from 4 cents to 3 cents per mile, and in this proceeding before Judge Pardee the transaction just as I have read it is of record, and that, too, in the face of this statute, Mr. President. I read from section 720 of the Revised Statutes:

SEC. 720. The writ of injunction shall not be granted by any court of the United States to stay proceedings in any court of a State, except in cases where such injunction may be authorized by any law relating to proceedings in bankruptcy.

But what does one of these railroad judges, as I have dubbed them, care for statutes? The Senate has given them a free rein in dealing with railroads, or with anything else, by its refusal to impeach one of them, it does not matter what transactions may be proved, what villainy, infamy, and outrage may be brought here and sworn to and rendered beyond controversy. This high court, which should protect the people against such judges, from partisanship or some cause—I am not prepared to say, because I was not here at the trial—refused to give the country any protection, and the judge was turned loose with absolute immunity, told to go on his way, to do his dirty work, and obey the railroads that own him apparently.

The country looks on, and when we try in this bill to provide that a railroad rate fixed by this high Commission of seven, getting high salaries, so as to command the best talent in the country, to determine what is a just and reasonable rate—instead of letting that rate hold good and go into effect, these sacred creatures must be left free to do their own will, to issue their decrees of injunction on any kind of hearing or on no hearing. This man Pardee ought to be impeached. He knew the statute was in the laws of the country. He had sworn to support the law and the Constitution, yet, in direct violation of both, he orders the authorities of the State of Florida to cease from interfering with this railroad and enjoins them from collecting taxes.

But what if the people of Florida through their Representatives in Congress were to bring him here for trial? Who imagines that there would be enough votes to turn him out? I imagine that when the votes on this issue as to whether or not these judges shall be limited in their power is had, we could get a pretty fair idea of how many votes would go against any impeachment proceedings against any one of them, because, if a Senator will not limit the power of these courts under the conditions which would obtain, will not even try to do it by voting for some provision in this bill which will give us protection, he certainly would not vote to impeach a man, even though we proved him directly violating his oath of office and invading the rights of the people and of a State.

I come now to the last and in some respects the worst of the lot. It is so fresh in the minds of Senators that I hardly think it worth while to read it. It is the Swayne case—the judge in Florida who acted in such an outrageous manner in his dealings with the lawyers and the interests and persons and liberties and rights of the people there that the House of Representatives impeached him, but the Senate could not see it in that way. Of course I must consider that Senators voted as their consciences dictated, and therefore will not say anything more about it. But when the people are left helpless in the hands of these judicial officers who have life tenures, and the only protection under the Constitution, which is impeachment, will not work, how can Senators expect the people of the country to have that faith, confidence, and respect in the judiciary which we all know ought to obtain and which we should like to render unto them?

Mr. President, I ask permission, without reading, to insert in the RECORD the facts in relation to the Swayne case, sent to me by Representative LAMAR, of the Florida delegation.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request made by the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. SPOONER. I ask that the paper may be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. At the request of the Senator from Wisconsin, it will be read by the Secretary.

The Secretary read as follows:

JUDGE SWAYNE'S CASE.

In 1892 the Florida Central and Peninsular Railroad, in the State of Florida, filed its bill to enjoin the collection of $96,000 of back taxes upon its constituent lines of road, which had been levied upon on behalf of the State of Florida. The litigation lasted for quite a number of years. The supreme court of Florida finally settled every State question involved in the litigation in favor of the claim of the State for back taxes. The case was carried to the Supreme Court of the United States by the railroad company.

There, so eminent an attorney as the Hon. Wayne MacVeagh argued all the Federal questions involved on behalf of the railroad company. The Supreme Court of the United States decided all Federal questions raised adversely to the railroad company and affirmed the judgment of the supreme court of the State of Florida.

The whole proceeding was a direct proceeding between the State of Florida and the railroad company for the collection of a debt, viz, taxes, which, under the decision of the two courts, was the highest obligation resting on the property of the railroad company.

And yet, in the face of both of these court decisions, Judge Charles Swayne, United States district judge for the northern district of Florida, enjoined the State of Florida, through its comptroller, from selling under levy the property of this railroad company and collecting its just debt against it.

And the injunction he issued against the comptroller was issued without giving any notice to him and without requiring any bond from the railroad company before issuing it. The injunction was issued on behalf of the Central Trust Company of New York, which held the bonds of the railroad company.

The action of Judge Swayne was "government by injunction," about which we have heard considerable complaint in late years. The suit on behalf of the Central Trust Company was purely a dilatory proceeding and a mere constructive proceeding to hold the State off from its just rights in the matter, to save to the railroad company the interest which would accrue by nonpayment of the amount due.

The State of Florida, by its attorney-general, submitted a demurrer to the bill filed by the Central Trust Company, and also interposed a plea of res adjudicata, setting up the decisions of the courts in favor of the State of Florida. The demurrer and pleas were argued before Judge Swayne by an able lawyer, then attorney-general of Florida, Hon. J. B. Whitfield, who is now a member of the Florida supreme court.

Judge Swayne overruled the demurrer and plea. An answer and replication were filed, but before the case ever went to a hearing the railroad attorneys, who had no confidence in their case, paid the full amount of $96,000 to the State of Florida. The railroad company, under Judge Swayne's injunction, had obtained two years' delay and was "in pocket" at least $10,000 in interest saved.

The railroad attorneys, on behalf of their railroad client, paid the amount to the State, not because they doubted Judge Swayne's decision in the matter in their favor, but they must have felt that such decision would have been promptly reviewed in the Supreme Court of the United States, and their whole proceeding of delay and obstruction would be thrown unceremoniously out of court, and that Judge Swayne might possibly have gotten a stinging rebuke from that tribunal. When all the delay practically possible had been obtained, then, of course, payment was made.

Eleven counties in Florida were entitled to about $50,000 of these back taxes. Some of these counties issued bonds before the civil war to aid in the construction of a portion of the lines of this railroad. These back taxes belonged to the school funds of the counties, and a portion of it was to pay interest on the very bonds issued by the counties in aid of the construction of this railroad.

There was no excuse at all for Judge Swayne's action in this matter. It was a flagrant case of knowing, willful wrongdoing. I should have included his action in this matter in the charges laid against him in the House of Representatives for his impeachment but that I knew he and his defenders would fall back at once for justification upon "error of judgment."

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I have nothing more to say. I am sorry to have trespassed upon the patience of the Senate with this long recital of facts, but I thought it a good thing to do. There is need of some physic somewhere, and if the Senate can be made to understand that these judges ought not to be left to roam up and down the land and lend themselves to any and every dirty transaction that a railroad wants done, and obstruct every effort to relieve the country, to relieve the people, that is all I hope for; and if I can get anything——

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator from South Carolina permit me to ask him a question before he takes his seat?

Mr. TILLMAN. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. The Senator from South Carolina, I presume, knows the fact that in the equity practice of the United States there is no jury; in other words, the final decree is made by the judge. The point to which I wish to direct the Senator's attention is the fact that the judge who would pass upon the question of an interlocutory decree is the same judge who would finally pass upon the question whether or not there shall be a permanent injunction. The question I want to submit to the Senator is this: If among these judges, taken as a whole—not all of them—but if there are among them generally so many objectionable practices and characteristics, as they have to pass upon it finally, in what way does the Senator propose that as to final injunction the people can be protected from these "corrupt" and "dissolute" and "unworthy" judges?

Mr. TILLMAN. By decree of the Supreme Court. I want the judge to try the case according to the constitutional requirements, but I do not want him to half try it, or to pretend to try it, and take advantage of the opportunity offered by some lying complaint, like that of this railroad official in Florida, who goes in and swears to one thing when it comes to the value of the property for taxation and turns right around and swears to another when it comes to valuing the property in regard to constitutional rights. I do not want that sort of thing to be permitted by the Senate. The Supreme Court may declare the provision unconstitutional, but let us give the court a chance. I want to give the people the benefit of the doubt.

In regard to fixing rates by the Commission, let the rate go into effect; let the appeal of the railroad company go to the court; let the court try it, not issue any preliminary order, but try it all, and send it up to the Supreme Court. That is my contention.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will permit me, I wish to ask him a question: What does the Senator propose to do between the time of final decree by the circuit court and the hearing by the Supreme Court?

Mr. TILLMAN. Do nothing except let the decree by the circuit court stand. If it is by injunction, let the injunction hold, but rush the case to the Supreme Court in the most expeditious way possible and get the decision of that tribunal, so that the matter will be settled once for all, either by reversing the circuit court or by indorsing its action.

Mr. BACON. I understand, then, that the Senator does not propose to interfere in any manner with the operation of the injunction, when that shall be ordered by the circuit court, between its issuance and the time it goes to the Supreme Court?

Mr. TILLMAN. I want a full hearing before the circuit court grants the injunction.

Mr. BACON. I understand, but I repeat the question. I understand the Senator does not desire to suspend in any way the operation of that injunction after the final decree by the circuit court and between that time and the final decision by the Supreme Court?

Mr. TILLMAN. Of course not.

Mr. BACON. Of course not. I simply wanted to know.

Mr. TILLMAN. No amendment like that has been offered by anybody here.

Mr. BACON. I understand, but I wanted to call the Senator's attention to the fact.

Then, as I understand, the objection of the Senator is not so much to the character of the judges, to their "unworthiness" and to their "disposition to do wrong," as it is to the fact that they might hear it and make an interlocutory decree without having sufficiently investigated the case.

Mr. BAILEY. Will the Senator from South Carolina permit me?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. TILLMAN. Certainly.

Mr. BAILEY. I wish to suggest to him that if a preliminary injunction is issued by the judge, then the trial of the case may be postponed in the pleasure of the judge, and thus it might be three years before it reaches the Supreme Court of the United States. But if no such order can be issued until final judgment, then the trial is direct and prompt.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator from Texas allow me to ask him a question?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield, with the permission of the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. TILLMAN. Certainly. I yield the floor to you three lawyers. I have got you started again.

Mr. SPOONER. Is there not an appeal from the order of the circuit court of the United States granting or refusing a preliminary injunction?

Mr. BAILEY. There is not in the absence of a direct statute.

Mr. SPOONER. Is there not a direct statute providing for it?

Mr. BAILEY. I am not sure, and I would not say without an examination that there is a direct statute which would cover this case.

Mr. SPOONER. I think the Senator will find there is.

Mr. BAILEY. I would not be willing to say positively that the statute as it stands to-day covers this case.

Mr. SPOONER. I think we passed one within the last four weeks.

Mr. BAILEY. If we have passed an act within the last four weeks, I candidly say it had escaped my attention. Will the Senator from Wisconsin tell us if that bill has also passed the House of Representatives?

Mr. SPOONER. It passed the House first, did it not? I ask the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. BACON. It passed the House, and then was passed by the Senate with an immaterial amendment, a matter of form, and sent back to the House. But I will say to the Senator that that was simply an amendatory act as to one feature of the law. The general law which gives an appeal from an interlocutory decree of the circuit court of the United States to the circuit court of appeals has been upon the statute book some six or seven years.

Mr. BAILEY. My own impression is that there would be no appeal from an interlocutory decree in this case. The Senator from Wisconsin nods his dissent from that. He will note I said "my own impression is." I venture to go no further than that at this time. But the Senator from Wisconsin and I will agree that unless there is a statute which allows an appeal, no appeal can be taken from an interlocutory decree. The Senator from Wisconsin will agree to that?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly. But as I understand the law to be, there has been, for I do not know how many years—the Senator from Georgia said six or seven——

Mr. CULBERSON. It is the act of 1891, creating the circuit court of appeals, which allows an appeal from the appointment of a receiver or the granting of any temporary restraining order in injunction cases by circuit courts or district courts.

Mr. BAILEY. But the proposition here is not to appeal from the circuit court to the circuit court of appeals, and that is why I say my impression now is that the general law would not reach this case. It is evident that the general law did not reach all the cases, because the statement here is that within four weeks Congress has been called upon to amend the law in a certain particular.

Mr. SPOONER. The amendment was proposed because as the law had been construed, as I understand, there had been an abuse under it, because in the pleadings they raised constitutional questions and took the cases to the Supreme Court.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator from Texas allow me to state the facts?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. BAILEY. I am always glad to hear a fact.

Mr. NELSON. The bill to which the Senator from Georgia and the Senator from Wisconsin refers has passed and become a law, I think, more than a week ago. I have seen it in print as a statute. Under that statute appeals will lie to the circuit court of appeals from a temporary or preliminary injunction.

Mr. BAILEY. But the proposition here is not to go to the circuit court of appeals from the circuit court that tries the case. The appeal here, as I understand, will go direct to the Supreme Court of the United States. Whatever else may be the final determination of the Senate, I sincerely hope the appeal will be allowed direct from the court that tries the case to the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. SPOONER. That is easy.

Mr. BAILEY. I know that is easy, and that is what I have proposed in the amendment which I had the honor to offer. So far as I know, there is in the Senate a general concurrence that there shall be only one appeal allowed, and that shall be direct to the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President——

Mr. BAILEY. In a moment. Then, if that is true, I reiterate my impression that the general law would not cover an appeal from the circuit court which had granted an interlocutory decree or injunction, to the Supreme Court of the United States, and the circuit court of the United States would not, in my judgment, have jurisdiction in that case, because it would have no appellate jurisdiction at last over the decision of the circuit court which tried the case. Therefore it seems to me that either we must allow this appeal to go from the circuit court that tried it to the circuit court of appeals or else, passing the circuit court of appeals and allowing the appeal direct to the Supreme Court of the United States, we must make some provision——

Mr. SPOONER. Of course the Senator from Texas——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. BAILEY. If the Senator will pardon me for a moment, I understand that he assents to my proposition that there can be no appeal from a preliminary injunction order unless the statute specifically allows it. We agree on that, I believe?

Mr. SPOONER. Of course we agree to that, and the Senator has had no occasion to have any difference of opinion with me on that subject, because I have repeatedly said, and the Constitution so provides, that Federal jurisdiction is entirely under the control of Congress. The appeal to which the Senator alludes, speaking of the bill generally, is from the final decree direct to the Supreme Court. It is entirely within the constitutional competency of Congress to regulate that. It is no less within the constitutional competency of Congress to provide for an appeal direct to the Supreme Court of the United States from any order granting or refusing an injunction, and giving it preference in the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator and I have no difference about that. I think nobody questions that we can grant an appeal direct from the trial court to the Supreme Court of the United States, and that is precisely what I propose to do.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas yield to his colleague?

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.

Mr. CULBERSON. I desire to make a statement with reference to the statute now under consideration.

Mr. President, the act of 1891 creating the circuit court of appeals permits appeals from orders appointing receivers and granting temporary restraining orders in injunction cases directly to the circuit court of appeals. It also permits appeals in certain other cases to the circuit court of appeals. In the third place, in cases involving the construction of the Constitution of the United States, as this bill will certainly do, because the general proposition is to confine the interference of the courts to constitutional questions, that statute expressly authorizes an appeal from the circuit court direct to the Supreme Court of the United States.

But my colleague is entirely correct in saying that in that case there would be no direct appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States from an order granting a temporary writ or restraining order, but there would be from the final judgment on the question.

Mr. BAILEY. That is my understanding. I will be careful, and again say it is my impression.

But the purpose for which I rose was to explain why it is that it is deemed important to deny even to an inferior judge—and I use that adjective to describe the judge rather than his office; I will not say a corrupt judge; I will simply say an inferior one—the power to grant a preliminary injunction, though we recognize that at last he will have the power to grant a final injunction. If he sought to abuse his great office, he could grant a temporary injunction, and he could hold that matter in his court, from month to month and from year to year, because the granting of a continuance rests as a rule in the sound discretion of the court, and for one cause or another he could continue the case from term to term until two or three years might elapse before the case would be finally decided.

Now, if this judge is denied the power to grant a preliminary injunction, the railroad itself becomes intensely and immediately interested in a prompt and speedy trial; the case is tried without any unnecessary delay; and though a bad judge renders, as bad judges always will, except by accident, a bad judgment, there is a prompt appeal from his decision to a forum which is free from any suspicion of wrong or injustice. While we can not entirely take this case away from a judge whose partiality we may suspect, our purpose is to prevent him from deciding it at all until he decides it in a way and form that gives a prompt appeal to another and a better tribunal.

Mr. KNOX obtained the floor.

Mr. TILLMAN. Before the Senator——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Pennsylvania has been recognized.

Mr. TILLMAN. I should like to ask a question of the Senator from Georgia, who asked me some questions. I want a little light on one point.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. BACON. I think I have the floor. I never yielded it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is possible, but the Chair first observed the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BACON. I am speaking of a time before this discussion commenced. I had the floor and did not yield it.

Mr. KNOX. I gladly yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. TILLMAN. I want the Senator from Georgia to give me light on this point: Suppose an appeal is taken from the finding of the Commission, its order, and the judge is permitted——

Mr. BACON. The Senator means if a bill is filed. There is no provision in this bill for an appeal.

Mr. TILLMAN. You understand what I am driving at, so far as results go, without regard to technical language. I mean suppose the Commission's order is attacked in court by the carrier.

Mr. BACON. Very well.

Mr. TILLMAN. Then the judge grants a preliminary suspension order or injunction, and the Senator pointed out, I believe, that this act which I hold in my hand gives the right of appeal from that to the circuit court of appeals.

Mr. BACON. No; not in this bill, but the general law.

Mr. TILLMAN. The new act to which allusion has been made.

Mr. BACON. Go on.

Mr. TILLMAN. What becomes of the rate? Does the rate go on while this appeal is going on to the Supreme Court; and then if the rate is suspended by a preliminary injunction, and the appeal to the circuit court or to the Supreme Court, either, is on a technicality, will the Supreme Court determine the whole case or will it merely determine the point before it and send it back for further action below, thereby playing battledore and shuttlecock, and thereby doing nothing to relieve the shipper? That is what I am trying to get at.

Mr. BACON. Is that the Senator's question?

Mr. TILLMAN. That is the question. I have made it clear, or I hope I have.

Mr. BACON. The Senator always does.

The suggestion of an appeal to the circuit court was not made by myself, but by the Senator from Wisconsin. Under the present law, if there were an appeal given, it would go to the circuit court of the United States, unless the matter involved a constitutional question, when upon final decree it would go direct to the Supreme Court and not go to the court of appeals at all. I do not think, however, that the question of the learned Senator from South Carolina is very practical in its nature, from the fact that, as has been suggested by another Senator, the general consensus of opinion in the Senate, so far as I have been able to learn it, is in favor of an appeal direct from the circuit court to the Supreme Court. I know of no one who favors a measure which will give an appeal in a case of this kind from the circuit court to the circuit court of appeals. There is, so far as I know, a determination on the part of the Senate that there shall be only one appeal. There is one amendment pending—possibly there are more—providing for a direct appeal in these cases from the circuit court to the Supreme Court. I myself would certainly favor that provision of law. I think it would be a very great mistake to do otherwise and to have an appeal from the circuit court to the circuit court of appeals.

Now, as to what would be the effect of an appeal, is the Senator speaking of an appeal from the final decree or an interlocutory decree?

Mr. TILLMAN. There comes my trouble. There is my whole trouble. If the circuit court is left with the opportunity to partially adjudge the cause, and the appeal is made on that, it may go up to the Supreme Court and take a year or something like that—I do not know how long—to get it back. And then it will take another year for the inferior court to finish its judgment, and that will go up. I want to prevent that kind of business.

Mr. BACON. I think the Senator is very correct in his desire in that regard, and I entirely sympathize with him.

Mr. President, it is recognized by us all, I think, that when the Commission makes an order the public should have the benefit of that order promptly so far as is practicable. Of course the law's delays have been proverbial, certainly from the time of Shakespeare, and long anterior to that date. They have continued to this date, not because of any desire on the part of the lawmakers that there should be delay in the administration of the law, but because in the natural imperfection of all human institutions this has been found to be one of the difficulties which could not be thoroughly cured, where the effort to prevent delay is met frequently by the necessity to have delay in order that justice may be done. That necessity is undoubtedly frequently taken advantage of improperly, and the law's delays constitute a serious evil now, as they have constituted a serious evil from the beginning of courts.

In this particular case, I repeat, we all feel that the rate of the Commission should give to the public the benefit of the order made by the Commission as soon as practicable. There are two propositions, as I understand them, for the purpose of meeting that requirement. One is to deny to the courts the right to issue an interlocutory order. The other is one which, while I can not claim that it was in its entirety original with me, is an amendment offered by myself, in which it is proposed that there shall be no stay of the operation of the rate of the Commission by an inerlocutory order unless there shall be a requirement by the court of the carrier making the complaint and seeking the stay that he shall pay into court the daily proceeds from freight shipped over and above the amount specified in the rate of the Commission. In other words, if the rate of the Commission, for illustration, permitted $1 and the carrier's rate was $2 and he sought to have the rate of the Commission arrested, before such order could go into effect there must be another order which will require him to pay that additional dollar into court, not only on that day, but on each succeeding day, and also the machinery is specified for a return by the carrier to the court giving in detail the statement of all shipments thus made affected by that rate and the names of the shippers, so that upon the conclusion of the case the court can distribute this money, if the carrier's complaint is overruled, to the people from whom the money had been improperly collected, and if, on the contrary, the carrier's complaint shall be held to be valid, the money may be returned to him, that that may not be taken from him to which he is justly entitled.

I can not go into that now, Mr. President. Possibly when we come to discuss amendments I will go into it a little more fully, but I state it merely for the purpose of showing that there is not a monopoly of a desire to protect the interests of the public in this regard; that there is not a monopoly in this desire and purpose enjoyed by those who seek to accomplish the purpose by a denial to the courts of the right to use the process of injunction.

The Senate will mark the fact, Mr. President, that whatever else may be said about that proposition, there can be no doubt about one result from it, that is that the carrier having to pay this amount of money into court of the daily proceeds of his business over and above the Commission rate, he will be as extremely anxious as he could be made by any other process to expedite the proceeding in the courts. There would be no possible inducement to him to delay; on the contrary, there would be every possible inducement to him to expedite.

Having said that much, Mr. President, I desire to say further in regard to the proceedings in the courts that the rules in equity are, under our law, made by the judges of the Supreme Court. The rules in equity in the United States courts are extremely simple and extremely efficacious. It is possible for a case to come to trial in three months after the first rule day. Of course it is unusual that that should occur, because the taking of testimony and other matters in the trial of a case will frequently delay it beyond that time. But it is perfectly competent for the Supreme Court to make special rules for the trial of cases of this class; and I think it would be a much wiser plan to require by some provision in this bill that the Supreme Court shall make rules which will expedite the trial of the case in the circuit court rather than to attempt to accomplish this end by other means.

We have now on the statute books a law by which such cases are expedited on the trial upon an appeal from the final decree of the circuit court to the Supreme Court, and there is an amendment pending here to apply that particular machinery to cases which will be decided in regard to the rates made by the Commission.

But I think we should go further, Mr. President. It is not sufficient to expedite the trial of a case after it has been finally determined by the circuit court and when there is an appeal taken to the Supreme Court. There ought to be something which would insure the expedition of the trial after the filing of a bill and until the time when it is finally heard by the circuit court. While I believe there is no amendment pending to that effect, one, I imagine, can be framed, and I trust it will be brought before the Senate.

It is a great injustice to suggest that those who may not favor any particular proposition are therefore opposed to the same end which the author of that particular proposition may have in view. For myself, I desire that there shall be here a most efficient bill. I desire that there shall be a bill which, while it will do no injustice to any of the carriers, shall at the same time put them under the most perfect control in the matter of the regulation of their rates by the Interstate Commerce Commission. I believe that the death of competition—because that is the mildest word which can be applied to it—the absolute necessity which is upon every man to employ the agencies of the common carrier whether he wishes to or not, the absolute impossibility that he can employ any other agency, the consequent putting in the power of the carrier the arbitrary fixing of the rate, the absolute denial to the patron of the carrier of the opportunity to agree with him on the rate, the absolute necessity on the part of the public to accept the rate, make it an absolute necessity also that there shall be some one who will stand in a position to see that so great and so arbitrary a power is in no manner abused.

Mr. President, I say I desire earnestly the accomplishment of that end. I desire not only that, Mr. President, but I desire that the machinery of this bill shall be so arranged that there shall be the most speedy accomplishment of the determination of the Commission as to what shall be the rate. At the same time I am also desirous that the great safeguards which our Constitution has thrown around the enjoyment of property by all persons shall also be enjoyed by these interests which we now assume and undertake and intend hereafter to control.

For these reasons I desire, as much as those who favor the particular amendment which is now under discussion, that there shall be provisions in this bill which shall prevent undue delay. I am in favor of having provisions in the bill which shall give to the public, so far as it may be practicable, the benefit, from the beginning, of the orders of the Commission, so far as that may be done without destroying the rights of other parties.

I recognize the fact that in the suggestion which I have made as to requiring railroad companies to put up a deposit or to pay into court moneys which are to be received over and above the amount specified in the orders of the Commission, there are grave difficulties, and that there are serious imperfections in the plan. I will be very glad to have those difficulties and those imperfections removed, if it is practicable to do so. I will not stop to discuss it now, because these amendments are coming before us for discussion, and when they do come I shall endeavor to speak with a little more definiteness as to the particular provisions of them.

While this is very disjointed, Mr. President, still I want to refer, in order that I may not be misunderstood, to my inquiry of the Senator from South Carolina, in which I used certain adjectives in connection with judges. I suppose it will be understood, but to guard against possibility to the contrary, I will say that those adjectives were intended to be in quotation marks, because I do not sympathize with the wholesale criticism which has been made of the judges of the United States courts. I have no doubt there are unworthy members of that high body of functionaries. It would be very remarkable if it were not so. I have no doubt there are many cases where judges have acted with harshness and with cruelty and with injustice. I will go further and say, Mr. President, that there is no court in this land, Federal or State, as to which, if parties litigant, who had been before the court, were allowed to present to the Senate their one-sided statements of their cases where they had been losers, those courts would be made to appear in a very unfortunate and more than unfortunate light before the public.

But, Mr. President, while it is true, as I have no doubt, that there are unworthy members, I believe, in the first place, that it is not true of the great body of judges of the courts of the United States. I believe that, taken generally, they are men of ability and men of character, and I say further, Mr. President, that while unworthy members of that official body should be sought out if possible and held to public view, it is a great mistake to attempt to magnify the imperfections of the judiciary and thus to try to bring them into contempt and disrepute before the people of the United States.

Mr. President, the great sheet anchor of conservatism in the United States must be with the courts, and whenever it comes to be that the conservatism of the courts of the United States can no longer be depended upon, it matters very little whether there is conservatism in the other branches of the Government.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. BACON. With pleasure.

Mr. TILLMAN. When there are so many evidences of usurpation of authority and of willingness to strain themselves to do things they ought not to do, as a matter of justice, and there is no remedy except by impeachment, does the Senator object to the attention of the country being called to these facts, and let the judges be put on notice, so to speak, that this body is thinking about what they are doing and what they have done?

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, the Constitution of the United States has invested in this body a very high function with regard to the judiciary, but it has not invested this body with the function of originating charges against the judiciary. The Senator should not forget, it seems to me, that while, of course, there may be occasions when it is proper—I do not deny that, but I am speaking generally—the Senate should not act upon the general assumption of that which is now suggested by the Senator, that in such criticisms of the judiciary, in such reviewing of their general course, and in such animadversions upon their particular acts we should put them upon notice of the fact that we are watching them. I say, Mr. President, if that general plan is pursued by the Senate we will have invaded the functions of another branch of this Government, and we will have done what is worse—we will have, by prejudgment, in a measure disqualified ourselves for the proper performance of the high function with which the Constitution of the United States has clothed this body.

Mr. TILLMAN. Now, will the Senator allow me to ask him another question?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield further to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. BACON. I do.

Mr. TILLMAN. Did the Senator vote to impeach Judge Swayne?

Mr. BACON. I certainly did, and I would do so again.

Mr. TILLMAN. The other——

Mr. BACON. The Senator will pardon me; I must answer his question; and then I will yield to another question. I voted, Mr. President, for the impeachment of Judge Swayne, and I did so in the direct exercise of the exact function that the Constitution of the United States had devolved upon me as a Senator. I not only voted for his impeachment, but I very deeply regretted that other Senators in this body did not agree with me, according them, however, fully the merit of conscientious judgment as I fully claim for myself. I thought that his impeachment was demanded, and therefore I voted for it.

But, Mr. President, before that impeachment trial came I was not here ventilating before the Senate what I now believe, and what I then believed—because I knew of many of the things—to be the improper conduct and acts of Judge Swayne. But it would not have become me then, before the House of Representatives presented at the bar of the Senate those articles of impeachment, to have brought before the Senate questions as to whether he had done right or wrong or had been corrupt or unworthy in his high office.

Mr. TILLMAN. If the Senator will permit me——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield further to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. BACON. I do.

Mr. TILLMAN. I understand the Senator by his language intends to criticise unfavorably my action to-day, and while I recognize the nice sense of propriety and the keen, I might say the almost squeamish, regard of the Senator for doing things diplomatically and in a parliamentary way, I want to ask him whether these judges are any more above criticism or are they more absolved or drawn apart, as it were, from criticism of their acts by a Senator than the Supreme Court has been by others—Lincoln, for instance, in several of his speeches on the stump and probably in the halls of Congress, when he found fault with the Dred Scott decision? There have been numerous instances in which the judges have been criticised, and while the Supreme Court is a coordinate branch of the Government entirely independent of the Senate and Congress, does the Senator think that it is improper or an invasion of the rights of the courts for a Senator to express his opinion upon transactions which these men perform or acts which they do which are unworthy or unlawful? For instance, take Judge Pardee——

Mr. BACON. I hope the Senator will put his question in such a shape that I can answer it and that he will make it concise.

Mr. TILLMAN. Well, what does the Senator think about the criticism of Judge Humphrey by the President the other day? Was not that straining the Executive authority and going outside of the proprieties?

Mr. BACON. The Senator is wandering from the particular question we are investigating.

Mr. TILLMAN. I have been wandering around until I have got the Senator in a place where he does not want to answer, I am afraid.

Mr. BACON. The Senator wanders. He presents one question and then wanders to another, and at the end there is no particular question asked.

Mr. TILLMAN. I have asked half a dozen. Let the Senator answer them at once.

Mr. BACON. I have no hesitation in my mind as to what the President said with reference to Judge Humphrey, but this is not the place to say it—not under these circumstances at least. However, as the Senator, with his usual soft and gentle way, is suggesting that I am not answering his questions and that he is wandering around in a way that has lost me in a maze that I am not capable of replying——

Mr. TILLMAN. If the Senator will excuse me, I had not intimated——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield further to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I could not do otherwise.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator is charging me with things that I never said because I have never thought of them. I am not accusing him of——

Mr. BACON. The Senator says I was accusing him of things that he has not been guilty of. I want to know if the Senator refers to the fact that I said that he had been saying soft and gentle things?

Mr. TILLMAN. No; I was never accused of saying many soft and gentle things in this body. I have been accused, and I suppose I have been guilty very frequently, of saying harsh and ungentle things, and sometimes unparliamentary things; but I at least always try to bring myself within the rule that ought to govern, and not criticise men unjustly. Everything I have produced this morning in animadverting or criticising the judges, which I have brought out here, was worthy of the attention of the country at this particular juncture, when the Senator from Georgia and others like him have been appealing to us with almost tears in their eyes to take care of this sacred judiciary. If these judges——

Mr. BACON. Does the Senator interrupt me for the purpose of asking me a question? If so, I hope he will propound it.

Mr. TILLMAN. If the Senator dislikes what I said I will sit down.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I think the Senator asked the question——

Mr. TILLMAN. I will ask this question, if the Senator will permit me: Will he tell me whether he thinks Mr. Lincoln and, I think, Sumner, and Seward, probably, were entirely wrong and out of their jurisdiction and rights when they criticised the Dred Scott decision?

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, before I answer that question I am going to answer the previous question the Senator asked me when he rather plumed himself upon having woven a sort of labyrinth and maze. The question, the Senate will remember, that the Senator propounded to me was whether I thought it was improper for him to call the attention of the Senate to specific acts of impropriety on the part of judges. I think Senators will remember the fact that while the Senator proceeded much further than that, that was the original question which he asked me in that particular bunch of questions.

Mr. President, I do not go to the extent of saying that a judge should never be criticised in the Senate of the United States. There are occasions when questions will arise when that may be not only proper, but necessary. I think I can recall that I have myself, if such was an impropriety, been guilty of that impropriety. I want to say, however, before I proceed more definitely to answer, that the Senator misconstrues me when he assumes that I am in what I am saying intending to personally criticise him. I do deprecate, within a certain degree, and with the utmost deference to the Senator, the particular line that he has seen proper to indulge in in this criticism. It is not the fact, Mr. President, that a particular impropriety on the part of a judge has been alleged by the Senator, but it is the fact that the Senator has endeavored to cast—I will not use the word "endeavored," but the effect of what the Senator has done has presented the appearance of an effort to cast discredit upon all, speaking generally, of the Federal judges, with the exception of the judges of the Supreme Court, whom he specially excepted.

Mr. TILLMAN rose.

Mr. BACON. Pardon me one moment. I will yield to the Senator directly, but not now.

Mr. President, the Senator in so doing absolutely took the country geographically. I was called out during the delivery of his speech, and do not know whether he entirely covered the geography of the United States, but the Senator took the country geographically, and with this instance and with that instance and with the other instance certainly produced upon my mind the impression that the effort was to show that the judges of the United States courts were so accustomed to doing things which ought not to be done, were so in the habit of stepping outside of the domain of proper personal conduct, so in the habit of tyrannically using their power, so in the habit of using their power for the defeat of the ends of justice, that they were not to be trusted with the exercise of the injunctive process in the pending bill. If that was not the purpose of the Senator and if that was not the impression made upon everyone else who listened to him, then I was unfortunate in being singular. Mr. President, that, I think, in a general way is an answer to the general questions of the Senator.

As to the questions propounded with reference to Mr. Lincoln, Mr. Seward, and others discussing the Dred Scott case, in the first place, I might answer that by saying those were not matters uttered in the Senate or even in the House of Representatives, where they have the origination of such matters, but were matters uttered on the stump. In the second place, I will say that that related to a period which was the incipiency of a great revolution, and that men were not to be judged as they are now as to nice questions of propriety, which questions are questions which should never be forgotten in the Senate of the United States.

I have no desire to continue this discussion, Mr. President. I felt it due to myself, in view of the fact that in the colloquy with the Senator I had used certain adjectives in reference to judges, to state that those adjectives were intended to be in quotation marks, and were not original with myself.

But I want to pursue the thought which I had in mind at the time the honorable Senator interrupted me with the questions which have been propounded by him and by the suggestions which he has made. I said substantially that, whenever it came to the point that the judges of the United States were no longer to be entitled to be regarded as the conservative element of this Government, it made little difference thereafter whether the executive and legislative branches of the Government were conservative.

Mr. President, we must not forget one fact, that while the legislative branch of the Government—and when I say "legislative branch" I mean the legislative power, which is made up of the Congress and, in certain instances, of the Executive, in his approval—that while it is ultimate in its authority in the enactment of law, the courts of this country, unlike those of any other country, are absolutely authoritative and ultimate in the decision as to those laws, not simply as to their construction, but as to their validity. So far as I know—I do not profess to be accurately informed, but I think it is true—that condition of affairs does not exist in any other civilized country in the world where the judiciary is authorized to set aside as invalid, null, and void the laws enacted by the legislative branch of the government. Whenever it comes to the point that the judges who have this supreme and stupendous power are no longer to be trusted either for conservatism or for honesty, where is the protection of the Government, however conservative the executive and legislative branches may be?

Mr. President, another thought. There are great forces of unrest working in the whole civilized world, and they are forces which need proper direction. They may be correct forces, but they need proper direction. They are forces which threaten the fabric of civilized government; they are forces which are not entirely quiet in this country; and, Mr. President, I consider it to be the highest duty of this highest body to so act and so speak not only as to avoid stirring up the passions of the people and destroying their faith in their Government and in those who are called to administer it, but that it is better to go to the other extreme, if need be, and inspire even more confidence than their individual merits may entitle them to.

Let us, Mr. President, make our people believe that we have a good Government; make them believe that, while there may be here and there an unworthy man, the great body of those who are called upon to administer this Government are honest men and patriotic men—executive, legislative, and judicial. Let us do away, so far as we can, with this disposition to decry the officials of the Government and to produce in the minds of the masses of these people, and especially of the unthinking people, the extreme idea that those who are called upon to administer the Government are corrupt and unworthy of their confidence. [Applause in the galleries.]

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will remind the galleries that manifestations of approbation or disapprobation are forbidden by the rules of the Senate.

Mr. TELLER obtained the floor.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator from Colorado yield to me for a moment?

Mr. TELLER. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. TILLMAN. I want to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that in my discussion of the judges and in my citation of unfortunate occurrences and transactions, I especially declared that all of the judiciary were not under criticism or deserving of it, that many of them were as pure, as high, and as good as we had any right to expect.

The Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] goes very far when he undertakes to say that I am endeavoring to break down respect for the judiciary as a whole. I paid the highest compliment I could to the Supreme Court of the United States, because I believe that great tribunal is worthy of our admiration and confidence. There are many circuit judges and many district judges who are equally worthy. But are we in this bill, because of the existence of these pure and upright judges in some places—are we to turn over to the tender mercies of the unworthy ones the unfortunate people who have to live under their jurisdiction? Take the case, for instance, where two circuit judges have been shown here to-day by indubitable evidence to be tyrannical and outrageous—Pardee and McCormick—and the district judge whom the Senator from Georgia said he voted to impeach—what are we going to do if we can not protect that section of the country and those other places where there is an unfortunate community with a corrupt or an indecent judge in power? When the Senate refuses to impeach, if we can not criticise, what is left to us?

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, a bill which has recently passed the House of Representatives, and subsequently passed this body, and I am told has become a law, has been presented as changing the attitude or condition. It does not seem to me that it changes it in the slightest degree. It is intended, undoubtedly, to provide for an appeal from the issue of an interlocutory order. It provides:

> That where, upon a hearing in equity in a district or in a circuit court, or by a judge thereof in vacation, an injunction shall be granted or continued, or a receiver appointed by an interlocutory order or decree, in any cause an appeal may be taken from such interlocutory order or decree granting or continuing such injunction, or appointing such receiver, to the circuit court of appeals.

It provides also, and this is what I want particularly to call the attention of the Senate to:

> That the appeal must be taken within thirty days from entry of such order or decree, and it shall take precedence in the appellate court; and the proceedings in other respects in the court below shall not be stayed unless otherwise ordered by that court or by the appellate court or a judge thereof during the pendency of such appeal.

Mr. President, the judge of a court having made an order that the rate shall not take effect, the appeal must be taken, if at all, by the Commission, because the carrier who has brought suit, and who solicits this injunction, certainly does not want the appeal. He has got a stay of proceedings. So the Commission must take the appeal, if it is taken; but it is absolutely within the power of the judge to grant the interlocutory order and to say what the effect of that decree shall be. The judge having made an order that this rate shall not go into effect, will surely continue his order to the extent that it shall not go into effect during the appeal; or, if he does not, the appellate court may or some judge thereof may. There is nothing in this provision of the law which changes the situation in the slightest degree.

Mr. President, there has been something said about the character of the Federal judges. I am in favor of that provision of the amendment offered by the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY], which provides that there shall be granted no interlocutory order suspending the operations of the Commission's rate until the final conclusion of the case. I do not put my advocacy of that proposition on the ground that I suspect the courts; but I put it on the ground that the Commission, having been intrusted with a public duty, and having performed it, is fairly to be assumed to have performed it well. Therefore its order should stand and be in full effect until such time as the court shall, upon final investigation and final determination, decide otherwise. That is exactly what the President of the United States asked Congress to do in his message of a year ago last December and, if I mistake not the intention of it, that is what he asked Congress to do in the last annual message he sent to us.

I have not any question about our power to prohibit the granting of an interlocutory decree. There have been a large number of cases cited showing that Congress has repeatedly exercised that power and that the courts have upheld Congress and declared that power to be legally and properly exercised; and there are a great number of cases which have never yet been presented to this body, that could be presented in support of that contention. Both upon principle and precedent we can stand firm in the conviction that the exercise of such power by Congress is not such an invasion of the carrier's right as would enable him to say that due process of law is not afforded him.

The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] has given as a reason why he thinks such a provision should be incorporated in the bill his fear that some of the judges may act improperly. Whether that be true or not, it is certain that the railroad company, having brought its action, has it absolutely within its power, if it can get an interlocutory injunction upon an ex parte hearing, to practically suspend the operations of the proposed law and nullify it entirely.

It is possible, Mr. President, that the railways will not do it. It is possible that they may not find a judge who will grant an interlocutory order. However, during fifty years acquaintance with the courts I have seen several hundred interlocutory orders issued in absolute violation of every principle of justice, issued without a hearing, issued upon ex parte affidavits, issued sometimes in chambers and sometimes in court.

That such things have been is a certain indication that such things will be. If there are in the United States a few judges who are incompetent and ought not to be on the bench, either because of their ignorance or their dishonesty, in my judgment it becomes our duty, in dealing with the subject in hand, to provide that they shall not have the opportunity of suspending the operations of this law. If there are such judges in the country, the litigant who wants an unfair advantage knows where they are and how to reach them.

Mr. President, my education and my life business have brought me in contact with the courts. I am a member of the bar and I am, by the theory of my profession, an officer of the court, and yet I know, not only from history, but I know from observation, that there are incompetent judges—nay, more, I know that in every hour of our history and every hour of the history of every other country where a system such as ours prevails, injustice has been done by men sitting on the bench, who have exercised the power that was given to them for the benefit of all simply for the benefit of a few. In my own State, when we were under a Territorial form of government, I have seen a judge appointed by the authority of the United States perform acts of such great injustice to the people there that they rose up practically in arms, and the unfaithful judge escaped out of the Territory and never returned.

The history of the world will sustain me in saying that the most disgraceful acts of tyranny that ever have been perpetrated have been perpetrated by judges, creatures of the king, under the color of law; and yet I do not sympathize with any general attack upon the courts. I know that courts are not infallible. I know that no system of selection, whether by appointment or by election, can always give either competent or honest or upright men for the bench. I agree somewhat with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] when he says that confidence in the judiciary is the sheet anchor of our very existence as a nation; but I reserve for myself the right here and everywhere, whenever a judge transcends the law or whenever, in his ignorance, he fails to observe it, the right to criticise him. There is no place so sacred but that an American citizen has a right to complain of injustice, whether it be perpetrated by a judge, by a member of this body, by the Executive, or by any organization whatever.

I want to say for the Federal judiciary—and I have been acquainted with it, as I have said, for fifty years—that when you find an unfaithful judge he is an exception, a wonderful exception. There has been nowhere in the history of the world a judiciary in whom the people of right could have greater confidence than the judiciary of the United States. If you will search the history of English courts—and you need not go back twelve hundred years, you need go back only one hundred and fifty years—you will find that a condition existed then in England that never has existed in American courts, and never could have existed, for the people would not have tolerated it. If there are here and there exceptions, where judges are either too ignorant to discharge their duties, or too corrupt to do so, the great mass of Federal judges have been not only learned in the law, but they have been honest and upright in the administration of the law.

Mr. President, I repeat that judges are not infallible. Take the decisions of the best Federal and State courts and you will find to-day that they have held the law to be one thing and to-morrow they have held it to be another. That does not mean corruption; that may not mean ignorance, because different men see the law in different lights. We have had an exhibition of that here. The best lawyers of this body have failed to agree as to what the law is. Is it strange, then, that men on the bench also should fail to agree? If the decisions of every court in this country were unanimous and one way we would soon believe that they were not the judgment of all but that there was some method of compelling an agreement.

It is unfortunate when, in the decision of a great question by the Supreme Court of the United States, five judges say the law is one way and four judges say it is another and different way; but you can not devise any system of judicature that will escape that if you have honest, upright men.

We disagree here in the Senate, Mr. President, and we ought to disagree if our judgment is not in accord with that of our fellows, but in this case I believe it to be our duty to protect the great shipping public, if we can, to the extent that they may have the full benefit of this bill when it shall have become a law.

Mr. President, I did not intend to make any remarks upon this bill at all. I have firmly satisfied myself what the character of this bill ought to be. I am prepared to vote on it. I am in favor of the bill as it came from the House of Representatives with a proper modification, which I find satisfactory in the amendment offered by the junior Senator from Texas who sits by my side [Mr. BAILEY]. I believe that amendment will give to the carrier an opportunity to question everything that the Commission shall do which he may think interferes with his rights.

Mr. President, for one I should be ashamed to vote for a bill in which I did not have confidence enough to submit it to the final adjudication and determination of that great body to which has been transferred, not only questions of this kind, but the great question of our power to enact laws. When a court has been authorized to determine every grave question that we have presented to us, to determine whether the laws we enact are within our power, whether they come within the constitutional provisions, can we not trust that court with a question of dollars and cents? Dollars and cents are not comparable, after all, with the great questions of personal liberty and personal rights; and every man in this country holds those rights subject to the decision that court may make. I repeat, if you can trust the court in such matters, you can trust them with the questions involved in the pending bill.

I know that this bill will have to stand the criticism of the courts. I believe that every feature of it can be sustained, including the question of what some say is an interference with the functions of the courts by prohibiting an interlocutory injunction; but if the courts should say, in spite of the prohibition on the issuance of the writ of injunction, "We will grant the injunction," the remainder of the bill, in my judgment, will not be affected by that.

I believe that this bill might be benefited by amendments. I believe I can pick out half a dozen Senators here who can sit down and modify the bill to great advantage. I know that will not be done. I know the public expect that this bill will pass the Senate practically as it passed the House. Practically it will, in my judgment. I am in favor of making it certain that every carrier and every shipper shall have his day in court. I will trust the Federal court with that question. I believe it will see to it, as it ought to see to it, that every just and honest complaint can be redressed, if at all, at its hands.

Mr. BAILEY obtained the floor.

FOREIGN OFFERS OF AID TO CALIFORNIA SUFFERERS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

Immediately after the disaster at San Francisco many offers of assistance in the shape of contributions were tendered by foreign individuals, corporations, governments, and municipalities. The Canadian government, with an instant generosity peculiarly pleasant as a proof of the close and friendly ties which knit us to our neighbors of the North, offered to pass a resolution appropriating $100,000 for the relief of the sufferers by earthquake and fire. With a generosity equally marked and equally appreciated the Republic of Mexico, our nearest neighbor to the south, voted to appropriate $30,000, and the Republic of Guatemala voted to appropriate $10,000 for the same purpose. The Empress of China, in addition to sending money to be used for the Chinese who suffered in San Francisco, offered to send more than double as much to be used for the inhabitants generally. The Japanese Government immediately offered to send across the ocean one of their beautifully equipped hospital ships to be used in any way for the sufferers, and also offered 200,000 yen to the relief committee, in addition to more than 100,000 yen sent to Japanese subjects. The Government of far-distant New Zealand voted $25,000. The government of Martinique voted 1,000 francs. The municipality of Edmonton, Canada, $1,000. Many municipalities, corporations, and individuals in England, Germany, France, Japan, Cuba, and other countries immediately proffered aid. Where these offers of aid are made to the private relief committees organized to deal with the distress in San Francisco I have, of course, no official action to take concerning them. Where they were tendered to me in my official capacity I did not feel warranted in accepting them, but I am certain I give utterance to the feelings of all our countrymen when I express my very lively appreciation of the warm-hearted generosity and eagerness to help us in the time of our affliction shown by the governments, the municipalities, the corporations, and the individuals mentioned above. We are deeply grateful to them, and we are deeply grateful for the way in which they showed in such practical fashion the growth of the spirit of brotherhood among the nations.

Most kind and welcome messages of sympathy also were promptly sent to us by the Emperor of Austria, the King of Belgium, the President of Bolivia, the Prince of Bulgaria, the President of Brazil, the President of Chile, the President of Cuba, the King of Denmark, the President of the Dominican Republic, the Khedive of Egypt, the President of France, the German Emperor, the King of Great Britain, the King of Greece, the President of Guatemala, the King of Italy, the Emperor of Japan, the Emperor of Korea, the President of Mexico, the Prince of Monaco, the Queen of the Netherlands, the President of Nicaragua, the King of Norway, the President of Peru, the King of Portugal, the Czar of Russia, the King of Servia, the King of Spain, the President of the Swiss Confederation, the King of Sweden, the Sultan of Turkey, the President of Venezuela, the governments of Austria-Hungary, Bavaria, Belgium, Brazil, Chile, Costa Rica, Colombia, Cuba, Denmark, Ecuador, France, Great Britain, Guatemala, Greece, Haiti, Italy, Japan, Panama, Persia, Portugal, Paraguay, Peru, the Netherlands, Norway, Switzerland, Spain, Uruguay, Sweden, Russia, and Siam; by the ministers of foreign affairs of Chile, Greece, Nicaragua, Portugal, Paraguay, Guatemala, and Russia; by the Viceroy of India and the Governor-General of Australia; by the governors of Ontario, Hongkong, Ceylon, the Bermudas, Natal, the Azores, the Iwate Prefecture of Japan; by the premiers of New South Wales, Victoria, South Australia, and New Zealand; by the National Assembly of Salvador; by the Cuban House of Representatives; by the National Assembly of Guatemala; by the mayor, senate, and house of Bremen; the mayor, president, and the senate of Hamburg; the mayors of Adelaide, Queensland, Hobart, Madrid, Osaka; by the chambers of commerce of Nagoya, Japan, and Calcutta, Bengal; by the Tea Traders and the Silk Fabric Guild of Yokohama and the Asahi Shimbun of Osaka; by the Canadian Manufacturer's Association of Toronto and the Latin Union of Habana; by the prime minister of England; the lord mayors of London, Liverpool, Bristol, Leicester, and Shrewsbury; by workingmen's councils, religious associations, and by a multitude of other associations, organizations, and private individuals.

Appropriate expressions of gratitude to all these friends have been returned by the State Department or by myself, but it seems to me that the real depth of grateful feeling awakened in our people by all these evidences of genuine sympathy and friendship should be expressed also by formal action of the supreme legislative power of the nation.

I recommend the passage by the Congress of an appropriate resolution to that end.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, May 3, 1906.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President, I suggest that the President's message be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and that that committee be requested to formulate appropriate resolutions, conveying to the foreign governments and commercial and other bodies named in the President's message the grateful acknowledgment and appreciation of the people of our whole country, but especially of California, of their heartfelt sympathy for and kind offers of financial assistance to the afflicted people of San Francisco, who have suffered so much by the great calamity that has recently fallen upon that city.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the message will be printed and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, as requested.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I wish to say a few words regarding the message.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas has the floor. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. BAILEY. I wish to occupy but a few moments, and then the Senator from Nevada can proceed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas declines to yield.

REGULATION OF RAILROAD RATES.

The Senate, as in the Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12987) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, and all acts amendatory thereof, and to enlarge the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] does not need my assistance or the assistance of any of his political friends on this side of the Chamber in defending himself or his position against a misconstruction. But the evident satisfaction with which the rebuke to him was received by our friends on the other side of the Chamber leads me to fear that if it were left to pass unchallenged the country might assume that the only argument of those who support the proposition to prohibit preliminary injunctions against the orders of the Commission is based upon our suspicion against both the integrity and the intelligence of all Federal judges.

Speaking for myself—and I have no right to speak for anyone else—I have declared on a former occasion, and I now declare, that I hold an overwhelming majority of all the men who sit to construe the laws of Congress in the highest esteem. I believe in their intelligence; I believe in their integrity; I believe in their patriotism. But, sir, I am not so blind as not myself to see that there are unworthy men amongst them, nor am I so shortsighted as to think that, strive as I might, I could ever make the people of the United States forget the unworthy men who wear the judicial ermine of this Republic.

I do not mean that all of those against whose improvident issuance of a preliminary injunction I would guard would issue it under improper motives. When I look to the cases which have been decided, I find that in almost every instance when the railroads have appealed to the Federal judiciary against the railroad rates established by State commissions a preliminary injunction has been promptly granted. I do not say, indeed I do not believe, that these judges were dishonest. If I did believe it, I would say it, because, with all my respect for the courts, I have no reverence for them. I revere no living men except those who consecrate their lives to the unselfish service of God. They are the only people in this country for whom I cherish a reverence. For all the others I have only a respect. For the faithful and useful public servant I have a profound respect, but I have no awe of them or reverence for them. I am not one of those who believe that when we stand in the presence of a court we ought to take off our hat and shoes, as if it were holy ground. It is enough to stand with uncovered head, and standing thus we have the right to stand erect as men made in the image of our Maker, without being required to fawn upon and cringe to a fellow-man simply because he happens to be a judge. If I believed these men were dishonest, I would say so here; I would say so in their courts if the occasion rose; but I do not believe that every time an injunction has been improperly issued it was dishonestly done.

In the case from my own State the Federal judge enjoined not only the schedule of rates which the commission had fixed—and that part of his decree was affirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States, the State introducing no testimony on that point or after having introduced some afterwards withdrew it and amended the plea—but he went further.

He enjoined the enforcement of any provision of that law, upon the ground that it was contrary to the Constitution of the United States. And yet when it was brought to the highest court in all this land that court unanimously reversed that part of his decree.

In the Kentucky case the Federal court in that State was so anxious to enjoin the Commission that actually the Supreme Court reversed their decree because it enjoined them too soon. So it is that in case after case these Federal judges have either issued injunctions dishonestly or unwisely; in most cases, I think, unwisely; in some cases, I think, dishonestly. So long as I know there sits on a Federal bench one man for whose conviction on impeachment I have voted, I will never agree to allow that judge—and if we allow it to all the others we must likewise allow it to him—the right to suspend, without due and full inquiry, a well-considered decision of a Government tribunal.

Not only did a large number of Senators in this body vote to convict the judge whom I now have in my mind, but I saw his attorneys stand at the bar of the Senate and object to the introduction of a part of his sworn statement made before the Judiciary Committee of the House. To my mind, a man who is fit to be a judge is not afraid to be confronted anywhere with his own words, made under oath or otherwise. We can not forget that that man still sits as a judge, and that he has the power to deny to the people whose misfortune it is to suffer under his administration the benefits which a wise enactment of this Congress might confer.

Mr. President, I am not willing to see the Democratic party, I am not willing to see even the single Democratic Senator to whose management and care the bill has been committed, arraigned before the country and charged with seeking to deny the preliminary injunction because we distrust the judiciary of this Republic. But, Mr. President, confiding, as I do, in the uprightness of our judges, I do not think the judge is any more essential to the security and the permanence of this Republic or to the welfare and happiness of these people than is a patriotic Congress or a wise and firm Executive. It is just as necessary to have a Congress which will make just and equal laws as it is to have a judiciary which will construe them correctly after we have made them.

I confess that I have not yet learned in what respect an upright, brave, and honest judge is better than a Senator who is equally brave, upright, and honest, and an Executive who fearlessly and impartially executes the law as Congress has made it and as the courts have construed it deserves as well of his countrymen as either. The safety of this Government depends on all and not on any one of its departments.

It is all well enough to cultivate a respect for the courts, but it is not more important than it is to cultivate a respect for the Congress and for the executive department.

Mr. President, if a Senator disgraces himself nobody thinks it is out of place to say so. It is true that some who write for a penny a line assail upright Senators because some are not upright; but in time that produces no mischief. The Senate and every Senator will at last be judged by what it or he does and says, and not by what others say about it or him. It is with the judge precisely as it is with a Senator. By his judgments the public are warranted in judging him, and if a judge, from his high place, shall misconstrue the law, shall trample upon the right, and defeat the ends of justice, he ought to be pilloried in full view of the American people, and every man can be taught to despise him without despising his great office. If I say that an unworthy Senator should be turned from that door with a brand on him, am I bringing the Senate into disrepute? Aye, sir, when I denounce the unworthy Senator I pay public tribute to the worthy ones. The fact that a Senator, forfeiting his right to the respect of his associates, is turned out, is itself a guaranty to the American people that honesty and correct behavior are still the rule in this great body, and that only those enjoy its respect who meet the requirements of that rule.

Let us have it so with respect to judges. If a judge borrows the private and palatial car of a railroad president, and from its luxurious appointments issues an injunction, shall I be forbidden, because I happen to be a Senator, to denounce it? No, Mr. President, the rule, the safe and the only rule, in this free land of ours is that whoever does a wrong and wherever he does it shall be denounced for the doing of it from every place where men are gathered, and from no forum should the denunciation come swifter and more pronounced than from this one, sir.

The great judge, the man of clean and open life—I walk by his side and I feel honored in his friendship. There is not in all the history of the world a nobler example of conscience and of courage than that set by the great English judge who when his King wanted him to decide a case in a certain way, sent this defiant message to his sovereign: "Tell your master that I will decide this case according to the very truth and justice of it." Such men have made our race the foremost in the civilization of all ages and of all countries. From him to this day no man in all our public life finds readier tribute from the people than the brave, the honest, and the upright judge, and no man respects him more than I do. But from every place I would denounce the man who soils the ermine, for it is my belief that a judge's robe should be as unsullied as a woman's name. Every judge who does injustice should be upbraided for it.

He should be driven from his great office and denied the respect of honest men, and in saying that I do not feel that I assail the foundations of this Republic.

Mr. President, I have heard men declare that whatever may be the imperfections of this law, the Supreme Court will not dare, out of a fear of public sentiment, to hold it void. The friends of this legislation ought not to lay that flattering unction to their souls. We must not suppose that if we lack the skill or the willingness to make a law free from constitutional defects and vices, it will safely pass the scrutiny of that great tribunal. I record it here as my deliberate opinion that they will hold it void unless we make it valid. I do not say that this bill is invalid in its present form, but I do say that we could free it from grave objections by some amendments which it would be easy to draw.

But that was not the purpose for which I rose. I simply rose to protest against an apparent effort to put the Democratic party in the attitude of wanting to abridge the power of these judges because we distrust the honesty of all courts.

Mr. FORAKER obtained the floor.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator pardon me just a moment?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. BACON. I will occupy but a minute.

Mr. FORAKER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BACON. So that it may go into the RECORD as a part of this debate, I desire now to read the amendment which I shall propose and of which I have already given notice, in order to guard against hasty or inconsiderate or even corrupt action on the part of any judge, if such a thing can be contemplated as possible. It also protects the public against loss from the time of filing the bill, and insures speedy action so far as the carrier can effect it. I read it:

No rate or charge, regulation or practice, prescribed by the Commission shall be restrained, set aside, suspended, or modified by any interlocutory or preliminary order or decree of the court unless upon the hearing, after such full notice to the Commission as herein prescribed, the same shall be considered and concurred in and ordered by at least two judges presiding in said hearing, at least one of whom shall be a judge of the circuit court of the United States or a circuit justice of the Supreme Court of the United States. In case any application, motion, or prayer for such interlocutory or preliminary order or decree shall be made by any party to such complaint, other than the carrier or carriers to be affected by the rate or charge, practice or regulation, in question prescribed by the Commission, then and in that case, said carrier or carriers shall, before the hearing of said application, motion, or prayer, by appropriate order and process, be made a party or parties to the said complaint in equity to abide such orders and decrees as may be made by the court pending said cause and the final judgment and decree in the same. Upon the granting of any interlocutory or preliminary order or decree restraining, setting aside, suspending, or modifying any rate or charge, regulation, or practice prescribed by the Commission, before said interlocutory or preliminary order or decree shall be operative or of any effect, the carrier, person, or corporation seeking such order or decree, shall deposit in the registry of the court and subject to the order thereof as hereinafter specified, such amount as the court may determine, either in lawful money of the United States or in lawful bonds of the United States at the par value thereof. It shall, in addition thereto, be the duty of the said carrier or carriers to be affected by the rate or charge, practice, or regulation in question, to pay into the registry of the court, subject to its order, the sums of money as herein specified, and to effectuate the same, at the time of granting such preliminary or interlocutory order or decree, the court shall by appropriate order require the said carrier or carriers affected by the rate or charge, practice, or regulation in question prescribed by the Commission, to pay into the registry of the court and subject to its order, on or before the 10th day of each month pending the said interlocutory or preliminary order or decree, in lawful money of the United States, all money received by such carrier or carriers during the calendar month next preceding said date and subsequent to the date of filing said complaint from the collection made for all shipments upon the rates and charges in question in excess of the rates and charges as fixed and determined by the order of said Commission. On the said 10th day of each month there shall be filed in court by said carrier or carriers, through their duly authorized officer or officers, a statement under oath of the shipments on account of which said collections have been made, setting forth in detail the character and amounts of said shipments, the point of each shipment and of its destination, the names of the consignors and consignees, the amount collected from each for said shipment, and separately the excess collected as aforesaid, and the names of the persons from whom collected. The said court at the time of granting said temporary or interlocutory order or decree, and in its discretion thereafter from time to time, shall require the said carrier or carriers to give such bond and security as may be deemed sufficient to insure the filing of said reports and the payment of said amounts; and in addition thereto shall, by the orders and processes of a court of equity, enforce summarily the prompt payment of said amounts into the registry of the court, from which orders of the court there shall be no appeal. Any refusal or failure to comply with said orders and to pay into the court the said sum of money as herein provided shall constitute a contempt of the court. For the purpose of said orders the court shall be deemed to be always in session. From said orders or decrees for the payment into court of the said amounts no appeal shall lie.

If upon the final decree in said cause the rate or charge prescribed by the Commission shall be adjudged to be valid, the court shall, by proper orders and decrees out of the said deposit or the proceeds of the sale thereof and the additional payments made into the court by the said carrier or carriers, caused to be paid to each of the persons from whom collections have been made the several amounts paid by each of them to said carrier or carriers in excess of the said rate or charges prescribed by the Commission, with interest thereon from the date of each payment at the rate of 6 per cent per annum.

If upon the final decree in said cause the rate or charge prescribed by the Commission shall be adjudged to be invalid and the enforcement of the same shall be enjoined, the court shall, by proper orders and decrees, direct to be paid over to the said carrier or carriers the sum of money thus theretofore deposited and paid into the registry of the court, less such amounts for costs as the court, in its discretion, under the circumstances of any case, may in justice and equity deem to be reasonably chargeable to said carrier or carriers.

Pending said cause, it shall be within the power of the court, by appropriate proceedings, either in open court or through a master in chancery or commissioner, to examine into the correctness of the reports herein required to be made under oath by the said carrier or carriers, and to this end to examine, under oath, their officials and employees, and to require, by order, the production of the books and papers of said carrier or carriers.

If, upon the said examination, it shall be adjudged that the said carrier or carriers have not made complete returns of all of said shipments and the amounts collected thereon, as herein specified, the court shall, by order, require the said carrier or carriers to pay into the registry of the court, in lawful money of the United States, the amount received on account of said shipments in excess of the amounts theretofore reported to the court.

I will not say anything about the amendment now, because it will be more proper to do so when the amendment comes up for action. I desired that that much should be now mentioned and embraced as a part of this debate.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I do not rise to take issue with anything that has been said by the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] or by any other Senator as to the question of power on the part of Congress to prohibit the granting of temporary restraining orders by the courts, nor do I intend to discuss the question of the effect of providing for a court review of the orders that may be made by the Commission, if this bill becomes a law, or the effect of omitting to provide such court review; but I rise to call attention to the attitude heretofore sustained with respect to both these questions by the Interstate Commerce Commission. I do that feeling that there is greater propriety in it since the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] addressed the Senate a few days ago and in terms of unmeasured praise told us of the experience of the Interstate Commerce Commissioners and their competency by reason of that experience to advise us as to the character of law that should be enacted.

I do it for another reason, Mr. President. Until within the last three or four months, according to my recollection, we never heard of a proposition from any source to confer upon the Interstate Commerce Commission power to make rates and to adopt and establish regulations governing the operations of the railroads of this country without making the exercise of that power subject to review by the courts. But suddenly, since the beginning of the present session of Congress, the proposition has been advanced and has been embodied in the Hepburn bill, which is now before the Senate, and in other bills that this great power should be conferred upon the Commission, and that it should be exercised without any review of it by the courts.

I call attention, in the first place, to the report of the Interstate Commerce Commission made in December, 1897, being the Eleventh Annual Report of the Interstate Commerce Commission. This is the first report that was made by the Commission after the decision in what is known as the "Maximum Rate case," in which case the court held that the Interstate Commerce Commission had no power to make rates under the original interstate-commerce act, which was under consideration in that case.

After having called attention to that case, and to the nature of the decision in that respect, and after having called attention to the fact that it was necessary, in the opinion of the Interstate Commerce Commission, for us to amend the law so as to give them this rate-making power, the Commission then took up for discussion what I now want to read, at page 34 of their report, under the subhead "To what extent should orders be subject to judicial review." The Commission said:

If this view should prevail, to what extent and in what manner ought the orders of the Commission be made the subject of judicial review? It is generally understood that under the Constitution of the United States an order for the payment of money can not be enforced without giving the defendant an opportunity for a trial by jury.

That general and common understanding continued until this particular bill was framed in the House and sent to the Senate as passed by the House. Continuing, the Interstate Commerce Commission said:

Such orders must therefore stand very much as they do at present. They are, however, a very insignificant part of the entire number and from their very nature will be such that ordinarily the carrier will comply with them without the necessity of any steps for their enforcement. The great bulk of our orders, as already stated, must pertain to the future. They will be orders fixing either a maximum or a minimum rate. The only power which courts can exercise over orders of this sort is to vacate them. They can not be invested with authority under the Federal Constitution to make and enforce a modified order.

For what reasons, then, should the court be allowed to vacate an order? The only appeal which lies from the decrees of the English railway commission is upon questions of law. There is no appeal upon questions of fact as to which the decision of the commission is final. This is analogous to the verdict of a jury or the findings of fact by a special master in chancery under the equity practice of some States.

Much might be said in favor of applying the same idea to the orders of this Commission. It can hardly be expected that ordinarily the case, upon proceedings in review, will come before a tribunal which is in theory better fitted to determine questions of fact than the one which passes upon them in the first instance.

Upon the other hand, the right of review is always a safeguard—

Now, I want the attention of Senators to this, because it is authority which surely at least the Senator having this bill in charge ought to give heed to:

Upon the other hand, the right of review is always a safeguard. It puts a certain restraint upon the judgments of any tribunal. It would not probably embarrass the practical operation of the law, and it might prevent the occasional miscarriage of justice if the whole case, both upon the law and the facts, were submitted to the court.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. FORAKER (reading)—

The question of review would then be—

Now listen—

Is the order lawful, just, and reasonable? If so, the proceedings in review are dismissed. If not, the order is vacated. No new order can be made by the court. If the order is vacated, the case should be sent back to the Commission for further proceedings.

I ask the Senator to bear with me a minute until I read another paragraph.

Mr. TILLMAN. I was just trying to find what the Senator is reading from.

Mr. FORAKER. I am reading from the eleventh annual report of the Interstate Commerce Commission. I am reading the views of that Commission as to the propriety of conferring upon the court the power to review an order of the Commission making rates and establishing regulations, a power they were asking in that report to have conferred upon them by Congress.

Mr. TILLMAN. If the Senator will allow me, there can be no difference of opinion between us, I think, on that point. I have always said I am willing and anxious to get a review and to give both the shipper and the carrier an opportunity to have the court pass upon their rights.

Mr. FORAKER. That is true; but I want to call the Senator's attention to the extent to which the Commission recommend this review shall go. Now, further:

The right to apply for review should be exercised within a time limited or not at all. When application is made for review, the Commission should send to the court the testimony taken before it, which should constitute the record upon which the case is reviewed, unless the court is of the opinion that there is testimony which is material to a proper disposition of the case and which could not or under all circumstances ought not to have been given before the Commission. In that case the court should instruct the Commission to take and send up the additional testimony.

Now, one other paragraph as to whether or not the court should be authorized to grant temporary restraining orders pending this review:

The important question is, What effect should be given the order of the Commission pending the proceedings for review? If the carrier is obliged to obey an improper order, ordinarily it can obtain no redress. If the carrier is not obliged to obey a proper order, the public can ordinarily obtain no redress. When a question has been fairly and fully tried before the Commission, it appears to us that ordinarily the order of the Commission should be effective until the court has declared against it. There are manifestly, however, instances in which this ought not to be true. Probably the court should be invested with power, when application for review is made, to determine whether or not the order shall take effect pending such proceedings.

I might read further to the same effect, but I have read enough to show the views entertained by the Interstate Commerce Commission at that time. That was a time when they were giving exceptionally careful attention to the subject, and to what they said in regard to it, in their first official report after they had been, by the decision of the Supreme Court, stripped of that power which until then they had claimed to possess.

Now, in their reports from that time down to the present there has never appeared anything in conflict with what they said in their eleventh annual report. That they had not changed their views prior to November last—November, 1905—we have conclusive evidence in the form of a bill which at that time they sent to the Interstate Commerce Committee of the Senate for the consideration of that committee as a proper measure to recommend to the Senate for passage. After providing that they should be invested with power to make rates and regulations and put them into effect, they proceeded, at page 24 of the bill, as it was printed at the time, to say as follows:

Any carrier may, within thirty days from the service upon it of any order, other than an order for the payment of money, begin in the circuit court of the United States for the district in which its principal operating office is situated, proceedings to set aside and vacate such order; and in case such order affects two or more carriers, such proceedings may be brought by them jointly in the district in which the principal operating office of either of them is situated. Such proceedings shall be begun by filing on the equity side of the court a petition or bill in equity, which shall briefly state the matters embraced in such order and the particulars in which it is alleged to be unlawful, and in such proceedings the complainant and the Commission shall be made defendants.

Upon the filing of such a petition or bill the clerk of such circuit court shall forthwith mail a copy thereof to the Commission, with notice that the same has been filed; and the Commission shall thereupon, within twenty days from the receipt of such notice, cause to be filed in such court a complete certified copy of the record in the proceeding wherein the order complained of was made, including the pleadings, the testimony, and exhibits, the report and opinion of the Commission, and its order in the premises. If it is impracticable to send up a copy of any exhibit, the exhibit itself may be forwarded. The defendant may answer or demur to such petition or bill according to the usual practice in equity cases.

If upon hearing such petition the court shall be of opinion that the order of the Commission is not a lawful order, it shall set aside and vacate the same; otherwise it shall dismiss the petition. In either case the court shall file with its decision a statement of the reasons upon which the decision is based, a copy of which shall be certified forthwith to the Commission. If the order of the Commission is vacated, and if the defendant does not appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, the Commission may reopen the case for further hearing and order, or it may make a new order without further hearing, not inconsistent with the decision and opinion of the circuit court. Any such subsequent order shall be subject to the same provisions as an original order.

Upon the filing of such a petition the circuit court may, upon such notice to the complainant and to the Commission as the court deems proper, extend the time within which such order shall take effect, not to exceed in all sixty days from the date of service of the order upon the carrier. The court may also, if it plainly appears that the order is unlawful, and not otherwise, suspend the operation of the order during the pendency of the proceeding or until the further order of the court.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator allow me? From what bill is he reading?

Mr. FORAKER. I am reading from the bill that was framed by the Interstate Commerce Commission and sent by that Commission to the Interstate Commerce Committee of the Senate as an embodiment of their ideas of what this legislation should be; and I am reading it to call attention to the fact that down until last November, at the beginning of the present session of Congress, the Interstate Commerce Commission continued to entertain precisely the views so elaborately and so ably expressed in their eleventh annual report in regard to the propriety of a full review by the court, including a review not only upon the evidence submitted to the Commission, but upon all other evidence that the courts might hold it was proper for them to hear in order that equity, justice, and right might prevail. I am reading it for the purpose of showing that they still continued down until last November to be of the opinion expressed by them in their eleventh annual report, that not only should there be this full, complete, broad view by the court, but that there should also be power conferred upon the court pending that review to restrain by interlocutory order the execution of the Commission's order until the court could finally determine its validity.

Now, Mr. President, not only was that the well-known view of the Interstate Commerce Commission, but it was the view of everybody else who discussed this subject, so far as I have any recollection or any knowledge. Not until after that time did we hear of anybody proposing a bill conferring this autocratic power upon the Interstate Commerce Commission such as the pending bill provides for without subjecting the orders it was to make to a review by the court. Suddenly there came a change. The Hepburn bill was introduced. It did not contain any such provision. A few other bills, I believe, about the same time were introduced that did not contain any such provision. Now, why was that change made?

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.

Mr. DOLLIVER. My recollection of the review suggested by the bill sent to the Committee on Interstate Commerce by the Interstate Commerce Commission is that it submitted only one proposition to be considered by the court, and that is the lawfulness of the Commission's order. Am I correct about that?

Mr. FORAKER. That was the general proposition, but in determining whether or not it was lawful the courts were to have before them the complete record, including all the pleadings and all the testimony and all the exhibits and all the orders and all the steps taken.

Mr. DOLLIVER. If the Senator from Ohio will pardon the suggestion, he says that nobody ever suggested that the courts ought not to be clothed with authority to rehear and reconsider these findings. I call his attention to the fact that before the Interstate Commerce Committee, sitting as an investigating committee, there appeared three of the most famous and skillful railway lawyers in the United States—Mr. Morawetz, general solicitor of the Santa Fe; Robert Mather, now president of the Rock Island, and Mr. Hines, at that time, I think, connected in an official way, not in the office, however, of the general solicitor of the Louisville and Nashville Railroad.

I call the Senator's attention to the fact that these great students of railway law united in testifying before our committee that you can not, without violating the Constitution of the United States, give over to the courts any power to review the wisdom and discretion of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and upon that ground they based their protest that this power of making rates ought not to be conferred upon the Commission, because in the nature of our jurisprudence you can not, directly or indirectly, turn over the findings of the Commission to be reheard, reconsidered, and readjudicated by any court of justice.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, the Senator wholly misapprehends what the witnesses named testified to before the Interstate Commerce Committee of the Senate. What they testified to in that connection was that we could not create an administrative board and have the character of hearing before it that we were contemplating and discussing at the time, and then when it made an order after such hearing, and as a result of it, take an appeal from that board to a court, because no court would entertain an appeal from an administrative authority. But they never said, neither did any other witnesses before that committee say, that we could not authorize an independent action complaining of an order that had been made and thus review it in an independent proceeding such as has been discussed, such as has been proposed by those who favor what we call a "court-review plan" in this debate here in the Senate. That is the distinction. They did unite in saying that. Nobody ever controverted that proposition; nobody ever insisted to the contrary.

But, Mr. President, suddenly there appeared one other idea that I am about to call attention to. What I was talking about particularly was the record made by the introduction of bills. I never heard of any bill omitting to provide for some kind of court review until some time after this bill of the Interstate Commerce Committee had been brought before our committee and had been considered there long enough to excite considerable discussion all over the country.

A little bit later a bill was introduced by the Senator from Iowa himself——

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.

Mr. DOLLIVER. The bill to which the Senator from Ohio refers was introduced in the Senate.

Mr. FORAKER. I understand that. I say a little bit later it was introduced, but not until after the Senate convened. I believe the Senator omitted to provide for any court review in his bill.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I recognized the fact in the bill which I had the honor to introduce that it was not possible for Congress to take away from the courts their right to attack an order of the Commission on account of its being unlawful—that is to say, on the ground of its being a violation of constitutional right.

Mr. FORAKER. Whatever the reason may have been, I am simply talking about the fact. I am not disposed to have any controversy with the Senator as to whether there is power in Congress to take away from the courts the right to review an order made by the Commission.

Mr. LONG. I was not present when the evidence to which the Senator refers was taken by the committee, but I have read that evidence, and if the Senator will refer to volume 2, page 801, of the hearings, he will find that Mr. Morawetz expressed the opinion that it was not within the power of Congress to confer upon the courts the performance of duties of an administrative or a quasi legislative character.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, nobody takes issue with that statement. I have no doubt that Mr. Morawetz has so testified. I never heard of anybody testifying to the contrary. All are agreed that only judicial power can be conferred upon the courts, and Mr. Morawetz no doubt so testified.

The question raised by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER] was whether or not the three witnesses named by him testified that it was not competent for Congress to confer upon the courts power to review the orders made by the Commission. My answer is that what they testified to was that it was not competent for us to authorize an appeal from an administrative board to the court direct, but they never pretended any such thing, nor did anybody else, so far as I have any recollection, as that you could not bring an independent action and that we could not give jurisdiction to the court to entertain an independent action to attack an order, or complain of an order and seek to have it enjoined, that the Commission had made and was seeking to enforce.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. President, I have before me the testimony of the witness to whose testimony I alluded a moment ago, and I find that Mr. Morawetz said:

> Congress can require the courts to pass upon the question whether a rate fixed by a commission is confiscatory. It can also require the courts to determine whether a rate fixed by a commission or by a railway company is excessive—illegally high. But Congress can not require the courts to pass upon the mere business policy of fixing a rate anywhere between those two extremes.

I venture to say, without occupying too much of the Senator's time, that the other great railway lawyers to whom I have referred coincided in that opinion; and it is not a mere formal compliment to the honorable Senator from Ohio to say that his own speech, made here early in the session, seems to coincide with this view.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, the Senator is mistaken about that. What the Senator reads raises a different question altogether from what I supposed he was raising by the interruption that he subjected me to a few minutes ago. In the speech I made here February 28 I pointed out, in agreement with what was said by these witnesses, that it was true that where rates on the one hand were confiscatory and on the other were extortionate, anywhere between that, rates may be considered, in a certain sense, to be reasonable.

Therefore, if fixed by legislative authority, they can not be reviewed by the court, unless we confer on the court express power to do so. That is what I contended for.

Now that I am on that point, I will say there is a difference of opinion betwen lawyers as to it, and I do not remember what this witness or that witness or another witness may have said on that particular phase of the subject; but I do remember, Mr. President, that no witness testified that we could not confer upon the courts jurisdiction to entertain an independent bill to review and set aside an order the Commission had made of which the carrier wanted to make complaint or of which the shipper or the community desired to make complaint on the ground that the order was not in conformity with the standard we create.

Mr. LONG. So far as I know, no one contends that we could not confer such jurisdiction on the courts. I believe that the courts have such authority now, without any special statutory provision.

Referring to Mr. Hines's statement before the committee, which, the Senator says, was only upon the question as to whether an appeal could be taken from the Commission to a court, I wish to call his attention to this statement of Mr. Hines in the hearings:

> If you get an order from a commission making a rate, no matter how you word the power of the judicial review—

Not the appeal—I call the attention of the Senator to this—but the judicial review—> the court is not going into those facts any further than is necessary to protect the carrier from confiscation, in my judgment. So, no matter how much right you might have theoretically to do that, the matter is going to be left practically with the Commission, unless it palpably abuses its discretion.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, as I have already said upon that phase of the general question, there was and is a difference of opinion among the lawyers, and I would not pretend to say what this lawyer said or that lawyer said who appeared and testified before the committee. I happen to know that some of the lawyers, and among them Mr. Hines, I think, have changed their opinion upon some of the points they discussed since they testified before the committee. That is only natural. Men are called before committees; they are cross-examined, questions are brought suddenly before them, which perhaps they have not carefully considered, and they make the best answers they can under the circumstances. It is not strange that now and then a lawyer who appears before a Senate committee should make statements there which, upon reflection and further investigation, he might wish to modify or change.

But, however that matter may be, Mr. President, I do not want to be diverted from the point I want to make. Down to the time I mentioned, nobody ever thought of such a thing as not providing in any bill presented to the Senate or to any committee of the Senate for a court review and full authority for the court to suspend by interlocutory injunction an order of the Commission pending the hearing of that review. I mean a review in an independent action. Suddenly, however, there came the bill of the Senator from Iowa, and I think that was the first one, that omitted the broad court review. I am not certain about that; but, if I am in error, the Senator is present and he can correct me.

Mr. DOLLIVER. If the Senator will permit me, I will say that there is no sense in which that bill omitted the court review. It provided that the orders should continue in effect unless they were vacated by the court. It provided a venue in the circuit court of the United States for the hearing of these independent proceedings in equity; and, while doubt has been thrown around the legal sufficiency of these provisions, I have never maintained, and no other friend of the bill has ever maintained, that there is absent from that bill, or from the House bill, an adequate facility for entering into the court to have determined any right which the carrier affected by the order has a right to have adjudicated.

Mr. FORAKER. Well, Mr. President, I will not have any controversy with the Senator about that concerning which we are talking. In the Senator's bill as it was originally introduced, if my recollection serves me correctly, it was provided in the restrictive review, if I may employ that term in a sense which is a correct one, that the question to be passed upon by the court was as to the lawfulness of the order made; but in this bill which we have under consideration, and in this bill for the first time, appears the provision that the question to be reviewed by the court is whether the order was regularly made—not lawfully made, but regularly made.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I dislike very much to interrupt the Senator's discourse, but the matters to which he has just referred have absolutely nothing to do with the independent action of the carrier going into courts for the purpose of denouncing an order of the Commission as unlawful or unconstitutional. The Senator is referring to the Hepburn section which authorizes the action on the part of the Commission to bring suit in equity to enforce its order.

Mr. FORAKER. If the Senator be right about that, Mr. President, then he has conclusively established what I was contending for, that there was omitted from his bill what was in the Interstate Commerce Commission's bill, which is the provision that the carrier, or anybody else interested, may go into court in an independent action as a complainant and have a review. There is no such thing as that in the Senator's bill; there is no such thing as that in this Hepburn bill, and until this Hepburn bill came before the House of Representatives, it never was in any bill—I mean the omission of a review of that kind—so far as I have any recollection.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. President, one of my main troubles has been, as the Senator from Ohio knows, to get anybody to read my bill or the House bill.

If there is no provision made in the Hepburn bill for a review in the courts, what does the bill mean when it says that the orders of the Commission shall remain in effect unless the court suspends or vacates them? What does it mean when it deliberately provides for a venue and trial of suits brought by the carriers affected by those orders? That is a favorite method of conferring jurisdiction—to provide a venue.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, the Senator does not misunderstand what I am talking about. I am talking about the fact that there is not in this bill any conferring of power upon any court to entertain any such independent review proceedings as I have been discussing. There is no such provision in the Senator's bill as is found in the Interstate Commerce Commission bill. That was left out. Why was it left out? The Senator knows why it was left out.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I know, and I think I ought to be permitted to state.

Mr. FORAKER. I should be glad to have the Senator do so.

Mr. DOLLIVER. It was left out for the reason that it was surplusage. The jurisdiction of the courts of the United States to attack the legal validity of an act of Congress does not depend upon any affirmative conferring of power in the act, but the jurisdiction of the court is independent of our action here. The provision was left out because it was obvious that that judisdiction could not be disturbed by an act of Congress. So far as I am personally concerned, I left it out because I wanted to preserve unimpaired the power which from time immemorial the courts have exercised in dealing with acts of Congress.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, the Senator does not quite come to the real reason why it was left out. I will state the real reason, and the Senator knows when I state it that I am stating the exact truth. Although I was not at any of these conferences, I know what was done at some of them upon as good authority as I would have if the Senator himself should tell me. It was left out because it was pointed out when the Interstate Commerce Commissioners' bill was presented to the Interstate Commerce Committee, that by that bill, as by every other of the fifty bills, perhaps, that had been up to that time introduced, there would have to be, if it should be enacted into law, two trials to which the shipper would have to be subjected. He would have to have a trial before the Commission, and then he would have to go into court and have another trial.

Nobody ever before questioned but that that would be the right of the carrier or the right of the shipper or the right of the community, and everybody felt that to subject a shipper to two trials was wrong if there was any way to avoid it—to a trial before the Commission and a trial before the court—and that we should have only one, and it should be a full and fair trial and a final trial, except subject to appeal. But nobody up until that time ever thought of such a thing as shutting the court-house door against anybody. Everybody supposed, as a matter of course, that was a right inalienable, and there was no American citizen who could be deprived of it; and that, Mr. President, in all these proceedings, whether you commence them before a commission or not, they must sooner or later get into the court to have that hearing. So it was thought by some of us on the committee, who were just as anxious as the Senator from Iowa was, and as others of his colleagues are, to find a remedy for the evils complained of, that the duty was incumbent upon us to find a remedy that would not subject the shipper to more than one such hearing, and that if he was to have one anyhow, and one must be had in the courts anyhow, it ought to be there in the first instance.

That is why I brought in the bill I introduced here, Senate bill 285, providing that the Commission should be restricted in its powers to those which properly belong to an executive board—to executive powers; that it should discharge only administrative duties, and that when it came to a determination of these rights, to the end that there might be only one hearing, it should be, in the first instance, in that tribunal to which it must go in any event. So it provided that the Commission instead of acting in the first place as a prosecutor, then as a judge, and then as a legislator, should act simply as an executive board should act, and discharge only executive duties; it should hear complaints, and if a complaint when heard was of such a character that it could by the exercise of its powers of conciliation bring the parties together, it should exercise its powers of conciliation; but if it found on trial that the carrier would not desist from that of which the shipper complained, then it should be the duty of this Commission, not to sit for a full and final hearing running through a period of time ranging anywhere from one year to two, three, or four years before it could reach the point of making an order, but that it should immediately, if it thought there was probable ground for the complaint, send it to the court, where by necessity it must go anyhow, and where, having been sent, it was the duty of the court to proceed immediately, the district attorney having filed a complaint in the name of the United States Government, and give a full and final hearing, subject to appeal to the Supreme Court.

That seems simple. It was such a saving of expense to the shipper and such an advantage to the shipper over every other plan presented; it was such an advantage to all concerned to have but one hearing instead of two and to have it in the court, where of necessity he must have one anyhow, that at once there was a different topic taken up for consideration, and that was whether or not they could so frame it as to prevent any review by the courts of the work of the Commission. Then it was, when that matter was thus pressed upon our friends, that they omitted for the first time from the bills they introduced a provision for this broad and generous, and properly generous, court review, which the Interstate Commerce Commissioners placed in their bill.

Mr. SPOONER. And providing for due process.

Mr. FORAKER. And providing for due process, as the Senator from Wisconsin well suggests.

Mr. President, it is getting late. I did not expect to detain the Senate so long, but I did want to call attention at this stage of the discussion to the fact that, so far as a court review is concerned and so far as a restraining order is concerned, the Interstate Commerce Commission has stood uniformly down until this very last utterance, which is its most formal utterance—the bill it framed and sent to us—for both court review and interlocutory restraining order when the court thought it wise and just that such an order should issue.

Mr. WARREN obtained the floor.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. WARREN. I ask the Senator from South Carolina if he will consent to the laying aside temporarily of the pending order, so that I may ask the Senate to bear with me a few moments until we finish the Army appropriation bill? I think it will take no more than five or ten minutes.

Mr. TILLMAN. I shall be very happy to accommodate the Senator; but before doing so I want to submit a couple of amendments of my own to the pending bill, and also to ask the privilege to submit, as coming from the Interstate Commerce Commission, some additional amendments, with explanations, not relating to the features we have been debating, and in one sense quarreling about, but to the administrative features. The amendments are to prevent contradictions and other phases of inconsistencies, to which the attention of the Commission has been directed. I asked them in my letter to point out anything of that sort which their experience would suggest. I ask that the batch of amendments and the explanations, together with the report of the Interstate Commerce Commission on one of the cases mentioned herein, just as I send it to the desk, be printed in document form, and that each of the amendments be printed in order.

Mr. CULLOM. How many are there?

Mr. TILLMAN. I do not know, but I think there are a dozen or two.

Mr. KEAN. Then I understand the Senator from South Carolina is not for the House bill unamended?

Mr. TILLMAN. I am for a good bill, Mr. President, an effective bill, and a just bill.

Mr. KEAN. Then that means the Senator from South Carolina is not for the House bill.

Mr. TILLMAN. I am not for it as it came from the House. I never have been, and have said so four or five times, I think.

Mr. KEAN. I am glad to know it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN]? The Chair hears none, and that order is made.

Mr. BACON. I beg to present an amendment to the pending rate bill, which I ask may be read and also printed. I desire it read because it is immediately preceding the time when we shall be called upon to act upon it, and I should like to have it in the RECORD, so that Senators may examine it.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator be satisfied to have it printed in the RECORD without reading?

Mr. BACON. Very well, I will ask to have it printed in the RECORD.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection the amendment intended to be proposed by the Senator from Georgia will be printed and lie on the table. It will also be printed in the RECORD.

The amendment referred to is as follows:

On page 11, line 5, after the word "prescribed," strike out all of said line down to and including the word "jurisdiction" at the end of line 9.

On page 14 strike out all of line 18 down to and including the word "effect" in line 2, page 15, and in lieu of the words stricken out on page 14 insert the following:

"That all orders of the Commission, except orders for the payment of money, shall take effect at the end of thirty days after notice thereof to the carriers directed to obey the same, and shall continue for such period of time, not exceeding two years, as shall be prescribed in the order of the Commission, unless sooner set aside by the Commission or suspended or set aside in a suit brought against the Commission in the circuit court of the United States sitting as a court of equity; and jurisdiction is hereby conferred on the circuit courts of the United States in any district where any carrier plaintiff has its principal office, to hear and determine in any such suit whether the order complained of was beyond the authority of the Commission conferred by this act or is in violation of the provisions of this act, or in violation of the rights of the carrier secured by the Constitution. And jurisdiction is further hereby conferred on the circuit courts of the United States, in any district wherein the plaintiff or plaintiffs reside, to hear and determine in any such suit whether the order complained of is in violation of the provisions of this act, or whether the rate authorized by the Commission to be charged by the carrier is unjustly discriminatory, or unduly preferential or prejudicial to the shippers, or allows to the carrier more than just compensation for the services to be rendered."

Mr. TILLMAN. I now ask that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, it is so ordered.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WARREN. I now ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Army appropriation bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 14397) making appropriation for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The first amendment which was passed over will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 15, line 6, after the word "rank," the Committee on Military Affairs reported an amendment, to insert the following proviso:

Provided further, That officers who served creditably during the civil war and who now hold the rank of brigadier-general on the active list of the Army, having previously held that rank for two years or more, shall, when retired from active service, have the rank and retired pay of major-general.

Mr. WARREN. I understand that the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN], who asked that that amendment lie over, does not now object to it.

Mr. KEAN. That is correct. Let it be agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Jersey withdraws his objection to the amendment. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The next amendment which was passed over will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The next amendment passed over was that proposed by Mr. BULKELEY on page 17, line 19, after the word "deposits," to insert:

As may not be repaid on June 30, 1906, as shown by the books of the Paymaster-General's Office, said sum to be transferred in the Treasury Department from pay of the Army to the credit of the deposit fund created by section 1305 of the Revised Statutes, as herein amended.

That sections 1305 and 1308 of the Revised Statutes of the United States are hereby amended, to take effect July 1, 1906, and to read as follows:

"SEC. 1305. Any enlisted man of the Army may deposit his savings, in sums not less than $5, with any Army paymaster, who shall furnish him a deposit book, in which shall be entered the name of the paymaster and of the soldier, and the amount, date, and place of such deposit. The amount so deposited shall be accounted for in the same manner as other public funds, and shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States and kept as a separate fund, known as 'Pay of the Army deposit fund,' repayment of which to the enlisted man on discharge from the service shall be made out of the fund created by said deposits, and shall not be subject to forfeiture by sentence of court-martial, but shall be forfeited by desertion, and shall not be permitted to be paid until final payment on discharge, or to the heirs or representatives of a deceased soldier, and that such deposits be exempt from liability for such soldier's debts: Provided, That the Government shall be liable for the amount deposited to the person so depositing the same.

"SEC. 1308. Clothing balances accumulating to the soldier's credit under section 1302 shall, when payable to him upon his discharge, be paid out of the appropriation for pay of the Army for the then current fiscal year."

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, that amendment was laid over at the request of the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON], who informed me to-day, before leaving the Chamber, that he withdrew his objection, and was in favor of the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BULKELEY].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. I desire to call attention, on page 36, to the amendment regarding Fort Sam Houston, Tex. I want to strike out one or two words from the amendment. There is tautology there which crept in during hurried consideration of this particular amendment yesterday. After the words "San Antonio, Tex.," I move to strike out the words "for use."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. The next passed-over amendment is one submitted by the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER], on page 84, after line 21, to insert the following:

The Secretary of War is authorized, in his discretion, to permit the Department of Agriculture to use, for the purpose of an experimental horse-breeding station, such portion of the Fort Keogh Military Reservation, in Montana, as may not, in his opinion, be required for military purposes.

Mr. WARREN. The committee have considered the amendment, and accept it.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. The next passed-over amendment is one proposed by the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER], on page 41, after line 18, to insert:

To erect a guardhouse at Fort Keogh, Mont., $11,000; to erect two double barracks at Fort Keogh, Mont., at $55,000 each, $110,000; in all, $121,000.

Mr. WARREN. I will ask the Senator from Montana if he will not withdraw that amendment? It properly belongs to another bill and ought not to be considered in connection with this bill.

Mr. CARTER. After conference with the chairman of the committee, the Senator from Wyoming, realizing that this amendment may with propriety be offered to the sundry civil appropriation bill, I withdraw it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Montana withdraws the amendment.

The SECRETARY. The next passed-over amendment is one offered by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] to add at the end of the bill the following:

To be expended under the supervision and direction of the Secretary of War in the improvement of the national boulevard owned by the United States, between Princess Anne street and the gate to the national cemetery, at Fredericksburg, Va., the sum of $30,000.

Mr. WARREN. The committee have considered the amendment and will accept it.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. The next passed-over amendment is one proposed by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], to insert, on page 15, after line 11, the following:

That upon written application to the Secretary of War, and subject to the conditions and requirements hereinafter contained, the name of each surviving major-general and brigadier-general of volunteers in the United States Volunteer Army of the civil war, and each surviving field officer of a volunteer regiment therein, who was at any time appointed and commissioned by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, as brigadier-general or major-general of volunteers, by brevet, on account of services rendered in said Army, shall be entered on a roll, to be known as the volunteer retired list. Each person so entered shall have served as an officer or an enlisted man not less than two and a half years in said Volunteer Army between April 15, 1861, and July 15, 1865, at least one year of which service shall have been in the field with troops; he shall have been honorably discharged from said service and shall have reached the age of 70 years; he shall not belong to the Regular Army and shall not have been retired; said application to be accompanied with proof of the identity of the applicant, and both the application and proof to be under oath: Provided, That an officer who lost an arm, leg, or both eyes by wounds in battle, if otherwise qualified, shall be entitled to retirement without reference to the length of his services in said Volunteer Army.

That each applicant whose name shall be entered upon said list shall be entered as of the highest rank held by him while serving in said Volunteer Army, and when so entered on said list he shall be paid, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, one-half pay, according to his actual rank, which pay shall be the same as that now received by retired officers of like rank in the Regular Army, and shall be paid in like manner; such pay to begin on the date of filing his said application with the Secretary of War and to continue during his natural life.

That each person who shall receive pay under this act shall thereby relinquish all his right and claim to pension from the United States after the date of filing said application, and any payment of such pension made to him covering a period subsequent to the filing of his said application shall be deducted from the amount due him on the first payment or payments under this act; and pay allowed by this act shall not be subject or liable to any attachment, levy, lien, or detention under any process whatever; and persons whose names are placed upon said list shall not constitute any part of the United States Army.

Mr. KEAN. I thought the Senator from Wyoming made the point of order on the amendment.

Mr. WARREN. I made the point of order, but withheld it so that the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] could address the Senate upon the amendment if he desired. I understand he does not so desire, and I make the point of order.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

Mr. WARREN. Pardon me. I did not observe that the Senator was in the Chamber.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, while I am very much interested in the amendment, and should be very glad to see it adopted, I concede the fact that the point of order is well taken, and that being the case, I do not feel warranted in taking up the time of the Senate to discuss the merits of the measure. It would be love's labor lost.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I wish to say that I am sorry the point of order does lie against the amendment, because I think the men who would receive the benefit of the amendment are men worthy of grateful recognition at the hands of the Government in the declining years of their life.

I merely wish to say, further, to the Senator from Minnesota that I would gladly sustain and help him in every way I could if the situation were different.

Mr. NELSON. I will add just one word more, and will not take up the time of the Senate further. There is a bill before the Committee on Military Affairs relating to the same matter. I sincerely trust that the committee will give it careful and favorable consideration. I think the old veterans are entitled to consideration. I trust the committee, although this amendment may go out on the point of order, will not regard the subject-matter as outlawed.

Mr. WARREN. Just a word, Mr. President. The subject is one that will have the friendly and sincere consideration of the committee. There is one feature of it I do not wish to go into to-night, and that is that the amendment includes only the higher grade of officers. A question comes up, in fact has been made by several with the committee, as to those who did not hold as high rank and who are equally deserving. However, the whole matter will be considered in due time by the committee, so I will not discuss it further now.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Chair understand the Senator from Minnesota to withdraw the amendment?

Mr. NELSON. Yes; I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. TELLER. I desire to submit an amendment to come in anywhere as an independent proposition.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Colorado submits an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of the bill the following:

That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to include within the provisions of the act of April 23, 1904, providing for increased grade on the retired list to certain officers of the Army with civil-war records, and as of the date of said act such officers with such civil-war records below the grade of brigadier-general as have heretofore been retired by reason of disability contracted in the line of duty under the provisions of the act of October 1, 1890, and also such officers with civil-war records below the grade of brigadier-general as have heretofore been retired under the provisions of section 1243 of the Revised Statutes.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I regret very much that this matter is yet before the Military Affairs Committee in such shape that the committee does not feel that the amendment ought to go on the pending bill. I am therefore compelled to make the point of order, but I will withhold it until the Senator from Colorado has had time to state the case.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, this is substantially an amendment offered at the last session of Congress, and it is to amend a bill passed at the former session of Congress. The Department construed it in a way so as to leave out some eighteen or twenty men who thought they were entitled to partake of the benefits of that act. At the last session of Congress, when I offered the amendment and made some few remarks on it, the acting chairman, the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR], said:

Mr. President, I sympathize with the amendment, but I hope the Senator from Colorado will not press it to a vote. He knows very well that I have worked in harmony with him to get the most liberal law passed for the benefit of these retired officers.

The act we got at the last session involved a great deal of labor in construction. For that reason the nominations did not come to us until the present session. The officers were seven months behind, the Comptroller ruling that they could not be paid until they had been confirmed.

The Committee on Military Affairs, immediately after the session began, hurried the Department to send in the list, and used all possible haste to get them confirmed.

I think there are imperfections in the law. I think there are certain classes of officers, not great in number, who ought to be included. I earnestly worked when that bill was before Congress to insert in it the most liberal terms, but it did not include all that I think ought to be included, and I do not think the Senator's amendment does.

Early in the session I called on the Judge-Advocate-General for a construction of that act, and he has submitted a very extensive report, which I will admit I have not had time to read, as I saw it was impossible to act on it. I should think there are 20 or 30 pages, perhaps more. I am sure the committee at the next session will take up this matter and consider the views of the Judge-Advocate-General, and try, as far as in their power lies, to bring in a measure that will correct a few odd cases.

I suppose the amendment is amenable to a point of order. I desire to say, however, that in my judgment there would be no necessity for the adoption of the amendment if the Department would construe the existing law as it ought to be construed and as some of the best lawyers in this country declare it should be construed. If the Senate was in a condition where I could present this matter properly and have a vote on it without embarrassing the Senate, I would certainly insist upon it. I wish to say to the Senator that I am going to watch out, and whenever an opportunity is presented in the future I propose to endeavor, if possible, to secure for these few officers what I think they are certainly entitled to.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, there is merit in some of these cases, and they are being very carefully considered. A majority of the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate as now constituted are new members, who were not members of that committee one year ago when the Senator from Colorado presented this matter—that is, seven new men have gone on to the committee at the present session. I can assure the Senator, without stating with exactness, what will be done next year; that the subject will surely be considered, and thoroughly, by the committee. One trouble is that Senators seem to differ as to the number that are entitled to the benefit of the proposed legislation and the number affected by the construction of the present law by the Department. We hope, however, by further inquiry at the Department, to find what its basis and opinion is, and to get further information as to individual cases, and we hope to be able eventually to prepare a measure that will please the Senator and others interested in the subject.

Mr. TELLER. I have no special interest in this matter. I happen to know a number of ex-soldiers who are cut out under the construction put upon the act by the Department. I do not believe the number can exceed eighteen or twenty, and that is the number the Senator from Vermont estimated last year. I do not believe it will exceed that number. But of course it does not make any particular difference how many there are. If it is an act of justice it ought to be done, even though it is a pretty late day to do it.

Mr. WARREN. I feel that I must make the point of order, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair sustains the point of order, as the proposed amendment is clearly against the rule.

Mr. WARREN. That completes the committee amendments and all others so far offered, Mr. President.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

HEARINGS BEFORE COMMITTEE ON INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

Mr. PENROSE. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. KEAN. Will the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to me for a moment?

Mr. PENROSE. I yield to the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. KEAN. I am directed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by myself on yesterday, to report it with amendments, and I ask for its present consideration.

The Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

The amendments of the committee were, in line 5, after the word "committee," to insert "or its subcommittees;" in the same line, before the word "hearings," to strike out "the" and insert "such;" in the same line, before the word "printed," to strike out "and bills;" in line 6, before the word "and," to strike out "for the use of the committee" and insert "for its use;" and in line 7, after the word "paid," to strike out "out of" and insert "from;" so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That the Committee on Interstate Commerce be, and the same is hereby, authorized to employ a stenographer from time to time, as may be necessary, to report such hearings as may be had on bills or other matters pending before said committee or its subcommittees and to have such hearings printed for its use, and that such stenographer be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

The amendments were agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

LANDS IN MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 15435) to empower the Secretary of War to convey to the city of Minneapolis certain lands in exchange for other lands to be used for flowage purposes, to report it favorably without amendment.

Mr. NELSON. I ask that the bill may be considered at the present time. It is a local bill relating to a dam in the Mississippi River at Minneapolis.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AGRICULTURAL LANDS WITHIN FOREST RESERVES.

Mr. CARTER. I ask the Senator from Pennsylvania to yield to me for a moment.

Mr. PENROSE. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. CARTER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 17576) to provide for the entry of agricultural lands within forest reserves.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Montana asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill, which will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. TILLMAN. It seems to me that this is rather an important bill and needs some explanation. It is so late that I hope the Senator from Montana will not press it.

Mr. WARREN. I hope the Senator from South Carolina will let the bill go through. It has been carefully considered in the House. It merely provides that if within a forest reserve there has been included some agricultural ground the Department can open it to entry. It is entirely with the Department.

Mr. CARTER. A similar bill has twice been reported by the committee.

Mr. TILLMAN. All right.

Mr. FULTON. This is a bill, I am sorry to say, to which the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN] especially requested me to call attention in case it came up, as he wishes to be heard on it. Personally I do not wish to make an objection.

Mr. CARTER. The particular part of the Senate bill to which the Senator from Idaho objected was comprised in the words "in his discretion" as applied to the Secretary. In the House bill those words do not occur.

Mr. FULTON. I simply make the statement to the Senator. If he is satisfied that this bill will not be objectionable to the Senator from Idaho, of course I will not insist upon objecting.

Mr. CARTER. The feature of the bill to which he called special attention has been eliminated from this bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with an amendment, in line 6, page 1, after the words "forest reserves," to strike out "except in the State of California."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

TOWING OF LOG RAFTS.

Mr. PILES. Mr. President——

Mr. TILLMAN. I shall have to move that the Senate adjourn. It is very late.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Such a motion was made by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], but was withheld.

Mr. PENROSE. I made the motion, and I am willing to yield to the Senator from Washington, unless there be objection.

Mr. PILES. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 5372) to prevent dangers to navigation from rafts of logs or timbers on coast waters of the United States. It can not affect anyone seriously. The Senator from California asked for an opportunity to look into the bill, and he has looked into it and has withdrawn all objection.

Mr. TILLMAN. I withdraw my objection.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to prescribe rules and regulations governing the dimensions, the methods of binding together, and the floating or towing by steam or other power of any raft or rafts composed of logs, piles, timber, or lumber on the coast waters and connecting waters under the jurisdiction of the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ROE REISINGER.

Mr. FORAKER. I ask for the present consideration of the joint resolution (S. R. 13) authorizing the Secretary of War to award the Congressional medal of honor to Roe Reisinger.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. PENROSE. Certainly.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

Mr. WARREN. From what committee was the joint resolution reported?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. KEAN. The Committee on Military Affairs, by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER].

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PENROSE. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 53 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, May 4, 1906, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, May 3, 1906.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

EXPENDITURES IN AGRICULTURAL DEPARTMENT.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas no examination of the expenditures in the Department of Agriculture has been made by the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Agriculture for a number of years and such an examination is now necessary in the interest of the public service; and

Whereas said examination can not be had by said committee unless authority therefor is conferred upon said committee: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Agriculture is hereby authorized to examine, so far as the Department of Agriculture is concerned, all of the matters referred to in paragraph 42 of Rule XI of the House of Representatives, and for that purpose it may send for persons, papers, and said committee is authorized to employ a competent stenographer while conducting said examination, and to sit during the sessions of the House, and to report the result of its examination with any recommendations to the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I desire to say that this is a very important matter——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Maine yield to the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Yes; I yield to the gentleman if he rises for the purpose of making an inquiry. Does the gentleman rise for the purpose of inquiring the purpose of the resolution?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I rise for the purpose of reserving the right to object, and in the interim making a statement. Does the gentleman yield to me or not?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Oh, yes; I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Very well; I want to say that this is a very important matter, but it is not half so important as giving school facilities and school rights to the people of the Indian Territory by the admission of the State of Oklahoma.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I object to any such statement.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And I therefore object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard, and the statement is made.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But the gentleman yielded to me to make the statement.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not criticising the gentleman. He is merely announcing the facts.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Do I understand the gentleman objects?

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And for the reasons stated by the gentleman.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I do not care what the reasons are. If the gentleman wants to stop this investigation, he can.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And the gentleman from Mississippi does not care whether the gentleman from Maine cares or not.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. So the honors are even.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the naval appropriation bill, and, Mr. Speaker, pending that motion, I desire to ask my colleague on the committee [Mr. MEYER] if he has any suggestion to make as to limiting time for general debate?

Mr. MEYER. Mr. Speaker, I would suggest, if agreeable to my colleague, that we let general debate run on during the day without limiting the time for general debate beyond that. I think after to-morrow morning, if it is deemed expedient, we can then fix a limit for general debate. I would further suggest that the debate to-day should be apportioned, one-half to the gentleman from Illinois and the other half to myself.

Mr. FOSS. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that general debate go on to-day without fixing any limit.

Mr. WILLIAMS. No unanimous consent is necessary for that, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. That is correct.

Mr. FOSS. And that the time be divided equally between the two sides, one-half to be controlled by the gentleman from Louisiana and the other half by myself.

Mr. WILLIAMS. No unanimous consent is necessary for that.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that the time to be controlled by the gentleman from Illinois and the gentleman from Louisiana would require unanimous consent; otherwise the Chairman presiding over the Committee of the Whole would give recognition and also an equal division. Is there objection?

Mr. WILLIAMS. That being the usual course, I have no objection to that.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection to the request for the division of time to be controlled by the gentleman from Illinois and the gentleman from Louisiana, half and half. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. WILLIAMS) there were—ayes 98, noes 27.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman makes the point that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is not a quorum present. The doors will be closed, the Sergeant-at-Arms will bring in the absentees, and the yeas and nays will be called. Those in favor of the motion of the gentleman from Illinois will vote "aye," those opposed will vote "no," and those present and not voting will vote "present." The Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Is there any way by which this roll call will show the gentlemen who are present at this time?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Regular order!

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that that is hardly a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. I wanted it to appear in the RECORD; that is all.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 217, nays 0, answered "present" 10, not voting 154, as follows:

YEAS—217.

Adams, Pa.	Fassett	Lamb	Richardson, Ala.
Adamson	Field	Landis, Chas. B.	Richardson, Ky.
Aiken	Finley	Landis, Frederick	Rives
Allen, Me.	Fitzgerald	Lawrence	Rixey
Bartlett	Flack	Lester	Roberts
Bates	Fletcher	Lever	Robinson, Ark.
Beall, Tex.	Flood	Lewis	Rodenberg
Bell, Ga.	Floyd	Lilley, Conn.	Rucker
Bennett, Ky.	Foss	Lindsay	Russell
Birdsall	Foster, Vt.	Littauer	Samuel
Bishop	Fulkerson	Little	Schneebell
Blackburn	Gaines, Tenn.	Littlefield	Shackleford
Bonynge	Gaines, W. Va.	Livingston	Shartel
Boutell	Garner	Lloyd	Sims
Bowersock	Garrett	McCall	Slayden
Brick	Gilbert, Ind.	McCarthy	Smith, Cal.
Broocks, Tex.	Gillespie	McCreary, Pa.	Smith, Iowa
Brooks, Colo.	Gillett, Cal.	McGavin	Smith, Md.
Brown	Glass	McKinney	Smith, Samuel W.
Brownlow	Goldfogle	McLachlan	Smith, Pa.
Burgess	Graff	McLain	Smith, Tex.
Burke, Pa.	Graham	McMorran	Smyser
Burnett	Granger	McNary	Snapp
Burton, Del.	Greene	Macon	Southall
Burton, Ohio	Gregg	Madden	Southwick
Butler, Pa.	Gronna	Mahon	Sperry
Byrd	Hamilton	Mann	Spight
Calder	Hardwick	Marshall	Stafford
Calderhead	Hay	Maynard	Stephens, Tex.
Candler	Hayes	Meyer	Sullivan, Mass.
Capron	Heflin	Minor	Sulloway
Cassel	Henry, Conn.	Mondell	Sulzer
Chaney	Henry, Tex.	Moon, Pa.	Tawney
Chapman	Hepburn	Moon, Tenn.	Taylor, Ala.
Clark, Fla.	Hermann	Mouser	Taylor, Ohio
Clark, Mo.	Hinshaw	Mudd	Thomas, N. C.
Cocks	Holliday	Murdock	Tirrell
Cole	Howell, N. J.	Murphy	Townsend
Cooper, Pa.	Howell, Utah	Needham	Underwood
Cousins	Hubbard	Norris	Volstead
Currier	Hull	Olcott	Vreeland
Curtis	Humphrey, Wash.	Olmsted	Wachter
Cushman	Humphreys, Miss.	Overstreet	Waldo
Davis, Minn.	James	Page	Wanger
Dawes	Johnson	Palmer	Webb
Dawson	Jones, Wash.	Parker	Weems
De Armond	Keifer	Payne	Welborn
Dickson, Ill.	Kelliher	Perkins	Williams
Dixon, Ind.	Kennedy, Nebr.	Pollard	Wilson
Dixon, Mont.	Kitchin, Claude	Prince	Wood, N. J.
Draper	Kitchin, Wm. W.	Pujo	Woodyard
Dresser	Klepper	Randell, Tex.	Young
Driscoll	Kline	Reeder
Dunwell	Knowland	Reid
Esch	Lacey	Rhinock

ANSWERED "PRESENT"—10.

Ames	Crumpacker	Goulden	Hopkins
Beidler	Davidson	Hill, Miss.
Cooper, Wis.	Gardner, Mich.	Hoar

NOT VOTING—154.

Acheson	Edwards	Knopf	Scott
Adams, Wis.	Ellerbe	Lafean	Scroggy
Alexander	Ellis	Lamar	Sheppard
Allen, N. J.	Fordney	Law	Sherley
Andrus	Foster, Ind.	Lee	Sherman
Babcock	Fowler	Le Fevre	Sibley
Bankhead	French	Legare	Slemp
Bannon	Fuller	Lilley, Pa.	Small
Barchfeld	Garber	Longworth	Smith, Ill.
Bartholdt	Gardner, Mass.	Lorimer	Smith, Ky.
Bede	Gardner, N. J.	Loud	Smith, Wm. Alden
Bennet, N. Y.	Gilbert, Ky.	Loudenslager	Southard
Bingham	Gill	Lovering	Sparkman
Bowers	Gillett, Mass.	McCleary, Minn.	Stanley
Bowie	Goebel	McDermott	Steenerson
Bradley	Griggs	McKinlay, Cal.	Sterling
Brantley	Grosvenor	McKinley, Ill.	Stevens, Minn.
Broussard	Gudger	Martin	Sullivan, N. Y.
Brundidge	Hale	Michalek	Talbott
Buckman	Haskins	Miller	Thomas, Ohio
Burke, S. Dak.	Haugen	Moore	Towne
Burleigh	Hearst	Morrell	Trimble
Burleson	Hedge	Nevin	Tyndall
Butler, Tenn.	Higgins	Otjen	Van Duzer
Campbell, Kans.	Hill, Conn.	Padgett	Van Winkle
Campbell, Ohio	Hitt	Parsons	Wadsworth
Clayton	Hogg	Patterson, N. C.	Wallace
Cockran	Houston	Patterson, S. C.	Watkins
Conner	Howard	Patterson, Tenn.	Watson
Cromer	Huff	Pearre	Webber
Dale	Hughes	Pou	Weeks
Dalzell	Hunt	Powers	Weisse
Darragh	Jenkins	Rainey	Wharton
Davey, La.	Jones, Va.	Ransdell, La.	Wiley, Ala.
Davis, W. Va.	Kahn	Reynolds	Wiley, N. J.
Deemer	Kennedy, Ohio	Rhodes	Wood, Mo.
Denby	Ketcham	Robertson, La.	Zenor
Dovener	Kinkaid	Ruppert
Dwight	Knapp	Ryan

A quorum present.

So the motion was agreed to.

The Chair announced the following pairs:

For the session:

Mr. SHERMAN with Mr. RUPPERT.

Mr. BRADLEY with Mr. GOULDEN.

Until further notice:

Mr. KENNEDY of Ohio with Mr. HOUSTON.

Mr. DOVENER with Mr. SPARKMAN.

Mr. HITT with Mr. LEGARE.

Mr. CROMER with Mr. VAN DUZER.

Mr. JENKINS with Mr. SMITH of Kentucky.

Mr. OTJEN with Mr. PADGETT.

Mr. MANN with Mr. HOWARD.

Mr. WATSON with Mr. SHERLEY.

Mr. MORRELL with Mr. SULLIVAN of New York.

Mr. CRUMPACKER with Mr. ZENOR.

Mr. NEVIN with Mr. FIELD.

Mr. LILLEY of Pennsylvania with Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky.

Mr. DALE with Mr. BOWIE.

Mr. DAVIDSON with Mr. LEE.

Mr. SOUTHARD with Mr. PATTERSON of South Carolina.

For the vote:

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts with Mr. GUDGER.

Mr. HEDGE with Mr. HUNT.

Mr. DALZELL with Mr. GRIGGS.

Mr. ALEXANDER with Mr. CLAYTON.

For the day:

Mr. WEEKS with Mr. STANLEY.

Mr. KETCHAM with Mr. BURLESON.

Mr. HUFF with Mr. GILL.

Mr. HALE with Mr. ELLERBE.

Mr. FRENCH with Mr. BUTLER of Tennessee.

Mr. DWIGHT with Mr. BRUNDIDGE.

Mr. BURLEIGH with Mr. BROUSSARD.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota with Mr. BRANTLEY.

Mr. BUCKMAN with Mr. BOWERS.

Mr. BENNET of New York with Mr. WOOD of Missouri.

Mr. BARTHOLDT with Mr. BANKHEAD.

Mr. BARCHFELD with Mr. WILEY of Alabama.

Mr. BANNON with Mr. WEISSE.

Mr. ANDRUS with Mr. WATKINS.

Mr. WILEY of New Jersey with Mr. WALLACE.

Mr. VAN WINKLE with Mr. TRIMBLE.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota with Mr. TOWNE.

Mr. STERLING with Mr. SMALL.

Mr. SIBLEY with Mr. RYAN.

Mr. MILLER with Mr. RAINEY.

Mr. MCKINLEY of Illinois with Mr. POU.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER with Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee.

Mr. LONGWORTH with Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana.

Mr. LE FEVRE with Mr. MOORE.

Mr. KNAPP with Mr. LAMAR.

Mr. MCCLEARY of Minnesota with Mr. DAVIS of West Virginia.

Mr. BEDE with Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana.
Mr. ADAMS of Wisconsin with Mr. PATTERSON of North Carolina.
Mr. BINGHAM with Mr. HEARST.
Mr. BABCOCK with Mr. COCKRAN.
Mr. BUCKMAN with Mr. BUTLER of Tennessee.
Mr. DENBY with Mr. MCDERMOTT.
Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas with Mr. DAVEY of Louisiana.
Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH with Mr. SHEPPARD.
Mr. PEARRE with Mr. JONES of Virginia.
Mr. KAHN with Mr. GARBER.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, I inadvertently voted "aye," and I am paired. I desire to vote "present."

Thereupon the clerk called Mr. CRUMPACKER's name, and he voted "present," as above recorded.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 18750) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907, and for other purposes, with Mr. CRUMPACKER in the chair.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the request of the gentleman from Illinois will be granted.

There was no objection.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I have tried to make an exhaustive report on the different items in this bill, but there are a few corrections which I desire to make in that report, and which in the reprint of it will be made. For instance, in the first table, "Pay of the Navy," the appropriation for last year reads "twenty millions of dollars." The appropriation was "seventeen million five hundred thousand dollars," and a reappropriation of two and a half million dollars, making in all the twenty millions.

Then under the appropriation for public works, "Bureau of Medicine and Surgery," for 1906, it should read "twenty thousand" instead of "forty thousand." The appropriation for equipment should read $845,000 instead of $945,000; so that the amount which the appropriation bill of last year carried was $100,336,679.94, and the reappropriation in addition thereto of $2,500,000. Now, Mr. Chairman, this bill which is now before the committee carries $99,734,215.77, a very material reduction from the naval appropriation bill of last year. I wish to say that the Committee on Naval Affairs had very exhaustive hearings this year. We went into the subject more carefully than ever before; and I desire here and now to express my appreciation of the hearty cooperation I received from members of the committee in getting up this appropriation bill.

The estimates submitted to us by the Department amounted, in all, to $121,569,718. This bill makes a deduction from that amount of $21,831,000. If it be a virtue for the legislative branch of the Government to reduce estimates furnished by an executive branch, then I am sure that the Committee on Naval Affairs is entitled to some credit, because, probably, taking all the appropriation bills together, there will not be shown a greater reduction from all estimates than has been made by the Committee on Naval Affairs upon this one bill during this session of Congress.

Mr. Chairman, I said a few minutes ago that we cut the estimates to the amount of $22,000,000; and that being so, we do not feel that we have sacrificed in any way the efficiency of our service during the coming fiscal year. These reductions from the estimate have been made from a comparatively few items.

First is the pay of the Navy. There was a reduction of $3,000,000. The Department recommended that we allow 3,000 additional men this year. Our present quota is 37,000; but in our hearings it developed that the Department had not been able to enlist to the full number, but were in fact 5,500 short on the 8th of January; and judging from past experience they would not be able to get more than the full quota during the coming year, the committee came to the conclusion that the present quota should stand for the coming year; and also that the appropriation for the pay for the Navy should be the same as that of last year. This made a reduction, as I have said, from the estimate of nearly $3,000,000.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I would like to inquire right there if the gentleman is advised of the practical difficulties that have been met with in not being able to secure the recruits in accordance with the requirements of the service?

Mr. FOSS. I will speak of that a little later, if the gentleman will excuse me. I will reach that in a few moments.

Now, the next important item from which we made a great reduction from the estimates is that of yards and docks. The estimate submitted by the Department amounts to $9,000,000; and we reduced this by $6,200,000, leaving an appropriation of about $3,000,000 for yards, stations, and docks for the coming year. We went carefully over the whole subject during our hearings, and we came to the conclusion that that would be a sufficient amount to appropriate to keep our yards in their present state of efficiency this coming year.

Then the next item was that of reserves. The Department was anxious for large appropriations for reserve guns, ammunition, and powder. The committee, however, after carefully considering that, made a reduction from their estimates of $9,000,000. The subject of reserves is a matter of policy largely—whether we shall pile up our reserves in large amounts during a single year or two or whether we shall extend them over a number of years. The committee thought it would be unwise to make this large appropriation for reserves this year, but have given the substantial appropriation of a million and a half for reserve ammunition, guns, etc., which is as much as we believe the Department can economically expend and use during the coming year.

Then the Marine Corps asked for an increase in the number of officers. The committee did not see fit to allow that this year.

From these items that I have mentioned have come the reductions from the estimates down to the amount which we recommend to appropriate this year—$99,724,000.

Upon all the items of general maintenance, such as maintenance of the different bureaus of the Department, the committee have been liberal and have granted practically what the Department has asked for, so that there need be no deficiency, in the judgment of the committee, for the general maintenance of our Navy up to its high standard of efficiency.

Now, just a word upon the personnel of the Navy. The present quota allowed by law to-day is 34,000 men and 2,500 apprentices; in all 37,000 men. On the 8th of January last the number in the service was 31,457, showing a shortage from the quota allowed of 5,443. We could enlist enough men to fill up that quota to-day if we wanted to. Last year there were 41,000 applications for enlistment, but the Navy Department is trying to secure the very best men, and therefore they have gradually raised the standard of enlistment or entrance to the Navy higher than ever before. They are seeking to secure the best men, and, for instance, rejected last year nearly 15,000 for physical disability and 13,600 for other causes.

That is to say, of the 41,000 men who applied for enlistment in the American Navy, 28,000 of them were rejected. The total number enlisted last year was 11,719.

Now, there is another thing which the Navy Department is seeking to do, and that is, as far as possible, to weed out the foreigners in the Navy. A number of years ago our Navy was composed in large part of a foreign element.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Unnaturalized?

Mr. FOSS. Yes; unnaturalized. But we are now Americanizing the Navy, so to speak. Ninety-five per cent of the petty officers of our Navy to-day are citizens of the United States and 90 per cent of the enlisted men are citizens of the United States. So that of the total enlisted force, nearly 92 per cent, or, to be accurate, 91.8 per cent, are citizens of the United States. Practically the only foreigners that we now have in the Navy are the Japanese and Chinese servants and the bandsmen.

Now, the gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD] spoke a moment ago about desertions. Last year we had 3,227 desertions.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Will the gentleman explain the difficulties which are met with in enlisting the men?

Mr. FOSS. The real difficulty in the matter of enlistment to-day, I think, is due to the fact that the times are prosperous and the demand for labor is great, and the rewards of labor are greater in civil life than they are in military life.

Mr. KEIFER. I should like to ask the gentleman whether there is not another reason, which exists in the severity of the rule in the Department in accepting men? Formerly they took people who were not always sober men, and all that, but under the present rule men must have a good character and good habits.

Mr. FOSS. I think that is undoubtedly true. They have raised the standard, as I mentioned a moment ago. Really the best men that we are getting to-day are coming from the Middle West, from the farms of the West, and in my conversation with our naval authorities they say that they are getting bright, intelligent farmer boys, who are coming into the Navy full of a spirit of energy and vitality, and they are really making better seamen than any men whom they have secured heretofore.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Will the gentleman state the standard required by the Department?

Mr. FOSS. I haven't it here, but I can get it for the gentleman.

Now, as I say, we had 3,227 desertions from the Navy last year. That is a better record than the year before, when our desertions were 4,488.

Desertions are due to a number of causes. They are due to the restless spirit of American youth—that is one reason—and, second, they are due to the hardships of life at sea. A great many men enter the Navy thinking it is largely a life of romance, but when they get in there and find there is hard work to be done, then they want to get out. Then desertions are due largely, too, to the fact that men do not distinguish beween an oath they take to serve the Government and a contract which they make in civil life, and when men get tired of the naval service they simply quit and go home, or go somewhere else, the same as they do, for instance, when they have entered into a contract of employment with any civilian.

Now, upon this subject of the enlisted men I desire to read from the report of the Chief of the Bureau of Navigation, Admiral Converse, who, in my judgment, is one of the brainiest officers we have to-day in the service of the United States Navy. In speaking of this subject he says:

> In no other military or naval organization in the world are the interests and welfare of the enlisted personnel so closely guarded, their remuneration so great, their conditions of life on board ship so closely studied with a view to lessening the natural hardships of life as in our Navy; and until public sentiment is set right and a larger percentage of men enlisted who have a true sense of their obligation to their oath no appreciable decrease in the percentage of desertions may be looked for.

Now, so much for the personnel.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOSS. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman in discussing this question of desertions has not referred to one other cause that for some reason is always omitted in the discussion of this matter. And I call his attention to the fact that the Secretary of the Navy in his report says:

> Desertion is, in my opinion, due substantially to two causes—either bad men or bad officers.

Now, I would like to have the chairman of the committee state the action on the part of the officers of the Navy that caused large desertions from these ships and why no attempt has ever been made to correct the abuses that occur in that connection.

Mr. FOSS. I will say to the gentleman that I do not care to enter on that line of thought at this time. Later on in the discussion of the bill, if the gentleman desires, I will answer his question.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I wish to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that there is no time when this will be more pertinent, because the gentleman has just given a statement of the reasons of desertion from the Navy, and it is a notorious fact among people who are in close touch with the conduct of the Navy that in some instances large desertions are caused from certain ships, because of the intolerable conduct of some officers on those ships, and in my opinion we should consider that question just as fearlessly as we should consider other questions.

Mr. FOSS. There may be a few instances of that character, but I think, as a general rule, it is not prevalent throughout the American Navy.

Now, I want to say a word about the matériel of the Navy. As you will see from the report I have prepared, we are building a large number of ships at the present time. Most of those ships will be put in commission during the coming year. For a number of years there has been considerable congestion in the construction of our ships due, primarily, to delays in securing material and also to delays resulting from strikes.

Take, for instance, the Nebraska. There is a ship that was authorized some six years ago, and yet she has barely reached the final stages of completion on account of the labor occurrences which happened out in Seattle.

So, also, with some of our ships at other yards; and so, while it may appear in this report that we are building a large number of ships at the present time, we want to take into consideration the fact that many of these ships are at least two years behind the contract time. During the coming year most of our construction will be wiped out, and there will be comparatively few ships on the stocks.

Now, very often I have been asked questions with reference to the maintenance of the Navy, How much does it cost to maintain the Navy? Last year in my report I put in a table showing how much the maintenance of each type of ship cost. For instance, a battle ship costs about $500,000 a year to maintain. Then the armored cruiser and the other different types of ships I also mentioned in that statement. If you take, for instance, our naval appropriation bill of last year, which carried money appropriation appropriated and reappropriated of $103,000,000, you will find that about forty-three millions of that went to new construction, and that that left $60,000,000 which went to the maintenance of the Navy last year.

In that $60,000,000 it should be taken into consideration also that the development and improvement of the navy-yards was included, as well as the maintenance of the Marine Corps. But of the bill last year, $60,000,000, and no more, could be considered as the cost of maintenance of our Navy.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOSS. With pleasure.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. While the gentleman is on this point, I would inquire whether the committee has made any estimate as to what the expense will be annually when the naval programme now indicated is completed and the ships are all finished? What will be the annual charge, approximately, at that time?

Mr. FOSS. I have a statement which was made by the Secretary of the Navy last year—which I think went into the RECORD, but I am not sure about it—which shows the estimated annual cost of maintaining the naval establishment upon completion of the vessels now under consideration at $76,591,000.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. That would not include the ships authorized by this bill, which would make some addition thereto.

Mr. FOSS. It would make some addition thereto.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. The ships authorized in the pending bill?

Mr. FOSS. Yes.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FOSS. Certainly.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. In the $60,000,000 which the gentleman mentioned for maintenance is there included construction in navy-yards? In other words, does the $43,000,000 for new construction refer exclusively to ships of war and colliers?

Mr. FOSS. It refers exclusively to new ships and to payments on contracts already entered into.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. The gentleman's question was, Does it include the ships now being constructed in the navy-yards as well, or are those included in the sixty millions? There are some under construction in the navy-yards, are there not?

Mr. FOSS. Yes; it includes those.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. I understand the estimate which the gentleman has, which he furnished in answer to the inquiry of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD], includes all the ships provided for in all the bills immediately preceding this bill?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. About seventy-five millions of dollars a year will maintain our Navy, personnel and matériel in the navy-yards.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. The whole Department?

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. And this will add about a million dollars?

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. I was so informed; about a million dollars a year.

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. Does that include new construction from year to year to keep up the Navy?

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. I would refer the gentleman to the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foss].

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I will put this in my remarks to-day, so that everyone can see it and see what it covers.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. While the gentleman is on the element of construction of naval vessels in the navy-yards, I notice in the report an item relating to the battle ship Connecticut where there is recommended an increased limit of cost, up to $4,600,000, being an increase of $380,000 over the limit of cost provided, made necessary by the increase of cost of construction in the navy-yards.

Mr. FOSS. Yes.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Has there been such experience so that we can now tell whether the Government can build in its navy-yards as cheaply as it can by outside construction, and if not, what the difference is?

Mr. FOSS. We have to-day a test which is going on between two battle ships. For instance, the Connecticut is being built in the navy-yard in New York, and the Louisiana is being built at Newport News. The chief constructor tells us that he will be unable to furnish us accurate figures until both ships are completed, but he states that the cost of the Connecticut will be greater than that of the Louisiana. That is, the Government ship will cost more than that constructed by private parties.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. But is not able now to give the percentage.

Mr. FOSS. No; and he recommends this year that there be an increase in the limit of cost of nearly $400,000 on the Connecticut, and the committee recommends that, and has inserted a provision to that end in this bill. I may say in that connection, that upon all the ships which are to-day being built by the Government the battle ship Connecticut and the two training vessels and the colliers which have not yet been started we recommend an increase in the limit of cost.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. What is the occasion of that?

Mr. FOSS. Due to the increased cost of Government construction.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Does that involve increased cost of material largely or increased cost of general operation of the yards other than was anticipated when the original estimates were made?

Mr. FOSS. No; we expected—the constructor expected—that it would cost more to build originally.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. And it is partly on account of the fact that experience has demonstrated the accuracy of the expectations.

Mr. FOSS. Yes.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. Chairman, is it not a fact that in the case of the two colliers for which an additional amount is asked that the increased cost has been largely due to the fact that since the original estimates were made the plans have been changed?

Mr. FOSS. That may be true to some extent, but I don't think entirely.

Mr. KNOWLAND. At the proper time, Mr. Chairman, I shall go into this entire question and show that the additional cost has not been due in the case of the battle ship and also the two colliers to the fact of their being built in the navy-yards.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FOSS. Yes; for a question.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I wish to inquire whether the chief constructor, when he asked for additional money for the Connecticut, made a detailed statement of the objects for which it was necessary?

Mr. FOSS. He did not.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is there any way that the gentleman knows of by which any Member of the House can obtain such information?

Mr. FOSS. Only by calling upon the constructor.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I understand that a Member of this House has done so and he has been unable to obtain that information; and the constructor has asked for an increase in cost of about 10 per cent at a time when the ship was more than 97 per cent completed. Some Members of the House would like to know why, with only 2½ per cent of the ship to be finished, more than 10 per cent of the original cost is asked.

Mr. FOSS. He can get that information, I think, from the chief constructor.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there is one thing I overlooked. I want to speak about the target practice in our Navy. It is important to have ships and, of course, it is important to have men, but it is still more important that the men in the Navy should be able to shoot straight, and I shall put in my remarks a statement as to the great improvement which we have been making during the last few years in target practice. I shall not read it, but I may say that we are indebted to Commander Sims for this improvement as much as to any one officer in the American Navy.

An examination of the records which have been made in great-gun shooting during the past three years shows a continuous and rapid improvement in the scores; and that this improvement has been genuine is indicated by the fact that the regulations under which all vessels have fired were practically uniform throughout this period, except for this year when, though the requirements were even more stringent, the scores made were higher than ever before.

The criterion in target practice is the number of actual hits made by a gun in a minute. The target is a canvass screen 12 feet high by 21 feet long, and no shot is counted a hit unless it pierces the canvas.

Each year it has been thought that certain guns had attained the limit in hits per minute that were possible with that type, but each year we have been gratified to see new records established with nearly every type of gun. This increase in hitting ability is due to the assiduous training and the target practices which have been carried out under the new system during this period, and also to improvements in ordnance.

Going back to 1898, when the Navy was using black powder, and when sights and other parts of the mechanism were poorly developed, our firing was both slow and inaccurate. At that time it was considered satisfactory if a 12-inch gun fired once in five minutes, a 6-inch gun in from 1½ minutes to 40 seconds, depending on the type, and other guns in proportion. In those days the target was 100 feet long by 25 feet high, and the percentage of hits was very small. With each subsequent improvement in ordnance the rapidity of hitting was somewhat increased, but it was only by carrying out systematic training and target practices that the present efficiency has been attained. For example, the heavy turret guns that were but a few years ago allowed 5 minutes in which to fire a shot have recently fired 3 shots and made 3 hits in one minute, while the 6-inch guns that were formerly allowed 40 seconds per shot have recently fired at the rate of 13 shots and 11.5 hits per minute. Eight-inch guns that were formerly allowed two minutes per shot have since attained a rapidity of 3.6 shots and 3.6 hits per minute. Five-inch guns which formerly fired two or three shots per minute have made 13 hits in that time, and 3-inch guns recently attained a record of 15 shots and 14 hits per minute. Six-pounders, which formerly were expected to fire five shots per minute have recently fired 25 shots and made 22 hits in a minute, firing at a target 8 feet high by 21 feet long. While it is thus shown that the most important guns—12-inch and 13-inch—now fire 15 times as rapidly as they formerly did, it must be remembered that at the same time the accuracy has improved to about an equal degree, for a high score in hits per minute can be made only when practically all shots that are fired make hits. Many ships now average between 75 and 90 per cent of hits with all their main-battery guns, whereas in former days the percentage of hits was rarely over 40, even though firing slowly at a target more than seven times as large as the present one.

Though the scores which are given above are the best that have been made with the respective calibers, they indicate the possibilities of these guns in the hands of men and officers who have been trained under the present system, and also what we may expect any man to accomplish who has had this training and has had the indispensable experience afforded by a number of target practices. It follows that with a changing enlisted personnel, which necessitates the continuous training of new pointers and new crews, these target practices must be continued if we are to maintain our present efficiency, not to mention increasing it.

The great increase in accuracy and rapidity means not only that we will be able to hit the enemy much more frequently in a given time, but that we will waste vastly less ammunition in action, for it has been found that under the present system increase of rapidity and increase of accuracy go hand in hand, and with the limited number of rounds which can be carried on a modern man-of-war this is of great importance. All of the advantages incident to this improvement have resulted from the systematic target practices (two practices each year), the improvements in ordnance, and the conscientious efforts which have been devoted to the training of the enlisted personnel, said training being based both on subcaliber firing and upon actual full-charge firing, the latter having been increased by a small percentage only.

Though it may be suggested that target practice could be held with reduced charges, it must be remembered that inasmuch as full charges must be fired in action, and inasmuch as the behavior and resistance of the gun, the gun mechanism, etc., is greatly affected by the force of recoil, it has been found that firing reduced charges creates a false sense of security and confidence in the weapons, and actually trains men under different conditions from those which will exist in battle. For this reason the Navy has for the past three years definitely abandoned the use of reduced charges. It is interesting to note that the leading foreign navies, though they have heretofore used reduced charges, have recently followed the custom of this Navy in using full charges for all target practice.

So various are the methods of target practice in different navies that it is difficult accurately to compare our results with those attained abroad; but it may be confidently stated, however, that the new methods of gunnery training which have been applied during the past three years have increased the hitting ability of our ships at least twentyfold, or 2,000 per cent, taking the average of all large guns, and it is believed that under target-practice conditions both our average scores and our best scores exceed those of any other nation.

In preparing the gunnery personnel of a ship for battle, experience has shown that two distinct stages of training are necessary. The first stage in gunnery training demands great skill on the part of gun crews to load rapidly and on the part of pointers to aim accurately and quickly, and this can not be achieved without firing the guns at target practice. The next stage demands skill on the part of those officers whose duty it will be to control the fire of the guns in battle, and similarly this can be accomplished only by holding special target practices under conditions resembling as nearly as possible those of battle. Each of these stages involve the expenditure of two separate amounts of ammunition, one for training the gun crews and one for training the all-important fire-control officers; and in order that at the critical time when our ships go into battle we may have both officers and gun crews who are thoroughly trained in their duties this expenditure is absolutely necessary.

Much can be and is done by the use of mechanical targets, loading machines, and subcaliber apparatus. In fact, the training of gun pointers and gun crews is accomplished almost exclusively by these means, but it is only by shooting the guns rapidly with full charges that we are able to train and classify our gun pointers, give our gun crews the experience of actual firing, learn and remedy the defects of our ordnance, and, most of all, give our officers the necessary experience in controlling fire at long and unmeasured ranges.

For the above purposes we require a certain minimum number of rounds per pointer per year. This number is very small. For example, the total number of rounds now required for the pointer of a heavy turret gun (from 13-inch to 8-inch caliber) is, on an average, 5 shots on record practice (for the training of the pointer and gun crew), 4 shots for the second practice of the year (for training fire-control officers), or 9 shots in all for each pointer. Similarly, for a 6-inch gun, the total number of rounds required is between 11 and 12. In order to attain the present accuracy and rapidity, experience has shown that each gun requires two pointers, one of whom gives his attention exclusively to pointing in direction and one in elevation; and as both of these men must be equally trained, the expenditure of ammunition per gun is double that given above per pointer.

It will therefore be seen that the number of rounds now expended is the minimum that could be fired with benefit to the training of the gun crew and the officer, and that to diminish this allowance would be to diminish at once the battle efficiency of our ships. It is popularly supposed that we now expend much more ammunition per pointer than during former years, but this is not the case, as the amount now required under the new system of training does not average more than 20 per cent greater than that formerly allowed. The increase in the total amount of money required for target-practice ammunition is therefore due almost entirely to the increase in the number of ships and the increase in the number of guns now carried by modern ships.

In this connection it may be well to state that our present expenditure per gun averages less than that of any of the principal navies of the world.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there is one question further that I desire to speak upon and that is upon the subject of the naval programme authorized in this bill. Of course the committee realizes that there are many Members of this House who are in favor of building up the Navy much faster than other Members of the House. Some say we can not build the Navy too fast, while others, on the contrary, are of an opposite opinion. Now, the committee has sought this year to bring in here a proposition or to recommend a naval programme that would meet the fair judgment of the Members of this House, and in considering that question they have studied somewhat the lessons of the Japanese and Russian war. The highest naval opinion which we have upon that great naval war is that the battle ship is the real fighting ship of navies. Lord Selbourne, who was at one time the first lord of the English Admiralty, made this statement:

The lessons from the war in the Far East are the importance of the personnel, the necessity for having a margin of strength, and the fact that without battle ships no power can hold or win command of the sea.

The French naval authorities to-day are in favor of increasing their force of battle ships. For a great many years they ran to cruisers, torpedo boats, and all sorts of small craft, but to-day they are coming back to the battle ship. And so it is with the German naval authorities. They have recommended in their programme this year an increase in the tonnage of battle ships. Our own great Admiral Dewey, in an interview, in speaking of the lessons for the American Navy to learn from the Japanese and Russian war, said:

More big ships, more big guns, and good shooting. The American Navy needs more than anything else battle ships of 18,000 tons, carrying 12-inch guns, with a few, like 3-inch, for defense against torpedo-boat attacks.

The Admiral further stated:

I have changed my mind on this subject. When that programme came out I agreed with a great many other naval officers that we had ideal craft, ready to meet the enemy at each and every range, but I now realize that the modern battle is fought at a range of 3 or 4 miles, but at that range your 8-inch guns are nothing but so much dead weight on the ship. You might as well be firing with a pistol. No; it is the big ships such as the English are building and the big guns that decide the battle.

Now, Admiral Converse, as I stated a moment ago, one of the ablest officers in the American Navy, speaking of the lessons of the Japanese and Russian war, says:

A lesson of greatest importance taught by this war—the importance of the personnel—is likely, lest we be on our guard, to unduly magnify or minimize in our mind the value of various types of ships as exemplified by certain instances of the campaign. Upon the insecure conclusions derived from these an edifice of theory is erected, in the construction of which the principles which have governed for all past time, and which will always govern, are recklessly abandoned or shaped to meet the architect's plans.

As in the history of other great wars upon the seas, battle ships have in this war turned the scale of national success. Land battles, in which nearly three-fourths of a million of men have been engaged at once, have not settled as much as two fleet engagements.

The determining factor of war is sea power, and the determining factor of sea power is battle ships.

Now, what are foreign nations doing in this matter? I want to state briefly some of the recent building programmes. For instance, England has just launched the Dreadnought, a ship of 18,500 tons, carrying ten 12-inch guns. Germany's naval programme this year will be two battle ships of about 19,000 tons and one armored cruiser of 15,000 tons; France, six battle ships of about 18,000 tons, and some smaller craft. But this gives you an idea that the naval authorities of the leading naval powers are recommending large ships and large guns.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Will the gentleman from Illinois allow me to ask him a question now?

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. FOSS. Yes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I would like to ask the gentleman, if we build a ship or ships of the Dreadnought type, how many harbors in this country could that ship enter?

Mr. FOSS. Well, it would not be necessary to enter but a few. It could enter New York harbor, if I remember correctly. The harbor will have a depth of 40 feet. Now, the Dreadnought draws 28 feet.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. What is the number of feet that this ship that it is proposed to build will draw?

Mr. FOSS. About the same.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Then, so far as the southern coast and the Southern Atlantic and Gulf coasts are concerned that ship could not go there at all; it could not protect that coast, because it would have no harbor that it could go in for supplies.

Mr. FOSS. That ship would never go into a harbor to protect the coast. That ship would meet the enemy out on the sea and give battle.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It has to have a harbor to go back to in order to obtain supplies. It has to have a base of supplies.

Mr. FOSS. Our ships draw nearly 27 feet to-day.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Well, I know, and for a large portion of our coast these ships that draw that much will have no harbor of refuge at all.

Mr. FOSS. There would be a few harbors in which the ship——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. And on account of the water they draw they could not defend a large portion of our coast line. But does the gentleman think it wise——

Mr. FOSS. They would defend outside; they would not defend inside.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Does the gentleman think it wise to enter upon a naval programme to build ships that can not possibly defend at least three-fourths of the coast line of the United States?

Mr. FOSS. Well, I do not agree with the gentleman that it is necessary for a ship to be in the harbor to defend the coast line. I hope if we ever enter into a war with any nation that our ships will not remain in the harbor, but that they will go out and meet the enemy.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Unquestionably; but we have got to have a harbor of supply—a harbor to start from.

Mr. FOSS. There will be plenty of harbors which this ship can enter.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If I am correctly informed, I do not think there are any in the southern waters.

Mr. MEYER. I would state to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] that New Orleans is one of the harbors which that vessel will be able to enter, although there are now about 28 feet only, and in less than two years, long before this battle ship can be completed, she will have from 33 to 35 feet.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I hope that in the course of time we will have much deeper harbors than we have now.

Mr. MEYER. But this work, I will say, is in the course of construction and will assuredly be completed within two years.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Is it not a fact that the commanders of big naval vessels do not like to carry them to New Orleans to-day, even where they have a sufficient draft of water?

Mr. MEYER. They do not now, because they regard the channel at South Pass as somewhat narrow, but this new channel, the Southwest Pass, will be of ample width for any ship in the world. It is not something that is in doubt or in contemplation. It is something that is in the course of construction and will assuredly be completed within the next two years, probably in a year and a half, long before this battle ship which is proposed can be completed.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That is only one harbor, and a dangerous harbor for battle ships.

Mr. MEYER. Pensacola has about 30 feet, I am told.

Mr. FOSS. Now, Mr. Chairman, in making up this programme and coming to a determination thereon, we considered the recommendations of the Secretary of the Navy and the different Navy boards. The General Board recommended that we build three battle ships this year, three scout cruisers, and some destroyers and torpedo boats—a programme which would have cost $35,960,000. Then the Board of Construction made a recommendation this year that we build three battle ships and some smaller boats, at a total cost of $28,700,000. Then the Secretary of the Navy made a recommendation this year that we build two battle ships, some scout cruisers and destroyers, at a total cost of $23,300,000. The Committee on Naval Affairs recommends this year one battle ship, and we believe that it ought to be a great battle ship, as powerful as any ship afloat, if not more so; and we recommend, in addition, three torpedo destroyers, and that $1,000,000 be put in the discretion of the Secretary to expend on subsurface or submarine boats after he shall have made a test as to the comparative merits of the different boats which may be presented.

Mr. SULZER. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. FOSS. I will yield to my friend from New York.

Mr. SULZER. I am a friend of the Navy, and favor an intelligent, up-to-date naval policy. I am in favor of building this new battle ship—the best, the fastest, and the most formidable battle ship in the world. Now, I wish to ask the gentleman from Illinois, the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, if there is a provision in the bill directing where this battle ship is to be built—whether in a Government shipyard or a private shipyard?

Mr. FOSS. No; there is no such provision.

Mr. SULZER. Then will the gentleman advise us if there is any objection in having this battle ship built in a Government navy-yard, the New York Navy-Yard, for instance? I would like to see this done. I believe it will be greatly to the advantage of the Government in the long run.

Mr. FOSS. In the bill is a provision putting it into the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy to build it by private contract or in the navy-yards, and that is the recommendation which the committee make in the bill.

Mr. SULZER. Do you not think it would be wiser and better for the Government to build it in the New York Navy-Yard, because the Government has spent a great deal of money fixing up the navy-yard in New York, so that it could build a great battle ship, and in order to give it an opportunity to build the Connecticut, which it did build quicker and, I believe, better and cheaper in the New York Navy-Yard than it could be built in any private yard?

Mr. FOSS. I do not think cheaper. I believe that when we get the full facts that they will show, outside of the cost of fitting the yard up, that the cost of the Connecticut will be considerably more than that of the Louisiana.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Can the gentleman give me an approximate estimate of the difference in the cost?

Mr. FOSS. Well, it would probably be in the neighborhood of 8 or 10 per cent.

Mr. NORRIS. Which way?

Mr. FOSS. More than in the private yards.

Mr. NORRIS. That is, that the ship being built in the private yards costs less by 10 per cent than a ship of the same type precisely built in the Government navy-yard?

Mr. FOSS. Yes.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Which approximately makes about $600,000.

Mr. SULZER. Not at all. I differ from the gentleman in that respect. My information is that it costs the Government in the construction of the battle ship Connecticut about $305,000 more than it cost the Government for the construction of a sister battle ship identically the same, called the Louisiana, built at a private shipyard; but in that connection I desire to say that when the Government began the construction of this battle ship, the Connecticut, in the Government yard at New York the Government had to make many improvements, and the Government now has a great and efficient plant there, as good as any shipbuilding plant in any private yard in the country.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. But were the improvements charged to the construction?

Mr. SULZER. I believe they are. Take it all in all, the difference in cost was very little.

Mr. FOSS. They were not charged to the construction of the ship.

Mr. SULZER. Then another thing in this connection. The Government at the New York Navy-Yard works the men only eight hours a day, whereas in private shipyards they work the men ten hours a day. Another thing, the Government pays a little higher wages to the skilled men in the New York Navy-Yard than they do in the private shipyards. These men who are employed in the Government navy-yard are skilled, competent mechanics, and we need these men in this country to build ships, not alone ships of war, but merchant ships; and it seems to me it ought to be the policy of the Government, whenever it is possible to do so, to build the Government's naval ships in the Government's own yards, especially where the Government can do it as well and as quick and as cheap as it can be done in private yards. I hope at the proper time the bill will be amended so that it shall provide that if this great new battle ship is authorized to be built she shall be built in the New York Navy-Yard and that she shall be called New York.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. What does the gentleman think of this proposition, that without the Government yards it would be easy for the private yards to effect a combination and raise the prices above what they are to-day?

Mr. SULZER. I agree with the gentleman from Wisconsin. There is no doubt about the question. I want to say that if it had not been for the fact that the Government was building the Connecticut in its own shipyard, in competition with the private shipyard which was building the Louisiana, the price for the construction of the Louisiana would have been over $500,000 more. The Government yard should be maintained. It is a salutary check on the greed of the private shipyards and prevents combinations among them.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I should like to go on.

Mr. GOULDEN. Can the gentleman give the committee the contract price of the Louisiana, being built by the Newport News Shipbuilding Company?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I rise for the purpose of suggesting that there is no quorum present in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman from Illinois in charge of the bill has the floor, making a speech, and the distinguished gentleman from Mississippi is not entitled to take him off the floor.

Mr. WILLIAMS. In reply to the gentleman from Ohio I wish to say that this House can not do business, even mere talking business, without a quorum.

Mr. KEIFER. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman from Mississippi has not the floor for the purpose of taking the gentleman in charge of the bill from his feet.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I did not hear the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. KEIFER. My point is that the gentleman from Mississippi has not the floor for the purpose of taking the gentleman from Illinois from his feet for any purpose.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It is a matter of privilege to make the point of no quorum at any time. The Constitution itself requires a quorum to do business, and the rules prescribe what a quorum is in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. KEIFER. Oh, well, it is a matter of right to make a motion to adjourn and to do various things, if a gentleman can get the floor; but he can not make a motion to adjourn every minute, and take a man off the floor simply because the motion to adjourn is privileged.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have not made a motion to adjourn at all.

Mr. KEIFER. That is a matter of higher privilege.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I could make the motion to adjourn, but I can suggest the absence of a quorum at any time.

Mr. KEIFER. I submit that the gentleman was not recognized for that purpose.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not have to be recognized for it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that a question of order involving the presence of a quorum may be raised, and the Chair will count to ascertain whether a quorum is present.

After counting the committee, the Chairman announced 122 Members present.

Mr. KEIFER. That constitutes a quorum in the Committee of the Whole.

The CHAIRMAN. A quorum is present. The gentleman from Illinois will proceed.

Mr. GOULDEN. I should like to ask the gentleman a question, if he will yield.

Mr. FOSS. I will yield for a question.

Mr. GOULDEN. I wish to repeat my question, now that the committee has a quorum. What is the contract price of the Louisiana, built in a private shipyard, if you have the information convenient?

Mr. FOSS. I haven't it right here, but I will furnish it to the gentleman. It is $3,990,000.

Mr. GOULDEN. Are they asking for any additional sum by way of an increase over and above the contract price of the Louisiana, as they are doing for the Connecticut in the New York Navy-Yard?

Mr. FOSS. They are not.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have but one word more to say. The committee has submitted what they regard as a modest programme. In view of the recommendations which were made by different boards of our Navy and by the Secretary of the Navy, we have submitted a most moderate programme. In fact, the Naval Committee is surprised at its own moderation. Not in a dozen years, whenever Congress has authorized a naval programme, has there been submitted a programme the tonnage of which is so small as the tonnage of this naval programme recommended this year. They believe this programme will satisfy the naval economists, and at the same time we believe that it will inspire the naval enthusiasts, because we recommend here a ship that shall be the largest battle ship in all the world if the Secretary chooses to make it so.

Mr. JOHNSON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FOSS. Certainly.

Mr. JOHNSON. I notice in your report that you say that $252,000,000 have been expended in the new Navy. What does the gentleman refer to as the "new Navy?" When did it begin?

Mr. FOSS. It began on the 4th of March, 1883. The authorization of the four battle ships, Atlanta, Boston, Chicago, and Dolphin, sometimes called the "A, B, C, and D of the new Navy," was made by an act of Congress at that time.

Mr. JOHNSON. We have now expended already $252,000,000?

Mr. FOSS. Two hundred and fifty-two million dollars has been expended.

Mr. JOHNSON. And those authorized and not completed will cost $52,000,000 more?

Mr. FOSS. Yes; making over $300,000,000 for the construction of the new Navy.

Mr. JOHNSON. Now, if it will not disturb the gentleman, I want to ask a further question. I notice that you have cut the estimate $21,000,000 from what the Department asked for. I want to know if those cuts were made in departments where they will count, or are they in departments where the charges are fixed and later there will be a deficiency?

Mr. FOSS. No; we do not anticipate anything of that sort. We have cut only in those places where we could reasonably cut, and I explained in the early part of my speech just what particular items were reduced.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. FOSS. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois this question: Is the shortage of men most noticeable in the ranks of the ordinary seamen or in the gunners or engineers and other branches of the service?

Mr. FOSS. I do not know that I can state accurately at the present time. As given here, the shortage is among the enlisted men. I should say probably the greatest shortage is not among the special classes, but among the seamen generally.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. On page 15 there is a list of twelve battle ships under construction: At what date will those twelve battle ships be completed—that is, all of them?

Mr. FOSS. Of the twelve battle ships under construction mentioned on page 15, the Virginia is already in commission. The Nebraska, the Georgia, the New Jersey, and the Connecticut and the Louisiana——

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. They have all taken their trial trips, have they not?

Mr. FOSS (continuing). Ought to go into commission during the next few months. The Connecticut and the Louisiana will be ready in two or three months, and the Vermont, the Kansas, and the Minnesota will probably be completed during the next fiscal year. So that we will have comparatively few battle ships on the stocks at the close of the coming fiscal year.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended until he completes his remarks.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, does not the gentleman from Illinois control one-half of the time?

The CHAIRMAN. He does.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Then why has he not a right to occupy one-half of the time himself?

The CHAIRMAN. Because the rules of the House provide that no Member of the House shall speak more than one hour without unanimous consent. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I wish to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that two battle ships, the South Carolina and the Michigan, appearing on page 3 of the report, are to be completed in 1910. So that it appears that the present programme for authorized battle ships will not be completed until January 1, 1910.

Mr. FOSS. That is true. Those two ships were authorized last year, and they have just finished the plans for them.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Nothing has been done in the way of actual construction?

Mr. FOSS. No; the keel of neither one of them has yet been laid.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. On pages 15 and 16 there is a list of vessels under construction. Are there armored cruisers authorized, in addition to this list, under construction?

Mr. FOSS. None. Two colliers and two battle ships.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. No other boats authorized not under construction in addition to these?

Mr. FOSS. None others.

Mr. SPERRY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. FOSS. I will yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. SPERRY. I would like to ask the gentleman two questions. Are liquor rations served now on board of our vessels?

Mr. FOSS. I do not understand that they are. Grog has been abolished from the Navy for years.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, one further question. On page 15 there is a list of six armored cruisers under construction—the California, South Dakota, Tennessee, Washington, North Carolina, and Montana. At what date is it anticipated that the last of these armored cruisers will be completed?

Mr. FOSS. The date of construction of the Montana, the last ship, was January 3, 1905. The contract price was $3,575,000. The completion of the machinery plant is stated as January, 1908. The contract time is thirty-six months. It is the same for the North Carolina. The Washington and the Tennessee are August 9 and 10, 1906. The California and South Dakota, January 10, 1904. They were nearly two years over their contract time. In regard to the battle ships, I can give the exact time as far as they are concerned, if the gentleman wishes it.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. If the gentleman would kindly state that, I would be obliged.

Mr. FOSS. The Virginia, already in commission, was two years beyond her contract time. The Nebraska, the Georgia, the New Jersey, and the Rhode Island should have been completed in February, 1904. They are over two years behind. The Louisiana, March 15, 1906. The Connecticut is not given here. The Vermont, the Kansas, the Minnesota should be completed in December, 1906; the Mississippi in March, 1907; the Idaho in May, 1907, and the New Hampshire in February, 1908.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Are those the contract times?

Mr. FOSS. Yes; these are the contract times.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. So that it really does not necessarily show what the actual fact may be?

Mr. FOSS. No; but the gentleman was asking for the contract time.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Is it not true that in nearly all cases the dates of actual completion has been one to two years later than the contract time?

Mr. FOSS. Well, that has been due in a large number of cases, I would say to the gentleman, to the strikes and labor troubles, and also the delays in the furnishing of material.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Whatever the cause may be, is not that the fact?

Mr. FOSS. I think that has been largely true, that the ships have seldom been finished within the contract time.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. When the date is given for completion, that includes the armor and armament?

Mr. FOSS. That includes the completed ship, as I understand it.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. The equipment, as it is called, the putting in of the plant, such as coaling and provisions for living on board—is that included in this contract time?

Mr. FOSS. I am not sure. I think that is the time when the shipbuilder turns the ship over to the Government, and then so far as putting the supplies in and things of that sort is concerned, it is a matter of course for the Navy Department to regulate.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. That only occupies a few days, I would suggest.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I think I have now covered the subject. I was going to speak further on some matters in connection with this bill, but I do not think I will take up further time.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make an inquiry or two of the gentleman before he takes his seat. Are there any naval vessels that are now out of commission for any reason, especially because of the fact that they are not able to get sufficient officers and men to man them? I do not know what the fact may be.

Mr. FOSS. Well, I don't know that there are any from that fact. Of course there are a number of vessels out of commission undergoing repairs and things of that sort.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Oh, yes; but there are none so far as the gentleman knows out for any other reason.

Mr. FOSS. No.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I notice one or two small increases in salary and one or two increases in the number of offices in the bill. Can the gentleman give us, without too much trouble, about the time of the beginning of the reading of the bill, an estimate of how much the increase in salary is that is carried in the bill and how many offices are added?

Mr. FOSS. I do not think there is a single increase in salary in the bill. I would state that there is comparatively little new legislation in the bill.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. There is at least one office created. That is where provision is made that the Secretary of the Navy shall expend $5,000 for legal services. That practically involves an attorney for the Department.

Mr. FOSS. That may not necessarily be an office.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I think it would be well if the gentleman could have his clerk prepare for us a little summary of the bill in that respect, showing the increased charge upon the Treasury by reason of any new offices that are created, and any increased charge upon the Treasury by reason of increase in salaries.

Mr. FOSS. I will have that done.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. It was our purpose, was it not, that there should be no increase in salaries in this bill?

Mr. FOSS. I stated to the gentleman there has been no increase in salaries.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I think that is entirely probable, but I would like to get it in detail.

Mr. GOULDEN. Mr. Chairman, I understood the chairman of the committee to say that many of these ships were one or two or more years in being completed beyond the contract time.

Mr. FOSS. Yes.

Mr. GOULDEN. The question I desire to ask is this: Is there a penalty clause for failure to live up to the contract as to time in the building of these ships at outside yards?

Mr. FOSS. I think there is a penalty clause.

Mr. GOULDEN. One more question. Has the penalty clause ever been enforced?

Mr. FOSS. I could not inform the gentleman.

Mr. GOULDEN. I think it should be, of course.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, just one word in conclusion. The committee felt this year that this is a very moderate programme and ought to receive the support of every Member of this House. Our interests on this hemisphere are great, and they are also great upon the other hemisphere, and it behooves our country to see to it that we are in a position always to protect those interests, and the authorization of this programme—not a large programme, but carrying, as it does, the construction of the great battle ship—will be a notice to all the world that we do not propose to forsake our interests on either hemisphere.

Now, that is all I have to say at this time on this subject. During a consideration of the bill under the five-minute rule, I shall be glad to answer any questions or to explain any parts of this bill which I may be able to do. [Applause.]

APPENDIX.

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, February 14, 1905.

MY DEAR MR. FOSS: I take pleasure in sending you herewith a copy of the report of the Board on Construction relative to the estimated cost of maintaining the Navy when all ships now under construction have been completed. I have sent a copy of this report also to Mr. J. E. WATSON, Member of Congress from Indiana, in response to his request for this information.

Very truly, yours, PAUL MORTON, Secretary.

HON. GEORGE E. FOSS, M. C.,
Chairman Committee on Naval Affairs,
House of Representatives.

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
BOARD ON CONSTRUCTION,
Washington, January 25, 1905.

[Subject: Cost, per annum, of maintaining Navy when all ships now under construction have been completed.]

SIR: Referring to the Department's memorandum of January 18, 1905, requesting estimates from the Board on Construction as to "what it would cost us per annum to maintain our Navy when all the ships now under construction shall have been completed," the Board begs to report as follows:

In attempting to prepare the estimates in the detail desired, great difficulty was experienced in arriving at the cost of supplies, repairs, etc., under each bureau, since the summary statements of expenditures submitted by the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts did not permit such a separation to be readily undertaken, and to arrive at approximately accurate results as to detailed expenditures under each bureau would have delayed the preparation of this report far beyond the time fixed by the Department.

The Board has therefore proceeded upon the following assumptions:

(1) That the increase of personnel will be such as to permit the placing and keeping in commission of all vessels now under construction, in addition to the three battle ships of the Missouri class, all cruisers of the Chattanooga class, four protected cruisers of 3,500 to 4,500 tons, fourteen gunboats and cruisers of from 1,000 to 2,000 tons, and about half the total number of small gunboats, torpedo-boat destroyers, and torpedo boats now on the Navy Register, with the same proportion of colliers, special-service vessels, tugs, etc., as now obtains.

(2) All battle ships now in commission, except those of the Maine class, will be regarded as in reserve or under general repair.

(3) The double and single turreted monitors now in commission will also be regarded as in reserve or under general repair.

The active fleet, therefore, for offensive purposes will be as follows:
Six battle ships of the Connecticut class.
Five battle ships of the Virginia class.
Two battle ships of the Idaho class.
Three battle ships of the Missouri class.
Six armored cruisers of the Pennsylvania class.
Four armored cruisers of the Tennessee class.
Three protected cruisers of the Charleston class.
Four protected cruisers of from 3,500 to 4,500 tons.
Six cruisers of the Chattanooga class.
Three scout cruisers of the Chester class.
Sixteen gunboats and cruisers of from 1,000 to 2,000 tons.
Eight torpedo-boat destroyers.
Twenty torpedo boats.
Two fleet colliers.

Of the above list, the following are now under construction:
Six battle ships of the Connecticut class.
Two battle ships of the Idaho class.
Five battle ships of the Virginia class.
Six armored cruisers of the Pennsylvania class.
Four armored cruisers of the Tennessee class.
Three protected cruisers of the Charleston class.
One cruiser of the Chattanooga class.
Three scout cruisers of the Chester class.
Two gunboats of about 1,100 tons.
Two training sailing vessels of 1,800 tons.
Two torpedo boats of the Stringham class.

In order therefore to arrive at some definite estimate of the total cost of maintaining the fleet, including the charges for maintaining all shore stations in connection therewith, the board has assumed that the current annual appropriations will suffice for maintaining the fleet as it now exists and under normal conditions, and in order to determine the total cost of maintaining the fleet when vessels now under construction have been completed, has made a separate estimate of the cost of maintaining in commission the vessels now under construction.

In making this assumption the board desires to make it clearly understood that the current annual appropriation for repairs and maintenance of the fleet must necessarily be increased by a definite amount in order to provide for the larger repairs to hull and machinery, armament and equipment, as the vessels now in commission deteriorate and are subjected to general overhauling. The amount of this increase can not be determined at this time, being necessarily contingent upon the character of the service, the number of vessels in commission, and the general wear and tear of the fleet during the next three and a half years.

Subject to these comments, the estimates submitted are believed to cover the actual cost of maintaining the Navy when all the vessels now under construction have been completed. The actual cost of maintaining in commission the vessels now under construction, including the pay of officers and men, and all charges of maintenance afloat, is submitted as a separate item, the basis of this estimate being the actual cost of maintaining in commission vessels of similar character now in service, allowing a proper percentage for increase in displacement and personnel for the ships now under construction, the total cost of maintaining the fleet as at present existing being the total of all appropriations of every character for the naval service, except those for "Increase of the Navy" and "Public works."

Cost of maintaining the naval establishment, as per appropriations 1904–5 and deficiency estimates	$54,004,000
Increase of estimates for maintenance, etc., submitted by the Bureau of Yards and Docks to cover extra cost of maintenance when public works now under construction are completed	301,000
Increase of estimates submitted by the Bureau of Medicine and Surgery to provide for increase in number of vessels in commission and hospital accommodations on shore	81,300
Increase of estimates necessary under the Bureau of Navigation and all working bureaus to cover incidental increase of expenses due to increase of work consequent upon enlarged fleet and personnel	4,595,000
Cost of maintaining in commission all vessels now under construction, including pay of personnel, coal for steaming purposes, etc	20,610,000
Total cost of maintaining fleet upon completion of vessels now under construction	79,591,300
Estimated decreased cost of maintenance of vessels now in commission which will ultimately be in reserve upon the completion of vessels now under construction	3,000,000
Estimated annual cost of maintaining the naval establishment upon the completion of vessels now under construction	76,591,300

With respect to that part of the Department's query requesting what proportion of the above charges will be for repairs, supplies, pay of officers and men, etc., the board begs to state that the consolidated statements of accounts are such as to render it extremely difficult to make a subdivision in the detail required by the Department, but so far as can be determined from the figures at hand, the approximate proportion of the above total estimate, for the various items enumerated, would be as follows:

Pay of officers and men	$32,000,000
Supplies of all kinds, both afloat and ashore, including coal for steaming purposes, provisions for the crew, etc.; also, repairs to the fleet, in all departments, and maintenance of shops and machinery plants on shore in connection with repairs to the fleet, and all incidental expenses in connection with the naval establishment	38,400,000
Ordnance	2,700,000
Target practice	1,300,000
Yards and docks, for maintenance and preservation	1,750,000
Medicine and surgery	441,300
Total	76,591,300

Very respectfully,

G. A. CONVERSE,
Chief of Bureau of Navigation, President of Board.
C. W. RAE,
Engineer in Chief United States Navy,
Chief of Bureau of Steam Engineering, Member.
W. L. CAPPS,
Chief Constructor United States Navy,
Chief of Bureau of Construction and Repair, Member.
H. N. MANNEY,
Chief of Bureau of Equipment, Member.
N. E. MASON,
Chief of Bureau of Ordnance, Member.

THE SECRETARY OF THE NAVY.

[Mr. MEYER addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia is recognized for one hour.

Mr. RIXEY. Mr. Chairman, it is not my purpose at this time to speak upon the naval bill. Later on I shall submit some remarks on the appropriation bill for the support of the Navy. I might add here, however, in passing, that since I have been a member of the Naval Committee I know of no time when the Naval Committee has given more careful consideration to the appropriation bill, and, so far as I am advised, the points of difference between the members of the committee are fewer than usual and will, perhaps, provoke less discussion. Some amendments will be offered when these matters of difference are reached, but I do not apprehend they will take a great deal of time. At present, Mr. Chairman, I wish to take advantage of the indulgence allowed in general debate to submit some remarks upon several subjects of general interest—the tariff, rate legislation, and the necessity for Congressional investigation.

Mr. Chairman, in a speech delivered by me in this House on the 14th day of February, 1905, I said, speaking of the election of November, 1904, and of the attitude of the President and Congress in regard to the tariff:

Evidently there were those in the Republican party and high in its councils who did not construe the November victory as necessarily an indorsement of the existing tariff—fostering, sheltering, and protecting monopolies, trusts, and combines; or the present license to great railroad corporations by freight discriminations to make one man and break another; to build up one city and crush another, or to go on with the world-power idea, piling up expenses for the military, until not only the foundations of the Republic should be endangered by its military tendencies, but the very energies of the people would be exhausted in an effort to produce sufficient revenue to keep afloat the great war machines, support the land armies, and pay pensions.

Among the foremost of these Republicans who balked at the interpretation placed upon the result of the election by the "stand-patters" was the President himself, who, elected by an unprecedented popular majority, might well have construed it as not only a personal triumph, but an indorsement of all the Republican policies; but the President is known on some economic questions to be to some extent in accord with Democratic principles and tendencies.

No sooner was the result of the election announced than the President declared in effect that the contention that the tariff should be revised was well founded, and it was semiofficially given out that he would call an extra session of Congress in March to consider changes in the tariff schedules.

Consternation at once seized the "stand-patters." Their runners were sent in every direction. Conferences were held, and for a while it seemed as if the President had the upper hand; but he was prevailed upon to consult them, with the result that the project for an extra session of Congress in the spring of 1905 was abandoned, with the further announcement that it might be held later in the year—say in October.

So in this first tilt the stand-patters win out. We will see later on whether there is an October session of Congress, and, if there is, whether it is effective.

There can be no question but that the sincere advocates of tariff revision regretted the abandonment by the President of his intention to call an extra session of Congress in the spring of 1905.

They realize that delay is dangerous for the friends of tariff revision. Time gives opportunity for all the protected interests to get together to oppose all changes beneficial to the people and in many ways to disparage, lessen, or neutralize the influence of the President with the members of his own party. It does not require half an eye of prophecy to see that the President is stronger and more powerful and potent with his own party and with Congress now than he will ever be again during the remainder of his Administration. Backed by a tremendous popular majority, with many Republican Members indebted for their unexpected election to his popularity, it would be difficult, if not impossible, for the stand-patters to resist the demand of the President at this stage for a revision of the tariff. But twelve months hence how will it be?

Procrastination is not only the thief of time, but, I fear, is the thief of opportunity.

Mr. Chairman, the twelve months have come and gone, and apparently tariff revision by the Republican party is a mere "will-o'-the-wisp," vanishing as it is approached.

The "stand-patters," emboldened at their success in preventing revision of the tariff and in quieting the President on the subject, now boldly declare that they intend to prevent tariff revision prior to the Congressional elections, and whether it is had after that date will depend upon the result of the elections. The chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, and the Republican leader on this floor, in an open letter, dated March 24, 1906, to a leading Republican revisionist, which letter, given to the press and prepared presumably after consultation with the Speaker of the House, declared that—

Congress is not prepared to revise the tariff schedules in that calm, judicial frame of mind so necessary to the proper preparation of a tariff act at a time so near the coming Congressional elections.

He well knows that the next session—the last of the Fifty-ninth Congress—will be the short session, of only three months duration, and that Congress during that session will have all it can do to prepare and pass the appropriation bills. Whether there shall be a tariff revision after that date will depend largely upon the Congressional elections in November.

This is evidently the opinion of the Speaker of this House, for in a letter addressed to Col. John N. Taylor, of the Knowles, Taylor & Knowles Pottery Company, at East Liverpool, Ohio—an extract from which was published in the Washington Post under date of April 6, 1906—he said:

I am satisfied there will be no tariff revision this Congress, but it goes without saying that the desire for a change which exists in the common mind will drive the Republican party, if continued in power, to a tariff revision. I do not want it, but it will come in the not distant future.

If the gentleman from Illinois should be the Speaker of the Sixtieth Congress, and the same rules which now govern the House be adopted, he can prevent it, just as he has prevented the consideration of this subject by this Congress. He can do again what he did at this Congress—place upon the Ways and Means Committee, in the place of gentlemen known to favor revision, gentlemen whose only idea of revising the tariff is to revise it upward.

The only hope for tariff revision was bluntly and fairly stated by the Speaker in another statement given out April 6, 1906, and as many believed, because of the able speech by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY], which showed conclusively the necessity for reform.

In this statement the Speaker says, "If a majority of the people demand revision they will elect a majority of the Members of this House in favor of immediate general revision." And so say we all.

This position and determination not to revise the tariff is further emphasized by the fact that during the past week the Republicans put forward as their champions of the present high-tariff policy the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BOUTELL], the gentleman from Iowa [Colonel HEPBURN], and the gentleman from Washington [Mr. CUSHMAN], all of whom declared in effect that the Republican party had no idea of making any concessions to the popular demand for a revision of the tariff. They one and all defended the schedules, especially on watches and steel, which had been shown to result in the selling of these articles abroad at considerable less prices than in the home market.

In giving protected interests the home market the people never contemplated that foreigners should be treated better in the matter of prices than the home consumers.

The responsibility is up to the people—placed there by the recognized leaders of the Republican party. The election of a Republican majority in the Sixtieth Congress means the same Republican leader on this floor [Mr. PAYNE] and the same Republican Speaker [Mr. CANNON] and a continuance of the Republican programme fairly and frankly announced by these gentlemen in the three statements referred to and given out for publication in ample time to give notice to all the voters before the elections.

The only hope for tariff revision is the election of a Democratic House, which means a Democratic floor leader, a Democratic majority on the Ways and Means Committee, and a majority pledged for tariff reform.

All hope for tariff revision or reciprocity by the Republican party may as well be abandoned. The last annual message of the President barely referred to the subject, showing that even he no longer expects his party to do otherwise than "stand pat" on the tariff. The people have no right to expect tariff reform if they elect as Representatives in Congress Republicans upon a high protective tariff platform.

It is more apparent now than ever that the only hope of the country for tariff revision lies with the Democratic party. Divided upon other questions, it is thoroughly united upon this subject, and is perfectly willing to accept the issue thus made for a revision of the tariff and for a reciprocity which will open to the United States the markets of the world, not only for the manufactured articles, but for the farm products of wheat, cotton, tobacco, corn, and cattle. The necessity for action in this direction is well set forth in the following paper prepared by a committee of twenty-seven prominent men appointed for that purpose by the national reciprocity conference held at Chicago August 16 and 17, 1905:

The farmers and stockmen of the corn belt and the range are not sharing in any fair degree in the undoubted prosperity that has come to the chief beneficiaries of the law as mutilated by a Senatorial minority. They are being robbed of markets for their surplus products which could be opened to them through the medium of reciprocal tariff concessions. For example:

Germany is the second largest buyer of food products in the world. She would probably take from $50,000,000 to $75,000,000 worth of American farm products annually under any fair scheme of reciprocity. France would buy perhaps one-half as much under reasonable trading arrangements. The American farmer has a $4,500,000,000 crop of cereals this year. The application of scientific methods is vastly enlarging our soil production. There is ordinarily an enormous surplus of farm products in excess of domestic wants. Heavy buying by Germany in anticipation of the closing of the ports of the Empire against us March 1, 1906, is helping our grain markets some just now, but what of the future? Let us quote from the Department of Commerce and Labor on the conditions to be met after the date mentioned:

"A series of notable increases affects agricultural products. Thus rye, the duty of which until now constituted the highest ad valorem rate, viz, 35 per cent, is advanced 100 per cent (i. e., to about 70 per cent ad valorem) under the new general tariff, and 43 per cent under the conventional. The specific duty on wheat, equivalent to 27 per cent ad valorem in 1903, is advanced 114 per cent under the new general and 57 per cent under the new conventional tariffs. The specific rate on wheat flour, which amounted to 35 per cent ad valorem in 1903, is raised 157 per cent in the new general (i. e., to about 89 per cent ad valorem) and 40 per cent in the conventional tariff (i. e., to about 48 per cent ad valorem). The duty of 1.60 marks on corn, which constituted 17 per cent ad valorem in 1903, is raised 212 per cent in the general tariff and 87 per cent in the conventional. The duty on dried fruit, which formed 9 per cent ad valorem in 1903, has been raised 150 per cent under the new general and left unchanged under the conventional tariff.

"The rates on provisions have also been greatly advanced. Bacon, which hitherto paid the highest ad valorem in the list of provisions coming from the United States, viz, 23 per cent, is advanced 80 per cent in the new general tariff, while no rate is provided for in the conventional tariff. The duty on pork, which amounted to 21 per cent ad valorem in 1903, is advanced 176 per cent.

"The duty on beef, amounting to 15 per cent ad valorem in 1903, is raised 200 per cent under the new general and 80 per cent under the conventional tariff. Lard, with a duty of 11 per cent ad valorem in 1903, will be subject to a rate 25 per cent higher in the new general tariff, while in the new conventional the rate remains unchanged. Agricultural machinery, which pays on the average about 4 per cent ad valorem, will be subject to rates from 20 per cent to 88 per cent higher, according to the weight."

The conventional tariff referred to in this report applies only to those countries having reciprocal relations with Germany. The higher rate would apply to the United States. This conference goes on to state:

Indian corn is king in the agriculture of the Middle West. It can be best marketed in the form of meats, in the production of which we lead the world. It is all well enough to point to the enormous dividends and surplus of the iron masters and sugar refiners and to cite that as a good and sufficient reason for "letting well enough alone;" but the prospects of thousands of hard-working farmers in the great feeding and grazing States are not so alluring. Receipts of cattle at Chicago this fall have run from 10,000 to 30,000 head weekly in excess of the known home requirements, the result being heavy losses to growers. A market that can care for, say, 60,000 cattle per week at prices profitable to the producer can not digest 100,000. While this glut is seen at home, a meat famine exists in Europe. With train loads of bullocks selling as low as $3.50 per hundredweight in Chicago and with dressed beef wholesaled there at 6 cents per pound, live cattle and swine are worth in Germany 15 cents per pound. Surely there is something out of joint economically when such a state of affairs exists.

The country has been lavish in its protection to industries now gigantic, some of them world-dominating in their power. It is probably idle to appeal to them to be fair enough to concede that they no longer need so much protection. It will probably do no good to remind them that the farmers of the Middle West have stood steadfastly for all this protection all these years and that these same farmers could annually sell $100,000,000 worth more of breadstuffs and provisions in continental Europe alone if these same well-fattened industries would now consent to a "square deal."

McKinley in the last speech delivered by him said:

Our capacity to produce has developed so enormously and our products have so multiplied, that the problem of more markets requires our urgent and immediate attention. Only a broad and enlightened policy will keep what we have. No other policy will get more. In these times of marvelous business energy and gain we ought to be looking to the future, strengthening the weak places in our industrial and commercial systems, that we may be ready for any storm or strain.

By sensible trade arrangements which will not interrupt our home production, we shall extend the outlets for our increasing surplus. A system which provides a mutual exchange of commodities is manifestly essential to the continued and healthful growth of our export trade. We must not repose in fancied security that we can forever sell everything and buy little or nothing. If such a thing were possible, it would not be best for us or for those with whom we deal. We should take from our customers such of their products as we can use without harm to our industries and labor. Reciprocity is the natural outgrowth of our wonderful industrial development, under the domestic policy now firmly established. What we produce beyond our domestic consumption must have a vent abroad. The excess must be relieved through a foreign outlet, and we should sell everywhere we can and buy wherever the buying will enlarge our sales and productions, and thereby make a greater demand for home labor.

The period of exclusiveness is past. The expansion of our trade and commerce is the pressing problem. Commercial wars are unprofitable. A policy of good will and friendly trade relations will prevent reprisals. Reciprocity treaties are in harmony with the spirit of the times; measures of retaliation are not. If perchance some of our tariffs are no longer needed for revenue or to encourage and protect our industries at home, why should they not be employed to extend and promote our markets abroad?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, what the gentleman from Virginia is saying is said with a great deal of force, because he knows whereof he speaks. I am of the opinion that it ought to be listened to by a quorum of the committee. Therefore I suggest the absence of a quorum, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. RIXEY. Mr. Chairman, shall I proceed or wait?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] makes the point that there is no quorum present.

Mr. RIXEY. I suppose it is not competent for me to waive the point of order——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. [After counting.] There are 103 Members present, a quorum. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. RIXEY] will proceed.

Mr. RIXEY. In 1904 we exported over $37,000,000 worth of live meat animals to Great Britain and $94,000,000 worth of packing-house products—a total of over $130,000,000. In 1905 we exported to Great Britain 414,906 head of cattle. Since 1902 our exports to Germany of cattle on the hoof have stopped, due chiefly to the rigid inspection intended to exclude our cattle. The opening of this market would immensely help the price of cattle.

Our largest buyer is Great Britain and our next best is Germany. Our exports of bacon to Germany have decreased 50 per cent since 1898, though we exported in 1904 to that country over $25,000,000 worth of packing-house products, $6,000,000 of wheat, $2,200,000 of flour, and $72,000,000 of corn.

The report, referred to above, of the Department of Commerce and Labor shows the pressing and absolute necessity for immediate action in providing some reciprocal arrangement with Germany if we are to keep her as a customer. It is useless to say that she can not do without our products. She can look to the Argentine Republic, which is able of itself to furnish what cattle and pork Germany requires. That country already exceeds us in supplying beef to our principal market in Great Britain, and in a few years we must reckon with Canada. We should not sit supinely "upon the lid" and see the market of our second best customer in the world go to others, and that, too, as the result of our own stubborn and foolish pig-headedness. If we are to retain our friends we must show ourselves friendly. Our policy of exclusion should be relegated to the rear. We must regain and hold Germany, and should expand and extend our exports of farm products to other markets. Wise legislation, opening for our agriculture the markets of the world, will insure to the farmers unbounded prosperity.

I do not plead for the manufacturer. He already enjoys the markets of the world, and exploits the home consumer by exorbitant profits. The profits of the farmers are regulated and controlled largely by the foreign demand for his products. Some concession should be made, and that without protest by the manufacturing interests, in the matter of a reduction of the tariff rates in order that the foreign markets may be kept wide open for the unprotected farmer. This can be done by proper reciprocal relations.

It has long been contended by the Republican party that the tariff should be revised, if at all, by the "friends of protection." When will the protected interests voluntarily consent to lessen their profits, lower the tariff wall, and invite reasonable competition? Human nature is, as a general rule, the same everywhere under like conditions. The answer can well be that these things will be done in this way when the "leopard changes his spots and the Ethiopian his skin." It is useless to expect the beneficiaries of protection to "revise" their own protection. If I read the signs of the times aright, however, the time is fast approaching when the tariff will be revised by the friends of the people.

It is now late in the first session of the Fifty-ninth Congress, and the Republican party, through its chosen leaders in Congress, has stated in unequivocal terms that it intends to make no move in this matter for the protection of the farmer. Nothing will evidently be done until after the next Congressional election, and not then unless the people relegate some of the "stand-patters" to the rear and return, to the next Congress, Representatives pledged to reform of the tariff.

II.

Mr. Chairman, railroad rate legislation of some kind is, I think, reasonably well assured. The danger is that the bill which will become a law may not give the full relief it should, but be made so complicated and safeguarded and satisfactory to the corporate interests and so expensive to the shippers that it will be of little practical relief to them.

If an appeal is to be allowed in every case of a rate fixed by the Commission and, pending the appeal, the rate suspended, it will encourage railroads to appeal cases and prolong the appeals with the idea of making demands for reform so expensive that it will discourage the individual and shipper from complaining to the Commission of the railroad rate. Equipped with an army of legal retainers, costs in appeals, so far as the railroad is concerned, would be reduced to a minimum, while the expense of attorneys and the time and attention required would be too much for the individual. The fair thing is for the rate to go into effect after a reasonable time from the decision of the Commission and remain in effect unless and until reversed by the proper court. Under such a provision, which I trust will be adopted by the Senate, the inducement for useless appeals and applications for review would be largely removed.

The rate bill as passed by the House is more satisfactory than might have been anticipated, but there is still room for vast improvement, and the great debate in the Senate has shown the necessity for many amendments. The necessity for rate legislation was tersely stated by the Secretary of War, Judge Taft, in his speech at Cincinnati in November, 1905, when he said:

Men have been ruined; men have been made rich, settlements have been destroyed; settlements have been enlarged to prosperous towns, through the unjust favor of the managers of railroads.

Unjust discriminations are abhorrent, whether such discriminations are applied as between individual shippers or different localities. All rates should be reasonable and so adjusted as to yield a fair remuneration to the carrier upon the actual, but not fictitious, value of his property. Competitive points rarely need protection, but it is unfair to build up the man or the city at the terminus at the expense and cost of the equally deserving man or city which has no competitive rate.

The shippers and passengers want no advantage of the railroads. They want fair treatment. Power by the bill will be lodged with the Interstate Commerce Commission (supposed to be an impartial tribunal of able men) to stand between the railroad and the people and do justice and enforce equity for each.

It is useless, however, Mr. Chairman, to shut our eyes and close our understanding to self-evident conditions and facts. The great corporate interests wield an immense power throughout the country. While it is proper that due regard should be had for these great interests, I have long since found out that these interests represented by the railroads, the trusts, and the combinations of capital will take care of themselves, and the representatives of the people need lose no sleep for fear injustice may be done combined capital. Justice is all the people want and frequently more than they get.

Mr. Chairman, a Representative who demands fair treatment and protection for the producer and the shipper is frequently denounced as a demagogue who would confiscate so-called "vested interests," especially in railroad property.

While it is true that the railroads are private property, it is only half the truth. The people who constitute the State are also interested in this kind of property. The railroads could not be built or operated without a grant called "franchise" from the State, which has the sovereign right to control and regulate them. The theory is that the franchise is granted for the benefit of the public, and it is the duty of the State or Government to see that it is not used for their oppression.

III.

Mr. Chairman, another menace to the welfare and prosperity of the country is the unbridled license to the great trusts. By combination competition is stifled and the purchasers placed at the mercy of the trust magnate. In this way enormous fortunes are accumulated and the masses are made that much poorer. We have no fight to make against the millionaire, except as he has taken unfair and unconscionable profits from his innocent victims, who, in giving him the home market by the high-tariff wall, have unwittingly placed themselves at his mercy and made themselves his easy prey.

We condemn the trusts and pass penal laws for their punishment, but penal legislation will not cure the evil.

Commissioner of Corporations James R. Garfield well says:

> It is impossible to prevent such abuses by purely penal legislation. This does not mean that the enforcement of the antitrust law has not been beneficial, for it has. Its enforcement has compelled some respect for the law, which, until recently, was wholly lacking. But so far as effecting a permanent change of the conditions which that law denounces, but little has been done. The imposition of a penalty upon a combination simply drives the men in that combination to the formation of another device for accomplishing the same purpose, and this for the reason that combination is an industrial necessity, and hence will be engaged in despite penal legislation.

The true remedy is a provision removing the tariff from any article controlled by a trust, and providing that the sale in foreign countries of articles, manufactured in the United States, at less price than sold to consumers here shall be taken as prima facie evidence that the commodity is controlled by a trust.

This would give us competition from abroad if we failed to get it at home. Enact such a law, and it will be respected. It will probably not be necessary to invoke or put it into operation.

The Republican party, however, owes perhaps too much to the great trusts and corporations to expect relief in that quarter. It doubtless owes to them its continued lease of power from 1896. The insurance investigation recently conducted in New York shows that one insurance company (the New York Life), without authority from its policy holders or directors, gave $50,000 to the Republican campaign fund in 1896, $50,000 in 1900, and $48,000 in 1904, and Agent Judge Hamilton says, and produces the receipt, that $75,000 was paid by him for this insurance company in 1896, thus making a total of $125,000 in the one campaign of 1896 by this one insurance company to defeat the Democratic candidate, Mr. Bryan. Another insurance company (the Mutual Life) gave $15,000 in 1896, $35,000 in 1900, and $40,000 in 1904. It does not yet appear what the Equitable and the Home Life contributed.

Altogether, I suppose, it is fair to say these four insurance companies of one city contributed in three campaigns half a million dollars. Who can tell what is the total of contributions by the insurance companies throughout the country? And this without Federal control! With Federal control, how much would not the Republican party have been able to extort for campaign purposes? Probably many more millions. It seems to me, after this evidence of greed and extortion, it is an exhibition of gall for the Republican party to ask for a law to provide Federal control of insurance.

It is stated that the national banks were assessed one-fourth of 1 per cent upon their combined capital and surplus, and in this way $2,000,000 was collected by the Republican party.

How much did the steel trust, the oil trust, the beef trust, the coal trust, and the great railroads of the country contribute in 1896, in 1900, and in 1904 to the Republican campaign fund? So many millions that even the Republican party, corrupt as it is, could not spend it, and common rumor, not denied that I have ever heard, has it that many thousands of dollars were left in the Republican national committee's treasury. What a commentary on the political party which preaches fair and honest elections!

In many of the States of the Union there are pure election laws, denouncing under severe penalties the use of money in elections, but the national Republican party has enacted no such law. There are signs, I am glad to say, of an awakening, however, and I trust the time will soon be passed when any political party can revel in its corruption and glory in the infamy of elections bought by money.

Wayne MacVeagh, a prominent Republican, and at one time Attorney-General of the United States, said in regard to the corrupt conditions in Philadelphia what is equally applicable to corrupt conditions in national affairs:

> Whoever helps to destroy the only basis in a republic for respect for law—a pure ballot and honest suffrage—by buying votes with money or office or any other form of corruption, is a traitor to the free institutions that our fathers founded, and his proper garb is striped clothing, and his proper place is the penitentiary; and whoever, in view of the appalling revelations of these days, continues to furnish political managers with the means of such corruption ought to be clothed in the same garb and occupy a cell in the same prison.

It is little wonder that a party which has perpetuated its lease of power by such methods should be responsible in its conduct of the public affairs for the corruption, pillage, and graft which seem ingrained into many of the great Departments of the Government. Instead of "public office being a public trust" it seems to be, under some conditions, that public office is an opportunity for private graft.

The analysis by ex-Attorney-General MacVeagh is correct, and it is refreshing to note that graft and misrule were so generally defeated and condemned in the elections of November, 1905.

When Philadelphia defeats the "gang," condemns graft, enforces an honest election and a fair count, we have the best evidence that "the vilest sinner may return." It is renewed evidence of the ability of the people to rule.

I would not make indiscriminate charges of corruption against the Government, its Departments, or its officials; but where there is sufficient evidence of corruption it should be exposed by a proper investigation made for that purpose. Why is it that the Republican party blocks every effort and demand for a Congressional investigation? There can be but one answer: The result might be damaging disclosures which would injure the political party now in power. Love of power seems to be stronger than a desire to punish the guilty.

How is it with the people? Will they be content to continue in power the political party under which this corruption and graft have flourished? Will they indorse the refusal of the Republican party for Congressional investigations?

The Post-Office Department was shown to be a web of graft and corruption, and men in high places made gains upon contracts for the Government; and yet a Congressional investigation was denied.

The Agricultural Department dismissed many of its important officials because they too had been making use of their position for personal gain; and yet a Congressional investigation was denied.

The Interior Department, more energetic perhaps than the others, not only has had to dismiss some of its officials, but has flushed bigger game, and several United States Senators and two Members of the House of Representatives have been indicted for dealings with the Departments contrary to law; and yet a Congressional investigation was denied.

The Government Printing Office has had its scandals so recently aired, that it seems useless to refer to them at length. Quiet was only restored by the resignation of the Public Printer, brought about, it is stated, upon the request of the President himself; and yet a Congressional investigation was denied.

There may not be graft and corruption in the other great Departments of the Government, and then there may be.

If there is not, investigation under authority of Congress should disclose it, and no one would be hurt. But if there is wrongdoing, and the Government has been and is still being robbed by its agents, such an investigation should show it and secure the conviction and punishment of the guilty.

The results of the elections in November, 1905, especially in the States of Ohio and Pennsylvania and in the city of Philadelphia, afford ground to hope that there is still a healthy, honest, and vigorous requirement for clean politics and honest officials. What has been done in the rock-ribbed Republican stronghold of Pennsylvania can be done in the country at large. Let the people demand not only honest politics and honest Government, but prompt investigation. Within the past few days there have been evidences of an awakening; resolutions directed against the railroads in their monopoly of the coal and the fixing of prices for this prime article of necessity have passed both Houses of Congress. Perhaps an awakened public opinion will force Congressional investigations where peculation and graft have been shown to exist. Hew to the line in this and other cases, and let the chips fall where they may. The Government is the people's and its officials their servants. They have a right to know whether their agents measure up to the standard of the faithful steward not only in their personal integrity, but in the earnest protection of the interests of the public. [Loud applause.]

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GOEBEL].

Mr. GOEBEL. Mr. Chairman, immigration and naturalization necessarily go hand in hand and are subjects of vital importance to the welfare of our common country. I am a firm believer in stringent immigration laws and in the strict enforcement of them. Several bills are now pending in this House on that subject, and I hope that in the near future some legislation will be enacted which will have a tendency to check the influx of an undesirable class of aliens. It is indeed unfortunate that, notwithstanding our present laws, we have received such a large and very undesirable class of foreigners. They are necessarily a menace to good government; and there is evidently a defect somewhere in our present system which has enabled this class of aliens to land in our midst.

But, Mr. Chairman, that subject is not before us at this time. We are now considering the bill introduced by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HOWELL], as reported by the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, which provides, in part, for a uniform rule of naturalization of aliens throughout the United States. I shall address myself especially to section 9 of the bill, which provides, among other things, "that no alien shall hereafter be naturalized or admitted as a citizen of the United States who can not write in his own language or in the English language, and who can not read, speak, and understand the English language." The reason urged for this provision is found in the report of the committee, which reads as follows:

> It has seemed to your committee that any alien of ordinary intelligence who desires to take advantage of these opportunities and to fit himself for citizenship in our country could, in five years' residence, which is required in the country before he can apply for naturalization, acquire sufficient education to comply with the requirements that he shall be able to either read in his own language or in the English language and speak, read, and understand the English language. If an alien be so deficient in mental capacity as to be unable to meet that requirement or so careless of the opportunities afforded him, it is the opinion of your committee that he would not make a desirable citizen and should be refused naturalization.

Mr. Chairman, no one will contend, as an abstract proposition, that it would not be better for the individual that he speak, read, and understand the English language; not because, in my judgment, it would make him a better citizen of the United States, but because it is the language of our country, and with it he ought to be familiar. But I resent the imputation that the absence of that requirement makes him an undesirable citizen and, therefore, naturalization should be refused him. You will observe that by this bill, although an alien may be of good moral character, a firm believer in our form of government, and willing to support and defend the Constitution and laws, and who may possess all the other qualifications of good citizenship, yet, lacking this one qualification, namely, to be able to read, speak, and understand the English language, is absolutely disqualified. Again, has it occurred to the gentlemen advocating this measure that this is discriminating in favor of the English-speaking as against the German and every other non-English-speaking alien? Why this discrimination? Why discriminate, for instance, against the Germans? Have they now become so undesirable for lacking the qualification required in this bill; and why were they not so at any other time? Read the history of the United States and you will acknowledge that the Germans have taken an honorable part in the development of our nation; in the tendency toward government for the people and by the people and in the development of national and individual prosperity the German influence has made itself felt.

The German thought tends to strengthen the feeling that implies not only right, but duty. They have never wavered in their loyalty, and in that respect never gave blind obedience to any creed, party, or class, but ever marching on to a higher aim of the moral and intellectual growth of this nation. The share of the German in the wars of the United States is by no means limited to the rebellion. From the very beginning of their settlement in this country they have always stood ready to take their place in its defense. They took a full share in the war of 1812 and in the Mexican war, and at all times gave freely of their men and their means to the cause of liberty in the war of the rebellion, and wherever they were strongest in numbers they gave more than the proportionate strength to the forces raised for the defense of the Union. In those days the question was not raised whether he could read, speak, and understand the English language. I point with pride to my German fellow-citizens and to their history, that in war and in peace they have always done their duty.

But, Mr. Chairman, it is here urged that if an alien is so careless of the opportunities afforded him as not to be able to read, speak, and understand the English language naturalization ought to be refused to him. The fact is lost sight of that he may not have the opportunities; or that he may not be able to avail himself of such opportunities. It is no answer to say that if he does not understand our language, how can he understand our form of government and its requirements of him as a citizen?

Let me say to you that newspapers and other publications printed in his own language give him the desired information. By assimilating and coming in contact with our own people he is soon informed of the requirements of a citizen under our form of government. But, Mr. Chairman, we are dealing here with naturalization affecting Federal citizenship, as distinguished from State citizenship, and there is a wide distincton between the two. One carries obligations of a different nature than that of the other. But before discussing that proposition let me say that this bill does not provide for an examination or test. It would therefore depend entirely upon the judge before whom the applicant appeared whether he can, at least to his satisfaction, read, speak, and understand the English language. In no instances, therefore, it will be observed, would such an examination or test be uniform. One judge may fix a high standard, while another may be more lax in the requirements. Again, an applicant may be able to speak and understand the English language, but not be able to read it; for, mark you, he must be able to read, speak, and understand the English language. How accurate shall he be in his reading, speaking, and understanding? Suppose the judge shall require as a test that the applicant speak correctly the name of the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BONYNGE], or speak correctly the name of the gentleman from Hawaii [Mr. JONAH KUHIO KALANIANAOLE], would the gentleman from Colorado insist that that individual would not make a good citizen, possessing all the other qualifications, and that naturalization ought to be refused him? It can be readily seen to what absurdities this provision may lead, and the only way to obviate that condition is to establish a board of examiners, nonpartisan in its character, who shall be governed by uniform rules, so that in the examination there may not enter the whims and prejudice of a partisan or the hatred of one against a class.

Now, Mr. Chairman, coming to the proposition to which I have already alluded, I contend that as Congress can only deal with Federal citizenship the educational qualification prescribed in this bill is not essential to Federal citizenship and that it was never contemplated by the Congress. In the first place, what is citizenship? It has been defined as "the status of a citizen, with its rights and privileges." "He is a member of a nation or a sovereign state, especially a republic, and one who owes allegiance to a government and is entitled to protection from it." (See Standard Dictionary (1898); Webster's Dictionary; Century Dictionary; 6 Am. and Eng. Ency. of Law, 2d ed.)

It does not necessarily follow from this definition that the grade or quality or privilege of citizenship must be identical in all citizens, even in a republican government. In many cases arising under our system it has been repeatedly decided that the bestowal of political privileges upon an individual is not essential to constitute him a citizen. (See Wise on Citizenship, p. 3, and authorities there cited.) There are two kinds of citizenship in this country, national and State, each distinct from the other. A person may be a citizen of the United States without enjoying State citizenship and the special rights and privileges which State citizenship confers. For prior to the adoption of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States no mode existed of obtaining citizenship of the United States except by first becoming a citizen of some State; but after the adoption of the fourteenth amendment that controversy was set at rest, for that provision defines and declares who shall be citizens of the United States, namely, "all persons born or naturalized in the United States and subject to the jurisdiction thereof."

Congress is empowered by the amendment to enforce, with appropriate legislation, its provisions, and it did so by enacting "that all persons born in the United States and not subject to any foreign power, exclusive of Indians not taxed, shall be citizens of the United States." Whatever special rights and privileges it may be within the power of a State to confer upon its citizens, there are certain constitutional rights which all "Federal citizens" enjoy in common, whether they are citizens of a State or not. As to all common rights, the Federal Constitution establishes an equality between all persons, although it may be unable to confer equality as to other privileges. These rights in common are known as privileges and immunities and are fundamental in character. Federal citizenship may be acquired by inheritance, by marital relations, by the union or transfer of foreign territory, by naturalization, by treaty, by special act of Congress, by the admission of a Territory to statehood. Such a citizen owes to the Government allegiance, service, and money by way of taxes. The Government in turn grants and guarantees him liberty of his person and conscience, the right of acquiring and possessing property, security in person, estate, and reputation. Anyone may be a citizen of the United States and yet not of any particular State, but not vice versa. The Supreme Court of the United States, in what is known as the "Slaughterhouse case" (16 Wallace, 36), held that "not only may a man be a citizen of the United States without being a citizen of a State, but an important element is necessary to convert the former into the latter. He must reside within a State to make him a citizen of it; it is only necessary that he should be born or naturalized in the United States to be a citizen of the Union." Federal citizenship is totally unconnected with the right of suffrage or the elective franchise. It does not confer the right to vote. Federal citizenship confers no political rights whatever. Civil and political rights have been definitely disassociated by the fourteenth amendment. This view was strongly maintained long before the adoption of the fourteenth amendment by the minority in the Dred Scott case, who held that a slave's lack of political rights did not prevent his being a citizen with a right to sue in the courts. This, however, is no longer disputed.

A Federal citizen owes only a duty to the General Government, and that is limited in its extent. It must be remembered that the Federal Government has no greater power than that which the States have expressly granted and that all other powers have been reserved by the States. We must, therefore, conclude that the powers so granted are never exclusive of similar powers existing in the States, except when exclusive powers have been given, or the exercise of like powers is prohibited to the States, or when there is a direct repugnancy or incompatibility in the exercise of it by the States.

A closer sudy of the question will reveal how little has been conferred upon the Federal Government as to the right of creating Federal citizenship and how much has been retained by the States; for let me repeat that Federal citizenship requires only fidelity and obedience by the individual to his Government; he must bear his burden necessary to sustain the Government by the payment of taxes, and he must be ready to bear arms or render other personal service for the common defense and for the security of the liberties and general welfare of the Government. In return for this he receives the protection of his Government in the manner that I have already indicated.

I pause now to ask whether in conferring Federal citizenship, or whether in the enjoyment of the rights which such citizenship confers, it is essential that the beneficiary be able to read, speak, and understand the English language, and whether such qualifications (if you may so term it) are essentially prerequisite to conferring citizenship and in the enjoyment of it. I contend that it never was contemplated by the States that any greater power be conferred upon the Federal Government in that regard than was absolutely necessary to safeguard the Government against an alien of bad character and not disposed to the good order and happiness of our Government; and that it was left to the State to enact all further restrictions, and this must be apparent.

The present acts of Congress relating to naturalization of aliens, except as to the amendments relating to the thirteenth and fourteenth amendments, has been in force for more than one hundred years. It has stood the test of time and expediency. What necessity is there for engrafting upon the Federal statutes such a qualification? Why not leave it, as it has been left, to the States to regulate, though Congress has the power to so prescribe? It might with some force be said that the educational qualification is essential in the exercise of political rights. Its wisdom, however, I question. These political rights, however, are conferred by State citizenship, as I have stated, and not by Federal citizenship. These rights were reserved by the States. Although the Federal authority within its scope is supreme and beyond the States, it can not prevent nor secure to its citizens rights and privileges which are not expressly or by implication placed under its jurisdiction. Therefore one of the greatest privileges of a State citizen is the right of suffrage, or the elective franchise. This, I have shown, is not conferred upon a Federal citizen. The privilege of voting arises under the constitutions of the States and not under the Constitution of the United States.

It is within the power of the State to prescribe the qualifications of a voter, and the power is almost without limitation. In some States the right to vote has been granted to persons not citizens. It can restrict the right to either sex or give it to both. The State may go to any length in determining the qualifications of voters. The United States circuit court, in the case of The United States against Anthony (11 Blatchford, 205), held that a State may, without violating a right derived from the Federal Constitution, provide that no person having gray hair or who has not the use of all his limbs shall be entitled to vote. The only restriction upon the States is that they can not exclude a citizen from the enjoyment of the franchise on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude. It is true that a citizen of a State owes a dual allegiance, but the nature of the obligation is different.

I have tried to draw a distinction between a Federal citizen and a State citizen, and that the former has only civil rights while the latter has both civil and political rights. The qualifications prescribed by section 9 of this bill can have only a bearing or relate to the exercise of political rights, and hence are not essential or prerequisite to Federal citizenship.

Entertaining these views, I shall, at the proper time, move to strike out the objectionable feature. [Loud applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. DICKSON of Illinois having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 395) concerning foreign-built dredges, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. FRYE, Mr. GALLINGER, and Mr. BERRY as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 4983. An act granting an increase of pension to John M. Farquhar;

S. 5891. An act to authorize the South and Western Railway Company to construct bridges across the Clinch River and the Holston River in the States of Virginia and Tennessee; and

S. 5890. An act to authorize the South and Western Railroad Company to construct bridges across the Clinch River and the Holston River in the States of Virginia and Tennessee.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BATES].

Mr. BATES. Mr. Chairman, the American people desire a strong navy. The present bill carries items for maintenance and increase, and in all an expenditure of about $100,000,000. This desire on the part of our people for an efficient and constantly increasing naval establishment is not for the purpose of aggressive warfare, but in order that peace and tranquillity may obtain and our rights as a nation be observed. An inefficient navy will not answer this purpose.

An efficient army and navy or State militia is of value, not for the purpose of making war but for the sake of preserving peace. We are at present appropriating nearly $100,000,000 annually for the Navy; about seventy-one million for the Army; about twelve million net for the postal service, including free rural delivery. We are paying out for pensions about one hundred and forty million; for encouragement of agriculture about seven million; for civil establishment about sixty-seven million; we also make fair appropriations for public buildings and rivers and harbors. We have advanced a large sum in behalf of the isthmian canal. It costs something to administer the affairs of the Government of the United States. The annual appropriations are about seven hundred million. We can congratulate ourselves on having sufficient revenues to make these vast expenditures. Never before have we had sufficient money to carry on such great operations. And yet almost daily attacks are made on our system of revenues which makes these things possible.

It is in the nature of things that individual citizens as well as particular interests should object to paying what others may consider their full share of the public revenue. Town councils and boards of revision and appeal are continually hearing protests of citizens who think that their property is assessed or charged unduly. Legislatures meet in the several States and consider long and earnestly whether this or that species of property shall bear a greater or less burden of taxation. We have heard in this session the words "the damnable principle of protection," followed by cheers on the Democratic side. There have been specific protests. Gentlemen plead strongly for a reduction of internal revenue on tobacco, "a mere matter of a million or so," and others would welcome more moderate charges on distilled or other liquors. Those interested in manufacture of goods would have the tariff taken off raw materials; while some consumers claim that a reduction on manufactured goods would lessen the cost of the product. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. BYRD] made the unique argument that the farmers are being robbed because of a tariff on agricultural machinery and implements, as if these articles were ever cheaper to the consumer than now or could be under any circumstances. The fact is that the American farmer never obtained such uniformly good prices for all that he sells as he does to-day, and never would his products purchase so much by way of tools, machinery, and in fact all he has to buy, than now. If there is one class of people at present satisfied with the conditions brought about by Republican policies and Republican control, it is the American farmer.

It seems to be a popular position to oppose and attack every form of tax and impost and to vote for every apropriation bill. Rural free delivery is a splendid thing. The country demands a greater Navy. Governmental aid for expositions finds much favor, and we all will hail the day when the waters of the great oceans shall mingle across that narrow Isthmus. But if all the voices of argument and pleading that have been heard in this House, even in this session, protesting against specific burdens whereby the public moneys are raised should prevail, we would suddenly find ourselves without sufficient ways and means to continue our present scheme of government and awake to find a bankrupt Treasury. This all shows that the scheme of raising revenue is composite; that it is the product of many men of many minds, a yielding of individual judgments and opinions for the good of society and the State.

Great importance is sought to be attached at present to the oft-repeated statements that some American producers are selling abroad cheaper than at home. No denial or apology needs to be offered in this respect. It has been pursued by other nations for hundreds of years, in fact, by all the manufacturing nations of the earth, and without any reference to whether they operated under a protective tariff, a revenue tariff, or absolute free trade. England pursued this course in former days. In 1816 Lord Brougham, in a speech in Parliament advocating the increased exportation of British goods to the United States, declared that "it was well worth while to incur a loss upon the first exportation in order by the glut to stifle in the cradle those rising manufactures in the United States, which the war had forced into existence." In 1854 a British parliamentary commission reported as follows: "The laboring classes generally in the manufacturing districts of this country, and especially in the iron and coal districts, are very little aware of the extent to which they are often indebted for their being employed at all to the immense losses which their employers voluntarily incur in bad times in order to destroy foreign competition and to gain and keep possession of foreign markets."

The matter has been investigated in this country, and four years ago a nonpartisan commission was appointed to investigate the subject. In April, 1904, Senator GALLINGER, in a speech in the Senate, placed the value of exports sold at a lower price abroad than at home at $4,000,000. The correctness of this estimate has never been questioned. Our aggregate manufactures were placed by the census of 1900 at $13,000,000,000; they are doubtless larger now. On the figures given, however, the amount sold abroad cheaper than at home would amount to one-thirtieth of 1 per cent; that is, for every $1,000 worth of manufactured products about 30 cents worth is sold abroad cheaper than to our own people. The amount is so small compared with the aggregate output of our factories as to be unworthy of consideration.

The report of the Industrial Commission shows that some of these articles are protected in this country by patents and are not so protected in the foreign market. The fact is that in this country many manufacturers, such as those of harvesters, mowers, and reapers, employ their own salesmen, and therefore quite a considerable percentage of the cost to the consumer goes to the salaried general agents, the well-paid selling agents, and the cost of collections of notes and occasional losses. When a manufacturer sells 1,000 or 10,000 machines abroad, all this vast item of expense is saved, and the distribution in foreign lands is effected on a much more reasonable scale.

Nearly every class of goods brought into this country can be bought for export to this country at a lower price than the regular foreign market. This is true in tariff-for-revenue England as in France and Germany.

During the fiscal year 1904 $35,000,000 worth of merchandise was imported at New York below the foreign market value, and the importer voluntarily added $1,500,000 to the invoice to make market value as to confessed difference between the price actually paid and the regular foreign market value, and the Treasury officials added thereto an additional $400,000 and imposed and collected a penalty of $400,000.

These goods thus sold by foreign manufacturers cheaper for export to our country than for the home consumption included cotton goods, woolen goods, silk goods, linen, trimmings, velvets, hosiery, rugs, furs, cutlery, glassware, jewelry, furniture, wool, hides, chemicals, machinery, iron, and steel, and in fact almost every class of articles from all countries.

This special commission to which I have referred seem to have made a most careful investigation. They obtained testimony concerning a large number of manufacturing establishments in all parts of the country. From the hundreds of answers received from the different manufacturers most careful compilations were made.

In discussing the testimony adduced the Commission says: "A great majority of the answers indicate that prices are no lower abroad than they are for domestic consumers, and a considerable number indicate that foreign prices are higher."

The argument that the tariff should be taken off those goods which are sold abroad cheaper than at home is fallacious and unwarranted. Such a course would destroy our home manufacturing industry, which employs about 6,000,000 wage-earners, and pays to them about $3,000,000,000 per annum, merely because the manufacturers are willing to forego their profit on a very small percentage of the value of their products in order that they may keep labor employed, and also by increasing the employment of labor through the additional markets which they naturally obtain by such foreign sales.

The president of the great exporting firm of Flint, Eddy & Co., New York, Mr. C. R. Flint, said in his testimony before the Industrial Commission:

> There are times when there is a surplus, when manufacturers will seek a foreign market at a concession. This is true in all manufacturing countries. It does not apply especially in the United States, but it is true in all countries. It is true in England, where there is free trade.

Being asked if there was any difference in that particular between trust-made goods and goods made independently of trusts, he replied that—

> There was far more of a disposition to make concessions before these combinations from the fact that individual manufacturers were under more pressure of necessity to realize on their investments. The great industrial combinations, by reason of the great advantage they have in regulating production, avoid excessive production, and therefore are less likely to be under financial pressure.

United States Consul-General Richard Guenther, in a report to the State Department a few months ago from Frankfort-on-the-Main, Germany, said:

> The manager of a large carbon works writes to the Daily Mail in reference to a proposition of a German firm to establish in England large works for the manufacture of carbons for electric arc lamps that the English factory at Whiton, near Birmingham, has for the past two years turned out carbons for the Government, municipalities, and other users of a quality and prices which compete with German manufacturers.

He adds:

> The amount of "dumping," with a view to killing the carbon industry in this country would astonish the most inveterate importer. Foreign manufacturers sell at something like 40 per cent cheaper than in their own country.

The statement is made that steel rails are sold cheaper in Canada and Mexico than on our own soil. The reason for this is that steel rails at those two points are sold under the sharpest competition. It is the competition with cheap labor. It is not a question with the American manufacturer of selling even at a fair profit in such a market, but rather the question whether he will yield the market at such points and allow foreign competitors to gain a foothold. An additional fact is that the Canadian government is now paying bounty, or bonus, to their own manufacturers—$3 per ton on pig iron, and $3 per ton on steel ingots.

Under these conditions, in the face of a bounty and cheap labor, the American manufacturer considers it business policy to hold such a market rather than yield it to his competitors.

The testimony before the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee during the month of April, 1906, brought out the fact that the price of steel rails in England and Great Britain is $31.50, and the export price in Great Britain is $25; in Germany the home price is $30, the export price, $24; in France the home price is $31, the export price $25.50; in Austria the home price is $31, the export price $25.50; in Belgium the home price is $30, the export price $25; in the United States the home price is $28, the export price $26.60.

These figures are from authorized publications which give the price from time to time. It was further shown that the United States Steel Corporation only manufactures about 60 per cent of the entire output in this country, the rest of the field being occupied by rival independent concerns. This commission further reports:

EFFECTS OF TARIFF REMOVAL.

Removal of the tariff, even in any single industry, should not be lightly considered. When the tariff is essential to any industry its removal would doubtless kill not only the combination, but the industry itself, bringing upon the country attendant evils. Even if the industry is not killed, if severe pressure is brought to bear the industrial combination will not be the first victim, but rather its domestic competitors possessed of less advantages in manufacturing or less financial strength to withstand competition.

The removal of the tariff, then, will not abolish combinations unless it abolishes the industry. The domestic competitors of combinations might be largely cut off by tariff reductions or removal, and the combination survive with moderate profits, and yet be forced to sell its products to domestic customers at much lower prices. But this sharpening of foreign competition by the removal of the tariff would, beyond any doubt, lead American combinations in some cases to enter into international combinations. Already we have the thread industry of England and of the United States, indeed the thread industry of the world, largely in the hands of an international combination.

The borax trade is also organized internationally, and there have been efforts to bring about an international iron and steel combination. In Europe many combinations have crossed national boundaries. The advocates of lowering or removing the tariff in any line of industry should inquire carefully whether its effect might be to produce an international combination, and if so, whether such an international trust would be desirable.

The possible effects upon wages of a reduction or removal of duties must also be considered, and the further possibility of admitting to this country the surplus stocks of European manufacturers at rates so low as to seriously cripple our home manufactures. If our manufacturers extend their foreign markets by selling at low rates abroad, they but follow the example of European manufacturers, who for years have disposed of surplus stocks in this country so as to keep their factories going to their full capacity. What can be gained by helping foreign trusts in order to hurt domestic trusts is not apparent.

Under our present tariff laws our foreign trade has grown enormously in the last eight years. It is still rapidly increasing. This is true alike of exports and imports. We are better customers of other countries than ever before, and at the same time the outside world is buying even more liberally of us. Our exports in 1905 were greater than those of any preceding year. The exports so far reported of 1906 are one hundred and ninety millions in excess of those of the corresponding months of 1905. The imports for the eight months ending February, 1906, are $71,000,000 greater than those of the corresponding period of the previous year. In exports of manufactures there has been an increase of $45,000,000.

The American farmer will be pleased to know that in the eight months ending February, 1906, according to the Bureau of Statistics of the United States, there has been an increase of $133,000,000 in exports of farmers' products. During that same time there has been a decrease of $13,000,000 in importation of food products. The increase in exports is chiefly in wheat, flour, corn, oats, and provisions. This does not look as if protection obstructs the finding of outlets for our industrial production, nor does it indicate that the American farmer is being shut out of foreign markets. The indications are that our foreign trade for 1906 will reach the astounding figure of $3,000,000,000. Our foreign trade has more than doubled in the last ten years. There is no better barometer of industrial activity than the sale of iron and steel. In 1893 we produced 6,000,000 tons of pig iron; in 1895, 8,000,000 tons; in 1898, 11,000,000 tons; in 1901, 15,000,000 tons; in 1903, 18,000,000 tons; in 1905, 23,000,000 tons.

The sale of steel has steadily increased from 1898, when it was 8,000,000 tons, to 14,000,000 tons in 1904. Our exports of iron and steel have increased prodigiously. In 1890 their value was $25,000,000, in 1898 it was $70,000,000, in 1902 it was $98,000,000, in 1905 it was $135,000,000.

The value of our exports of cotton have increased from $17,000,000 in 1898 to $50,000,000 in 1905.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Will it interrupt the gentleman to ask him a question right there?

Mr. BATES. No; I think not.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Now, if it should turn out that the exports and imports of all the countries have increased for the last ten years, would it not indicate that there was a general era of prosperity all over the world rather than our tariff had made an extraordinary year of prosperity here?

Mr. BATES. Why, Mr. Chairman, it might indicate that, and it would indicate more; that the daily cry from the gentleman's side of this Chamber that the American people are being oppressed; that they are poverty stricken; that our laboring people are ground down in hunger and penury is not borne out by the facts, and that there is a rising tide of prosperity shown in this country. There is, however, no such increase in prosperity in other countries as in our own.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Is it not that there is a rising tide of prosperity all over the world? Another question. Of course I do not want to inject my speech into yours. If it is true, as you stated a while ago, that steel rails sell in all the rest of the foreign countries above what they do in the United States, then what sense is there in making this tariff on steel rails and keeping rails out of the United States?

Mr. BATES. I did not give the price of steel rails in the United States. Besides that, we do not want to let down the tariff and allow this country to be made the dumping ground of the cheap labor of other lands. This would surely happen unless we reduced our labor to the starvation rate paid abroad.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Well, the price here is $28 a ton, as a rule, and you said $31 and something in England.

Mr. BATES. I will say to my friend from Missouri that it is because in England, while they sell to their own home consumers at $31.50, they sell abroad at $25 a ton.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Now, take that statement. Where does the gentleman get the evidence from to support that statement?

Mr. BATES. I get it from testimony adduced before a committee of this House.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Now, if our steel-rail manufacturers can afford to sell our steel rails abroad for $20 or $21 a ton, then how can their market be in danger by taking this tariff off when you say the cheapest rails sold in Europe are $24 a ton?

Mr. BATES. I do not think the statistics show that there is any profit in steel manufacturers selling rails at such a price as the gentleman has named, and I do not think he can show that any sales have been made at those figures.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Do you not know that the second largest manufacturer of steel rails in this country, when sitting on the floor of this House, as a Member of it, said that steel rails could be made at $12 a ton, if you take off the tariff, and make plenty of profit to sell them at $16?

Mr. BATES. I think that was one of the extravagant statements that the gentleman, formerly from Ohio, on this floor, loved to indulge in.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. But he did make that statement, and he was one of the largest manufacturers of steel rails at that time.

Mr. BATES. I do not know how much he was interested in manufacture of steel rails. He was interested in many, many other matters. I do not think he had any special knowledge of the matter.

Mr. PAYNE. I will ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania if it is not a fact that that manufacturer of steel rails was manufacturing patent street-railway rails, and that he was, of course, without competition from any place in the world, tariff or no tariff? He had patents, hundreds of patents, that absolutely cut off all competition.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Is it not true that in the manufacture of steel rails he had such success as to have made about $7,000,000?

Mr. BATES. I think the man got rich, but I think the gentleman will recognize a difference in the price of iron that produced steel rails at the time Mr. Johnson made his speech in the House and the price of iron to-day.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. When did he make that speech?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. In 1894.

Mr. PAYNE. Back in 1893 or 1894.

Mr. BATES. That was not a good year.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Suppose you add to it the extraordinary cost?

Mr. PAYNE. In 1894 he was here and voted for the Wilson tariff bill, and voted for it notwithstanding the fact that there was a large protective duty on rails at that time——

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Let me ask the gentleman from New York a question——

Mr. PAYNE (continuing). And it passed this House.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Let me ask the gentleman who he said it was voted for the Wilson tariff bill?

Mr. PAYNE. This man Johnson. Tom Johnson, of Ohio.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. He voted against it, and begged me on the floor of this House to vote against it, and I wish to Heaven I had. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. PAYNE. It was the best that the great Democratic party could do.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. No; it was not the best that the Democratic party could do.

Mr. PAYNE. And a good deal better than they will ever try to do again.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. No; the bill that the great Democratic party passed through this House was a good tariff bill.

Mr. PAYNE. Oh, but that bill passed through this House with a protective duty on steel rails, and Mr. Johnson voted for it when it passed the House.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. No, sir. Mr. Johnson never voted for the Wilson bill.

Mr. PAYNE. He voted against the Senate amendments. That is what he voted against. He voted for the bill as it passed the House.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Of course he voted against the Senate amendments, and he voted against the bill on its final passage in this House.

Mr. PAYNE. No; he did not. He voted against concurring in the Senate amendments.

Mr. WILLIAMS. In answer to a question from the gentleman from Missouri, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BATES] replied that his statement that steel-rail makers in Great Britain sold rails at one price there and at another price for export was founded upon testimony before a committee of this House.

Mr. BATES. The uncontradicted testimony.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will he please give the House now the name of the witness or witnesses who so testified.

Mr. BATES. I have no objection. The testimony was uncontradicted testimony before the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Who were the witnesses? It was contradicted, by the way. The gentleman said it was uncontradicted. Now, yesterday I quoted——

Mr. BATES. I object to having the gentleman inject his speech into the body of mine.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am not injecting a speech. I am asking the gentleman a question, and instead of answering it he proceeds to make a statement, and that statement is unwarranted, because I yesterday showed four witnesses who contradicted it.

Mr. BATES. I object to the gentleman making a speech in my time.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, I ask the gentleman for the names of the witnesses. My question was the names of the witnesses.

Mr. BATES. I will give you one. I remember the name of one, and that was the president of the board of directors of the United States Steel Corporation, Mr. E. H. Gary.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Who else?

Mr. BATES. I do not remember the names.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will the gentleman, if he can find anybody else, put his name in the RECORD with his speech?

Mr. BATES. Possibly. I do not think the gentleman ought to dictate to me what I shall put in my speech.

Mr. PAYNE. The gentleman had better make his own speech.

Mr. HULL. I would make my own speech in my own way.

Mr. BATES. Do you deny that statement of Mr. Gary?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I absolutely deny it, and defy any corroboration or support of it from any authoritative source.

Mr. BATES. Where is your authority for denying it?

Mr. WILLIAMS. My authority is that there is no corroboration of it from any other source. [Laughter on Republican side.]

Mr. BATES. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. WILLIAMS. The gentleman has asked me a question. Now, will the gentleman let me answer it?

Mr. BATES. I asked the gentleman his authority for denying that statement.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It will only take me a minute to answer the question.

Mr. BATES. Is it possible that the gentleman, out of his own inner consciousness, can evolve information that will contradict the testimony of Mr. Gary, who knows all about the business?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will indulge me just a moment——

Mr. BATES. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will not disturb him long. I asked the gentleman for the name of the witness or witnesses. He has given me the name of one of the officers of the United States steel trust, the very people who were charged with this offense against the public. Now I ask him, if there are any other witnesses except this interested witness, please to put the names of the other witnesses and their testimony in the RECORD with his speech.

Mr. PAYNE. I will ask the gentleman if there is any witness on the other side except the interested witness from Mississippi, who knows nothing about the business practically.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The gentleman can not make that statement uncontradicted upon this floor. I yesterday produced the names of four witnesses, and they will be in the RECORD tomorrow, and the gentleman's ipse dixit can not do away with them, and you knew that I would produce them when you made that statement, if you listened to what I said.

Mr. PAYNE. The gentleman from New York did not know it, and the gentleman from Mississippi had no reason to suppose that the gentleman from New York knew it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I said the gentleman knew it if he had listened to what I said before.

Mr. PAYNE. The gentleman from New York did not hear any such statement.

Mr. BATES. I desire to say, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman from Mississippi called the chairman of the board of directors of the United States Steel Corporation an interested witness. I do not believe that the gentleman [Mr. Gary] is half as much interested in the item of the price of steel for domestic and foreign output in Great Britain as is the gentleman from Mississippi. I do not believe that item would affect the financial or any other interest of Mr. Gary half as much as it affects the political future of the gentleman from Mississippi, because that one fact tumbles the card house that he and his colleague from Mississippi [Mr. BYRD] and the watch detective, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY], have been trying to build up in this House for the last week—to wit, the fact that the foreign price of manufactured goods is cheaper than the domestic price, and therefore warrants an assault on the protective-tariff laws of this country. And when we show this same state of facts exists in free-trade England the whole card house falls, and the gentleman from Mississippi must know it. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee rose.

Mr. BATES. Now, Mr. Chairman, I decline to yield further.

The speech delivered in this House a few weeks ago by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. BYRD] would lead us to believe that the working people of this country were at the present time in dire distress. I wish to call attention to the increase in the amount of money on deposit in the savings banks of the United States, and, what is more significant, the increase in the number of the depositors. In 1890 there were about 4,000,000 depositors in the savings banks of this country; in 1896 there were 5,000,000; in 1900 there were 6,000,000; in 1905 there were 7,700,000.

The amounts of money they have deposited have increased $1,250,000,000 in the last ten years, or from $1,700,000,000 in 1894 to $2,000,000,000 in 1898, and $3,100,000,000 in 1905.

The value of the farm animals of the United States has more than doubled in the last ten years. In 1896 it was $1,700,000,000; in 1906 it was $3,600,000,000.

And now a word as to the cost of living to the people of the United States. It is not disputed that the wage-earners of the United States receive far higher wages than is paid in any other country on the globe.

Mr. OLMSTED. Will the gentleman allow me a question right there?

Mr. BATES. I will yield for a question.

Mr. OLMSTED. The gentleman from Mississippi stated that Tom Johnson had stated that if the tariff was removed he could make rails at $12 a ton and sell at $16 a ton at a profit. I would like to ask my colleague if he knows any way in which the removal of the tariff would enable a manufacturer to make rails at a less cost unless he paid less for the manufacture?

Mr. BATES. It would be absolutely impossible, because from the moment the ore is raised from the ground up in Minnesota until the time it is sold as a finished product labor is the large ingredient of its cost.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Well, now, Mr. Chairman, since the gentleman is called back to the question of steel rails, I would like to ask him a leading question and get him to answer it if he can.

Mr. BATES. I am glad the gentleman put in any qualification.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I put it in because I am not certain that the gentleman has the information or anybody else. The question is this: Do our steel-rail manufacturers sell at a loss or a profit when they sell American steel rails at $21 a ton?

Mr. OLMSTED. They don't sell any at that price.

Mr. BATES. Sometimes at a loss. If there is any profit, it is so small that it could not be considered a profit, considering the cost of production and the wear and tear of machinery and all that.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The gentleman's colleague [Mr. OLMSTED] says that they don't sell any. I think the gentleman must be a lineal descendant of Doubting Thomas.

Mr. BATES. I do not know where the gentleman from Missouri gets authority to say that they do sell them.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. James J. Hill ought to be pretty fair evidence on the sale of steel rails.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee rose.

Mr. BATES. Now, Mr. Chairman, I can not yield further; I have only fifteen minutes remaining.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Very well.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The gentleman stated a while ago that a few years ago we exported $29,000,000 worth of steel and this year $135,000,000 worth. I want to ask him if that $135,000,000 was sold in Europe at a loss?

Mr. BATES. I do not suppose that it was.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. They claim that the exports were sold at a loss. I was wondering how you could increase the exports so much and sell at a loss and still keep the concerns running.

Mr. BATES. They have sold these exports in competition with the whole world. There is sharp competition in this country as well as abroad. At present the demand for steel products is great, and by making large sales we have in most cases still sold at a fair profit.

We have in this country a higher order of civilization than elsewhere. If, then, the consumers of the United States pay more for the necessaries and comforts of life than they would under a low wage scale, they are simply contributing to the maintenance of that civilization, intelligence, comfort, happiness which makes the people of this country conspicuous among the nations of the world. Whether we pay more for the necessities of life than those in other countries who work for a lower wage, is wholly immaterial. That is not the question. The real question is, Does it pay them to do it?

Tariff laws encourage men with money to open mines, build factories, establish industries, which could not exist were it not for the tariff laws which shield them from foreign competition. This creates a demand for labor. A protective tariff, then, becomes a protection to opportunity. If the people are given opportunity for employment, they will fix their own wage rate. If these opportunities are destroyed, it is impossible to satisfy them. The wants of men are satisfied through the efforts of labor. The main arguments on the other side of this Chamber seem to be based upon the narrow demands of man as an individual, with no reference whatever to his relation to society. It is the doctrine of individualism; the cold, cruel doctrine of the survival of the fittest. It is the doctrine of Cobden, of John Stuart Mill, of David Ricardo, and the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

John Bright conceded a vital point in the controversy in 1886 when he admitted that the one way by which free competition can be met and home factories preserved is by a reduction of wages. This, then, is the only alternative. Reduce the tariff on competing products, admit freer importations, and then only by reducing wages and degrading labor are our industries to be defended and carried on. The American market is worth more than twice as much to us as all the foreign markets combined even if we could possess those foreign markets exclusively. What would it profit us to tear down our home market and gain the whole world of markets?

The tariff bill that would enable foreign goods to compete freely with our own products ought to be labeled, "A bill to promote the welfare of the people of Leeds, Bristol, and other cities of England and the Continent at the expense of the laboring people of the United States."

The idea that we might sell everything for a good price and buy everything cheap is most fascinating. What does it mean to buy in the cheapest market? It simply means that the American people are to buy their glass, earthen and china ware, cottons, woolens, silks, linens, tools, machinery, hardware, cutlery, iron, steel, and in fact every manufactured article in Europe; that they shall cease entirely buying of home producers, unless our manufacturers will sell these articles cheaper than they can be purchased from any other people of the earth.

It means that we will buy our food and farm products in Canada, the Argentine Republic, or wherever they can be bought at the lowest prices. It means that the purchasers of other countries shall buy where they can get goods the cheapest, hence the purchasers of the world would not come to the United States to buy their manufactured goods or farm products, unless they can buy them cheaper here than in any other country. Instead, then, of selling there we would be reduced to the necessity of selling cheap or not at all, excepting, of course, as we might produce a superior article or something that can not be obtained elsewhere. We could only become sellers by selling for a lower price than anyone else. It means that the cost of production below the rest of the world must necessarily follow. It means the invoking of the law of the "survival of the fittest." It means that those industries that could not stand the struggle should perish. It means that capital, if there is any left from the ruin that would be wrought, must seek other investment or go into hiding and be unprofitable. It means that laborers thrown out of work must find employment in some other industries, but it means also that the other industries must always be those in which the commodities can be produced cheaper than elsewhere. It means that to enable us to sell in the best markets we must undersell all competitors. There would thus ensue an entire revolution in the methods and conduct of business here, and leveling down through every channel to the very lowest line of our competitors. Our habits of life would have to change, our wages cut down 50 per cent or more, our mansions exchanged for hovels. This is what would necessarily flow in the wake of free trade. All goods would be cheap, but how costly when measured by the degredation that would ensue.

It is a principle as old as the hills and everlasting as the unchanging law that when goods are cheapest men are poorest; and the most distressing experiences in this country or in all human history have been when everything was lowest and cheapest when measured in money, but highest and dearest when measured by labor. The best unit of value is what a day's labor will produce. It seems to me we have had full experience of cheap times in this country. Goods were cheap in this country from 1855 to 1860. Yet the farmer could hardly raise enough money to pay his taxes. The wail of President Buchanan, in his message to Congress in 1857, states the case. He said:

> With unsurpassed plenty in all the production and all the elements of natural wealth our manufacturers have suspended, our public works are retarded, our private enterprises of different kinds abandoned, and thousands of useful laborers are thrown out of employment and reduced to want. We have possessed all the elements of material wealth in rich abundance, and yet, notwithstanding all these advantages, our country, in its monetary interests, is in a deplorable condition.

Such a condition of affairs continued until the Morrill protection law of 1861 was enacted. When again the Democracy was intrusted with power, in 1892, 1893, 1894, and 1895, and struck down protective tariff laws, we had cheap goods again in this country. We had 3,000,000 laboring people out of employment, and had hunger and desolation everywhere all over this land. How like the words of his Democratic predecessor were the words of President Cleveland in his annual message to Congress in 1893, after a free-trade Administration had been voted in. He said:

> With plenteous crops, with abundant promise of remunerative production and manufacture, with unusual invitation to safe investment, and with satisfactory assurance of business enterprise, suddenly financial fear and distrust have sprung up on every side, numerous moneyed institutions have suspended, surviving corporations and individuals are content to keep in hand all money they are usually anxious to loan. Loss and failure have involved every branch of business.

This was a little over a year after the people had elected an entire Administration pledged to what the world knows as "free trade."

When did we ever lower the duties in this country that hard times and a depleted Treasury and gold flowing out of the country did not ensue? When were the higher duties ever restored that general prosperity did not follow? When did the Democratic party ever assume power that they did not at once make an assault upon the protective features of the tariff laws? If there is one thing that the school of Bryan, and the school of Cleveland, and in fact all the schools of modern Democracy do agree upon, it is to assail the protective features of the tariff laws of this country whenever possible. I quote as high Democratic authority as Senator GORMAN when I state that "the last and only complete Democratic victory gained in recent years was won because the candidate stated, 'We will not destroy any industry.'" And on that declaration the campaign of 1892 was waged in the East and Middle West, rather than upon the dangerously worded Chicago platform, in which protective tariff was assailed as unconstitutional, and which platform was soon evoked and, as far as possible, formulated into organic law. Were industries destroyed? Ninety-two articles were transferred from the dutiable to the free list by the Wilson bill, as it came from the Democratic Ways and Means Committee or as it passed the House, among them wool, sugar, coal, iron, and lumber. The farmers were stripped of the protection afforded in the McKinley law. Railroads went into the hands of receivers. Banks closed their doors. The smoke of industry ceased to cloud the sky. Three million laboring people were thrown out of employment. Gold left our shores with every ship. The looms and reels and spindles of Bradford and other English cities worked double forces night and day to supply our people with textile fabrics, while the workingmen of America languished, were being fed at soup houses, and begging for bread.

Our steadily increasing foreign trade for the past nine years has been remarkable. It is desirable that it be extended further to dispose of our increase in surplus products. It can be extended by sensible trade arrangements with other countries, by keeping our manufacturers accurately informed of trade conditions of the world, the state of foreign markets, by fostering and upbuilding the American merchant marine, by building an isthmian canal; but we must not endeavor to build up our foreign trade by sacrificing our home markets, because in seeking markets we want the best markets—the best markets are where the people can sell the most products at good prices and have the money paid for them after they have sold them, and that place is here in America, after practically forty years of protective tariff ascendency. [Loud applause.]

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I understand the gentleman in charge of the time on the other side desires us to proceed, and I will yield thirty minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. KNOWLAND].

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. Chairman, in the consideration of the pending naval appropriation bill—which bill I shall support, believing it has received the careful and intelligent consideration of an experienced and well-informed committee—it would seem to be an opportune time to briefly discuss the general policy of shipbuilding at the navy-yards of the Government. I will very frankly declare at the outset that I do not class myself with those who take the extreme view and contend that all Government vessels should be constructed at navy-yards. Such a policy, to my mind, would be as unwise as I deem the present policy to be which assigns to the private shipyards the construction of practically every vessel authorized from year to year by Congress.

I assume the position, which position I shall endeavor to uphold during the course of my remarks, that it is in the line of sound business policy for this Government to thoroughly equip its largest and most important navy-yards for shipbuilding, and for Congress to provide from time to time that a certain number of the new vessels authorized be constructed at Government yards. The result of such a policy would be the retention at these yards of an efficient, skilled, and permanent force of mechanics, and a practical demonstration on the part of the Government that its yards were prepared to satisfactorily construct any vessel authorized by act of Congress. The effect on private contractors would be somewhat analogous to the effect that canals affording facilities for competition by water exercise on railroads in determining rates in certain localities.

I have not a word to say in disparagement of the private shipbuilding plants, which are of importance to our national defense. These vast concerns have been built up as a result of the energy and enterprise of American citizens and have been an important factor in the development of our new Navy, the ships constituting which are equal to those of any nation of the world. But the private shipyards are not, and never have been, without able champions in and out of Congress, and it is safe to conclude that these shipbuilding concerns have received at least fair compensation for all Government work.

We maintain to-day ten navy-yards, located at the following points: Brooklyn, N. Y.; Boston, Mass.; League Island, Pa.; Norfolk, Va.; Portsmouth, N. H.; Pensacola, Fla.; Mare Island, Cal.; Bremerton, Wash.; Charleston, S. C., and Washington, D. C. The Government yards are all advantageously located and several are thoroughly equipped for building the largest vessels, but notwithstanding these favorable conditions let me present some very significant figures demonstrating that the private yards are favored in the building programme and the navy-yards discriminated against. On January 1 of this year there were under construction, in various stages of completion, at the numerous private shipyards the following vessels designed for the Navy: Twelve battle ships, six armored cruisers, three protected cruisers, three scout cruisers, one gunboat, two torpedo boats, and four submarine torpedo boats, the total amount represented in Government contracts held by these private firms aggregating over $80,000,000. In the Government navy-yards there were in course of construction at the same period one battle ship and two training ships, the total amount involved being less than $5,000,000. Let us compare these figures: Thirty-one ships for our new Navy under construction at private yards, and but three ships at navy-yards—over $80,000,000 for private yards and less than five million for the navy-yards of the Government!

Why has the Government adhered to this policy? Prior to 1861 practically all the ships for the Navy were constructed, and satisfactorily, at the Government yards. With the outbreak of the Civil War the exigencies of the times made it impossible for the navy-yards, limited in number and equipment, to meet the tremendous demands suddenly made upon them, the result being that the contract system was created. So strong was the hold gradually obtained by these private contractors, so great an influence have they since wielded, that until very recently it has been impossible to bring about any change of policy. The so-called "political spoils system" was for many years strongly intrenched at the navy-yards, rendering it impossible for the best results to be obtained. These yards furnished employment for innumerable political workers, who were selected irrespective of their fitness for the work to which they were assigned. In many instances foremen totally inexperienced and unqualified were placed over subordinates equally as useless, with the invariable result that the most unsatisfactory work was in many instances turned out, rendering economical construction impossible. The result of this system did much to arouse prejudice against the yards.

Secretary Tracy, of the Navy, declared that the conditions in the yards were "Destructive to the Government service—an ulcer on the naval administration system." In 1891 he issued an order placing all the employees at navy-yards under a system of civil service. Since the issuance of this order the rules have been made more stringent at the yards, and the merit system is gradually being perfected. For skilled and unskilled labor there is a system of registration in charge of a board of labor employment, the most stringent regulations governing the acts of this board. Every applicant must take his turn in the order of his registration, preference being given only to honorably discharged men of the Army and Navy. Political influence absolutely does not avail, as I have found from experience. Every applicant who registers must be a citizen of the United States. He must have a character certificate, signed by a reputable citizen of the applicant's locality, testifying to his character and habits of industry and sobriety. He must also have a trade certificate, signed by the firm or individual for whom he has worked, certifying as to his capacity in said trade. In the employment of foremen, whenever a vacancy occurs, a special board of officers is convened, and a competitive examination held under proper regulations. The result has naturally followed, that the efficiency of the yards has steadily increased. No incapable man is long tolerated. The highest skilled employees are demanded, but to retain such a class of workingmen at the navy-yards the Government must adopt a policy that will insure steady employment.

Whenever an attempt has been made to inaugurate a policy of even limited shipbuilding at Government yards, most formidable opposition has been encountered, some of the arguments advanced against the contemplated policy being most ingenious. Let us consider a few of these objections. It was contended in all seriousness that if an attempt were made to construct one of the modern vessels of warfare at a Government yard the result would be a humiliating failure. Others maintained that, while it might be within the range of possibility that a battle ship could be constructed at a navy-yard, it would consume years of time, and when the ship was finally completed that the particular type of vessel would have become obsolete. A prominent Member of Congress, reputed to be one of the best authorities in all matters pertaining to the Navy, declared with all seriousness that he never expected to live long enough to see a battle ship completed at a navy-yard. I trust that the gentleman has recently visited the New York Navy-Yard where the battle ship Connecticut is nearing completion.

In some quarters it was argued that the cost would be fully 50 per cent greater for every vessel constructed at a Government yard. It was declared by a prominent naval constructor, in a hearing before the House Committee on Naval Affairs, that the cost of material purchased by the Government would be at least 10 per cent higher than if purchased by private contractors; that we could not go into the open market and buy material, which would place us at a great disadvantage. This very constructor, in his annual report for 1902, page 573, makes the following significant admission as to the cost of material purchased by the Government for the Connecticut, refuting absolutely his former contention that the Government could not buy as advantageously as private contractors:

The provisions of specifications—

states the constructor—

and the terms of the contract for the material (steel) have been made in such a manner as to absolutely insure the obtaining of this material at as low a price as that at which it will be supplied to private shipbuilders for the same class of vessels.

The general subject of shipbuilding in Government yards has received particular attention throughout the United States during the past two years owing to the so-called "race" between the battle ships Connecticut and Louisiana. These vessels are exact duplicates. The Connecticut is building at the New York Navy-Yard, while the Louisiana is under construction at the plant of the Newport News Shipbuilding Company. The records of the Navy Department lead the Chief Constructor to estimate that the Connecticut will cost approximately 10 or 15 per cent more than the Louisiana.

These figures I will not attempt to dispute, but throw out the suggestion that an accurate and fair comparison can not be made until both battle ships are in commission. I want the House to bear in mind that in many instances private contractors have realized their chief profit in the building of Government vessels from allowances for "extras," in which category are included changes in plans, bonuses, trial trips, etc. Bonuses, however, are no longer allowed. I wish to call attention to the Department's published statement, issued on February 9 of this year, showing that the cost of alterations in the plans and specifications of the Louisiana at that time had exceeded those on the Connecticut by $21,000. The result of the contest up to this time, in my opinion, vindicates the policy of limited shipbuilding at Government yards, and I will enumerate my reasons for this deduction.

I maintain that the Government is to be congratulated upon the outcome of the construction of this modern battle ship at a navy-yard when we consider the first experience of many of the private shipbuilding plants. Let us cite the case of the Newport News Shipbuilding Company, now building the Louisiana, which firm lost heavily on the first two battle ships contracted for—the Kearsarge and Kentucky—but the experience gained later proved of great value. The cruiser Charleston was the first Government vessel constructed by the Union Iron Works, of San Francisco, and their entire profit consisted of experience. In the construction of the first four vessels of the new Navy—the cruisers Chicago, Boston, Atlanta, and Dolphin—John Roach & Sons, of Chester, Pa., were forced into bankruptcy, and their experience proved of little value in meeting the demands of creditors. The Richmond Locomotive Works tried its hand at shipbuilding, contracting for the cruiser Galveston and two torpedo-boat destroyers, resulting in the failure of that firm. These are but a few instances. There are many others.

The result of the contest is even more remarkable when we recall several facts that must not be lost sight of in the building of these two battle ships. First, eight hours constitute a day's labor in all Government yards, and in addition a certain number of holidays are allowed. In practically all of the private yards, the Union Iron Works, of San Francisco, being excepted, the men work nine and ten hours, with practically no holidays. Is there a Member of this House who would repeal the eight-hour law now applicable to all Government employees? While on this subject I will predict that the time is not far distant when eight hours will constitute a day's labor throughout the United States. The drift is irresistibly in that direction, combat the sentiment as you may. Opposition will not avail, and the eight-hour day will eventually triumph. Secondly, in the case of the Newport News Shipbuilding Company, that plant was thoroughly equipped. Admiral Capps, in his testimony before the House Committee on Naval Affairs during the Fifty-eighth Congress, second session, in this very connection said:

It must be borne in mind that the Newport News yard had the advantage of a completely equipped plant. The building slip was already prepared and overhead crane facilities and other appliances were at hand, and their mechanics had had greater experience in doing this class of work.

The consideration of time is fully as important as the question of cost. Since the construction of the new Navy began, twenty-three years ago, no Government vessel has been constructed as rapidly as the Connecticut. In this connection I will quote from the last annual report (1905) of Admiral Capps, Chief of the Bureau of Construction and Repair. He says:

Work on the Connecticut is progressing very satisfactorily, and but for the delays in the delivery of armor it is more than probable that this vessel would have been the first battle ship to have been completed within contract time since the construction of the Navy began, in 1883.

While the Newport News Shipbuilding Company was rushing work on the Louisiana to keep pace with the Connecticut, the battle ship Virginia, building in this yard, was two years overdue, and has only been turned over within the past few weeks. Private yards have been exasperatingly slow in the completion of Government work. The delays have been scandalous, and while a penalty of $300 per day attached to the contracts, it is universally admitted by naval officials that these penalties were never enforced. So serious did the matter become that Secretary of the Navy Moody, in his annual report for 1902, page 5, called the matter to the attention of the country in the following words:

The general progress of work upon these vessels, particularly those of the larger class, has not been found to be satisfactory. The battle ships were, on the 30th of June, 1902, from ten to twenty-nine months behind contract time, the armored cruisers from four to thirteen months, the protected cruisers from six to eighteen months, while the monitors were from sixteen to nineteen months in arrears.

Speaking of the causes for delay, it has been repeatedly charged that some of the private contractors would temporarily neglect Government contracts for more profitable repair work brought into the yards, the Government work being reserved for slack times.

Secretary Moody, however, was more charitable toward the private contractors, advancing the following reasons for delay:

Delays are due to a lack of training and experience in the technical staff of contractors undertaking for the first time to build naval vessels. This difficulty—is naturally disappearing as the several shipbuilding firms successfully entering the field equip themselves with a trained force. A trained force must be developed.

Mark carefully his words—

What stronger argument than this could be advanced for the thorough equipment of the navy-yards for shipbuilding? The cost of construction naturally decreases with the increase of efficiency of the force. In his report submitted in 1904, Admiral Capps spoke of the condition of the New York yard as follows:

It should be borne in mind that the facilities for doing such work (shipbuilding) at the navy-yard, New York, although now greater than those obtaining at any other navy-yard, were in the beginning quite inadequate.

It is universally admitted by all well-informed naval constructors that the amounts expended for repairs would be materially decreased with an even limited policy of shipbuilding at the navy-yards. A full equipment, such as necessary for shipbuilding, increases the productive value of unskilled labor. Many of the running expenses of a yard would not be materially increased if construction were carried on in conjunction with repair work. Maintenance of plant, clerk hire, and other items might be cited. Both new and repair work can proceed in an economical and rapid manner. Even admitting that the Connecticut cost 10 or 15 per cent more by reason of being constructed in a Government yard, is not the training received by officers and men worth the difference to the nation, particularly in case of war? I maintain that the Government will secure better ships and that the cost for future repairs will be less. The extra 15 per cent goes into the pockets of the workingman and not into the coffers of the trust.

Before touching upon the policy of other nations in dealing with this question I desire to quote briefly from some high naval authorities. Rear-Admiral Philip Hichborn, retired, has always been a strong advocate of limited shipbuilding in navy-yards. No individual has been more intimately associated with the development of the new Navy. His experience has extended over a period of fifty years, having served as apprentice, master shipwright, assistant naval constructor, naval constructor, and Chief of the Bureau of Construction and Repair. While serving in the latter capacity Admiral Hichborn, in 1900, in his annual report, treated the subject as follows:

Much has been said both in favor of and against the building of vessels in the navy-yards. The progress made in the improvement of yard plants and the ever-increasing need for a permanent skilled force ready for and capable of at all times taking up repairs of any character which the growth in "matériel" of the Navy entails, makes it desirable that the question should be given careful consideration. There is at the present time, in view of the prosperous condition of the shipbuilding industry and the number of naval vessels building and appropriated for, sufficient work to permit the assignment of a portion of the building work to the Government yards without there being a question of the withdrawal or withholding of necessary support and assistance, through work given out, to a private industry, the maintenance of which in a high state of efficiency is unquestionably of national importance.

These conditions make it possible to eliminate from the discussion any questions of policy except such as affect economy and efficiency. It has been the history of all the iron and steel navies in existence to-day that the building of the vessels was at first entirely confided to private industry, and that the existence of the nucleus of a steel fleet made it necessary that the governments who were their owners should themselves provide for repairing these vessels; and that, having provided the necessary plant for this purpose, the provision for maintenance of the equally necessary though vastly more difficult thing to attain, viz, efficient working organization and adequate efficient personnel, forced them to undertake in their navy-yards a portion of the new building work. The execution of a certain amount of building work at the chief Government yards is necessary to the maintenance of such navy-yard staffs as a complete and efficient naval organization requires; and that, whatever disadvantages such a course entails, they are more than compensated for in the end. It is believed that we have reached that stage in a naval development—still considerably behind our national development—which forces upon us serious consideration of this step which other naval powers have found necessary and expedient. At the outset the disadvantages to be labored under will be considerable. Time and experience will do much toward the alleviation or possibly the entire removal of many of these. While, under existing conditions, in the case of the first vessels built in our navy-yards it may be expected that the cost will not be greatly different from—may even be somewhat greater than for—the same work executed by contract in the private shipyards, the Bureau believes that such a course once entered upon would demonstrate its desirability and practicability in an increased efficiency and economy in naval administration, regarded as a whole, without interference with a judicious policy of such Government encouragement of the shipbuilding industry as will keep the greatest number of establishments in a position to undertake and execute promptly any naval work which may be required.

Admiral Capps, chief of the Bureau of Construction and Repair, in his annual report for 1904, says upon this subject:

One of the principal objects to be obtained in the building of vessels in Government yards is the maintenance of the organization of the yard and the provision of suitable work for experienced mechanics during the absence of the fleet.

To this I will add the testimony of Secretary of the Navy Morton, contained in his annual report for 1904, in which he speaks of the advantages of thoroughly equipped yards:

Doubtless the fact that there is at command at navy-yards the necessary plant and a force of men trained in such work will have a tendency to keep down prices, and the equipment of Government yards for building war ships will have its advantage in time of national emergency.

Nearly all the great nations of the world have given the subject of shipbuilding in Government yards most careful consideration. And what has been the result? Practically all the great naval powers are building to-day a portion of their ships in Government yards. Let us first cite the case of England. Of the six battle ships now building four are under construction in Government yards, including the Dreadnaught.

My figures are from the Office of Naval Intelligence, and were obtained last week. Of the ten armored cruisers under construction, Government yards are building four and private contractors six. The question naturally suggests itself as to the comparative cost, and I am able to answer this query by quoting the highest possible authority. In the parliamentary debates of last year (1905), volume 148, page 597, when the naval budget was under discussion, the question was asked of the secretary of the Admiralty, Hon. E. G. Pretyman, as to whether private yards could build as economically as Government yards. I might explain that in England the Admiralty board has the general management of maritime affairs and of all matters relating to the royal navy. In reply to the question, Mr. Pretyman said that in his opinion, after considering the question of cost very carefully, there was little difference between private and Government yards. "A good private yard," he declared, "would build at about the same cost as Government dock yards," it being inferred from this statement that the advantage, if any, was with the Government yards. A further inquiry elicited the information from him that as high a wage was paid at the Government dock yards as by private builders. And right here I want to quote from a work entitled the "British Navy," by a highly competent critic, A. Stenzel, captain of the imperial German navy, retired. On page 92 he says, speaking of England's policy of building in Government dock yards:

Previously it was thought that the royal yards worked slowly and expensively; the numerous and to some extent serious shortcomings in their organization and workings may have justified this opinion; but of late years the contrary has been proved by actual experience. For example, the mighty battle ship the Royal Sovereign, of more than 14,000 tons displacement, was built in Portsmouth with remarkable speed; she was finished, stood all the necessary trials satisfactorily, and was put in commission as fully prepared for war and added to the channel squadron within two years and eight months from the date when the first keel-plate was laid down. The still larger battle ship, the Magnificent, of 14,900 tons displacement, was constructed at Chatham with such speed that she was floated out of the dry dock exactly in one year, and put in commission twenty months after the first keel-plate was laid down, and it is intended to produce the newest battleships of equal size in similarly short periods of time. These achievements stand unmatched, and the large private yards, that have been intrusted with the building of sister ships can not keep pace with the work of the royal dock yards. Moreover, the cost of production in the royal yards is somewhat less than in the private yards. The battle ship Empress of India, of 14,150 tons displacement, built in a royal yard, cost a trifle over £861,000; the Resolution, also of 14,150 tons displacement, built in a private yard, cost nearly £883,120, a difference of upward of £22,000 in favor of the royal yard.

In Germany the Government is building in its yards one of the six battle ships under construction. Of the six small cruisers, the Government is building four and private contractors but two. France has under construction nine battle ships, three of which are being built in Government yards. Of the armored cruisers, the Government is building four and private contractors one. Thirty-two submarines are under construction in Government yards.

Now we come to the new great naval power in the Orient, awakened Japan. This nation is quick to take advantage of the experience gained by other great powers. Her naval officers have given the subject of shipbuilding the most careful study, visiting every great nation. What has been the result? Japan has to-day under construction four battle ships. Two are being built at Government yards. She has under way five armored cruisers, and the entire five at Government yards. Fourteen of the twenty-four torpedo-boat destroyers the Government is building.

I shall insert in the RECORD the full statement as furnished me through the courtesy of the efficient Office of Naval Intelligence, under charge of Captain Rodgers:

OFFICE OF NAVAL INTELLIGENCE,
April 28, 1906.

List of ships building at Government and private shipbuilding yards.

ENGLAND.

Name.	Class.	Port.	Government or private.
Dreadnaught	Battle ship	Portsmouth	Government.
Lord Nelson	do	Barrow (Palmer)	Private.
Agamemnon	do	Glasgow (Beardmore).	Do.
Africa	do	Chatham	Government.
Britannia	do	Portsmouth	Do.
Hibernia	do	Devonport	Do.
Minotaur	Armored cruiser	do	Do.
Shannon	do	Chatham	Do.
Defence	do	Pembroke	Do.
Warrior	do	do	Do.
Cochrane	do	Glasgow	Private.
Natal	do	Barrow	Do.
Achilles	do	Newcastle	Do.
Invincible	do	do	Do.
"A"	do	Clydebank	Do.
"B"	do	Glasgow	Do.

Torpedo-boats destroyers building at private yards: Six at Thornycroft & Co., two at Yarrow & Co., six at White & Co., two at Armstrong & Co., one at Connell, Laird & Co., one at Hawthorne-Leslie Company. Ten submarines at Barrow.

GERMANY.

Name.	Class.	Port.	Government or private.
Lothringen	Battle ship	Dantzic	Private.
Deutschland	do	Kiel	Do.
Pommern	do	Stettin	Do.
Hanover	do	Dantzic	Government.
Q	do	Kiel	Private.
R	do	Dantzic	Do.
Ersatz Bayern	do
Ersatz Aachsen
C	Armored cruiser	Bremen	Do.
Scharnhorst	do	Hamburg	Do.
E	do
Leipzig	Small cruiser	Bremen	Do.
Danzig	do	Dantzic	Government.
Konigsberg	do	Kiel	Do.
Ersatz Wacht	do	Stettin	Private.
Ersatz Blitz	do	Kiel	Government.
O	do	Dantzic	Do.

Six torpedo-boat destroyers and one submarine building at private yards at Kiel.

FRANCE.

Name.	Class.	Port.	Government or private.
République	Battle ship	Brest	Government.
Démocratie	do	do	Do.
Patrie	do	La Seyne	Private.
Justice	do	do	Do.
Verité	do	Bordeaux	Do.
Liberte	do	St. Nozaire	Do.
A 15 and A 18	do	Brest	Government.
A 16 and A 19	do	La Seyne	Private.
A 17 and A 20	do	do	Do.
Ernest Rénan	Armored cruiser	St. Nozaire	Do.
Jules Michelet	do	Lorient	Government.
Victor Hugo	do	do	Do.
Edgar Quinet	do	Brest	Do.
Waldeck Rousseau	do	Lorient	Do.

Twenty-three torpedo-boat destroyers building; 16 in private yards and 7 in Government yards. Seventy-five torpedo boats building at private yards and 32 submarines at Government yards.

List of ships building at Government and private shipbuilding yards—Continued.

JAPAN.

Name.	Class.	Port.	Government or private.
Kashima	Battle ship	Elswick, England	Private.
Katori	do	Vickers, England	Do.
Satsuma	do	Yokosuka, Japan	Government.
Aki	do	Kure, Japan	Do.
Ikoma	Armored cruiser	do	Do.
Tsukuba	do	do	Do.
Ibuki	do	do	Do.
Kurama	do	Yokosuka, Japan	Do.
Tone	Protected cruiser	Sasebo	Do.

Twenty-four torpedo-boat destroyers building, fourteen in Government yards and ten in private yards.

In the matter of the two-fleet colliers mentioned in the pending bill, I wish to congratulate the members of the Committee on Naval Affairs for providing an amount sufficient to allow the will of Congress as twice expressed, to be carried out.

The naval appropriation bill for 1904, as it passed the House of Representatives, provided for the building of two colliers with a speed of sixteen knots. When the bill reached the Senate, Senator Perkins, of California, ranking member of the Committee on Naval Affairs, amended the particular section of the bill, stipulating that these colliers should be constructed at navy-yards, one on the Pacific and the other on the Atlantic coast, the New York and Mare Island, California, navy-yards being designated. The Senate amendment was concurred in by the House after a spirited contest, the conferees having failed to agree. A year passed and work was not begun. When Congres convened, the then Secretary of the Navy requested that he be given authority to construct these colliers at private shipyards, claiming that the Mare Island Navy-Yard was not equipped. Acting on the suggestion of the Secretary, the Committee on Naval Affairs attempted, in the naval appropriation bill, to rescind the former action of Congress, but the paragraph in question was ruled out on a point of order made by Representative Bell, of California, it being rightfully held that an attempt was being made to change existing law. I then offered an amendment on the floor of the House appropriating $175,000 to provide the requisite equipment for the Mare Island Navy-Yard, which amendment was adopted by a vote of nearly two to one.

Another year rolled around and still work did not commence. When the present Congress convened, we were told that the delay had been caused owing to the fact that it was mandatory that these colliers be constructed at navy-yards, and as a consequence would cost more than the amount originally appropriated. An investigation brought out the following facts: It was found that since the original estimates were submitted additions and changes were made in the plans, adding greatly to the original cost. As an instance, a double bottom was added for protection, the theory being that the colliers would be subject to attack. One bureau wanted provision made for an emergency repair shop, and this was granted. Another bureau wanted the colliers fitted to carry stores, oils, and other supplies, while still another demand was made that these vessels be serviceable as transports, and provisions were made for the accommodation of two commanding officers and for eighteen state rooms and accessories, these requests all being granted and all adding to the original cost, this additional cost being charged to navy-yard construction.

These facts are practically admitted by the Chief of the Bureau of Construction and Repair, Admiral Capps, in his testimony before the House Committee on Naval Affairs, Fifty-eighth Congress, third session. In explanation of the additional amount asked for he said it was necessary, "since the requirements of the various departments have made it necessary to make provision for carrying ammunition and stores and a very large crew." During the same hearing he again said:

Since the original estimate was submitted it has been necessary to make provision for the carrying of ammunition, stores, and a very much larger number of men than was first contemplated.

I recognize that the additions made were necessary and will add much to the serviceability of the colliers, but I do take exception to the statement that the additional cost can be wholly charged to the fact that Congress made it mandatory that these colliers be built at navy-yards. The price of material used in ship construction has increased since the original estimates were made over two years ago, as I can prove by documentary evidence.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I would ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that either in the report of the Secretary of the Navy or in the report of the Chief Constructor for the last fiscal year it is admitted that by reason of the changes in the plans it would be impossible to build these colliers even by contract at the original price?

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. Chairman, I don't recall having seen such a statement in the report of either official, but the Secretary of the Navy admitted to me and to Senators Perkins and Flint of my State, when we called upon him to inquire why work had not commenced on these colliers, that he did not think private contractors would now build them for the amount originally appropriated.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman will find it in one of the reports, and I will put it in the RECORD.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of a great navy, and have always maintained that this mighty nation can not afford to be parsimonious in providing the best and most modern ships. For my part, I would willingly cast my vote for two great battle ships instead of one, as the bill provides. Let us not economize on the Navy, for such economy is false and might prove disastrous.

In conclusion, I wish to remind this House that the American people, actuated by the highest patriotic motives, have voted millions, through their Representatives in Congress, for a great navy—a navy that has never failed to "make good" when put to the test. But the people have a right to demand that the navy-yards, owned and maintained by the Government, be accorded a "square deal" in the building programme. [Prolonged applause.]

Mr. MEYER. Mr. Chairman, I yield thirty minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS].

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of this House to some things that the President of the United States said in a message he sent to this House a few days ago in reference to the decision of Judge Humphrey in the packing-house cases at Chicago, not because there is anything new in what the President said, not because he announced any principles that are strange or any doctrine not heretofore announced, but rather for the contrary reason, because he repeated in that message some things that he has said on several notable occasions in the past. I will read the language that I wish to refer to, language which I think every lawyer in this House will indorse:

Our system of criminal jurisprudence has descended to us from a period when the danger was lest the accused should not have his rights adequately preserved, and it is admirably framed to meet this danger, but at present the danger is just the reverse; that is, the danger nowadays is not that the innocent man will be convicted of crime, but that the guilty man will go scot-free.

Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the House to that language and some other language similar to it that the President has used to call the attention of the country and of the Members of the Republican side of this Chamber to the fact that the Republican party not only ignores what the President says, but fails and refuses utterly to follow in his good lead. He made similar statements to this in his speech in Little Rock last fall, but I will not stop to read that now. When we met last December he called the attention of Congress to this same situation, and in his annual message used these words:

In my last message I asked the attention of Congress to the urgent need of action to make our criminal law more effective, and I most earnestly request that you pay heed to the report of the Attorney-General on this subject.

I desire now to suggest that the Republican majority of this House did not pay heed to the suggestions of either the Attorney-General or of the President of the United States. He continues:

Centuries ago it was especially needful to throw every safeguard around the accused. The danger then was lest he should be wronged by the State. The danger is now exactly the reverse. Our laws and customs tell immensely in favor of the criminal and against the interests of the public he has wronged. Some antiquated and outworn rules which once safeguarded the threatened rights of private citizens now merely work harm to the general body politic. The criminal law of the United States stands in urgent need of revision.

The President did not stop there, Mr. Chairman. He went further. He did not stop with merely this general charge, but he specified and filed a bill of particulars, and further on in his message he says this:

It is gratifying to note that the States and municipalities of the West, which have most at stake in the welfare of the Indians, are taking up this subject and are trying to supply, in a measure, at least, the abdication of its trusteeship forced upon the Government. Nevertheless, I would urgently press upon the attention of the Congress the question whether some amendment of the internal-revenue laws might not be of aid in prosecuting those malefactors known in the Indian country as "bootleggers," who are engaged at once in defrauding the United States Treasury of taxes and, what is far more important, in debauching the Indians by carrying liquors illicitly into Territories still completely under Federal jurisdiction.

I wish to call the attention of gentlemen on the other side of this Chamber particularly to those last two or three lines—those gentlemen who believe that because we get revenue from the issuance of these internal-revenue licenses nothing ought to interfere, even the good of the citizens or the good of the States or the due administration of the criminal law. I desire to show in that particular how far the Republican party has fallen short. You passed an Indian appropriation bill a few weeks ago, as you did in the last two Congresses since the President first sent this message, each bill carrying an appropriation of $10,000 to assist in enforcing the law in the Indian Territory against the illicit sale of liquors, and during all this time the internal-revenue collector had in his possession evidence that would have convicted the men who are engaged in this illicit sale, and he refused to go into court and give that testimony and refused to permit the courts of the Territory or of the States to have the information which he has; and yet this bill, pending here, as it has now for three winters in the Republican House, can not get a vote, can not get consideration on this floor.

You have voted, since the President sent this message in, $30,000 to support the law which the internal-revenue collector refuses to permit you to enforce, and then sends in his annual report to this House stating that 160 men have what we loosely call internal-revenue licenses in the Indian Territory. In other words, 160 men have paid taxes in the Indian Territory to sell as retail liquor dealers and as retail dealers in malt liquors, and when the effort is made to prosecute and bring them to justice, when the internal-revenue collector is summoned to testify that they have paid these taxes, he declines to testify, and declines to let the officers have a copy of his books. I introduced a bill in the first session of the Fifty-eighth Congress requiring him to do that, and I have been urging it on this floor and off this floor ever since, but I have utterly failed so far to get it considered here. Now, gentlemen, you have come in here, a great majority of you have been dragged into this House of Representatives, holding on to Theodore Roosevelt's coat tail. That is the way you got the majority you have over there now [applause on the Democratic side], and yet you utterly decline to accept his good advice when every Democrat on this side is ready to go with you and put that law on the books. After two years I finally got the matter before the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. PAYNE. Does the gentleman think he can get his colleague from Mississippi to consent to unanimous consent to take up the bill in which the gentleman is so much interested?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Yes, sir; my colleague did not object when I asked unanimous consent, but it was a Republican on that side of the House who objected. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. PAYNE. Do you believe you can get him to do it now?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. After the Republicans objected to unanimous consent to consider the bill I offered it as an amendment to the legislative bill when the appropriation was made to pay these internal-revenue collectors, and a Republican made the point of order against it there and declined to let us vote on it. After that I offered it as an amendment again. Now, think of it. I offered it as an amendment the other day to the bill providing for the collection of internal revenue in Porto Rico, and the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] was guilty of the exquisite cruelty of making the point of order against it when the gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD] was in the chair, and thereby made him its unwilling executioner. [Laughter and applause.]

The Ways and Means Committee finally, at my urgent request, instructed the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] to call this bill up under suspension of the rules, and so let us have a vote upon it. I ask the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means if he knows why that has not been done?

Mr. PAYNE. I did not hear the gentleman.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Why has not the gentleman from Pennsylvania asked to suspend the rules of this House and pass this bill in pursuance of the instructions of your committee?

Mr. PAYNE. I do not remember whether they instructed him or not.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. They did. I will refresh your memory.

Mr. PAYNE. I do not know whether they did or not.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I will tell you why he did not; it was because he could not get the consent of the Speaker of this Republican House. He asked the Speaker for recognition to move to suspend, in accordance with your instructions, but he refused to recognize him for that purpose.

Mr. PAYNE. I am inclined to think they did instruct him.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Well, I will state this: The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] told me that they did, and a number of other gentlemen told me, and my friend from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], a member of the committee by my side, says it is a fact, and the reason I have just given is why we can not get the matter before the House. The gentleman from Pennsylvania did ask consent. He asked the Speaker to let us take it up under suspension of the rules, where it would take a two-thirds majority of this House to pass it, but even under these hard conditions we can not get it considered. You would rather spend $30,000 even in a vain and fruitless effort to enforce the law than to pass this bill, that will not only apply to the Indian Territory, but will apply to all the other States and all the other territory of these United States.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Certainly.

Mr. PALMER. Why did not the courts make these people testify and put them in jail if they did not testify?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. The courts did that very thing, and a writ of habeas corpus was sued out and carried to the Supreme Court of the United States and there they released the man and said the order of the Secretary of the Treasury, issued through the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, was a reasonable regulation, and that the collector could not be made to testify as long as this regulation stood on the books. The case is reported in 124 Federal Reports and 177 United States.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. They held that unless there was additional legislation by Congress.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Unless there was additional legislation by Congress; and that is what we are trying to get. The Democrats passed a revenue law once. That was a long time ago, but they did it.

Mr. PALMER. And it will be a long time before they pass another.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I do not know how long it will be before they pass another, but when they pass another I will tell you what it is going to be like. It is going to have this proviso in the internal-revenue law. These receipts are called "taxes" now, and not "licenses," but they used to be called "licenses." They were called "licenses" under the first revenue act of 1794 and until the act of 1864. Then they changed the reading so as to make it "special-tax receipt" instead of "license." Now, in 1813 the law read, when it imposed this tax of $25 on the retail liquor dealers and retail dealers in malt liquors:

Provided always, That no license shall be granted to any person to sell wines, distilled spirituous liquors, or merchandise as aforesaid who is prohibited to sell the same by any State.

Now, that is good States-rights doctrine—it is good common, honest, law-loving doctrine.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I asked this concession of time simply for the purpose of calling the attention of the country to the fact that this side of the House is willing now, as it always has been willing, to follow the President whenever he wanted better laws enacted or when he wanted laws already enacted executed better; and the reason that this rule of the Secretary of the Treasury has not been abrogated and set aside by legislation is because this House can not get an opportunity to vote on it.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. I want to say before I ask the question that I am heartily in favor of the gentleman's bill, as I understand it, but I want to ask when that law which he said was passed by the Democratic party was in force?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. In 1813.

Mr. NORRIS. Is that the last Democratic measure on the subject?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Yes, sir; that is the last one on the subject up to date.

Mr. NORRIS. You were in power and full strength at one time since that; why did you not reenact it?

Mr. JONES of Washington. The gentleman was not in Congress then.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I was going to make the reply that my friend from Washington [Mr. JONES] suggests. Unfortunately for the country, I was not in Congress at that time.

Mr. NORRIS. I hope, then, that the gentleman will remain in Congress when the next Democratic machine gets into control, even if it is a hundred years from now.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I thank my friend and assure him that I am willing to make any further sacrifice that my people may demand of me. [Laughter.] The gentleman is in favor of this bill. All that side of the House that I have heard express themselves say that they are in favor of it. There are two gentlemen on the Committee on Ways and Means that reported this bill, Republicans, who are members of the Committee on Rules. Now, if those two gentlemen will vote with either one of the Democratic members of the Committee on Rules, we can get this bill considered. The trouble is——

Mr. NORRIS. Will the gentleman favor the bringing in of a rule?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I will—to consider this bill.

Mr. NORRIS. From a Democratic standpoint?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. From any standpoint.

Mr. NORRIS. Would the gentleman want to be subjected to that?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Yes, sir; I am in favor of bringing in a rule that would permit us to consider this bill, because it is a bill in the interest of decent and orderly government.

Mr. NORRIS. I think so, too, but then, as a Democrat, I should not think the gentleman would want to be forced.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. That side of the House thinks so. It favors this bill exactly as the little girl's mother favored her going in swimming, provided she would hang her clothes on a hickory limb and not go near the water. Your side of the House has hung this bill up on a hickory limb and I am trying my best to get you to let us take it near the water, and you will not consent.

Mr. NORRIS. The first thing you had to do was to get it through the Republican Ways and Means Committee.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I got the mother's consent.

Mr. NORRIS. You have got the mother's consent?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I got the mother's consent and also the injunction not to go near the water. Now put me near the water. [Laughter.]

Mr. NORRIS. But the injunction did not come from the mother.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not believe I care to say anything further on this subject. But I want to call the attention of the country to the fact that here is a bill that all the law-loving people of this country want enacted into law and you will not enact it.

This side of the House is practically unanimous—95 per cent will vote for it if you give us an opportunity to vote, and you will not do it; and you will force the advocates of this bill in this branch of the legislature, the popular branch, the branch that is forced to go to the people every two years, because we are supposed to represent the people more closely than any other branch of the Government; you are forcing us to go to the other end of this Capitol and have this legislation tacked on some bill there as an amendment in order to get a vote here; and I say that is humiliating and it ought not to be done, and your side of the House, mind you—and do not let that get out of your minds, because I do not intend to let it get out of the mind of the country if I can help it—your side of the House is responsible for it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will my colleague allow me to ask him a question before he takes his seat?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Is it not true, and has the gentleman stated to the House the regulation of the Treasury which prevents the use of these certificates of receipt——

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS (continuing). Of those who want to sell whisky from being used as evidence of the fact before the State courts. Has the gentleman stated that?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I have. They absolutely forbid it. They have issued a regulation here not only that the collector shall not testify, but he can not give a copy of the record; and there is no reason on the face of the earth that can be given for that being the law. The President of the United States is not exempt from the process of the courts, and no other man except the collector of internal revenue, who is hedged about by this sort of divinity that relieves him from duties that are imposed on every other citizen.

Mr. WILLIAMS. In other words, this is the only place where the Federal Government undertakes to suppress testimony required in a State court.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. It is the only place I know of.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. This evidence is not really suppressed, is it?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. It is absolutely suppressed.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Are not these internal-revenue collectors required to keep a public list of the persons who pay this internal-revenue-tax——

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. The gentleman's question——

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. I have not got through with my question. Is it not true that this list of these taxpayers is open to inspection by the public, and is it not a fact that therefore any person who is interested in the prosecution of any case in the district may go and inspect this list and make a verified copy which is absolute evidence of the facts set forth in the list?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. No. All the facts the gentleman suggests are facts, but the law he suggests is not the law. This officer is required to make a list, an alphabetical list, of all who pay taxes, and post it up where it can be seen, but it is not the law, and it can not be the law, that any man can go there and see John Smith's name is on there, and then go into court and testify against John Smith, because even if the State constitution did not prevent that the Constitution of the United States says that a man charged with crime shall be confronted with the witnesses against him, and it is not a confrontation that any court will allow for any man to say "I saw the list posted on the wall and on it I saw John Smith's name."

Mr. WILLIAMS. The only evidence is a certified official copy.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. If you will have an officially certified copy of this list made, and have the official custodian of the original put his official signature to it, then it becomes evidence in any court, and that is what this bill requires.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, I can not quite believe that the gentleman means to state that a person can not go and make what is known as a verified copy, and can not take that into court and swear to it.

Mr. JOHNSON. Who would verify it?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Of course the courts in my State may not be up-to-date, but I know it is done there, and persons are convicted upon that kind of testimony. The gentleman probably knows what a verified statement is.

Mr. HUMPREYS of Mississippi. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. We have a sworn copy—that is, a copy made and sworn to by the officer who has the document in charge. In addition to that we have what is known as a "verified" copy—that is, a man goes and inspects the document, makes a copy of it, verifies it as a copy, and then he can go into court and swear that that is a verified copy of the original, and then that document is evidence in court.

Mr. BURTON of Delaware. Evidence of what?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Evidence of the facts contained in the original document. We do that in my State.

Mr. WALDO. Not in a criminal case.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. In criminal cases, under our provision of law.

Mr. WILLIAMS. What is the difference, if I may ask the gentleman, between that and somebody's hearing you make a statement, and taking it down and verifying it by his affidavit, and coming into court and saying that is a verified statement of your statement, and having it accepted as evidence? It seems to me that the reply is that you must introduce the best evidence.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. This is the best evidence. You can not get the original. The law prohibits that. Under the regulations of the Treasury Department you can not get that original copy, that original list of these taxpayers. So, then, the law permits you to do the next best thing, and get the best evidence to be had; and the best evidence under the existing circumstances is a verified copy. Every lawyer knows that there is such a thing as a verified copy.

Mr. WILLIAMS. To be used against a man on trial for his life or his liberty in a criminal proceeding?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Yes.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Of course that would be evidence of the fact that the officer had performed the duty that the statute required of him. I did not know until now that it had been held in his State that this evidence was competent, but I am advised that it has been held in one or two States that the evidence the gentleman mentions is competent. But in at least nine States out of ten the courts have held that it is not competent, and, in my opinion, the courts held correctly when they held that it was not competent. Now, under the bill as I introduced it, if it becomes a law, it will simply require that when the internal-revenue collector issues a license, he shall make a duplicate and preserve that duplicate, and issue a certified copy of that, so that it can be used in the State courts; and no court under heaven will ever say that that is not competent evidence.

Then we arrive at it without taking the officer away from his duty and without disturbing the records of his office by requiring him to take them with him when he leaves his office to go and testify in court. He simply gives a certified copy of the record, which can be carried into court, and that puts him on an equality with every other officer in this Government. As was decided in Aaron Burr's trial at Richmond, when John Marshall was sitting as a trial judge, there is no officer, from the President of the United States down to the lowest officer in the land, who is exempt from the process of the court. But now the collector of internal revenue is excused from this duty when he is called on to testify against a man who has violated the law against retail liquor selling, and as a rule the men who violate this law are the most contemptible and despicable characters in the community.

Mr. PALMER. I am in favor of the gentleman's bill, and I am going to vote for it when he gets it up, and I don't see why he can not get it up some day under a suspension of the rules; but the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. FOSTER] is right in regard to the common-law rule. You must have a certified copy from the officer who has it in charge or a verified copy by one who goes and sees it.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. But the officer in charge won't give it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. There is no duplicate copy in the internal-revenue office of this tax receipt which is issued; there is this list posted up. Even if your position were correct, you couldn't get a verified copy of the receipt; all you could get would be a verified copy of the fact that the man's name was on the list.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. The gentleman from Mississippi is wrong. The Treasury Department requires this collector to keep in his office not only a list of the taxpayers, but a list of the taxpayers with the amount of tax that is paid, and the purposes for which he paid it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Not a copy of the receipt?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. No.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Well, that is the evidence that you have got to have, the receipt itself, to show that this man paid it. It is possible that the list is a misprint.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Let me ask the gentleman from Vermont this question: What objection can there be to requiring the internal-revenue collector to give a copy of a receipt that he issues to John Smith or Richard Roe?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. I was not raising that question.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Can you conceive any objection?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. The only objection is this, and it is the reason for this regulation of the Treasury Department: The Treasury Department, under Republican rule as under Democratic rule, and it has been in force under Democratic rule as well as Republican rule, has no desire to interfere with the criminal laws of any State.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. But it does do it.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. If the gentleman will let me finish. The Treasury Department has no desire to interfere with the criminal law of any State. But it says that this is a revenue provision entirely and the Treasury Department insists that the revenue laws of the National Government should not be used in executing the criminal laws of the several States.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The law is not used; it is only a copy of what took place under the law.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. The proper regulation of the liquor traffic, Mr. Chairman, is one of the most troublesome questions that ever vexed the mind of a legislator. It has been the subject of the most thoughtful, the most zealous, the most prayerful, and frequently the most fruitless efforts of the statesmen in our State legislatures. The traffic is one of the most fruitful sources of crime in this broad land, and the attempts to regulate it so as to minimize the danger to society have been almost infinite in their variety. We have in the different States high license and no license, prohibition and dispensary, local option and constitutional prohibition; but wherever we have the traffic, and however we have it, it furnishes the principal business for the police judge. It is none of our business, Mr. Chairman, which of these methods the several States may adopt; it is for them to determine in the exercise of what little police power they have left. It is our business, however, to see that no officer or agent of the United States Government interferes with or in any way obstructs the due administration of the State law, whatever that law may be.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I thank the House very much for the attention I have received. [Loud applause.]

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CRUMPACKER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the naval appropriation bill and had come to no resolution thereon.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

A message, in writing, from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. FORSTER, one of his secretaries.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. 4983. An act granting an increase of pension to John M. Farquhar—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 5891. An act to authorize the South and Western Railroad Company to construct bridges across the Clinch River and the Holston River, in the States of Virginia and Tennessee—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

S. 5890. An act to authorize the South and Western Railroad Company to construct bridges across the Clinch River and the Holston River, in the States of Virginia and Tennessee—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the following titles:

S. 4739. An act granting an increase of pension to Benjamin F. Burgess;

S. 4688. An act granting an increase of pension to Noel J. Burgess;

S. 4582. An act granting an increase of pension to Seth H. Cooper;

S. 4576. An act granting an increase of pension to William Monks;

S. 4511. An act granting an increase of pension to William Hoaglin;

S. 4392. An act granting an increase of pension to Cornelia A. Mobley;

S. 4359. An act granting an increase of pension to Mary E. Lincoln;

S. 4231. An act granting an increase of pension to Owen Martin;

S. 4193. An act granting an increase of pension to Calvin D. Wilber;

S. 3883. An act granting an increase of pension to Ferdinand Hercher;

S. 4126. An act granting an increase of pension to Williard Farrington;

S. 4112. An act granting an increase of pension to Henry Swigart;

S. 4010. An act granting an increase of pension to Bridget Egan;

S. 3759. An act granting an increase of pension to Harry D. Miller;

S. 3765. An act granting an increase of pension to Charles R. Frost;

S. 3720. An act granting an increase of pension to Smith Vaughan;

S. 3655. An act granting an increase of pension to Mary A. Good;

S. 3555. An act granting a pension to Alice A. Fray;

S. 3551. An act granting an increase of pension to Solomon Jackson;

S. 3549. An act granting an increase of pension to Martha H. Ten Eyck;

S. 3468. An act granting an increase of pension to Myra R. Daniels;

S. 3454. An act granting an increase of pension to William Wilson;

S. 3415. An act granting an increase of pension to William Triplett;

S. 3308. An act granting a pension to Sarah Lovell;

S. 3273. An act granting an increase of pension to Abisha Risk;

S. 3272. An act granting an increase of pension to John Hirth;

S. 3230. An act granting an increase of pension to William C. Bourke;

S. 3178. An act granting an increase of pension to Daniel Shelly;
S. 4018. An act granting an increase of pension to Ebenezer Lusk;
S. 3130. An act granting an increase of pension to George B. Vallandigham;
S. 3119. An act granting an increase of pension to Francis A. Beranek;
S. 2985. An act granting an increase of pension to George W. Bodenhamer;
S. 5342. An act granting an increase of pension to May E. Johnson;
S. 5095. An act granting a pension to Jeremiah McKenzie;
S. 5192. An act granting a pension to John H. Stacy;
S. 5189. An act granting an increase of pension to Margaret F. Joyce;
S. 5186. An act granting an increase of pension to Robert Staplins;
S. 5173. An act granting an increase of pension to William S. Garrett;
S. 5146. An act granting a pension to Mary J. McLeod;
S. 5114. An act granting an increase of pension to Lizzie B. Cusick;
S. 5094. An act granting an increase of pension to Samuel F. Baublitz;
S. 5093. An act granting an increase of pension to Josiah F. Staubs;
S. 5091. An act granting an increase of pension to Sallie Tyrrell;
S. 5092. An act granting an increase of pension to Mary C. Feigley;
S. 5077. An act granting an increase of pension to Gabriel Cody;
S. 5055. An act granting an increase of pension to Melvin Grandy;
S. 4901. An act granting an increase of pension to Joshua M. Lounsberry;
S. 4763. An act granting an increase of pension to Harrison Randolph;
S. 4759. An act granting an increase of pension to Oliver M. Stone;
S. 4745. An act granting an increase of pension to Susan J. F. Joslyn;
S. 2959. An act granting an increase of pension to William R. Gallion;
S. 2886. An act granting an increase of pension to Martha Hoffman;
S. 2799. An act granting an increase of pension to Willis H. Watson;
S. 2767. An act granting a pension to Sarah S. Etue;
S. 2759. An act granting an increase of pension to William B. Mitchell;
S. 2021. An act granting a pension to Juliet K. Phillips;
S. 1818. An act granting a pension to Edward T. White;
S. 1913. An act granting a pension to Clara F. Leslie;
S. 1728. An act granting an increase of pension to Joseph H. Allen;
S. 1692. An act granting a pension to Ellen H. Swayne;
S. 4760. An act granting a pension to John B. Lee;
S. 5375. An act granting an increase of pension to Francis L. Porter;
S. 5366. An act granting an increase of pension to John Beatty;
S. 5355. An act granting an increase of pension to Annie M. Walker;
S. 5291. An act granting an increase of pension to Elijah A. Smith;
S. 5344. An act granting an increase of pension to Sophronia Roberts;
S. 5255. An act granting an increase of pension to John D. Culler;
S. 5219. An act granting an increase of pension to David N. Morland;
S. 5205. An act granting an increase of pension to John F. Alsup;
S. 1691. An act granting an increase of pension to Alice S. Shepard;
S. 1628. An act granting an increase of pension to Christian H. Goebel;
S. 1605. An act granting an increase of pension to Richard H. Lee;
S. 5455. An act granting a pension to Emily J. Alden;
S. 5517. An act granting an increase of pension to William H. H. Shaffer;
S. 1564. An act granting an increase of pension to Leander C. Reeve;
S. 5514. An act to amend section 4472 of the Revised Statutes, relating to carrying of dangerous articles on passenger steamers;
S. 5515. An act granting an increase of pension to Matilda C. Frizell;
S. 2977. An act granting an increase of pension to David B. Neafus;
S. 556. An act granting an increase of pension to William H. Egolf;
S. 591. An act granting a pension to William C. Banks;
S. 13. An act granting an increase of pension to Hautville A. Johnson;
S. 5453. An act granting an increase of pension to Jacob M. Peckle;
S. 5338. An act granting an increase of pension to David Buckner;
S. 5439. An act granting an increase of pension to George W. Dunlap;
S. 971. An act granting an increase of pension to William H. Hackney;
S. 918. An act granting an increase of pension to Edwin N. Baker;
S. 5337. An act granting an increase of pension to Samuel M. Tow;
S. 1514. An act granting an increase of pension to George W. Wicks;
S. 1260. An act granting an increase of pension to Frank Pugsley;
S. 1013. An act granting an increase of pension to William H. Odear; and
S. 834. An act granting an increase of pension to Lucien W. French.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. WACHTER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bills:
H. R. 1565. An act for the relief of Theodore H. Bishop;
H. R. 1340. An act granting a pension to Robert Kennish;
H. R. 2796. An act granting a pension to Benjamin T. Odiorne;
H. R. 3333. An act granting a pension to William Simmons;
H. R. 4264. An act granting a pension to Frances E. Maloon;
H. R. 4669. An act granting a pension to Joseph E. Green;
H. R. 6949. An act granting a pension to Alice W. Powers;
H. R. 6985. An act granting a pension to Susan C. Smith;
H. R. 7232. An act granting a pension to Alba B. Bean;
H. R. 7737. An act granting a pension to William H. Winters;
H. R. 7844. An act granting a pension to Phoebe Keith;
H. R. 8475. An act granting a pension to John F. Tathem;
H. R. 8687. An act granting a pension to William I. Lusch;
H. R. 8820. An act granting a pension to Inez Talkington;
H. R. 9046. An act granting a pension to William Berry;
H. R. 9287. An act granting a pension to Eliza Byron;
H. R. 9441. An act granting a pension to Clara N. Scranton;
H. R. 9442. An act granting a pension to Dora C. Walter;
H. R. 9606. An act granting a pension to Martha Jewell;
H. R. 9993. An act granting a pension to George W. Warren;
H. R. 10408. An act granting a pension to Anna E. Middleton;
H. R. 10424. An act granting a pension to Emanuel S. Thompson;
H. R. 10775. An act granting a pension to Ellen S. Cushman;
H. R. 11565. An act granting a pension to Sarah A. Brinker;
H. R. 11654. An act granting a pension to Emma A. Smith;
H. R. 11703. An act granting a pension to Laura McNulta;
H. R. 11898. An act granting a pension to Lars F. Wadsten, alias Frederick Wadsten.
H. R. 11918. An act granting a pension to Mary A. Weigand;
H. R. 12099. An act granting a pension to Charlotte A. McCormick;
H. R. 12715. An act granting a pension to George B. Kirk;
H. R. 12803. An act granting a pension to Emma C. Waldron;
H. R. 13217. An act granting a pension to Joshua Barnes;
H. R. 13726. An act granting a pension to Sarah J. Manson;
H. R. 14677. An act granting a pension to Reuben R. Ballenger;
H. R. 15321. An act granting a pension to Charles Skaden, jr.;
H. R. 15431. An act granting a pension to Theresa Creiss;
H. R. 15569. An act granting a pension to Harriet A. Duvall;
H. R. 15895. An act granting a pension to Harry D. McFarland;
H. R. 16520. An act granting a pension to Edward Farrell;
H. R. 16582. An act granting a pension to Ellen T. Sivels;

H. R. 16930. An act granting a pension to Virginia A. Hilburn;
H. R. 16972. An act granting a pension to Harriet L. Morrison;
H. R. 17151. An act granting a pension to William T. Morgan;
H. R. 17273. An act granting a pension to Mary B. Watson;
H. R. 517. An act granting an increase of pension to Luke Waldron;
H. R. 531. An act granting an increase of pension to Ebenezer Rickett;
H. R. 601. An act granting an increase of pension to Isreal E. Munger;
H. R. 667. An act granting an increase of pension to George H. Gaskill;
H. R. 1018. An act granting an increase of pension to Silas Flournoy;
H. R. 1138. An act granting an increase of pension to Joseph S. Rice;
H. R. 1151. An act granting an increase of pension to Valentine Bartley;
H. R. 1245. An act granting an increase of pension to David Rankin;
H. R. 1375. An act granting an increase of pension to Silas Mosher;
H. R. 1567. An act granting an increase of pension to Edward Duffy;
H. R. 1734. An act granting an increase of pension to William H. Lee;
H. R. 1858. An act granting an increase of pension to James Jacobs;
H. R. 1893. An act granting an increase of pension to Henry C. Maxwell;
H. R. 1910. An act granting an increase of pension to Andrew H. Nichols;
H. R. 1953. An act granting an increase of pension to Susan S. Theall;
H. R. 2102. An act granting an increase of pension to Eugenie Tilburn;
H. R. 2173. An act granting an increase of pension to Thomas H. Padgett;
H. R. 2721. An act granting an increase of pension to Ashford R. Matheny;
H. R. 2731. An act granting an increase of pension to James M. Eddy;
H. R. 2778. An act granting an increase of pension to Patrick Mahoney;
H. R. 2794. An act granting an increase of pension to Richard E. Davis;
H. R. 2801. An act granting an increase of pension to Alexander M. Lowry;
H. R. 2852. An act granting an increase of pension to James Dayton;
H. R. 3347. An act granting an increase of pension to Orestes B. Wright;
H. R. 3419. An act granting an increase of pension to John Biddle;
H. R. 3430. An act granting an increase of pension to Peter M. Culins;
H. R. 3456. An act granting an increase of pension to David B. Ott;
H. R. 3689. An act granting an increase of pension to Charles W. Lyons;
H. R. 3738. An act granting an increase of pension to Daniel Boughman;
H. R. 3979. An act granting an increase of pension to Paul Stang;
H. R. 4230. An act granting an increase of pension to William H. Miles;
H. R. 4242. An act granting an increase of pension to Mary A. Foster;
H. R. 4294. An act granting an increase of pension to Annie R. E. Nesbitt;
H. R. 4350. An act granting an increase of pension to Joseph W. Vance;
H. R. 4679. An act granting an increase of pension to Franklin D. Clark;
H. R. 4763. An act granting an increase of pension to John C. Matheny;
H. R. 5044. An act granting an increase of pension to Hiram G. Hoke;
H. R. 5178. An act granting an increase of pension to Elijah Pantall;
H. R. 5274. An act granting an increase of pension to William T. Branam;
H. R. 5822. An act granting an increase of pension to Miner L. Braden;
H. R. 5853. An act granting an increase of pension to Quincy Corwin;
H. R. 5956. An act granting an increase of pension to Joseph H. Wagoner;
H. R. 6213. An act granting an increase of pension to Hiram Linn;
H. R. 6238. An act granting an increase of pension to Jesse Woods;
H. R. 6256. An act granting an increase of pension to Solomon Riddell;
H. R. 6450. An act granting an increase of pension to Nannie L. Schmitt;
H. R. 6452. An act granting an increase of pension to William H. Doherty;
H. R. 6864. An act granting an increase of pension to Henry Good;
H. R. 6919. An act granting an increase of pension to Joseph A. C. Curtis;
H. R. 7540. An act granting an increase of pension to William F. Griffith;
H. R. 7687. An act granting an increase of pension to Charles Hammond, alias Hiram W. Kirkpatrick;
H. R. 7720. An act granting an increase of pension to Stephen M. Sexton;
H. R. 7745. An act granting an increase of pension to Wheeler Lindenbower;
H. R. 7821. An act granting an increase of pension to Mathias Brady;
H. R. 7837. An act granting an increase of pension to Mary J. McKim;
H. R. 7902. An act granting an increase of pension to Eugene Orr, alias Charles Southard;
H. R. 7968. An act granting an increase of pension to Palmetto Dodson;
H. R. 8046. An act granting an increase of pension to James Thompson Brown;
H. R. 8157. An act granting an increase of pension to Milton H. Wayne;
H. R. 8277. An act granting an increase of pension to Samuel S. Garst;
H. R. 8290. An act granting an increase of pension to Lloyd D. Bennett;
H. R. 8518. An act granting an increase of pension to Samuel Meadows;
H. R. 8711. An act granting an increase of pension to James F. Howard;
H. R. 8778. An act granting an increase of pension to George Henderson;
H. R. 8780. An act granting an increase of pension to Abraham M. Barr;
H. R. 8948. An act granting an increase of pension to John W. Hammond;
H. R. 9257. An act granting an increase of pension to Nathaniel M. Stukes;
H. R. 9261. An act granting an increase of pension to William C. Herridge;
H. R. 9288. An act granting an increase of pension to Catherine E. Bragg;
H. R. 9415. An act granting an increase of pension to John E. Murphy;
H. R. 9417. An act granting an increase of pension to George A. Havel;
H. R. 9556. An act granting an increase of pension to Thomas C. Jackson;
H. R. 9578. An act granting an increase of pension to Alfred B. Menard;
H. R. 9601. An act granting an increase of pension to John B. Page;
H. R. 9627. An act granting an increase of pension to Daniel Craig;
H. R. 9791. An act granting an increase of pension to Amelia E. Grimsley;
H. R. 9829. An act granting an increase of pension to William J. Thompson;
H. R. 9833. An act granting an increase of pension to James C. Miller;
H. R. 10030. An act granting an increase of pension to Arby Frier;
H. R. 10161. An act granting an increase of pension to Benjamin R. South;
H. R. 10173. An act granting an increase of pension to John H. Lockhart;
H. R. 10250. An act granting an increase of pension to Ephraim Marble;
H. R. 10358. An act granting an increase of pension to Charles Dorin;

H. R. 10456. An act granting an increase of pension to William T. Edgemon;
H. R. 10473. An act granting an increase of pension to John B. Gerard;
H. R. 10494. An act granting an increase of pension to Hannah C. Reese;
H. R. 10580. An act granting an increase of pension to Samuel Fish;
H. R. 10591. An act granting an increase of pension to Sarah A. Scott;
H. R. 10686. An act granting an increase of pension to George W. Adams;
H. R. 10727. An act granting an increase of pension to Aquilla M. Hizar;
H. R. 10881. An act granting an increase of pension to Jerry Edwards;
H. R. 10924. An act granting an increase of pension to Thomas J. Sizer;
H. R. 11143. An act granting an increase of pension to Levi B. Noulton;
H. R. 11306. An act granting an increase of pension to John C. Parkinson;
H. R. 11348. An act granting an increase of pension to Cynthia Cordial, now Vernon;
H. R. 11361. An act granting an increase of pension to Thomas Hughes;
H. R. 11367. An act granting an increase of pension to Manning Abbott;
H. R. 11374. An act granting an increase of pension to Fanny L. Conine;
H. R. 11532. An act granting an increase of pension to Andrew J. Speed;
H. R. 11538. An act granting an increase of pension to Eli Duvall;
H. R. 11591. An act granting an increase of pension to John B. Hall;
H. R. 11593. An act granting an increase of pension to Evans Blake;
H. R. 11606. An act granting an increase of pension to Edmund W. Bixby;
H. R. 11692. An act granting an increase of pension to John P. Wishart;
H. R. 11824. An act granting an increase of pension to Jennie P. Starkins;
H. R. 11907. An act granting an increase of pension to August Danieldson;
H. R. 12017. An act granting an increase of pension to James B. Simkins;
H. R. 12019. An act granting an increase of pension to Henry Jacob Fox;
H. R. 12059. An act granting an increase of pension to Mildred W. Mitchell;
H. R. 12389. An act granting an increase of pension to Isaiah B. McDonald;
H. R. 12390. An act granting an increase of pension to John W. Raynor;
H. R. 12407. An act granting an increase of pension to Robert Bivans;
H. R. 12415. An act granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth Bodkin;
H. R. 12521. An act granting an increase of pension to Alice Eddy Potter;
H. R. 12526. An act granting an increase of pension to Solomon Johnson;
H. R. 12534. An act granting an increase of pension to Richard Reynolds;
H. R. 12556. An act granting an increase of pension to Joseph W. Coppage;
H. R. 12663. An act granting an increase of pension to Frederick Friebele;
H. R. 12755. An act granting an increase of pension to Nathaniel W. Plymate;
H. R. 12888. An act granting an increase of pension to Jacob Sannar;
H. R. 12996. An act granting an increase of pension to Eugene B. McDonald;
H. R. 13139. An act granting an increase of pension to William Walrod;
H. R. 13171. An act granting an increase of pension to Jonathan K. Porter;
H. R. 13345. An act granting an increase of pension to Frank Clendenin;
H. R. 13437. An act granting an increase of pension to Samuel R. Lowry;
H. R. 13445. An act granting an increase of pension to Thomas T. Blanchard;
H. R. 13504. An act granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth Thompson;
H. R. 13730. An act granting an increase of pension to Joseph Shroyer;
H. R. 13738. An act granting an increase of pension to Henry Hahn;
H. R. 13741. An act granting an increase of pension to George R. Scott;
H. R. 13823. An act granting an increase of pension to William Van Keuren;
H. R. 13840. An act granting an increase of pension to Absalom Shell;
H. R. 13862. An act granting an increase of pension to Luther S. Holly;
H. R. 13871. An act granting an increase of pension to William Delany;
H. R. 13881. An act granting an increase of pension to Amos Dyke;
H. R. 13928. An act granting an increase of pension to Harvey Foster;
H. R. 13961. An act granting an increase of pension to Julius Buxbaum;
H. R. 14001. An act granting an increase of pension to Nathan S. Ruddock;
H. R. 14116. An act granting an increase of pension to John P. Rains;
H. R. 14117. An act granting an increase of pension to William H. H. Fellows;
H. R. 14227. An act granting an increase of pension to Anna C. Bassford;
H. R. 14299. An act granting an increase of pension to Rose V. Mullin;
H. R. 14374. An act granting an increase of pension to Benjamin B. Cahoon;
H. R. 14442. An act granting an increase of pension to Esther M. Lowe;
H. R. 14498. An act granting an increase of pension to Eliza Davidson;
H. R. 14534. An act granting an increase of pension to Jasper N. Harrelson;
H. R. 14552. An act granting an increase of pension to Henry Davey;
H. R. 14553. An act granting an increase of pension to Jesse Lienallen;
H. R. 14566. An act granting an increase of pension to Robert E. McKiernan;
H. R. 14657. An act granting an increase of pension to David W. West;
H. R. 14688. An act granting an increase of pension to Robert Timmons;
H. R. 14698. An act granting an increase of pension to William F. Drake;
H. R. 14780. An act granting an increase of pension to John A. Royer;
H. R. 14782. An act granting an increase of pension to Michael Manahan;
H. R. 14853. An act granting an increase of pension to Helen C. Sanderson;
H. R. 14915. An act granting an increase of pension to Andrew W. Tracy;
H. R. 14989. An act granting an increase of pension to Arcatie E. Thompson;
H. R. 14990. An act granting an increase of pension to Lucius D. Whaley;
H. R. 14993. An act granting an increase of pension to Riley M. Smiley;
H. R. 15007. An act granting an increase of pension to Henry Hares;
H. R. 15011. An act granting an increase of pension to John Eldridge, jr.;
H. R. 15024. An act granting an increase of pension to Henry C. Keyser;
H. R. 15050. An act granting an increase of pension to William H. Near;
H. R. 15061. An act granting an increase of pension to Ethan Allen;
H. R. 15119. An act granting an increase of pension to Cornelius Westman;
H. R. 15216. An act granting an increase of pension to Truman C. Stevens;
H. R. 15240. An act granting an increase of pension to James W. Fowler;

H. R. 15256. An act granting an increase of pension to Benjamin F. Greer;
H. R. 15277. An act granting an increase of pension to George W. Pierce;
H. R. 15380. An act granting an increase of pension to Valentine Gunselman;
H. R. 15396. An act granting an increase of pension to John T. Jacobs;
H. R. 15415. An act granting an increase of pension to Ann R. Nelson;
H. R. 15484. An act granting an increase of pension to Robert Dick;
H. R. 15487. An act granting an increase of pension to Truman Aldrich;
H. R. 15548. An act granting an increase of pension to Jacob Ferber;
H. R. 15616. An act granting an increase of pension to Pleasant Calor;
H. R. 15621. An act granting an increase of pension to Caleb M. Tarter;
H. R. 15670. An act granting an increase of pension to Daniel E. Durgin;
H. R. 15683. An act granting an increase of pension to Thomas Brown;
H. R. 15701. An act granting an increase of pension to William Brown;
H. R. 15717. An act granting an increase of pension to Ebenezer A. Rice;
H. R. 15780. An act granting an increase of pension to Peter Cole;
H. R. 15794. An act granting an increase of pension to Samuel Pepper;
H. R. 15835. An act granting an increase of pension to George M. Thompson;
H. R. 15840. An act granting an increase of pension to Edgar B. Hughson;
H. R. 15863. An act granting an increase of pension to William Louther;
H. R. 15894. An act granting an increase of pension to Alma L. Wells;
H. R. 15928. An act granting an increase of pension to Herbert D. Ingersoll;
H. R. 15956. An act granting an increase of pension to Walter F. Bean;
H. R. 15982. An act granting an increase of pension to Henrietta W. Wilson;
H. R. 16023. An act granting an increase of pension to Sheldon B. Fargo;
H. R. 16024. An act granting an increase of pension to Katie B. Meister;
H. R. 16179. An act granting an increase of pension to William N. J. Burns;
H. R. 16182. An act granting an increase of pension to Samuel F. Williams;
H. R. 16190. An act granting an increase of pension to James T. Caskey;
H. R. 16210. An act granting an increase of pension to Abraham G. Long;
H. R. 16250. An act granting an increase of pension to Augustus J. Morey;
H. R. 16266. An act granting an increase of pension to Margaret A. Rucker;
H. R. 16296. An act granting an increase of pension to Henry C. Coffin;
H. R. 16334. An act granting an increase of pension to Enos Day;
H. R. 16376. An act granting an increase of pension to Joseph Muncher;
H. R. 16428. An act granting an increase of pension to Edwin Hicks;
H. R. 16433. An act granting an increase of pension to Marius S. Cooley;
H. R. 16437. An act granting an increase of pension to Samuel H. Frazier;
H. R. 16442. An act granting an increase of pension to John A. Powell;
H. R. 16445. An act granting an increase of pension to Henry H. Sibley;
H. R. 16454. An act granting an increase of pension to Samuel E. Carlton;
H. R. 16455. An act granting an increase of pension to John Long;
H. R. 16504. An act granting an increase of pension to Thomas W. Barnum;
H. R. 16514. An act granting an increase of pension to John W. Barton;
H. R. 16523. An act granting an increase of pension to Charles P. Hopkins;
H. R. 16578. An act granting an increase of pension to Edward Lilley;
H. R. 16583. An act granting an increase of pension to David R. Walden;
H. R. 16650. An act granting an increase of pension to Robert B. Williby;
H. R. 16985. An act granting an increase of pension to Gilson Lawrence;
H. R. 17028. An act granting an increase of pension to Lorenzo D. Hartwell;
H. R. 17194. An act granting an increase of pension to Jennie White;
H. R. 17235. An act granting an increase of pension to Martha Howard;
H. R. 17274. An act granting an increase of pension to Andrew J. Mosier;
H. R. 17589. An act granting an increase of pension to Sidney A. Lawrence;
H. R. 17608. An act granting an increase of pension to Sidney S. Brewerton;
H. R. 18709. An act making additional appropriations for the public service on account of earthquake and attending conflagration on the Pacific coast;
H. R. 8997. An act to regulate the practice of pharmacy and the sale of poisons in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; and
H. R. 11796. An act for the diversion of water from the Sacramento River, in the State of California, for irrigation purposes.

ENROLLED BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS.

Mr. WACHTER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill and joint resolutions of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

H. J. Res. 149. Joint resolution extending the thanks of Congress to Gen. Horace Porter;
H. J. Res. 145. Joint resolution for appointment of members of Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers; and
H. R. 15334. An act to authorize the construction of dams and power stations on the Coosa River at Lock 2, Alabama.

THE SAN FRANCISCO EARTHQUAKE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

[For message, see Senate proceedings of this day.]

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a letter from the Postmaster-General submitting an estimate of appropriation for file boxes and cases for appointment division—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. McGUIRE, from the Committee on Territories, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 11787) ratifying and approving an act to appropriate money for the purpose of building additional buildings for the Northwestern Normal School at Alva, in Oklahoma Territory, passed by the legislative assembly of Oklahoma Territory, and approved the 15th day of March, 1905, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3711); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 17186) granting to the Territory of Oklahoma, for the use and benefit of the University Preparatory School of the Territory of Oklahoma, section 33, in township No. 26 north of range No. 1 west of the Indian meridian, in Kay County, Oklahoma Territory, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3712); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. REEDER, from the Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 18536) providing for the subdivision of lands entered under the reclamation act, and for other purposes, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3717); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. HULL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 14892) making an appropriation for completing the construction of the road to the Barrancas military post, by way of the national cemetery and the navy-yard on the naval reservation near Pensacola, Fla., reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3718); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

Mr. McGUIRE, from the Committee on the Territories, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 17431) granting to the regents of the University of Oklahoma section No. 36, in township No. 9 north of range No. 3 west of the Indian meridian, in Cleveland County, Oklahoma Territory, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3713); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 18850) donating lands in Oklahoma Territory for educational purposes, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3714); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. HOWELL of Utah, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 18134) for the relief of the Compañia de los Ferrocarriles de Puerto Rico, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3715); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, adverse reports were delivered to the Clerk and laid on the table as follows:

Mr. PARKER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 1690) for the relief of Theodore A. Northop, reported the same adversely, accompanied by a report (No. 3716); which said bill and report were ordered laid on the table.

Mr. YOUNG, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 3156) to grant an honorable discharge from the military service to Robert C. Gregg, reported the same adversely, accompanied by a report (No. 3719); which said bill and report were ordered laid on the table.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey: A bill (H. R. 18918) to provide for the completion of the public building in Atlantic City, N. J.—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. LEWIS: A bill (H. R. 18919) to increase salaries of rural free-delivery carriers—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. McGUIRE: A bill (H. R. 18920) to authorize the Wichita Mountain and Orient Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through the Fort Sill Military Reservation, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. ESCH: A resolution (H. Res. 417) instructing the Committee on the Judiciary to report to the House a bill concerning insurance legislation—to the Committee on Rules.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ANDRUS: A bill (H. R. 18921) granting a pension to Mary Elizabeth McCann—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BATES: A bill (H. R. 18922) granting an increase of pension to Henry H. Niles—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BRANTLEY: A bill (H. R. 18923) granting an increase of pension to Edward Shnell—to the Committe on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin: A bill (H. R. 18924) for the relief of George M. Esterly—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. CURTIS: A bill (H. R. 18925) for the relief of John H. Davison, alias Henry Bingham—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 18926) granting an increase of pension to William Irelan—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 18927) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. J. Frank Wyman—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 18928) granting an increase of pension to Mary J. F. Day—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 18929) to correct the record of James Clingen—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. GILLESPIE: A bill (H. R. 18930) granting an increase of pension to Eliza J. Mays—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. GUDGER: A bill (H. R. 18931) granting an increase of pension to Malinda Wike—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HAY: A bill (H. R. 18932) for the relief of the St. Paul Reformed Church, of Woodstock, Va.—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. HUFF: A bill (H. R. 18933) granting an increase of pension to Andrew C. Gibson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. JONES of Washington: A bill (H. R. 18934) for the relief of George Anderson, of Conconully, State of Washington—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. LEVER: A bill (H. R. 18935) granting an increase of pension to Mima A. Boswell—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. LITTLE: A bill (H. R. 18936) granting a pension to J. O. Grant—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. McKINLEY of Illinois: A bill (H. R. 18937) granting an increase of pension to William K. Turner—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. McGUIRE: A bill (H. R. 18938) for the relief of Joseph B. Tucker, late private, Company H, Second Arkansas United States Cavalry, for depredations committed by Indians while he was in the United States Army—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 18939) for the relief of Sallie E. Barnes, widow of Joseph Barnes, late of Gilmore, Choctaw Nation, Ind. T.—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 18940) granting a pension to Rice S. McCubbin—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 18941) granting a pension to Benjamin S. Musser—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 18942) granting a pension to William Pouder—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 18943) granting an increase of pension to Samuel Emrick—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 18944) granting an increase of pension to William Cameron—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 18945) granting an increase of pension to William J. P. De Lesdernier—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 18946) granting an increase of pension to Frank Marshall—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 18947) granting an increase of pension to Roger A. Sprague—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MAHON: A bill (H. R. 18948) granting a pension to John D. Baker—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 18949) granting an increase of pension to William Gilbert—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MUDD: A bill (H. R. 18950) granting a pension to Andrea P. Caldwell—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. PAYNE: A bill (H. R. 18951) to correct the military record of Charles Koester—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. REEDER: A bill (H. R. 18952) granting a pension to Lydia A. Graham—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SHARTEL: A bill (H. R. 18953) for the relief of Joseph Kercher, sr., and others—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio: A bill (H. R. 18954) granting an increase of pension to John E. Minnick—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 18955) granting an increase of pension to Jasper Smith—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WANGER: A bill (H. R. 18956) granting an increase of pension to Joseph Scattergood—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WELBORN: A bill (H. R. 18957) for the relief of George W. Sedwick—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 18958) granting an increase of pension to Robertson S. Maberry—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WILLIAMS: A bill (H. R. 18959) granting an increase of pension to Albert G. Packer—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of bills of the following titles; which were thereupon referred as follows:

A bill (H. R. 4292) granting a pension to George W. Kelly—Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 18601) granting an increase of pension to Edward A. Barnes—Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to Committee on Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, the following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. ACHESON: Petition of 200 citizens of New Brighton, Pa., against liquor selling in Government buildings—to the Committee on Alcoholic Liquor Traffic.

Also, petition of the Presbyterian Church of Ellwood City, Pa., for a constitutional amendment prohibiting polygamy—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of 200 citizens of New Brighton, Pa., for Sunday closing of the Jamestown exposition—to the Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions.

By Mr. BARCHFELD: Resolution of American Federation of Labor, submitting a list of grievances of labor organizations—to the Committee on Labor.

Also, petition of E. B. Spaulding, for the adoption by Government of steel mail cars—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, petition of the Society for Political Study, of New York City, for bills S. 50 and H. R. 4462 (the child-labor bills)—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Also, resolution of the Tenth Pennsylvania Infantry, relative and favorable to House bill by Hon. ROBERT W. BONYNGE, granting medals to soldiers and officers of the Spanish war who served in the Philippines after time of enlistment had expired—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, petition of A. O. Fording, for the Burton bill for preservation of Niagara Falls—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Also, petition of the Western Pennsylvania Branch of the Consumers' League, for bills S. 50 and H. R. 4462 (child labor in the District of Columbia)—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. BELL of Georgia: Paper to accompany bill for relief of Andra C. Pool—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BENNETT of Kentucky: Paper to accompany bill for relief of Capt. W. S. Adams—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. BRANTLEY: Paper to accompany bill for relief of Edward Shuell—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BUCKMAN: Paper to accompany bill for relief of Martin A. Luther—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania: Petition of the American Federation of Labor, submitting a list of grievances of labor organizations—to the Committee on Labor.

Also, paper to accompany bill for relief of Col. John Ewing—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, petition of A. O. Fording, for the Burton bill for preservation of Niagara Falls—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania: Petition of the First Presbyterian Church of Westchester, Pa., representing 400 persons, for an amendment to the Constitution prohibiting polygamy—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. COOPER of Pennsylvania: Petition of the Woman's Presbyterian Home and Foreign Mission Society, for a constitutional amendment abolishing polygamy—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. COUSINS: Petition of the Twentieth Century Club of Marshalltown, Iowa, for forest reservations in the White Mountains—to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, petition of the Central Park Presbyterian Church and the First Presbyterian Church, of State Center, Iowa, for a constitutional amendment prohibiting polygamy—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. DARRAGH: Petition of citizens of Clare County, Mich., against religious legislation in the District of Columbia—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Also, petition of citizens of Ashley, Mich., against bill S. 529 (the ship-subsidy bill)—to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

Also, petition of citizens of Torch Lake Township, Mich., against religious legislation in the District of Columbia—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Also, petition of citizens of Detroit, Mich., for a parcels-post law—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, petition of citizens of Big Rapids, Mich., for preservation of Niagara Falls—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. DICKSON of Illinois: Petition of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, and Mrs. Julia G. Remann, president of Home Study Club, for an appropriation to investigate the industrial condition of women in the United States—to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. DUNWELL: Petition of the United Commercial Travelers of America, against bill H. R. 4549, for a consolidation of third and fourth class mail matter—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, petition of the Advisory Committee of One Hundred of the Borough of Brooklyn, for battle-ship construction at the Brooklyn Navy-Yard—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. ELLIS: Paper to accompany bill for relief of Joseph Clark—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. FITZGERALD: Petition of the Broadway Board of Trade, of Brooklyn, N. Y., favoring battle-ship construction at the Brooklyn Navy-Yard—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts: Petition of the president of the Chicopee Fall (Mass.) Woman's Club, for the pure-food bill—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. GOULDEN: Petition of members of St. Luke's Council, No. 438, Knights of Columbus, for a memorial of Christopher Columbus (bill H. R. 13304)—to the Committee on the Library.

By Mr. GRAHAM: Petition of K. Nerdlin, for the Benton bill (H. R. 18024) for preservation of Niagara Falls—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Also, petition of A. O. Fording, for the Burton bill for preservation of Niagara Falls—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Also, petition of the Society for Political Study, of New York City, for bills S. 50 and H. R. 4462 (the child-labor bills)—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Also, resolution of the American Federation of Labor, submitting a list of grievances of labor organizations—to the Committee on Labor.

By Mr. HENRY of Connecticut: Petition of citizens of East Hartford, Conn., for preservation of Niagara Falls—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. HUFF: Paper to accompany bills for relief of Jacob Lybarger and Andrew C. Gibson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. JONES of Washington: Petition of citizens of Cowlitz County, Wash., against religious legislation in the District of Columbia—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. LEVER: Paper to accompany bill for relief of Henrietta G. Carter—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. LINDSAY: Petition of J. H. Lane & Co., for the Burton bill (H. R. 18024) for preservation of Niagara Falls—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Also, petition of the Advisory Committee of One Hundred of the Borough of Brooklyn, for construction of more battle ships at the Brooklyn Navy-Yard—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Also, petition of the United Commercial Travelers of America, against bill H. R. 4549, relative to the consolidation of third and fourth-class mail matter—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. MAHON: Paper to accompany bill for relief of William Gilbert—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. RYAN: Petition of Buffalo Council, No. 50, Junior Order United American Mechanics, for restriction of immigration—to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. SMITH of Maryland: Petition of A. Hallie Creighton and 47 other citizens, of Fishing Creek, Md.; Washington Camp, No. 4, of Templeville, Md.; Washington Camp, No. 34, of Chestertown, Md., and Washington Camp, No. 31, of Delmar, Del., Patriotic Sons of America, and Chestertown Council, No. 177, Junior Order United American Mechanics, favoring restriction of immigration—to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. SPARKMAN: Petition of citizens of St. Petersburg and Plant City, Fla., against religious legislation in the District of Columbia—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. STERLING: Paper to accompany bill for relief of John H. Sprouse—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SULLIVAN of New York: Petition of the Delaware Society, of New York, for naming a battle ship Delaware—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. WANGER: Petition of the Huntingdon Valley Presbyterian Church, 160 members, for a constitutional amendment prohibiting polygamy—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. WILLIAMS: Paper to accompany bill for relief of the estate of Tillman Loggin—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. WOOD of New Jersey: Petition of the Society for Political Study, of New York City, for the child-labor law—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, May 4, 1906.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. EDWARD E. HALE.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. KEAN, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Journal stands approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the following bills:

H. R. 8226. An act granting an increase of pension to Laura B. Ihrie;

H. R. 10251. An act granting an increase of pension to Sarah M. E. Hinman;

H. R. 11635. An act granting an increase of pension to Jeremiah Lunsford;

H. R. 15397. An act granting an increase of pension to Edward Gillespie;

H. R. 15687. An act granting an increase of pension to William F. M. Rice;

H. R. 15907. An act granting an increase of pension to Lewis De Laittre;

H. R. 16215. An act granting an increase of pension to Mary Dagenfield; and

H. R. 16521. An act directing the Secretary of the Interior to sell and convey a certain parcel of land to Johnson County, Wyo.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

S. 13. An act granting an increase of pension to Hautville A. Johnson;

S. 556. An act granting an increase of pension to William H. Egolf;

S. 591. An act granting a pension to William C. Banks;

S. 834. An act granting an increase of pension to Lucian W. French;

S. 918. An act granting an increase of pension to Edwin N. Baker;

S. 971. An act granting an increase of pension to William H. Hackney;

S. 1013. An act granting an increase of pension to William H. Odear;

S. 1260. An act granting an increase of pension to Frank Pugsley;

S. 1514. An act granting an increase of pension to George W. Wicks;

S. 1564. An act granting an increase of pension to Leander C. Reeve;

S. 1605. An act granting an increase of pension to Richard H. Lee;

S. 1628. An act granting an increase of pension to Christian H. Goebel;

S. 1691. An act granting an increase of pension to Alice S. Shepard;

S. 1692. An act granting a pension to Ellen H. Swayne;

S. 1728. An act granting an increase of pension to Joseph H. Allen;

S. 1818. An act granting a pension to Edward T. White;

S. 1913. An act granting a pension to Clara F. Leslie;

S. 2021. An act granting a pension to Juliet K. Phillips;

S. 2759. An act granting an increase of pension to William B. Mitchell;

S. 2767. An act granting a pension to Sarah S. Etue;

S. 2799. An act granting an increase of pension to Willis H. Watson;

S. 2886. An act granting an increase of pension to Martha Hoffman;

S. 2959. An act granting an increase of pension to William R. Galion;

S. 2977. An act granting an increase of pension to David B. Neafus;

S. 2985. An act granting an increase of pension to George W. Bodenhamer;

S. 3119. An act granting an increase of pension to Francis A. Beranek;

S. 3130. An act granting an increase of pension to George B. Vallandigham;

S. 3178. An act granting an increase of pension to Daniel Shelly;

S. 3230. An act granting an increase of pension to William C. Bourke;

S. 3272. An act granting an increase of pension to John Hirth;

S. 3273. An act granting an increase of pension to Abisha Rick;

S. 3308. An act granting a pension to Sarah Lovell;

S. 3415. An act granting an increase of pension to William Triplett;

S. 3454. An act granting an increase of pension to William Wilson;

S. 3468. An act granting an increase of pension to Myra R. Daniels;

S. 3549. An act granting an increase of pension to Martha H. Ten Eyck;

S. 3551. An act granting an increase of pension to Solomon Jackson;

S. 3555. An act granting a pension to Alice A. Fray;

S. 3655. An act granting an increase of pension to Mary A. Good;

S. 3720. An act granting an increase of pension to Smith Vaughan;

S. 3759. An act granting an increase of pension to Henry D. Miller;

S. 3765. An act granting an increase of pension to Charles R. Frost;

S. 3883. An act granting an increase of pension to Ferdinand Hercher;

S. 4010. An act granting an increase of pension to Bridget Egan;

S. 4018. An act granting an increase of pension to Ebenezer Lusk;

S. 4112. An act granting an increase of pension to Henry Swigart;

S. 4126. An act granting an increase of pension to Willard Farington;

S. 4193. An act granting an increase of pension to Calvin D. Wilber;

S. 4231. An act granting an increase of pension to Owen Martin;

S. 4359. An act granting an increase of pension to Mary E. Lincoln;

S. 4392. An act granting an increase of pension to Cornelia A. Mobley;

S. 4511. An act granting an increase of pension to William Hoaglin;

S. 4576. An act granting an increase of pension to William Monks;

S. 4582. An act granting an increase of pension to Seth H. Cooper;

S. 4688. An act granting an increase of pension to Noel J. Burgess;

S. 4739. An act granting an increase of pension to Benjamin F. Burgess;

S. 4745. An act granting an increase of pension to Susan J. F. Joslyn;

S. 4759. An act granting an increase of pension to Oliver M. Stone;
S. 4760. An act granting an increase of pension to John B. Lee;
S. 4763. An act granting an increase of pension to Harrison Randolph;
S. 4901. An act granting an increase of pension to Joshua M. Lounsberry;
S. 5055. An act granting an increase of pension to Melvin Grandy;
S. 5077. An act granting an increase of pension to Gabriel Cody;
S. 5091. An act granting an increase of pension to Sallie Tyrrell;
S. 5092. An act granting an increase of pension to Mary C. Feigley;
S. 5093. An act granting an increase of pension to Josiah F. Staubs;
S. 5094. An act granting an increase of pension to Samuel F. Baublitz;
S. 5095. An act granting a pension to Jeremiah McKenzie;
S. 5114. An act granting an increase of pension to Lizzie B. Cusick;
S. 5146. An act granting a pension to Mary J. McLeod;
S. 5173. An act granting an increase of pension to William S. Garrett;
S. 5186. An act granting an increase of pension to Robert Staplins;
S. 5189. An act granting an increase of pension to Margaret F. Joyce;
S. 5192. An act granting a pension to John H. Stacey;
S. 5205. An act granting an increase of pension to John F. Alsup;
S. 5219. An act granting an increase of pension to David N. Norland;
S. 5255. An act granting an increase of pension to John D. Cutler;
S. 5291. An act granting an increase of pension to Elijah A. Smith;
S. 5337. An act granting an increase of pension to Samuel M. Tow;
S. 5338. An act granting an increase of pension to David Buckner;
S. 5342. An act granting an increase of pension to Mary E. Johnson;
S. 5344. An act granting an increase of pension to Sophronia Roberts;
S. 5355. An act granting an increase of pension to Annie M. Walker;
S. 5366. An act granting an increase of pension to John Beatty;
S. 5375. An act granting an increase of pension to Frances L. Porter;
S. 5439. An act granting an increase of pension to George W. Dunlap;
S. 5453. An act granting an increase of pension to Jacob M. Pickle;
S. 5455. An act granting a pension to Emily J. Alden;
S. 5514. An act to amend section 4472 of the Revised Statutes, relating to carrying of dangerous articles on passenger steamers;
S. 5515. An act granting an increase of pension to Matilda C. Frizelle;
S. 5517. An act granting an increase of pension to William H. H. Shaffer;
H. R. 15334. An act to authorize the construction of dams and power stations on the Coosa River at Lock 2, Alabama;
H. J. Res. 145. Joint resolution for appointment of members of Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer soldiers; and
H. J. Res. 149. Joint resolution extending the thanks of Congress to Gen. Horace Porter.

VISITOR TO WEST POINT.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, I was designated as one of the visitors on the part of the Senate to attend the commencement exercises at West Point, which take place from June 1 to June 12. I find that it will be impossible for me to be present at the exercises, and I ask to be excused from service upon the committee on the part of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Senator from West Virginia is excused, and the Chair appoints in his place the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HEMENWAY].

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. KEAN. I present a memorial of the Woman's Home Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, Newark Conference, New Jersey, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to take all of the Alaska native schools out of the United States Bureau of Education and place them in the hands of the governor of Alaska. The memorial is brief, and I ask that it be read, and referred to the Committee on Territories.

There being no objection, the memorial was read, and referred to the Committee on Territories, as follows:

WOMAN'S HOME MISSIONARY SOCIETY OF THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH—NEWARK CONFERENCE.

On April 5 a bill was introduced into the United States Senate the purpose of which is to take all of the Alaska native schools out of the United States Bureau of Education and place them in the hands of the governor of Alaska.

We believe that if this bill should pass it can not fail to result in failure to the cause of education in Alaska.

It is also rumored that the management of the reindeer in Alaska will be taken from the Bureau of Education and placed under the newly appointed governor.

We protest against such a change being made, as we believe that the mission schools will be greatly hindered in their work of elevating and Christianizing the natives in Alaska.

It seems to be the purpose of the bill above referred to to cut off the communication between the Bureau of Education and the various missions in that country, and we therefore most strenuously protest against its passage.

Mr. KEAN presented the memorial of R. B. Moore, of Vineland, N. J., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation extending the time for the interstate transportation of live stock; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Jersey City and Montclair, in the State of New Jersey, and of the Woman's Home Missionary Societies of the Methodist Episcopal Church, of Newark; of the Market Street Methodist Episcopal Church, of Paterson; of Dunellen, and of Jersey City, and of the Wesley Methodist Episcopal Church, of Paterson, all in the State of New Jersey, praying that the direction of the schools of Alaska be left with the Bureau of Education; which were referred to the Committee on Territories.

He also presented a petition of Jersey City Lodge, No. 119, Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, of Jersey City, N. J., praying for the passage of the so-called "employers' liability bill;" which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented the petition of Rev. John E. Parmly, pastor of the Presbyterian Church of Atlantic Highlands, N. J., praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution to prohibit polygamy; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of Local Union No. 59, Brotherhood of Painters, Decorators, and Paper Hangers, of Elizabeth, N. J., praying for the removal of the internal-revenue tax on denaturized alcohol; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. PLATT presented a petition of Local Union No. 261, Brotherhood of Painters, Decorators, and Paper Hangers of America, of New York City, N. Y., and a petition of sundry citizens of Rochester, N. Y., praying for the removal of the internal-revenue tax on denaturized alcohol; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CULLOM presented a petition of sundry citizens of the State of Illinois, praying for the enactment of legislation to remove the duty on denaturized alcohol; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of the Woman's Club of Chicago, Ill., praying that an appropriation be made for a scientific investigation into the industrial conditions of women in the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. FRYE presented the petition of William Low and 190 other citizens of the State of Maine, praying for the enactment of legislation to remove the duty on denaturized alcohol; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. GALLINGER presented a petition of the Drysalters Club, of Boston, Mass., praying for the enactment of legislation to remove the duty on denaturized alcohol; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HOPKINS presented petitions of sundry citizens of Chicago, Philo, Hoopeston, Sidney, Mendota, Rockford, Joliet, Wheaton, Moline, and Dekalb, all in the State of Illinois, praying for the enactment of legislation to remove the duty on denaturized alcohol; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BERRY presented sundry affidavits to accompany the bill (S. 1482) for the relief of the heirs of John McAnulty, deceased; which were referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also presented sundry affidavits to accompany the bill (S. 1480) for the relief of Mrs. Sarah Winter; which were referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. PENROSE presented petitions of West Branch Grange, No. 1149, of Germania; of Local Grange No. 875, of Columbus; of Mitchells Mills Grange, No. 912, of Somers Lane; of Columbia Grange, No. 83, of Columbia Crossroads; of Local Grange No. 1285, of Penfield, and of Center Grange, No. 56, of Limeridge, all of the Patrons of Husbandry; of Local Union No. 288, of Pittston; of Local Union No. 347, of Warren, and of Local Union No. 809, of Westchester, all of the Brotherhood of Painters, Decorators, and Paper Hangers of America, in the State of Pennsylvania, praying for the enactment of legislation to remove the duty on denaturized alcohol; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. KNOX presented petitions of sundry citizens of Scranton; sundry citizens of Tower City; Camp No. 415, Patriotic Order Sons of America, of Mount Pleasant Mills; Camp No. 46, Patriotic Order Sons of America, of Minersville; Camp No. 210, Patriotic Order Sons of America, of Ickesburg; Camp No. 494, Patriotic Order Sons of America, of Port Royal; Camp No. 106, Patriotic Order Sons of America, of Centralia; Camp No. 485, Patriotic Order Sons of America, of Philadelphia; Camp No. 3, Patriotic Order Sons of America, of Philadelphia; Camp No. 512, Patriotic Order Sons of America, of Three Springs; Camp No. 602, Patriotic Order Sons of America, of Rathmel; Camp No. 591, Patriotic Order Sons of America, of Clearfield; 11 citizens of Scranton; Oliver Travitz, of Tower City; William H. Dietrich, of Tower City; Robert Sterling, of Tower City; F. S. Hawk, of Tower City; Washington Camp, No. 591, Patriotic Order Sons of America, of Clearfield, all in the State of Pennsylvania, praying for the enactment of legislation to restrict immigration; which were referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented petitions of the Presbyterian congregation of Freeport; Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary Society of Dunbar; Sinking Valley Presbyterian Church, of Arch Spring; Young Woman's Christian Association of Wilkes-Barre; First Presbyterian Church of Milton; Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Allegheny County, all in the State of Pennsylvania, praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution to prohibit polygamy; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented petitions of Rev. H. G. Hall, of Oil City; W. Berry Smith, of Erie; Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Oil City; Rev. M. H. Calkins, of Mifflinburg; K. G. Kennedy, of Pittsburg; Rev. J. L. Williams, of Susquehanna, all in the State of Pennsylvania, praying for an investigation of the charges made and filed against Hon. REED SMOOT, a Senator from the State of Utah; which were referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

He also presented petitions of the Civic Club, of Philadelphia; State Federation of Pennsylvania Women; Honesdale Improvement Association, of Honesdale; Parents and Teachers' Club of the Fifth Ward School, of Allegheny; the Reading Circle, of Newcastle; the Century Club, of Pottstown; Woman's Club, of New Brighton, all in the State of Pennsylvania, praying that an appropriation be made for a scientific investigation into the industrial conditions of women in the United States; which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Canonsburg, the Presbyterian Ministerial Association of Philadelphia, of 600 citizens of Washington, 300 citizens of Greensburg, sundry citizens of Ben Avon and Emsworth, all in the State of Pennsylvania, praying for the enactment of legislation conditioning the appropriation to the Jamestown Exposition on the closing of the gates of the exposition on Sunday; which were referred to the Select Committee on Industrial Expositions.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. GEARIN, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4867) granting a pension to Louisa Gregg, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. ALGER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1209) for the relief of B. J. D. Irwin, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Claims; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4855) to correct the military record of Malachi Mannion, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was agreed to, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1215) to correct the military record of William Fleming, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. BULKELEY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4964) for the relief of Thomas F. Walter, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

MISSOURI RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. BERRY. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 5943) to authorize the Minnesota, Dakota and Pacific Railway Company to construct a bridge across the Missouri River, to report it favorably with an amendment, and I submit a report thereon.

Mr. KITTREDGE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill just reported by the Senator from Arkansas.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 1, line 12, after the word "six," to strike out the proviso in the following words:

Provided, That said corporation shall commence said construction within two years and complete the same within four years from the passage of this act.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Minnesota, Dakota and Pacific Railway Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of South Dakota, its successors and assigns, be, and they are hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a railway bridge and approaches thereto, across the Missouri River between the mouth of the Moreau River and the south line of Walworth County in the State of South Dakota, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HEARINGS BEFORE COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS.

Mr. KEAN. I am directed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the resolution submitted yesterday by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SCOTT] relative to hearings before the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to report a substitute therefor, and I ask for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the substitute resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds be, and is hereby, authorized to employ a stenographer from time to time, as may be necessary, to report such hearings as may be had by said committee or its subcommittees in connection with bills and other matters before said committee, and to have such hearings printed for its use, and that said stenographer be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. PILES introduced a bill (S. 6024) granting an increase of pension to Franklin B. Beach; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PLATT introduced a bill (S. 6025) for the relief of the Holly Manufacturing Company, of Buffalo, N. Y.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District or Columbia.

Mr. TELLER introduced a bill (S. 6026) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Grand Junction, in the State of Colorado; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. MALLORY (for Mr. TALIAFERRO) introduced a bill (S. 6027) granting a pension to Hattie S. Carruth; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. FULTON introduced a bill (S. 6028) granting a pension to Kate F. Hoffman; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WARNER introduced the following bills; which were severally read twice by their titles, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 6029) granting an increase of pension to William H. Isenberg;

A bill (S. 6030) granting an increase of pension to James N. Hamilton; and

A bill (S. 6031) granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth F. Snyder.

Mr. WETMORE introduced a bill (S. 6032) granting an increase of pension to William Leonard; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HALE introduced a bill (S. 6033) authorizing the reappointment of midshipmen recently dismissed from the Naval Academy for hazing; which was read twice by its title, with the accompanying paper, which was ordered to be printed, was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. SIMMONS introduced the following bills; which were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 6034) granting an increase of pension to William A. Hopper;

A bill (S. 6035) granting an increase of pension to John Fox (with an accompanying paper); and

A bill (S. 6036) granting a pension to Mary Ann Gatlin (with accompanying papers).

AMENDMENT TO POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BURNHAM submitted an amendment relative to the pay of rural carriers on water routes who are employed only during the summer months, intended to be proposed by him to the post-office appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

IMPROVEMENT OF PUBLIC ROADS.

Mr. LATIMER submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the Senate 10,000 copies of the hearings before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry of the Senate on Senate bills 3477 and 2539, Fifty-eighth Congress, relating to public roads.

REGULATION OF RAILROAD RATES.

Mr. SCOTT. I send to the desk an amendment to the rate bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. SCOTT. I should like to have it read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The proposed amendment will be read at the request of the Senator from West Virginia.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, line 19, after the word "unlawful," change the period to a colon and insert:

Provided, however, That no rate or set of rates shall be based on a mileage tariff.

TRANSPORTATION OF PETROLEUM.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read:

The Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a report by the Commissioner of the Bureau of Corporations in the Department of Commerce and Labor on the subject of transportation and freight rates in connection with the oil industry. The investigation, the results of part of which are summarized in this report, was undertaken in accordance with House resolution 499, passed February 15, 1905, but for the reasons given in the report it has been more general and extensive than was called for in the resolution itself.

I call your especial attention to the letter of transmittal accompanying and summarizing the report; for the report is of capital importance in view of the effort now being made to secure such enlargement of the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission as will confer upon the Commission power in some measure adequately to meet the clearly demonstrated needs of the situation. The facts set forth in this report are for the most part not disputed. It is only the inferences from them that are disputed, and even in this respect the dispute is practically limited to the question as to whether the transactions are or are not technically legal. The report shows that the Standard Oil Company has benefited enormously up almost to the present moment by secret rates, many of these secret rates being clearly unlawful. This benefit amounts to at least three-quarters of a million a year. This three-quarters of a million represents the profit that the Standard Oil Company obtains at the expense of the railroads; but of course the ultimate result is that it obtains a much larger profit at the expense of the public. A very striking result of the investigation has been that shortly after the discovery of these secret rates by the Commissioner of Corporations, the major portion of them were promptly corrected by the railroads, so that most of them have now been done away with. This immediate correction, partial or complete, of the evil of the secret rates is of course on the one hand an acknowledgment that they were wrong, and yet were persevered in until exposed; and on the other hand a proof of the efficiency of the work that has been done by the Bureau of Corporations. The Department of Justice will take up the question of instituting prosecutions in at least certain of the cases. But it is most desirable to enact into law the bill introduced by Senator KNOX to correct the interpretation of the immunity provisions rendered in Judge Humphrey's decision. The hands of the Government have been greatly strengthened in securing an effective remedy by the recent decision of the Supreme Court in the case instituted by the Government against the tobacco trust, which decision permits the Government to examine the books and records of any corporation engaged in interstate commerce; and by the recent conviction and punishment of the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad and certain of its officers.

But in addition to these secret rates the Standard Oil profits immensely by open rates, which are so arranged as to give it an overwhelming advantage over its independent competitors. The refusal of the railroads in certain cases to prorate produces analogous effects. Thus in New England the refusal of certain railway systems to prorate has resulted in keeping the Standard Oil in absolute monopolistic control of the field, enabling it to charge from three to four hundred thousand dollars a year more to the consumers of oil in New England than they would have had to pay had the price paid been that obtaining in the competitive fields. This is a characteristic example of the numerous evils which are inevitable under a system in which the big shipper and the railroad are left free to crush out all individual initiative and all power of independent action because of the absence of adequate and thorough-going governmental control. Exactly similar conditions obtain in a large part of the West and Southwest. This particular instance exemplifies the fact that the granting to the Government the power to substitute a proper for an improper rate is in very many instances the only effective way in which to prevent improper discrimination in rates.

It is not possible to put into figures the exact amount by which the Standard profits through the gross favoritism shown it by the railroads in connection with the open rates. The profit, of course, comes not merely by the saving in the rate itself as compared with its competitors, but by the higher prices it is able to charge, and (even without reference to these higher prices) by the complete control of the market which it secures, thereby getting the profit on the whole consumption. Here again the only way by which the discriminations can be cured is by conferring upon the Interstate Commerce Commission the power to take quick and effective action in regulating the rates.

One feature of the report which is especially worthy of attention is the showing made as to the way in which the law is evaded by treating as State commerce what is in reality merely a part of interstate commerce. It is clearly shown, for instance, that this device is employed on the New York Central Railroad as well as on many other railroads, in such fashion as to amount to thwarting the purpose of the law, although the forms of the law may be complied with.

It is, unfortunately, not true that the Standard Oil Company is the only great corporation which in the immediate past has benefited, and is at this moment benefiting, in wholly improper fashion by an elaborate series of rate discriminations which permit it to profit both at the expense of its rivals and of the general public. The Attorney-General reports to me that the investigation now going on as to the shipments by the sugar trust over the trunk lines running out of New York City tends to show that the sugar trust rarely, of ever, pays the lawful rate for transportation, and is thus improperly, and probably unlawfully, favored at the expense of its competitors and of the general public.

The argument is sometimes advanced against conferring upon some governmental body the power of supervision and control over interstate commerce, that to do so tends to weaken individual initiative. Investigations such as this conclusively disprove any such allegation. On the contrary, the proper play for individual initiative can only be secured by such governmental supervision as will curb those monopolies which crush out all individual initiative. The railroad itself can not without such Government aid protect the interests of its own stockholders as against one of these great corporations loosely known as "trusts."

In the effort to prevent the railroads from uniting for improper purposes we have very unwisely prohibited them from uniting for proper purposes; that is, for purposes of protection to themselves and to the general public as against the power of the great corporations. They should certainly be given power thus to unite on conditions laid down by Congress, such conditions to include the specific approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission of any agreement to which the railroads may come. In addition to this the Government must interfere through its agents to deprive the railroad of the ability to make to the big corporations the concessions which otherwise it is powerless to refuse.

The Government should have power by its agents to examine into the conduct of the railways—that is, the examiners under the direction of the Interstate Commerce Commission should be able to examine as thoroughly into the affairs of the railroad as bank examiners now examine into the affairs of banks.

It is impossible to work a material improvement in conditions such as above described merely through the instrumentality of a lawsuit. A lawsuit is often a necessary method; but by itself it is an utterly inadequate method. What is needed is the conferring upon the Commission of ample affirmative power, so conferred as to make its decisions take effect at once, subject only to such action by the court as is demanded by the Constitution. The courts have the power to, and will undoubtedly, interfere if the action of the Commission should become in effect confiscatory of the property of an individual or corporation, or if the Commission should undertake to do anything beyond the authority conferred upon it by the law under which it is acting. I am well aware that within the limits thus set the Commission may at times be guilty of injustice; but far grosser and far more frequent injustice, and injustice of a much more injurious kind, now results and must always result from the failure to give the Commission ample power to act promptly and effectively within these broad limits.

Though not bearing upon the question of railroad rates, there are two measures consideration of which is imperatively suggested by the submission of this report. The Standard Oil Company has, largely by unfair or unlawful methods, crushed out home competition. It is highly desirable that an element of competition should be introduced by the passage of some such law as that which has already passed the House, putting alcohol used in the arts and manufactures upon the free list. Furthermore, the time has come when no oil or coal lands held by the Government, either upon the public domain proper or in territory owned by the Indian tribes, should be alienated. The fee to such lands should be kept in the United States Government whether or not the profits arising from it are to be given to any Indian tribe, and the lands should be leased only on such terms and for such periods as will enable the Government to keep entire control thereof.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, May 4, 1906.

Mr. FORAKER. I move that the message which has just been read be printed and that it lie on the table, at least until we get through with the discussion which is now in progress, for it seems to hit almost every proposition involved in the general debate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CULBERSON. Is it in order to offer a resolution?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The introduction of resolutions is the order before the Senate.

Mr. CULBERSON. I submit a resolution, and ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of Commerce and Labor be, and he is hereby, directed to send to the Senate a copy of the full report of the Commissioner of Corporations on the oil industry in the United States, a part and summary of which report was submitted to the Senate today by the President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. FORAKER. Let the resolution be read again.

The Secretary again read the resolution; and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

HEARING BEFORE COMMITTEE ON WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

Mr. BACON submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the stenographer employed to report the hearing before the Select Committee on Woman Suffrage given to a delegation of the National Woman Suffrage Association, February 15, 1906, be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

COINAGE OF GOLD BULLION.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I ask that the regular order of business be laid before the Senate in pursuance of the agreement by unanimous consent for the taking up and debating of the rate bill.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The unfinished business will be in order as soon as the morning business is closed.

Mr. ALDRICH. Before the morning business is closed I should like to submit a report from the Committee on Finance.

I am directed by the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (S. 6022) to amend section 6 of an act entitled "An act to define and fix the standard of value, to maintain the parity of all forms of money issued or coined by the United States, to refund the public debt, and for other purposes," approved March 14, 1900, to report it favorably with amendments, and I submit a report thereon. This is a matter which it is important should have the immediate action of the Senate, and I request the consideration of the bill. I ask that the accompanying letter of the Secretary of the Treasury, which is made a part of the report, may be read.

Mr. HALE. I will withhold my call for the regular order until this is completed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The letter of the Secretary of the Treasury will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, May 3, 1906.

SIR: I submit herewith a draft amending section 6 of the act of March 14, 1900, which I recommend be enacted with all reasonable promptness. The occasion for this amendment is as follows:

There has recently been an unprecedented influx of foreign gold. Somewhat in excess of $30,000,000 has arrived or is en route since April 12, 1906. It is impossible to coin this with sufficient promptness to meet the demands of business. The amendment, you will observe, provides against emergencies of this character. There is frequently a demand upon the Treasury for gold for export, and the demand is always for bars and never for coin. It is therefore desirable to keep a sufficient amount of gold bars in the Treasury to meet this oft-recurring demand, and the limit now allowed by law is not excessive. It follows that an unusual influx of gold like the present results in embarrassment. The amendment, I think, will meet the requirements of the situation and affords the necessary elasticity. Under the discretion of the Secretary there will probably be kept under normal conditions fifty millions in gold bars, which will occasionally be exhausted as in the past by unusual exportations, and occasionally will be increased by unusual importations to the maximum of one hundred millions.

The last clause of the amendment protects against a settled policy of maintaining one hundred millions in gold bars, which might result in another emergency should importations suddenly increase.

Respectfully,

L. M. SHAW, Secretary.

Hon. NELSON W. ALDRICH,
Chairman Committee on Finance, United States Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. NELSON. The bill has not been read yet. I should like to hear the bill read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Finance with amendments, on page 1, line 7, after the word "the," to strike out "fifteenth and sixteenth lines" and to insert "first proviso;" in line 11, after the word "coin," to strike out "with" and insert "within;" in line 12, before the word "any," to strike out "promptness" and insert "time;" on page 2, line 1, after the word "the," to strike out "provision" and insert "first proviso;" in line 8, before the word "reasonable," to strike out "with" and insert "within;" and in the same line, after the word "reasonable," to strike out "promptness" and insert "time;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 6 of an act approved March 14, 1900, entitled "An act to define and fix the standard of value, to maintain the parity of all forms of money issued or coined by the United States, to refund the public debt, and for other purposes," be amended by striking from the first proviso of said section 6 the words "one hundred" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "fifty," and by adding, after the words "shall be suspended," the following: "but the Secretary of the Treasury is directed to coin, within reasonable time, any and all gold bullion held in said reserve fund in excess of $50,000,000," making the first proviso of said section 6 read as follows: "Provided, That whenever and so long as the gold coin held in the reserve fund in the Treasury for the redemption of United States notes and Treasury notes shall fall and remain below $50,000,000 the authority to issue certificates as herein provided shall be suspended, but the Secretary of the Treasury is directed to coin, within reasonable time, any and all gold bullion held in said reserve fund in excess of $50,000,000."

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, some Senators here have asked me to explain the practical effect of this legislation. The gold-standard act of 1900 provided for a reserve fund of $150,000,000 to redeem the outstanding United States notes. This fund was required to be held in gold coin or gold bullion, with a provision that $100,000,000 at least should be held in gold coin and $50,000,000 could be held in gold bullion.

The bill changes the provisions of existing law so that $100,000,000 can be held in gold bars or gold bullion and $50,000,000 in gold coin, at the discretion of the Secretary, with a provision, however, that the bars shall be coined within a reasonable time.

It is necessary to have the bill passed promptly, as the amount of gold bars we have recently imported has created embarrassment at the Treasury Department, and now the money in the Treasury is largely being held in gold bars. Of course for the purposes of the redemption fund gold bars are equally as good as coin.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator speak louder? I want to hear him, but he speaks in rather a low tone, and I could not hear him. I want to understand the reason for the bill. I have no doubt there is one, but I want to know what it is. I refer to the latter part of the Senator's statement.

Mr. ALDRICH. The reason was stated fully in the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury, which has just been read. It is that at the present time there is an excess of gold bars held by the Government, and that it is necessary that that should be changed into gold coin as rapidly as possible. It can not be done, because the San Francisco mint is not in a condition for work, the Philadelphia mint is now coining dollars for the Republic of Mexico under an agreement with them, and the Denver mint is the only one which is now engaged in coining gold dollars.

The proposition is to permit the exchange from the reserve fund of not exceeding $50,000,000 in gold coin into gold bars. As the bars can be held by the reserve fund no harm can come to anyone.

Mr. BACON. Is it to be a permanent arrangement or temporary?

Mr. ALDRICH. It is a permanent arrangement in the sense that it leaves it within the discretion of the Secretary. Gold certificates can not be issued as against gold bars, but they can be issued as against gold coin.

Mr. BACON. The Senator, I presume, recognizes that the present necessity grows out of the conditions which he has just narrated.

Mr. ALDRICH. Yes.

Mr. BACON. I should like to ask the Senator whether he thinks that the original provision which required $100,000,000 to be in gold coin was an unnecessary provision, and that experience has proven it may as well be $100,000,000 in bullion?

Mr. ALDRICH. I think it was unnecessary except, perhaps, as an excess of caution. I can see no harm that can come to the holders of United States notes or to anyone else in holding a larger proportion of that fund in gold bars.

Mr. BACON. The Senator then thinks it will do as a permanent provision of law?

Mr. ALDRICH. It does become a permanent provision except that it is within the discretion of the Secretary, and it is further provided that the coinage shall take place within a reasonable time.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, practically I do not think it makes much difference whether there is $50,000,000 in coin or $100,000,000 in coin. This $150,000,000 put into the Treasury as a reserve by the act of March 14, 1900, has been there steadily. Every month, I suppose, and perhaps every day in the year there has been some money taken out of it. There is a provision in the act that whenever any money is taken out of that reserve it shall be immediately taken from the funds in the Treasury and replaced; so there has practically been all the time $150,000,000 either in gold coin or in gold bars in the Treasury for a particular, specific purpose, the purpose being to redeem the greenbacks; that is, that any person holding greenbacks and wanting gold—and it includes Treasury notes also, which are very limited in amount—any person having greenbacks and wanting gold for export, that being practically what it is wanted for, not much being wanted for anything else, can go to the Treasury and get it. If anyone wants gold for export he would much prefer to have the bars to having the coin. That is the experience of everybody. It is so stated in the letter of the Secretary, and everybody knows that is the fact.

Just now the Secretary of the Treasury seems to think that we ought to coin more of gold. I do not myself see any particular advantage in coining it. This $150,000,000 is not represented, and can not be represented, by certificates. I will ask the Senator from Rhode Island is not that a fact?

Mr. ALDRICH. Yes; it must be either in gold coin or gold bullion.

Mr. TELLER. It must be either in gold coin or in gold bars, and it is limited, as stated, to $150,000,000—$50,000,000 in bars. I repeat, I do not myself see very much necessity for a change of the law; but it can not possibly do any harm, I think. I merely wish to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that at all times we have constantly in the Treasury $150,000,000 for the purpose of the redemption of greenbacks. I do not trouble myself to take into account the notes, because only about $7,000,000 of Treasury notes have been redeemed during the whole time. Since the passage of the act we have redeemed $105,000,000 worth of Treasury notes and greenbacks. I venture to say, Mr. President, that practically all of that was for the purpose of export. Occasionally a man may want gold, but he does not need go to the Treasury to get it. If he has the greenbacks, he can walk into any ordinary bank and get gold for them. If he wishes to exchange silver certificates for gold, he can do that, if he desires such an accommodation, in any bank doing an exchange business. All our money is practically on a gold basis. It is on a gold basis, not particularly because the silver certificates are redeemable in gold, but those certificates are performing the same function as is gold, and they are as good for every practical money purpose, except for export, as is gold. I know, as a matter of fact, that every bank in the country will, for its customers, exchange gold for silver certificates, just as it will exchange gold for greenbacks, in either way which may be desired. So the purpose of the bill is only, I think, for the convenience of exporters.

I only wanted to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to the fact that I think there is no necessity for an additional provision here for the coining of this bullion. I believe if you had $10,000,000—or, I will say, $20,000,000—in coin the balance might just as well be in bars, for I think I can say, without having looked up the matter very carefully or critically, that in no one year have we ever redeemed $20,000,000 since the act passed. The average is about $17,000,000 a year.

I repeat that I do not know that any particular harm will come, because if an exporter really wants the gold he will go and get the coin, while he would prefer the bars, and we save money by not coining the bars, by keeping the bars instead of coining them.

I do not care to interfere with the passage of the bill, because I understand it has been drawn at the Treasury Department and sent down here with a statement that there was some reason why it ought to be promptly passed.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from Colorado will notice that the provision for the coining is a very elastic provision. As amended by the committee, the bill provides for leaving the matter practically discretionary with the Secretary of the Treasury as to the amount of bullion to be coined, it being limited between fifty and one hundred million dollars.

Mr. TELLER. I think it would be a little more shipshape and a little better if the bill should simply provide that the Secretary of the Treasury should coin the balance, in his discretion, as might be necessary.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I should like to ascertain the parliamentary status of this bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and open to amendment.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Is it in such condition that an objection to its present consideration would prevail?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks it has passed beyond that stage. Its consideration was proceeded to by a unanimous consent of the Senate.

Mr. NEWLANDS. It is a very important bill and amends one of the most important laws ever passed within the last ten years. Whilst I am not prepared to consider the bill or to make any objection to it, and possibly may have no objection to it after I have fully considered it, still I should like it to go over until to-morrow, so that I may have an opportunity of examining it. I ask the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] whether he has any objection to the bill going over until to-morrow?

Mr. ALDRICH. While I might have no objection to it, I have already stated—perhaps when the Senator from Nevada was absent from the Chamber—that there is an exigency arising by reason of the fact of the unusually large demands for gold during the last few weeks in the form of bullion for export, which has brought the amount of available money in the Treasury to a dangerously low sum. This is simply a proposition that not exceeding fifty millions of gold coin now held as a part of this surplus shall be available for the issue of gold certificates against it in the current money of the country. The emergency is such that the Secretary of the Treasury has called the attention of the Finance Committee of the Senate to the necessity or the desirability of immediate action.

If the Senator from Nevada chooses to object to the consideration of the bill, or thinks he may discover some serious objection to it within the next twenty-four hours, I see no reason for asking the Senate to proceed to its immediate consideration. I think there can be no objection made to the bill—certainly none was suggested by any member of the Finance Committee, who considered it—and I think the Senator from Nevada will not discover any objection on investigation.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I should like the bill to go over for at least twenty-four hours, so that I may have an opportunity to examine it. I am certainly not prepared, for one, to take action upon the bill now.

Mr. ALDRICH. If the Senator will permit the bill to pass the Senate, he will have forty-eight hours in which to consider the matter further, and then he can enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, if it shall be passed. There will be no objection to that.

I think if there was any serious objection to the bill the Senator from Nevada, with his acute mind, would have discovered it in the first reading of the bill, but I hardly think it is possible that he will or can discover any particular objection to it. So I suggest to him that he allow the bill to pass and that he can then move to reconsider the vote on its passage if, after investigation, he finds any objection to it.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I fear I would not be in the same position on a motion to reconsider.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator would be precisely in the same position he is in now, because I should not object to a motion to reconsider.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Very well, then, I have no objection.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REGULATION OF RAILROAD RATES.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12987) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, and all acts amendatory thereof, and to enlarge the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will proceed to read the bill by sections under the unanimous-consent agreement heretofore made by the Senate.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, let us have the unanimous-consent agreement read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the unanimous-consent agreement at the request of the Senator from Maine.

The Secretary read the unanimous-consent agreement of April 30, 1906, as follows:

It is agreed by unanimous consent that on Friday, May 4, 1906, immediately upon the conclusion of the routine morning business, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the bill H. R. 12987, "'An act to regulate commerce,' approved February 4, 1887, and all acts amendatory thereof, and to enlarge the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission;" the bill to be read by sections for the purpose of amendment, the discussion upon amendments offered to proceed under a fifteen-minute rule, the amendments to be disposed of when the discussion thereon is concluded.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will now read the first section of the bill.

The Secretary read section 1, as follows:

That section 1 of an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 1. That the provisions of this act shall apply to any common carrier or carriers engaged in the transportation of passengers or property wholly by railroad (or partly by railroad and partly by water when both are used under a common control, management, or arrangement for a continuous carriage or shipment) from one State or Territory of the United States or the District of Columbia to any other State or Territory of the United States or the District of Columbia, or from one place in a Territory to another place in the same Territory, or from any place in the United States to an adjacent foreign country, or from any place in the United States through a foreign country to any other place in the United States, and also to the transportation in like manner of property shipped from any place in the United States to a foreign country and carried from such place to a port of transshipment or shipped from a foreign country to any place in the United States and carried to such place from a port of entry either in the United States or an adjacent foreign country: Provided, however, That the provisions of this act shall not apply to the transportation of passengers or property or to the receiving, delivering, storage, or handling of property wholly within one State and not shipped to or from a foreign country from or to any State or Territory as aforesaid.

"The term 'railroad' as used in this act shall include all bridges and ferries used or operated in connection with any railroad, and also all the road in use by any corporation operating a railroad, whether owned or operated under a contract, agreement, or lease, and shall also include all switches, spurs, tracks, and terminal facilities of every kind used or necessary in the transportation of the persons or property designated herein, and also all freight depots, yards, and grounds used or necessary in the transportation or delivery of any of said property; and the term 'transportation' shall include cars and other vehicles and all instrumentalities and facilities of shipment or carriage, irrespective of ownership or of any contract, express or implied, for the use thereof and all services in connection with the receipt, delivery, elevation, and transfer in transit, ventilation, refrigeration or icing, storage, and handling of property transported; and it shall be the duty of every carrier subject to the provisions of this act to provide and furnish such transportation upon reasonable request therefor and to establish through routes and just and reasonable rates applicable thereto.

"All charges made for any service rendered or to be rendered in the transportation of passengers or property as aforesaid, or in connection therewith, shall be just and reasonable; and every unjust and unreasonable charge for such service or any part thereof is prohibited and declared to be unlawful."

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I believe this section is now subject to amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Under the rule, it is now subject to amendment.

Mr. BAILEY. I have myself an amendment proposing to include express companies and sleeping-car companies in this, but there are other amendments on the same subject, and as I care more for another particular amendment than I do for this, I shall not propose any to this section and will support that offered by other Senators. But I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the language on page 3:

And the term "transportation" shall include cars and other vehicles and all instrumentalities and facilities of shipment or carriage, irrespective of ownership or of any contract, express or implied, for the use thereof.

The Senate will see that this bill includes under the definition of "transportation," which is an act, the facilities with which that act is performed. To me it seems plain that the words beginning with "cars," in line 3, down to and including the word "thereof," in line 6, ought to be taken out of their position there and placed under the definition of "a railroad." The cars and other vehicles are as much a part of the railway as the engine or the depot or the yard, and I think plainly ought to be included in that part of the definition. They ought certainly not to be included under the definition of transportation, which is an act. If we can do nothing else with this bill, we ought, at least, free it from the schoolmaster's criticism. I hardly think that kind of a definition would enable any schoolboy to pass his examination. I am not going to insist on it, but if those in charge of the bill think it is worth their while, I believe the amendment ought to be adopted.

Mr. LODGE. I desire to offer an amendment to this section, which I think is——

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. FORAKER. I only wish to interrupt the Senator a moment. Did I understand the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] to offer an amendment?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas did not offer an amendment.

Mr. BAILEY. No; I merely suggested to those in charge of the bill that an amendment in this respect would greatly improve the bill, though I do not think it would improve the efficiency of it. It would simply improve it from the standpoint of the scholar or critic.

Mr. FORAKER. I agree with the Senator about that. I only wanted to know whether he offered an amendment, as I understand we are to dispose of the amendments as we proceed.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. LODGE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KNOX. I only wish a moment. I entirely agree with what the Senator from Texas has said in respect to the place where the definition which was cut out on the third page of this bill should go—namely, under the definition of railroads, and for an additional reason. There is a manifest absurdity here, in my mind. It says:

And the term "transportation" shall include cars and other vehicles and all instrumentalities and facilities of shipment or carriage, irrespective of ownership,

Then in the concluding portion of this paragraph, beginning on line 10, page 3, it is made the duty of a carrier to furnish such transportation—that is, to furnish facilities, whether the carrier owns them or not, without any regard to the question of ownership and without any regard to contract. In other words, it seems to me, imposing an absolute impossibility upon the carrier. If the transposition is made, as the Senator from Texas has suggested, the bill would be free from that objection.

Mr. LODGE. I desire to offer an amendment to the first line of the first section, at the end of the line. I desire to offer the draft which appears on page 5, not the one which appears on page 1 of the bound amendments. I do not know why the one on page 5 was misplaced, because it should come immediately after the first one. I desire to make two slight modifications in that amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the proposed amendment as modified by the Senator from Massachusetts.

The SECRETARY. In section 1, line 1, after the word "to," at the end of the line, it is proposed to insert:

Any corporation or any person or persons engaged in the transportation of oil or other commodity, except natural gas or water for municipal purposes, by means of pipe lines, or partly by pipe lines and partly by railroad, or partly by pipe lines and partly by water, who shall be considered and held to be common carriers within the meaning and purpose of this act, and to.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I do not want to make any opposition to the Senator's amendment, but it occurs to me that the amendment ought to be further amended, so as to provide that it shall apply only to pipe lines operated for the public. I do not understand how you would compel a man who has a private pipe line of his own to become a common carrier. We have a right to regulate common carriers who are engaged in interstate commerce, because they are instrumentalities of commerce; but if a man living on one side of a boundary line of a State sees fit to have a private line of his own, which passes into another State, it does not seem to me that we could compel him to throw that open to the public use. I want to illustrate what I mean. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], upon my suggestion, has inserted some words in his amendment in regard to natural gas. I live in the city of Cincinnati——

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator will allow me, the exception applies to natural gas or water for municipal purposes.

Mr. FORAKER. I know; but I wanted to call the Senator's attention to how it would operate if the amendment were not so amended. At Cincinnati the gas company—not the city, but the gas company—has secured, under the laws of Ohio, an amendment to its charter authorizing it to acquire and distribute natural gas as a substitute for artificial gas, and authorizing it in that behalf, under the statute of Ohio, to lay, maintain, and operate the necessary pipes to transport that natural gas from a point outside the State of Ohio to the point where the natural gas is to be distributed. They are about to spend, I think, nearly $5,000,000 in that behalf to build a pipe line 274 miles long, from Cincinnati into West Virginia, where they will find a sufficient quantity, as they understand, of natural gas. They are taking upon themselves the burden of that investment; they are spending a large amount of money, or will be when they once commence to expend it; they have to raise that sum, and they have increased the capital stock so as to enable them to do it, and are laboring right now to raise that amount of money for that purpose, so that the people of Cincinnati can have natural gas. It is not to be brought there for the municipality, except in the sense that the corporation which has a right to supply gas to that city is acquiring it in order that it may supply it at a price agreed upon between the company and the consumers of gas.

That is not all. I did not think to tell the Senator when I was in consultation with him yesterday that for years the gas company located in the city of Cincinnati has been supplying gas to the cities opposite Cincinnati, on the Kentucky side of the river—Newport, Covington, Ludlow, Dayton, and Bellevue, five cities in all. They pipe that gas across the river and turn it into the pipes of the five cities on the other side, in that way supplying that people. Just at this time it is my impression that that contract is not in operation, because of some arrangement they have made, but it illustrates what is involved here. That is a purely private matter; they are not piping gas for the public, and it seems to me that they ought not to be put under this proposed law. We have no right to put them under it. I think such a limitation ought to be put in the Senator's amendment by an amendment to the amendment that it shall apply to all pipe lines that are carrying for the public, and not to private pipe lines that an individual or a single corporation may have laid down and put into operation for its own benefit. I do not want to press it, but I desire to call attention to it.

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.

Mr. MALLORY. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Ohio if he can say whether the pipe lines to which he refers act on the theory of being public servants, to condemn property under the right of eminent domain?

Mr. FORAKER. As I stated, the company is proposing to put in this natural-gas pipe line to Cincinnati from up in West Virginia, passing through a portion of Kentucky, as well as Ohio and West Virginia. It is authorized under its charter, by an amendment to the charter, and authorized by the laws of Ohio to construct, maintain, and operate a pipe line for the transportation of oil, natural gas, or water, as the case may be. They are not interested in oil in any way, but they are interested in natural gas. I think it is all right to make any pipe line that is a common carrier subject to the law. I believe every common carrier engaged in carriage for interstate commerce should be subject to this law.

Mr. MALLORY. I did not understand the Senator to answer the question exactly as I put it, which is, Do they exercise a right of eminent domain on the theory of being public servants?

Mr. FORAKER. They do. They are allowed to exercise the power of eminent domain, and they are, by the terms of the statute, called "common carriers" for that reason. They are supposed to be wholly within the State of Ohio, I suppose, so far as the statute contemplates, but a pipe line of that kind is not contemplated to be used as a common carrier, but simply for a specific private individual purpose in the sense that it belongs only to one company.

Mr. SCOTT. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him a moment?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.

Mr. SCOTT. The Senator probably is aware that they are carrying gas now from West Virginia to the cities of Cleveland and Toledo, Ohio.

Mr. FORAKER. Yes.

Mr. SCOTT. They have a pipe line under the Ohio River, and with that same pipe line they are supplying my city and the factory of which I am president. I should like this amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts to go over until we get it in proper shape, so that we will not find we are tied up by something that we do not want.

Mr. FORAKER. I do not want it to go over if we can agree upon it now. I do not understand why the Senator should object to putting in the words "carrying for the public," if a party be not engaged in carrying for the public, but only in carrying his own.

I want to say further, in answer to the Senator from Florida, if he will give me his attention, that it is not necessary in Ohio under the Ohio statute to become an incorporated company under the statute in order to put down, maintain, and operate a pipe line for the transportation of oil or gas or water. If you see fit to incorporate under that statute and have the power of eminent domain conferred upon you, you are called a "common carrier;" but any person—and this amendment applies to persons as well as corporations—may put down, and corporations so authorized may put down, pipe, and maintain and operate it for transportation of oil or gas or water.

Mr. MALLORY. Well, Mr. President, it occurs to me that the true test is whether they have the right to exercise the power of eminent domain. If they have, it is because they are performing a public service. If they have not, they ought not to have the right. Now, if they do exercise that right, it seems to me it is a proper subject for us to deal with.

Mr. FORAKER. I do not know whether they will get the right of way by the exercise of the power of eminent domain or by private contract. They will, perhaps, get it by exercising the right of eminent domain in some instances and in others by agreement.

Mr. McCUMBER. I should like to ask the Senator from Ohio whether any of these companies are carrying gas or oil other than that which they themselves manufacture—whether they are common carriers in any respect?

Mr. FORAKER. I do not think they are. But I do not regard myself as good authority on that subject. I know but little about it except in a general way. I know some years ago there were discovered natural-gas fields in Ohio, and we have been piping the gas around to various cities in the State; and I know that recently, within the past four or five months, the gas and electric company of Cincinnati had its charter amended so as to authorize it to go to the natural-gas fields in West Virginia, by putting in a pipe line of this kind, and bring the gas to Cincinnati, and substitute it for the artificial gas which they are now supplying.

Mr. McCUMBER. I hope the Senator will explain the necessity of making a public matter out of these concerns, which are purely for private use. I do not understand the necessity of bringing them under the provisions of this proposed law. If they are carrying for the public, of course there would be some necessity of making them subject to it.

Mr. FULTON. I ask the Senator from North Dakota whether a pipe line has the right to exercise the power of eminent domain, and if it does exercise that right, why should it not be held to be exercising the right of a public carrier?

Mr. McCUMBER. Whatever right it gets to exercise the power of eminent domain is a right obtained from the State and not from Federal authority in any respect. But even if it be granted that you may consider that the law gives them the right to condemn land for their particular purpose, that of itself does not make them a public carrier unless in the law or in their articles of incorporation there is something authorizing them to carry for the public.

Mr. FULTON. Can they obtain the right to exercise the power of eminent domain unless they are engaged in a public purpose?

Mr. McCUMBER. That will be determined by the laws of the State. That is not the real question. The question is whether any of them are engaged as public carriers of particular commodities. If they are, I concede that they ought to be brought under the provisions of this particular law. If they are not, I can not see the necessity of bringing them under the provisions of the law. I do not understand that under the rule we can lay this amendment over. Under the general consent it must be voted upon at the close of the argument. I am therefore doubly desirous that the Senator from Massachusetts should make that matter clear.

Mr. TILLMAN. I should like to ask the Senator from North Dakota a question.

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. TILLMAN. I understood him to ask a moment ago whether the charters of these corporations made them public carriers. I do not imagine that any public carrier in the United States has a Federal charter except the transcontinental railroads. They all get their charters from the States, and they all get the right to exercise the power of eminent domain in that way. I think the test is whether they are engaged in interstate commerce—whether the commodity they are transporting would come under the rule of interstate commerce, which we are allowed to regulate. That is my idea of the test of this whole question.

Mr. McCUMBER. If they are carrying their own goods and no goods of the public, how is the public interested one way or the other in the matter of their carrying their own goods through their own pipe line from one State to another?

Mr. TILLMAN. Let me answer the Senator from North Dakota in this way: Take West Virginia, whence, I believe, comes the gas in the case mentioned by the Senator from Ohio. Of course that gas is not going down yonder three or four hundred miles without pressure, and therefore it comes from the surrounding country where originally tapped, and the gas company which has bored its wells may be robbing the landowners around it of their gas, because it has great capital and the facilities for sending it off and selling it, while the landowner, who is not able to pipe it to the market, is not allowed to pipe it through the established pipe line, because Congress will not help him. That is my conception of a just and proper reason——

Mr. McCUMBER. I can not understand how Congress can either help him or can interfere with him in any way.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, let us have order, please.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. McCUMBER. All the rights the Senator has spoken of and all the remedies he might seek under that condition of affairs would be in the State in which the wells are located.

Mr. TILLMAN. But this man is stealing my gas, because he has a hole in the ground connected with a pipe which carries it to market, and I can not get any connection with this same pipe because you do not put it under the control of the interstate-commerce clause.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator does not contend that we can punish a man for stealing gas in West Virginia or any other State?

Mr. TILLMAN. I am not talking about punishment. But why should not this other fellow be permitted to get some of the benefits of the blessings which God Almighty has furnished him under the ground by connecting with the pipe line, an interstate line, and be able to sell his gas, by paying for the privilege?

Mr. McCUMBER. He can. The courts of the particular State, acting in conformity with the rules of God Almighty that the Senator speaks of, can grant an injunction to prevent anyone from stealing the gas.

Mr. TILLMAN. You can not prove that he is stealing the gas. Yet you know it. He might get out of a given field all the gas the pressure has driven to the opening. The Senator is arguing for a monopoly, probably, without knowing it, though I know.

Mr. McCUMBER. If I am, it is certainly without knowing it.

Mr. TILLMAN. I do not accuse him of that, for he is too acute minded, but he does not realize and understand that this gas line, going from West Virginia into Ohio, is transporting an article of interstate commerce, to be sold there to the general public and to the municipalities and others. I am willing and want to vote for this amendment, because I contend that a neighboring landowner, who has gas under his land and can bore a well to it, but is not able to build a pipe line three or five hundred miles, ought to be allowed to tap the established line, paying for the privilege of selling his gas.

Mr. FORAKER. Allow me to say to the Senator from South Carolina that he suggests there a very important principle. I do not think anything has come up in the course of this debate which demands our attention more imperatively than the abuse which has resulted from the railroads being engaged in acquiring and owning coal mines and operating them and engaging in the business of handling coal. I think it is a matter of common agreement, something that we all agree to here, that that abuse should be remedied, and the common carrier should be a common carrier and nothing else. That is true not only as to railroads with respect to coal, but with respect to everything else, and it is equally important, so far as principle is concerned, with respect to pipe lines.

Mr. McCUMBER. Provided they are common carriers.

Mr. FORAKER. The point I want to make is this: According to the Senator's suggestion we would make them common carriers by compelling the company that owns the trunk line which has been built, we will say, from Cincinnati to the natural gas fields of West Virginia, to buy all the gas brought to it in West Virginia and transport it, in order that the men there should have the benefit that the Almighty has provided, without expending the $5,000,000 necessary to make the Almighty's benefaction available. That is to drive us into the very thing that the Senator has with great effectiveness urged against, as an abuse of railroads engaging in business.

Mr. TILLMAN. I do not see——

Mr. LODGE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. LODGE. I simply desire to obtain from the Chair an interpretation of the unanimous-consent agreement, so that we may all know how we are proceeding. The unanimous-consent agreement, of course, limits the time of each Senator to fifteen minutes. Are we proceeding under what is known as the five or ten or fifteen minute rule, or can a Senator speak as often as he desires upon the same amendment?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that a Senator may speak but once and for not exceeding fifteen minutes.

Mr. FRYE. Before the——

Mr. FORAKER. I want to say that I spoke once briefly—that is, time was not called upon me; and then I interrupted a Senator to ask a question. I suppose I have a right to interrupt a Senator to ask a question.

Mr. LODGE. I only wanted to know what was the rule under which we were proceeding.

Mr. FRYE. Has the Senator from Maine been recognized?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maine has been recognized.

Mr. FRYE. Before the Senator from Massachusetts advocates his amendment in his fifteen-minute speech it will be a great deal better probably for him that any objection interposed to the amendment should be before the Senate. A prominent business man has sent me certain objections, which I ask the Secretary to read. Possibly the Senator from Massachusetts may be able to answer satisfactorily the objections raised in this paper.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary, in the absence of objection, will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

> The amendment to the rate bill before the United States Senate requiring that the transportation of oil through pipe lines be put upon the same basis as railroads will work to great disadvantage to the small producers of Pennsylvania, and I dare say of other States where oil is produced in small quantities.
>
> In the first place there is a large investment in pipe lines. These pipe lines have to be operated by telegraph and telephone lines, and numerous persons are engaged in gathering up the oil from the small wells, gauging the tanks, and transporting the oils to the receiving tanks of the pipe line. Take the county in which we live. We have a very large production of oil in small quantities, from a quarter of a barrel to two barrels per day per well. The number of miles of pipe that are necessary to gather in this oil is great, and as most of the wells are only pumped once or twice a day the accumulation of oil is so small that the pipe line will, perhaps, gather all of the oil once a month, therefore the pipe lines are not paying much more than operating expenses.
>
> In other fields where the production is large the price for transportation charged is just the same as it is in the small districts, but on account of transporting more oil out of a prolific field the pipe line no doubt is making a fair average of profit; therefore the rates, if changed as a whole, would naturally result to the detriment of the small producing territory, and if the same rate were paid per barrel as in a prolific field the pipe line would be forced to take up all the oils; consequently the oil would have to be transported in wagons as it was years ago, at a cost of about $1 per barrel. As oil is selling for only about $1.56 per barrel it would be ruinous to this country if the amendment is passed.
>
> The transportation of oil through pipes is a different proposition from carrying passengers and freight on a railroad, and if I had the time to send a remonstrance to Washington I am sure that I could get every small producer in Pennsylvania to join me in the request that this amendment should never be put into the bill.

Mr. CULBERSON. Before the Senator from Massachusetts proceeds, I wish to direct his attention to a point to which my attention has been called by reading the amendment—that is, whether his amendment is limited to the interstate shipment of oil. Of course, unless it is, Congress has no power to pass the amendment. If the oil lines are wholly within the limits of a single State, for instance, the legislation of Congress can not apply.

Mr. LODGE. I think I understand that.

Mr. CULBERSON. It does not occur to me that the amendment is so drafted as to be confined to interstate shipments of oil, as it ought to be.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, in reply to the Senator from Texas, I will say that this simply adds to the interstate-commerce act the persons described in the amendment; that is all. It can not apply to anything but interstate commerce, of course.

Mr. CULBERSON. I understand that, and I am in favor of the amendment applicable to interstate shipments as far as we may go, but I suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts that probably the language he uses does not confine it strictly to that.

Mr. CLAY. Will the Senator allow me to call his attention to the fact that the amendment comes in afer the word "to," and if he looks at line 12 he will find that this entire section applies to traffic—> from one State or Territory of the United States, or the District of Columbia, to any other State or Territory of the United States, or the District of Columbia, or from one place in a Territory to another place in the same Territory, or from any place in the United States to an adjacent foreign country, or from any place in the United States through a foreign country to any other place in the United States, and also to the transportation in like manner of property shipped from any place in the United States to a foreign country and carried from such place to a port of transshipment, or shipped from a foreign country to any place in the United States and carried to such place from a port of entry either in the United States or an adjacent foreign country.

Is it not true that if the amendment is adopted the entire provisions of section 1 would apply to it and absolutely make it an article of interstate commerce?

Mr. LODGE. Absolutely.

Mr. CULBERSON. That is the question I suggested. I am not sure it will, but I understand that is the purpose of the Senator from Massachusetts, because we can do nothing else.

Mr. LODGE. If my amendment is not limited to interstate commerce, then the clause there does not limit the railroads to interstate commerce.

Mr. CULBERSON. Very well; if the Senator is satisfied.

Mr. LODGE. I am sure that is the case.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, in regard to the communication just read at the desk from an operator in Pennsylvania, I wish to say that the same statements will hold good in West Virginia. In the development of a new pool of oil, oftentimes the wells start off with a very large production. Then, in the course of time, with numerous drillings and the very near location of one well to another, the wells drop off in their production very rapidly, and in the course of six months or a year, as the case may be, a company or a combination of two or three men will buy up a large number of wells and connect up with one central pumping station on a limited number of wells, in order to make the wells pay at all for operating. Of course, the pipe line is owned by the Pennsylvania Oil Company or the Standard Oil Company, or whatever you may call it. They lay a pipe line to every well. Now, as this communication says, it will certainly be a very great hardship to the small operator.

But getting back to my friend the Senator from South Carolina, in regard to the gas territory, in all my experience—and I have lived in West Virginia since the discovery of natural gas—I never have known of a lawsuit where one man claimed that another man was stealing his gas. Of course, in drilling oil wells or gas wells the owners of a tract of land will get as near to the dividing line of the property as they possibly can, in order to protect their lines. The gas territory is usually held in large tracts, because it does not pay, as the Senator from Ohio said, to put four or five million dollars into pipe lines to go into a territory unless there is a vast amount of territory under control. The same people control the wells who own the plant which carries it to market. Of course, it does not interfere with my business as a manufacturer. We get the gas, and we carry it 36 miles to the factory of which I am president, because it is within the State. But this certainly would interfere with the man who carries it across the Ohio River and carries it to Cleveland, Toledo, Sandusky, and to the town of my friend the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. DICK]—Akron; and if it would work a hardship upon them and a hardship upon my people, because the territory would not be so valuable, the inducements would not be so great to these people to come there and take up leases on gas territory, and it certainly would hurt us very much. I wanted to offer these suggestions, because I live right in the midst of this gas-drilling and oil-drilling territory. But West Virginia is not anxious to pipe its gas out of the State, and has been trying to enact laws to prevent it; but if the gas does go out of the State, I want the owners of gas territory and gas wells protected to the greatest extent.

Mr. HALE. I rise to a point of order. When did the operation of the rule under which the Senate is acting begin?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It began at the conclusion of the routine morning business.

Mr. HALE. What Senators have already spoken on this subject?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Senators FORAKER, FULTON, FRYE, CLAY, HALE, MCCUMBER, TILLMAN, CULBERSON, and SCOTT.

Mr. HALE. I simply wish to call the attention of the Chair to the rule that no Senator can, on an amendment, speak more than once.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair has heretofore so announced, and he has been observing the rule in that regard.

Mr. TILLMAN. I desire to find out——

Mr. BAILEY. I rise to a point of order. I hardly think it a fair construction of the unanimous-consent agreement to hold that if one Senator asks a question of another Senator who has the floor the Senator merely asking a question shall be deemed to have addressed the Senate on that question. It comes out of the time of the Senator who occupies the floor.

Mr. HALE. I understand the Senator from Massachusetts who offered this amendment has not yet begun his fifteen-minute speech. If what is called a "question," which, in the practice of the Senate, is amplified into a short speech, is not to be recognized as a speech under the fifteen-minute rule, we may as well have no rule at all.

Mr. BAILEY. Will the Senator permit me to suggest to him that no difficulty could arise in that respect, because, if, for illustration, the Senator from Massachusetts, having the floor and being entitled to fifteen minutes, allows me to consume ten minutes of his time, he has only five minutes left.

Mr. HALE. Undoubtedly.

Mr. BAILEY. And therefore I have occupied the floor, not in my time, but in his time. A Senator can easily prevent that by declining to yield. It might happen that whether a Senator would desire to talk on a given amendment would depend upon some answer which might be made to a question. I can easily conceive that if I should ask the Senator proposing an amendment for an explanation he might make it in two sentences, and that might end my interest in the matter.

Mr. LODGE. I think the Senators who have been speaking have not been speaking in anybody's time but their own.

Mr. BAILEY. I only wanted to protest against the intimation of the Chair that a mere interruption by the courtesy and permission of the Senator occupying the floor should be deemed to be a speech on the part of the Senator interrupting.

Mr. HALE. The Senator is undoubtedly right about that. But that is within the control of the Senator who is speaking his fifteen minutes. If he allows an interruption, it does not add to his fifteen minutes. The Chair must take it out of his time. So it is incumbent upon every Senator, under this rule, to bear in mind if questions are asked, and I have no doubt the Chair will so rule, the time taken up in those questions is to be counted against the Senator who is occupying his fifteen minutes.

But what I rose to say was that the Senator from Massachusetts had not yet begun, and Senators in their own time have spoken on this amendment, not in anybody else's time. However, I do not care to take any more of the time of the Senate.

Mr. TILLMAN. I rise to a point of order, lest I should be judged to have made a speech, and I have not made any.

Mr. HALE. The Senator can make one.

Mr. TILLMAN. I have been put down in that list as having spoken, because I asked a question of the Senator from North Dakota. I want this thing clarified and understood perfectly, else we will be gagged and there will be no discussion, no interchange of thought, such as there ought to be in order to get the benefit of all the minds in the Senate to elucidate a given point.

Mr. HALE. The Senate understood this agreement when it made it. Every Senator is entitled upon any amendment to fifteen minutes, and he is not entitled to any more than that.

Mr. GALLINGER. And he can not divide it.

Mr. HALE. He can not divide it. If the Senator lets an interruption come in——

Mr. TILLMAN. It is not against the man who interrupts.

Mr. HALE. It is not against the man who interrupts. Therefore there is no gagging. We can not have this agreement put in force and amount to one penny's worth unless the Chair holds to its ruling.

Mr. FORAKER. I have not made any speech, either.

Mr. TILLMAN. You have made four.

Mr. FORAKER. I have simply interrupted the Senator from Massachusetts to try to induce——

Mr. LODGE. I have not yet spoken.

Mr. FORAKER. To try to induce the Senator——

Mr. LODGE. I rise to a point of order. The Senator from Ohio has not interrupted me, for I have not spoken until this moment.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Nobody has started yet.

Mr. FORAKER. We will have no trouble about this. I wanted the Senator to make a change in the amendment which he added to the printed amendment, to accommodate my people. I now propose to offer the amendment myself.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I want to say something on the point of order. I understand, according to the universal practice of the Senate under similar circumstances, that no Senator can yield his time to any other Senator and thus give to another Senator more than the time contemplated by the rule. I simply desire to suggest, and if necessary to ask a ruling of the Chair on the subject, that while interruptions will have the effect suggested by the Senator from South Carolina and agreed to by the Senator from Maine, simply to take out of the time of the Senator who has the floor so much time as may be thus consumed, certainly that rule ought not to be extended to the point where it may be so construed and may so operate as for one Senator to take the floor and practically yield it to another Senator, in that way giving an undue advantage. We all know that the number of interruptions here, as intimated by the Senator from Maine, frequently results in what purports to be a question being in reality a very considerable speech, and the liberty which the Senator from South Carolina suggests that he would enjoy of not having interruptions charged against him would certainly be an encouragement to exercise all degree of latitude.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I call for the regular order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing——

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I should like to know who has the floor.

Mr. HALE. I can only say that an hour has passed and more——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair, if the Senator from Maine will permit, will have the Secretary read the names of Senators who have occupied the floor and the length of time they have occupied it.

Mr. LODGE. In their own right.

Mr. HALE. I do not think the question as to how much time they occupied is of importance. The rule is that a Senator can speak but once.

Mr. LODGE. In his own right.

Mr. HALE. In his own right. If he chooses to speak only five minutes, he can not at another time speak ten minutes. I do not want to interfere with the convenience of Senators, but I think everyone sees that unless the rule is strictly administered it amounts to nothing, and we will make no progress whatever. If the Senator from Massachusetts, who has this amendment in hand, is ready to go on, I hope he will proceed, and that after that the rule will be enforced.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state to the Senator from Maine that no Senator has exceeded fifteen minutes. One or two Senators who felt that they were not properly included in the list of speakers by the Secretary's report spoke for full five minutes.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. FORAKER. When this amendment was offered I was simply trying to get it in shape to have it acceptable, as something I thought the Senate would be perfectly willing to agree to. If not, I have a right, I suppose, to offer an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts, and I suppose I could make a speech on that.

Mr. NELSON. In reference to the amendment suggested by the Senator from Ohio to the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts, I desire to state that if that amendment is adopted it will practically nullify the provision, because every one of these pipe lines can say "we refuse to do business for the public." Practically the amendment would be of no use at all.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

Mr. SPOONER. Now, Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. SPOONER. I wanted to know whether the Senator took the floor to make a fifteen-minute speech or a part of it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair assumes that the Senator from Massachusetts rose in order.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator let me get this thing straight? I should like to have the Chair——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts has the floor.

Mr. LODGE. I hope the Senator will allow me to go on. My time is limited to fifteen minutes, and I shall decline to yield.

Mr. TILLMAN. Then I rise to a parliamentary question. I want to know where we are. In the first place, who has spoken and who is barred from any more speeches on the amendment?

Mr. SPOONER. Nobody has made a speech on it.

Mr. TILLMAN. Then let us begin all over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is no difficulty if Senators will observe the rule. The Senator from Massachusetts asked recognition of the Chair, and he was recognized to proceed. If any other Senator desires the floor following him, the Chair will determine whether he is entitled to the floor under the rule or not. The Senator from Massachusetts will proceed.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the purpose of this amendment is to bring the transportation of oil and other commodities within the interstate-commerce law. Oil is one of the greatest articles of interstate commerce carried in this country, and it is now absolutely outside and beyond any Government regulation whatsoever.

I am very glad indeed to omit, as I propose in my modified amendment, natural gas or water which is to be used for municipal purposes. But the amendment suggested by the Senator from Ohio to my amendment, to the effect that no pipe line, unless it carries for the public, shall come under this rule, will, as the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] says, absolutely destroy the value of my amendment.

The small well owner, to whom there have been pathetic references this morning, has not as yet made his objections known to me. I heard within twenty-four hours after the introduction of my first amendment, on May 28, from the Standard Oil Company. A representative of that company came to see me on the following day, and represented the uselessness and the injustice of this amendment. I have had a great many letters from small oil owners and I have had a great many letters from independent refiners in support of the amendment, and the objections suggested by the Senator from Maine and the Senator from West Virginia really do not touch the case.

There is no intention in this amendment of reducing the charges of pipe lines. It is simply to put the pipe lines where if there is complaint against their rate that complaint can be brought before some jurisdiction. Now, it can not be brought before any jurisdiction that I am aware of.

I do not see and I have yet to hear a single valid argument why this great company, doing this enormous interstate business in one of the greatest articles of interstate commerce and of export and import, should alone be excluded from the supervision of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

There are twenty-eight principal pipe lines in the United States, for the most part trunk lines. There are fourteen local or gathering lines. Twelve of the principal lines are combined in one system under one control, extending from Indian Territory and from Tennessee to the Atlantic seaboard. Five other principal lines form a system under one control, extending from West Virginia and Ohio through the Pennsylvania oil fields to Philadelphia. Of the lines and trunk lines referred to nine are known to extend across State lines, and there are two about which there is some doubt, although it is probable they do.

Mr. President, it is not necessary for me to consume time in reading the definitions from the Supreme Court as to what constitutes interstate commerce. I do not think myself, from reading the definitions of those decisions, that the fact of being common carriers or exercising eminent domain is necessary to the definition of interstate commerce.

I will read simply the leading definition before I go on, which is in the County of Mobile v. Kimball:

> The buying and selling, and the transportation incidental thereto, constitute commerce, and the regulation of commerce in the constitutional sense embraces the regulation at least of such transportation.

There has been legislation in regard to pipe lines in twenty-one States. Eminent domain is granted to these lines in California, Colorado, Indiana, Kentucky, New York, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Texas, West Virginia, and Wyoming. They are made common carriers under the laws of New York and Ohio, and in Pennsylvania were held so in the absence of statute in Griffin v. The Pipe Lines, and by the Code of West Virginia. In these codes and in these laws regulations are made by the States for regulating the method of transporting petroleum, and the prices that should be charged. They are not only made common carriers, but they are treated as common carriers under the statutes of these States. A letter which was forwarded to me from one of the counsel of the Standard Oil Company to show me the futility of this legislation stated that they were common carriers east of the Mississippi.

I have here a list of the authorities, State and United States, simply showing that corporations engaged in the transportation of gas, oil, water, or supplied power, from a point in one State into or through another State, are engaged in interstate commerce. I will ask to have it printed with my remarks, as I have no time to go into it further.

> Corporations engaged in the transportation of gas, oil, water, or supplied power, from a point in one State into or through another State, are engaged in interstate commerce.
>
> State ex rel. Cornelius Corwin v. Indiana and Ohio Oil, Gas, and Mining Company, 120 Ind., 575.
>
> Same case, II, I. C. R., 758.
>
> Avery v. Indiana and Ohio Oil, Gas, and Mining Company, 120 Ind., 600.
>
> Benedict v. Columbus Construction Company, 49 N. J. Eq., 23.
>
> People's Gas Company v. Tyner, 131 Ind., 277.
>
> Columbia Conduit Company v. Commonwealth, 90 Pa. St., 307.
>
> West Virginia Transportation Company v. Volcanic Oil and Coal Company, 5 W. Va., 382.
>
> Ohio Oil Company v. Indiana, 177 U. S., 190, 205.
>
> In State ex rel. v. Indiana and Ohio Oil, Gas, and Mining Company (120 Ind., 575) the court held a statute of that State forbidding the transportation of natural gas beyond the limits of the State to be void as an interference with interstate commerce. In the opinion of the court, at page 578, it is said:
>
> "The gas in the earth may not be a commercial commodity, but when brought to the surface and placed in pipes for transportation it must assume that character as completely as coal on the cars or petroleum in the tanks. We suppose it clear that Pennsylvania could not prohibit the transportation of coal or petroleum to another State, and there is no difference in principle between cases where coal is the commodity affected and those in which it is natural gas. * * * For the purpose of taxation an article of property may not be regarded as a commodity until it has started on its way from one State to another, but property that may be called an article of commerce can not be kept in the State where it is produced by a State law forbidding its transportation."
>
> Avery v. Indiana and Ohio Oil, Gas, and Mining Company (120 Ind., 600) was decided on the authority of State v. Same (120 Ind., 575). No opinion is given in the latter case, but Chief Justice Elliott, in speaking for the court, simply stated that "the judgment in this case is affirmed on the authority of State ex rel. v. Indiana and Ohio, etc., Mining Company (ante, p. 575)."
>
> In Benedict v. Columbus Construction Company (49 N. J. Eq., 23) it was held that a statute of Indiana which attempted in an indirect way to prevent the transportation of natural gas from Indiana to Chicago was invalid as an interference with interstate commerce.
>
> In People's Gas Company v. Tyner (131 Ind., 277, 280) the court said:
>
> "It has been settled in this State that natural gas, when brought to the surface of the earth and placed in pipes for transportation, is property and may be the subject of interstate commerce. * * * Water, petroleum, oil, and gas are generally classed by themselves as minerals, possessing in some degree a kindred nature."
>
> In Columbia Conduit Company v. Commonwealth (90 Pa. St., 307) it was held that a corporation engaged in the removal of petroleum from place to place by means of pipes is a transportation company.
>
> In West Virginia Transportation Company v. Volcanic Oil and Coal Company (5 W. Va., 382) the court held that a corporation organized for the purpose of constructing and maintaining a line or lines of tubing for the transportation of petroleum or other oil, through pipes of iron or other material, etc., was incorporated for the purpose of "internal improvements," as such pipe lines are, in effect, highways for the transportation contemplated.
>
> In Ohio Oil Company v. Indiana (177 U. S., 190) the case of State v. Indiana and Ohio Oil, Gas, and Mining Company (120 Ind., 575) was cited with aproval, as was also People's Gas Company v. Tyner (131 Ind., 277).

Now, Mr. President, the oil is brought to the trunk lines through small local feeding and gathering lines, as a rule. There are practically two great companies that control pipe lines engaged in interstate commerce. One is the Standard Oil, which is said, roughly, to control 90 per cent. I do not know whether that is correct or not. The other is the Pure Oil. They do not own the wells, and they buy the oil of the well owner, and the charge for the transportation is taken out of the price, as appears in the copies of the certificates and receipts which I have here.

Those well owners are absolutely at the mercy of the pipe lines. I have had cases brought to me, which in this fifteen-minute debate I can not enlarge upon, where an independent refinery has been deprived of its supply of oil because it would not agree to the prices of the pipe lines. A small well owner is compelled to take the price that is offered by the controller of the trunk line.

This is not a case of a transportation company owning the property, like a railroad owning a coal mine. It is exactly like a railroad buying the coal of the coal miner and transporting it, which it would have an undoubted right to do. We have an amendment to come in this bill to prevent railroads from owning the properties the products of which they transport, but nobody proposes to say that the railroads shall not transport iron or lumber or coal which they have bought for their own use. The pipe-line companies buy the oil they use in their own refineries and owing to the fact that they buy the oil, if you put in the words "carry for the public," the pipe lines go right out from under this amendment, in my judgment.

Further than that, we have here in this first clause a statement that the rule shall apply where the carriage is partly by rail and partly by water. Why should it not apply where it is partly by pipe line and partly by rail and partly by water?

There was allusion made in the message which was read here to-day to the New England case which has been before the Interstate Commerce Commission, where the oil is brought in pipe lines to the seaboard in New Jersey, carried by water to Bridgeport, and placed there in the great reservoirs of the Standard Oil. There is a uniform rate over the roads there. There is an arrangement of prorating, which I do not profess to understand, but the net result is that no oil can come into the territory of New England, practically, except the Standard Oil, and that, I understand, happens also in regions of the South and the Southwest.

It seems to me that when we are putting under the control of the Interstate Commerce Commission transportation that is partly by rail and partly by water we ought not to omit transportation of one of the greatest and most useful commodities that enter into daily life because it is partly by pipe line and partly by rail and partly by water.

I have no desire to pursue this or any other corporation. It appears to me that it is a plain injustice to the railroads of this country to put them all under the Interstate Commerce Commission, to make the most drastic regulations to control and supervise them, and leave out one of the greatest articles of interstate commerce in which there are dealings in this country.

No small oil-well owner is going to be hurt. There is no proposition, as the letter read by the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] indicates, to push up the prices or push down the prices and make it impossible for a pipe line to operate. It is simply to give relief, if relief is sought, to those who find that they are not fairly treated, or think they are not fairly treated by the pipe lines, through which alone practically they can get their commodity to market.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I wish first, before offering an amendment, to make a parliamentary inquiry, and that is whether an amendment to the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts would be in order?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. An amendment to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts is in order.

Mr. MORGAN. I offer an amendment to that amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The proposed amendment to the amendment will be stated.

Mr. MORGAN. In line 5 of the amendment, after the word "water," I move to insert the following words:

At any place within the jurisdiction or within the governmental authority of the United States.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator will permit me, the amendment I offered is the second draft, which is on the fifth page.

Mr. MORGAN. I have the amendment printed here.

Mr. LODGE. I offered a second draft, which is on the fifth page of the pamphlet the Senator has in his hand. If he will turn over two pages he will find it. That is it.

Mr. KEAN. It is the third amendment.

Mr. LODGE. It is the third amendment.

Mr. MORGAN. Yes; in the fifth line the amendment I suggest is exactly correct there. After the word "water," in the fifth line, I move to amend by inserting the words which I have read. I offer this amendment to meet——

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the amendment be stated at the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Alabama will allow the Secretary first to state the proposed amendment.

Mr. MORGAN. Very well.

The SECRETARY. In line 5 of the proposed amendment, after the word "water," insert:

At any place within the jurisdiction or within the governmental authority of the United States.

Mr. MORGAN. I am now trying to provide so that the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts, which I think is a correct amendment to this bill, shall apply to the Isthmian Canal Zone, and my reason for it is that Congress having conferred absolute and unqualified and unlimited legislative power upon the President, he has made a contract in regard to the pipe line across the Canal Zone in favor of the Union Oil Company, of California. That is a large, powerful company which is seeking to get into direct competition with all the oil producers who find a market on the Atlantic coast. The President has granted a pipe-line privilege, a charter—that is to say, a concession, as it is called in Panama—to a certain company to establish a pipe line across the Isthmus. The Government of Panama furnishes the charter for the pumping stations at either end, one at Panama and the other at Colon, and the United States furnishes the privilege of crossing the Isthmus upon certain terms and conditions.

I hold the contract in my hand and will ask that it be printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks. I have not time to read it.

The paper referred to is as follows:

The President of the United States, upon the recommendation of the Secretary of War, hereby grants to the Union Oil Company, of California, a revocable license to construct, operate, and maintain a pipe line and appurtenances for the transmission and delivery of oil over and across the lands owned by the United States or by the Panama Railroad Company—a company in which the United States is the owner of all the shares of capital stock—and across the territory now controlled by the Government of the United States known as the Canal Zone, in the Isthmus of Panama.

The meaning of this revocable license is that, with respect to the lands which are owned either by the Government of the United States or the railroad company, authority for such pipe line across such lands is hereby given. With respect to lands owned by private persons in the Canal Zone said Union Oil Company must also obtain permission from the owners thereof before constructing the pipe line through their lands. This license is intended only to give the revocable right to occupy lands which are the property of the United States and the railroad company with such a pipe, and to extend to the Union Oil Company the revocable right to apply to private owners of the other lands necessary to construct the pipe line, and after having secured their permission, to maintain a continuous pipe line across the Canal Zone during the continuance of this license.

But said revocable license is granted on the following express conditions:

First. That at any time the chief engineer of the Canal Commission may by notice require the removal of the pipe line, not only from the lands owned by the United States and the railroad company, but from the Canal Zone entirely.

Second. That the pipe line is to be constructed by the said company in a suitable location to be designated by said chief engineer.

Third. That any change or changes in the location of said pipe line that may from time to time be thought necessary by said chief engineer shall be made by said company promptly at its own expense.

Fourth. That the said pipe line shall be constructed and in operation on or before the 1st of August, 1906.

Fifth. That after the pipe line is constructed and ready for the flowing of oil the Union Oil Company shall pay into the treasury of the Canal Zone the sum of $500 a month, in money of the United States, for the support of the public schools of the Canal Zone, on the first of each and every month in advance. Should the line be constructed before the 1st of August, then the monthly payments are to be made from the time that oil begins to flow in the pipe, at the monthly rate before stated. Should this license be revoked, the revocation to take effect at any time after the 1st of the month, there shall be a payment to the Union Oil Company of the rental for the part of the month remaining after the revocation of the license.

This revocable license is granted on the further condition that oil shall be furnished, at any convenient point to be selected by the chief engineer of the Canal Commission along the line of the pipe line in the Zone, to the railroad company or the Canal Commission at the rate of 90 cents ($0.90) a barrel for the crude oil, if either the Canal Commission or the railroad company desires it.

It is distinctly understood that this is not an exclusive privilege granted to the Union Oil Company, and that the President reserves the right to grant other such revocable licenses as it may seem proper and in the public interest.

As the railroad company exists under a charter as a New York corporation, and is under the technical control of the President and board of directors, this revocable license should be accompanied by a revocable license from the railroad company concurring in the grant of this revocable license upon the terms and conditions herein stated, in order that the revocable right to enter upon the lands of the railroad company for the construction and maintenance of the pipe line may be made technically complete.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

By the President:

WM. H. TAFT, Secretary of War.

JANUARY 10, 1906.

Mr. MORGAN. The other oil producers on the Pacific coast made complaint against the company making this contract that it was not a common carrier, that it was carrying oil on private account, but created for the purpose of competition with all the oil wells on the Atlantic coast.

The subject was presented to the Secretary of War and argued before him, and he declined to declare that this pipe line was a common carrier. If there is a common carrier in the world it is a pipe line, for the reason that its only purpose, at least its main purpose, is to bring its oil from the Pacific coast, or wherever its wells are, into competition with all the oil producers that find markets on the Atlantic coast, and to cut them off from the privilege of going through their pipe lines in the other direction and competing with its wells.

So this contract made by the President of the United States, which I assume, for the sake of argument, is the highest exercise of legislative power that is possible in the Government of the United States, and is to all intents and purposes an act of Congress, accentuates the necessity of the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts, and makes it the duty of Congress under these conditions to declare that this law, when it is passed, shall extend to all places within the jurisdiction of the United States Government or within the authority of the Government of the United States. I therefore offer the amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts. I hope the Senator will accept it.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to amend——

Mr. MORGAN. I believe my amendment has not been acted upon.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from Ohio suspend a moment? Is there objection to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Let it be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be again read.

The SECRETARY. In line 5 of the proposed amendment, after the word "water," insert:

At any place within the jurisdiction or within the governmental authority of the United States.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment to the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. My attention was distracted and I should like to have the amendment read again.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be again read.

The Secretary again read the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FORAKER. I would like to have the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts. I offer an amendment to his amendment, and I want to briefly explain it.

Mr. CARTER. Will the Senator from Ohio withhold his amendment for a moment? I should like to address myself to the pending amendment.

Mr. FORAKER. Very well; I withhold my amendment, if the Senator from Montana desires, for the present.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, the situation presented this morning is very instructive. I anticipated just about such a parliamentary condition as that in which the Senate now finds itself; and I think every other Senator anticipated the difficulty.

For some ten years after the interstate-commerce act became a law it was the belief that Congress had vested in the Interstate Commerce Commisson the right to substitute a just and reasonable rate for one found to be unreasonable. The Supreme Court of the United States finally held that that power had not been vested according to the intent of Congress, and so holding that the Interstate Commerce Commission was an impotent board of inquiry merely. It has so remained from the date that the decision was rendered up to this hour. It finds rates unreasonable, extortionate, or excessive, as the case may be, whatever the language was employed to cover, but it is utterly without power save to find that a wrong is being inflicted upon the public by the interstate carrier.

From the rendition of that decision up to this hour the people in all parts of this country and engaged in all kinds of business have without ceasing importuned the Congress of the United States to vest in the Commission the power which it originally thought it was vested with. In response to that long-continued and persistent demand, the Interstate Commerce Commission, with the advice of the chief law officer of the Government, the Attorney-General, prepared and submitted to another branch of Congress a bill. The House of Representatives, through its committee, after careful deliberation reported that bill, and it was passed by a majority rarely given to any public measure presented in either House of Congress.

The pith and point and substance of that bill is to vest in the Interstate Commerce Commission the right to fix a reasonable rate for a common carrier engaged in the transaction of business where a rate is found to be unreasonable. The lodgment of this power in the Commission is the only response that Congress can make to the widespread demand of the country.

That bill came to this body. I am one of those who believed when it reached the Senate, and I believe to-day, that the wise policy for this body to pursue was and is to pass this bill without amendment. If, however, amendment is necessary, consistency as well as my own deliberate judgment requires that the amendments be circumscribed to the narrowest possible limit. I would not see interjected into this measure any proposition calculated unnecessarily to raise a constitutional question, nor can I vote for any proposition submitted by an opponent of the bill, opposing the bill upon principle, unless that amendment shall first have been given very careful consideration. Such consideration, I submit, can not be given to the amendment before us. The Senator himself amended it upon its presentation this morning. He had twice before drawn it. It has been amended by the Senator from the State of Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], and now we are called upon to vote upon it.

What will be the effect of that amendment upon this bill if it is incorporated in it? I observe that the bill itself relates to common carriers. This amendment proposes to make the interstate-commerce law applicable to all persons. The Senator very wisely seeks to remedy an evil from which the people of New England suffer and from which the people in all other sections of the country suffer, but will he, pray, tell us why, after dealing with the subject-matter which he seeks to remedy, does he use the broad and comprehensive term "or other commodity by means of pipe lines, or partly by pipe lines and partly by railroad, or partly by pipe lines and partly by water?"

I am not prepared to say that that will not inject the Interstate Commerce Commission as a ruling factor in the management of the two large irrigation schemes partly in the State of Montana. One of them passes out of the jurisdiction of the United States into Canada, and the other crosses the line of the State of North Dakota from our State. Is the Senator from Massachusetts prepared to say, without further consideration, that this water, not for municipal purposes, because the Senator has guarded that——

Mr. LODGE. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. CARTER. Yes.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator from Montana is disturbed about the Interstate Commerce Commission carrying water by pipe lines, I will say that I am perfectly willing to except water.

Mr. CARTER. I should think the Senator would be, and I should think the Senator should specify the commodities, to the end that we may know what commodities are intended to be included in the bill. The commodities probably will be oil and gas. Why not so state, if that be true?

Mr. President, I do not wish to be understood as opposing the probably meritorious amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts if applicable to the common carrier, but I do oppose the injection of amendments into this bill, which amendments have not been printed, when the Senate can not determine as to the constitutionality or the general effect upon the proposition of the amendment proposed. I submit to the Senator from Massachusetts that it would be wise, amended as this proposition has been on the floor, amended by the Senator himself upon its presentation, nowhere in print for inspection, should be printed and laid upon the desks of Senators before it is voted upon.

Mr. FORAKER. I now offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to the amendment heretofore proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE].

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio proposes an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], which will be stated.

Mr. NELSON. What was done with the amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN]?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It was agreed to. The Senator from Ohio proposes an amendment, which will now be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 2 of the amendment of Mr. LODGE, after the word "any," it is proposed to insert the words "corporation or any;" and in line 3, after the word "commodity," it is proposed to insert the words "except natural gas."

Mr. FORAKER. Now, I presume I have a right to speak to my amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the amendment be once more stated.

Mr. FORAKER. I will explain the amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let it be again stated.

Mr. FORAKER. The Senator from Massachusetts has offered an amendment which as I propose to amend it would read as follows:

Any corporation or any person or persons engaged in the transportation of oil or other commodity, except natural gas or water for municipal purposes, etc.

The amendment I have offered differs from that only in this, that after the word "commodity" I insert simply "and except natural gas;" stopping there, leaving out the words "water for municipal purposes."

Now, I want to say that I do not care anything about the oil part of this amendment; I do not care anything about the water part of it. I am not going to take any time or any trouble to answer what the Senator has said about oil and water; but as to natural gas, that is a matter of very great importance to us. It is one thing to furnish gas for municipal purposes and it is a very different thing to furnish gas for manufacturing purposes. The people who are spending their money to take natural gas into the city of Cincinnati not only want to light the streets of the city with it, which will be a municipal purpose, but they want to furnish it to the manufacturers of Cincinnati in the mills, foundries, machine shops, and wherever natural gas can be used. I do not understand why the Senator should so tenaciously insist that the words "municipal purposes" should be added. If he will strike those words out, I shall be perfectly satisfied with that amendment with the amendment I have offered to it.

Mr. LODGE. I have not meant to be tenacious about the use of the words "municipal purposes." I thought they covered a point which was made with great force. So far as I am concerned, I am perfectly willing to except natural gas and water. All I want to get at is the transportation of oil, for that is where the great abuse is.

Mr. CARTER. Then why not strike out the words "or other commodity," and make the amendment specific?

Mr. LODGE. Make it apply to oil alone?

Mr. CARTER. I should think that it would be better to have it apply to oil alone. I do not know, nor does anyone know, what the term "other commodity" in that connection would include beyond gas and water.

Mr. LODGE. I am perfectly willing to leave those words out. All I want to get at is the transportation of oil.

Mr. CARTER. Then I move to strike out the words "or other commodity."

Mr. HOPKINS. I suggest that that amendment will not be in order until we take a vote on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] to the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE].

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Illinois is correct. The Senator from Ohio has proposed an amendment to the amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend the amendment of Mr. LODGE in line 2, after the word "any," by inserting "corporation or any;" and in line 3, after the word "commodity," by inserting the words "except natural gas."

Mr. NELSON. I should like to hear the amendment read as it would stand if the amendment to it should be adopted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read the amendment as proposed to be amended, as follows:

Any corporation or any person or persons engaged in the transportation of oil or other commodity, except natural gas, by means of pipe lines, or partly by pipe lines and partly by railroad, or partly by pipe lines and partly by water, who shall be considered and held to be common carriers within the meaning and purpose of this act, and to, etc.

Mr. GALLINGER. The words "at any place within the jurisdiction," etc., were inserted.

The SECRETARY. After the word "water," in line 5, there were inserted the words "at any place within the jurisdiction or within the governmental authority of the United States."

Mr. LODGE. If it is in order for me to say a word or two, I wish to speak on that amendment. I wish to reply to questions that have been asked me, not on the floor, but otherwise, as to the carrying of oil.

These pipe-line companies carry oil not only from the well to their own refineries, but they buy it at the well, and carry it from the well to other places and other refineries. By their own admission they can run different grades and different lots perfectly well.

I do not care to detain the Senate, but I ask leave to put into the RECORD a letter, which I have here, from which I will read but a few sentences. The president of the Columbia Oil Company, of New York, says in the letter:

I am a producer of petroleum in West Virginia and a refiner of petroleum in New York Harbor, and have considerable trouble in procuring a quantity of crude oil sufficient to run our works.

* * * * * * *

I have made application to the Standard Oil Company for transportation of my oil, and offered to pay them the usual gathering and transportation charges. They refuse to deliver me my own oil, and I have to sell it to them at their price, although I am ready to pay a premium of 10 or 20 cents a barrel over the market price and the current transportation rates.

That demonstrates from his experience that the pipe line companies have carried oil from his well to his refinery, and yet he is absolutely at their mercy.

I think, Mr. President, that I should like to have the entire letter printed in the RECORD.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

The letter referred to is as follows:

COLUMBIA OIL COMPANY OF NEW YORK,
New York, March 29, 1906.

Senator LODGE,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I noticed by the papers that you have proposed an amendment to the railroad rate bill making pipe lines common carriers. Pipe lines should be common carriers whether they are private lines or public lines where they connect with public lines that are common carriers under the law. For your information I give you a short personal sketch of my connection with them. It is as follows:

I am a producer of petroleum in West Virginia and a refiner of petroleum in New York Harbor, and have considerable trouble in procuring a quantity of crude oil sufficient to run our works.

I feel aggrieved at the treatment by the Standard Oil Company, owner of the pipe lines, and the Pure Oil Company, controller of other pipe lines that run in that field. Both companies refuse to deliver to me the oil I produce, and I have to sell it to both at the prices they make.

I understand you are now trying to frame some bill that will put the people on an equality; it would be well for you to know the condition of the business and how both companies have created and keep a monopoly in the business.

Eureka Pipe Line.—This company is owned by the Standard Oil Company. It passes through Ohio and West Virginia. It receives into its line oil that is produced on a lease I own in Wetzel County, W. Va. It takes this oil to United Pipe or National Transit Lines and is pumped through that system to Jersey City.

I have made application to the Standard Oil Company for transportation of my oil and offered to pay them the usual gathering and transportation charges. They refuse to deliver me my own oil and I have to sell it to them at their price, although I am ready to pay a premium of 10 or 20 cents a barrel over the market price and the current transportation rates.

They claim that the "Eureka Pipe Lines" is not a public carrier, that it is a private concern, and is not subject to the laws that regulate public carriers. The National Transit Line is a public carrier, but on account of the receiving or initial lines being a private concern, they need not take the oil and are not amenable to the law as public carriers are.

Pure Oil Company.—The Pure Oil Company has been organized under the New Jersey law as an independent corporation to aid producers and refiners and marketers of petroleum in opposition to the Standard Oil Company. It controls the United States Pipe Line.

United States Pipe Line.—The United States Pipe Line is a trunk line and common carrier. It commences at Marcus Hook, on the Delaware River, and runs through to Oil City, Pa.

The Producers and Refiners' Line is also owneed by the Pure Oil Company. It is a limited copartnership under the Pennsylvania law. It commences at Oil City, Pa. (where the United States Pipe Line ends), and runs down through Butler County, Pa., to West Virginia. It gathers the oil in West Virginia and southern Ohio and pumps it through to Oil City, where it connects with the United States Pipe Line Company.

I have petroleum production in Wetzel County, W. Va., that goes into that line. The Pure Oil Company also refuses to deliver me the oil I produce and own, and claim that they are a limited copartnership and not a common carrier. I have to sell it to them at their price, although I need it in my business.

The object of this letter is to show the condition of pipe lines that are owned by private parties or copartnerships and not common carriers that work in connection with other lines that are common carriers.

In my opinion all pipe lines should be common carriers, and any producer of oil anywhere should be at liberty to sell the certificates of their oil to anyone wishing to purchase them, and the oil should be received and delivered to all on equal conditions. This would create an open market and the producers could get all that their product was worth.

Common carriers.—They refuse to deliver the oil to refiners where they want it, and generally deliver it in some out-of-the-way place that will cost more to take it from the point of delivery than it can be brought by rail from the point of production.

Difference in cost between rail and pipe-line rates.—Oil can be handled by pipe lines at about one-tenth what it will cost by rail.

The oil monopolies owning pipe lines generally make the outside public do their business by rail, they, through influence making rail rates while they do their business by pipe lines.

Marketing crude petroleum.—On account of the interest controlling pipe lines, viz: Standard Oil Company and Pure Oil Company refusing to receive oil for transportation and deliver it to the owners of the oil, it prohibits an open market for crude petroleum. The producer has to sell it to the Standard Oil Company or its agents at the Standard Oil Company's price, and to the Pure Oil Company or the Producers and Refiners' Line (which is owned by the Pure Oil Company) at their price, although the owners of the oil stand ready, and in my case I have offered a premium of 10 cents per barrel plus all transportation and charges for my oil.

This should be looked into by the lawmakers and laws enacted that would put producers and refiners of oil on an equal footing to buy and sell their products.

For your information I inclose a blotter issued by the Pure Oil Company. I have drawn a pen line through it at Oil City. From Oil City to Philadelphia or Marcus Hook the two lines are owned by the United States Pipe Line Company. One line transports refined oil; it is five inches in diameter; the other transports crude oil and is four inches in diameter.

The Producers and Refiners' Line commences at Oil City and runs through to West Virginia. The little red marks show gathering or field lines.

This crude oil line is from two to six inches in diameter and it transports oil from West Virginia to the United States Pipe Line. It is distributed to the refiners in Oil City, Titusville, Warren, and Bradford.

I have been very active in the organization of the United States Pipe Line Company (in which I am now a director), and also I have been very active in the organization and management of the Pure Oil Company. This concern is entirely independent and in competition with the Standard Oil Company. It, however, is run on lines that make it as close a corporation if not closer than the Standard Oil Company.

Any further information will be cheerfully given by,

Yours, respectfully,

HUGH KING.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts a question.

Mr. CARTER. If the Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE] will excuse me for a moment, I wish to say to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] that if he will withdraw his amendment and permit the one I have suggested to be adopted I think it will obviate the necessity of adopting his amendment.

Mr. FORAKER. If I understand, the Senator from Montana has offered an amendment striking out the words "or other commodity." If that should be adopted, of course my amendment inserting the words "except natural gas" would not be necessary. Therefore I am willing to withdraw my amendment for the present, if I may do so.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio withdraws his amendment, and the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER] proposes an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], which will be stated.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, before that is done I wish to say that the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] had the floor and had not concluded his address, and I desired to ask him a question on a matter which has not been made clear to me as to what the Senator from Ohio has said, and that is, that if oil transported by means of pipe lines shall be considered interstate commerce and be within the provisions of this bill, why should not gas carried through pipes be also considered interstate commerce and be within the provisions of this proposed act?

Mr. LODGE. Let me say, in reply, that the carrying of natural gas in pipes has been held by the courts to be interstate commerce.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Why, then, should it not be included in the amendment?

Mr. LODGE. I have not the references to the decisions by me, but I think it ought to be included, as I think in the same way the control of the water supply should be; but I do not wish to endanger in any way or complicate the issue and defeat the correction of the evil which I am seeking to meet. I desire to put this in because I think it is an act of justice, and I think this great article of interstate commerce, as to which there have been great abuses, ought to be included.

The Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER] referred to me as an enemy of the bill. I am not an enemy of the bill; I propose to vote for it, but I prefer to have a broad court review. Does the Senator from Montana mean that because of that I am an enemy of the bill? I think the bill can be greatly improved by amendment. I think as it stands it is crude and incoherent legislation and that it will not meet the evils we are trying to cure. Therefore I want to amend the bill in the interest of the law itself. It does not follow that a Senator is hostile to a bill because he seeks to amend it.

Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE] that I agree with him entirely as to the soundness of his proposition, but I do not desire to hamper this amendment with any unimportant points.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Before the Senator takes his seat I wish to follow the question which I asked and which he answered by this: Since the carrying of gas through pipes is interstate commerce as much as is the carrying of oil through pipes, why would the including of gas within the bill complicate the carrying of oil? It is complicated by the other just the same.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I have heard of no abuses in the carrying of natural gas from one State to another, but there may have been abuses.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. It is subject to great abuse.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator prefers that there should be a vote on that amendment, I am perfectly willing to have a vote upon it.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I think there undoubtedly ought to be a vote, unless some Senator will explain why gas should be excluded and oil included, since they are both substantially the same. Both are considered as minerals, and the carrying of them in pipe lines has been decided in both cases to be interstate commerce. I do not see and have not yet heard why one should be excepted and the other included.

Mr. CARTER. I will now renew my amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] by striking out the words "or other commodity" in line 3.

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President, I ask for a vote by yeas and nays on the amendment of the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER] to the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE].

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On line 3 of the proposed amendment of Mr. LODGE, after the word "oil," it is proposed to strike out the words "or other commodity."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment to the amendment will be regarded as agreed to.

Mr. CULBERSON. Oh, no, Mr. President; there is opposition to it. I move to lay the amendment of the Senator from Montana to the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts on the table.

Mr. GALLINGER. I rise to a point of order, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire will state his point of order.

Mr. GALLINGER. My point of order is that, under the agreement, that motion is not in order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair feels uncertain as to the precise interpretation of the agreement made on April 30 of the right to move to lay an amendment on the table, which, under the rules, is not a debatable motion and might be a violation of the agreement. The agreement provides that the discussion upon amendments shall proceed under a fifteen-minute rule, and that the amendments shall be disposed of when the discussion thereon is concluded. A motion to lay an amendment on the table is one method of disposing of it. The Chair therefore feels some hesitation about entertaining the Senator's motion without some expression of the understanding and wish of the Senate in the matter, as the Chair has no power to enforce the terms of an agreement which might conflict with the rules. Therefore the Chair will inquire whether it is the understanding of the Senate that such a motion should be entertained before the debate on the amendment has been concluded, and will request that the motion be withheld until the Chair understands the wish of the Senate.

Mr. CULBERSON. In view of the statement of the Chair, I withdraw the motion to lay on the table and insist on a vote on the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. ALDRICH. I hope the Chair will not decide adversely to the suggestion of the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON], at least not without a hearing.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas withdraws his motion to lay the amendment to the amendment on the table.

Mr. CULBERSON. I understand the Chair did not rule on the point, and I have no occasion to press it.

Mr. TELLER. I rise to a question of order. The unanimous-consent agreement does not deprive a Senator of his right to move to lay a motion on the table. I referred to that fact the other day when we were fixing the rule, when I said that in case there was any attempt to evade the rule in coming to a fair vote it would be in the power of the Senate to lay the amendment on the table, and thus maintain the integrity of the rule.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The purpose of the Chair is as to the question raised to ascertain the sense of the Senate with respect to its own agreement.

Mr. GALLINGER. I should be very glad, Mr. President, if the unanimous-consent agreement did permit of a motion to lay an amendment on the table; but I submit to the Chair and to the Senate that a reading of the rule must lead to the conclusion that that motion is not in order when debate is proceeding. If it were in order, then debate could be absolutely cut off on every amendment.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, the motion to lay upon the table is one of the motions of highest privilege in any legislative body, and it can not be cut off by an agreement of this kind any more than a motion to adjourn can be cut off. An amendment can be disposed of as well by laying upon the table as it can be by voting it down or postponing it indefinitely. A motion to lay an amendment on the table is a disposition by the Senate of that amendment, and clearly is within the terms of the agreement.

Mr. CULBERSON. I rise to a point of order, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator will state the point of order.

Mr. CULBERSON. The point of order is that there is nothing before the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is pending the amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana to the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I rise to a point of order, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator will state his point of order.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. My point of order, Mr. President, is that it is of the highest importance that it should be determined at this time, as Senators have addressed the Senate on this question, whether the agreement may be destroyed by a motion to lay an amendment upon the table, since the agreement itself provides for debate under the fifteen-minute rule. If, then, we may make a motion to lay upon the table, debate may be cut off entirely and thus the agreement be destroyed.

Mr. TILLMAN. I rise to a point of order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator will state his point of order.

Mr. TILLMAN. If there is any man here more anxious to effect this legislation than I am, I want to find him and shake him by the hand. But the agreement declares that an amendment shall be discussed under the fifteen-minute rule, and at the end of the discussion we shall vote on it. It does not say anything about amendments to amendments. This is an amendment to an amendment, and unless we have the power to lay an amendment to an amendment on the table we will be here until December.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER] to the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. It will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. In line 3 of the proposed amendment, after the word "oil," it is proposed to strike out the words "or other commodity."

Mr. CULBERSON. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment to the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FRYE (when his name was called). The senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. MCENERY] is paired with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. DEPEW]. I am paired with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN]. Those pairs have been transferred, leaving the Senator from Louisiana and the Senator from Maine at liberty to vote. I shall not make this announcement again during the pendency of the bill. I vote "nay."

Mr. MCENERY (when his name was called). Under the announcement made by the Senator from Maine I am at liberty to vote, and I vote "nay."

Mr. MORGAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], who is absent from the Senate because he is not well. I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. SPOONER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. CARMACK]. I am advised that, notwithstanding that fact, I may vote on this question. I therefore vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. KITTREDGE. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. PATTERSON], who is absent. In his absence, I withhold my vote.

Mr. TALIAFERRO (after having voted in the negative). I ask if the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SCOTT] has voted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is informed that the junior Senator from West Virginia has not voted.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. I have a general pair with that Senator, and therefore ask leave to withdraw my vote.

Mr. DUBOIS. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. HEYBURN] is confined to his home by sickness.

The result was announced—yeas 22, nays 53, as follows:

YEAS—22.

Bulkeley	Dryden	Hopkins	Smoot
Carter	Flint	Kean	Sutherland
Clark, Wyo.	Foraker	Long	Warren
Dick	Gallinger	McCumber	Wetmore
Dillingham	Hale	Platt
Dolliver	Hansbrough	Proctor

NAYS—53.

Aldrich	Clarke, Ark.	Knox	Penrose
Alger	Clay	La Follette	Perkins
Allee	Culberson	Latimer	Pettus
Bacon	Cullom	Lodge	Piles
Bailey	Daniel	McCreary	Rayner
Berry	Dubois	McEnery	Simmons
Beveridge	Elkins	McLaurin	Spooner
Blackburn	Foster	Mallory	Stone
Brandegee	Frazier	Martin	Teller
Burkett	Frye	Millard	Tillman
Burnham	Fulton	Money	Warner
Burrows	Gamble	Nelson
Clapp	Gearin	Newlands
Clark, Mont.	Hemenway	Overman

NOT VOTING—14.

Allison	Crane	Kittredge	Scott
Ankeny	Depew	Morgan	Taliaferro
Burton	Gorman	Nixon
Carmack	Heyburn	Patterson

So Mr. CARTER'S amendment to the amendment of Mr. LODGE was rejected.

Mr. CARTER. I move to insert after the word "commodity," in line 3 of the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], the words "except water."

Mr. FORAKER. I rise to inquire what is the status of the amendment I offered?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understood the Senator from Ohio to withdraw his amendment.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, what the Senator from Ohio said, if the RECORD be consulted, was, that if the amendment of the Senator of Montana should be adopted, I, of course, would withdraw my amendment, because it would then be unnecessary.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator from Montana could not have presented his amendment and had a vote on it unless that of the Senator from Ohio had been withdrawn, because otherwise it would have been an amendment in the third degree.

Mr. FORAKER. My amendment had been adopted before the Senator from Montana offered his amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It was the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] which was adopted.

Mr. PETTUS. I call the attention of the Presiding Officer to the fact that the amendment has not been reported.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It has not yet been read. Does the Senator from Ohio——

Mr. FORAKER. Then I renew my amendment, if it be in order to do that.

Mr. LODGE. The amendment is, after the words "or other commodity," to insert the words "except natural gas."

Mr. FORAKER. To insert the words "except natural gas."

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Let the amendment be reported from the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 3 of the proposed amendment, after the word "commodity," insert the words "except natural gas."

Mr. KEAN. Will not the Senator also add "water?"

Mr. LODGE. The amendment as I offered it read "or other commodity except natural gas or water for municipal purposes." That is the way the amendment now reads, and the amendment must be to strike out the words "or water for municipal purposes." That is the proper form for the Senator's amendment.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. What does he mean by "water for municipal purposes?"

Mr. LODGE. I thought "for municipal purposes" was generally understood. A city's supply of water is what I meant. If my language is not clear, I shall be very happy to modify it.

Mr. ALDRICH. It may be my lack of comprehension.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will again report the amendment as proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts to his original amendment by striking out the words "or water for municipal purposes."

Mr. ALDRICH. I am still not quite satisfied with the explanation of the Senator from Massachusetts. I want to know whether this would include water for drinking purposes.

Mr. LODGE. Of course.

Mr. ALDRICH. Or for bathing purposes.

Mr. LODGE. Of course.

Mr. ALDRICH. It is not perfectly plain.

Mr. LODGE. Water for municipal purposes, as I understand it, is water furnished to a city for the use of its inhabitants. At least I should so suppose.

Mr. FORAKER. Let me ask the Senator a question. What about natural gas? Natural gas furnished to a city, with which to light its streets, would be for a municipal purpose, but natural gas furnished to a manufacturer in his plant in the city would not be for municipal purposes, as I understand. So I hope the words "or water for municipal purposes" may go out.

Mr. KEAN. Strike out the word "municipal."

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Let the amendment as it will read if amended be reported.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will again state the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts as it will read if the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio is agreed to.

The SECRETARY. In section 1, line 1, after the word "to" at the end of the line, insert the words:

Any corporation or any person or persons engaged in the transportation of oil or other commodity, except natural gas, by means of pipe lines, or partly by pipe lines and partly by railroad, or partly by pipe lines and partly by water, at any place within the jurisdiction or within the governmental authority of the United States, who shall be considered and be held to be common carriers within the meaning and purpose of this act, and to.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. If the Senator from Ohio, who offers this amendment, will, after "gas," include the words "for municipal purposes," for one I should be very glad indeed to vote for it.

Mr. LODGE. That is the way it stood.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I know that is the way it originally stood, but is not the way it stands as the Senate is going to vote on it.

Mr. LODGE. His very purpose is to get rid of those words.

Mr. FORAKER. I do not want it restricted to municipal purposes.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Then, unless the Senator from Massachusetts or some other Senator can show me why natural gas should not be included under the provisions of this bill as well as oil, when both are carried in pipe lines and are interstate commerce, I shall have to vote against it.

Mr. FORAKER. I do not know that I am in order, but it is my amendment. I have just offered it. I suppose I am. I have already explained to the Senate that it so happens that just at this time they are building or getting ready to build—the ordinances have already been passed—a pipe line from Cincinnati to the natural gas fields of West Virginia, a distance of almost 300 miles. It will cost about $5,000,000. The purpose is to bring natural gas to the city of Cincinnati and substitute it there for artificial gas. It is to be distributed throughout the city. It is to be used not only for illuminating the streets, which would be a municipal purpose, but it is also to be furnished to manufacturers, and that is one of its principal purposes.

Now, nobody is interested in that enterprise, except only the people who are building the line with the idea of bringing the gas to Cincinnati, to do a great public service, and they have had trouble enough to set the enterprise on foot. They are just now in the midst of their trouble, trying to raise the money. They have not yet been able to raise it all. If it should go out, after they have raised the money to build the line, that any man can take possession of it to bring gas there for his own purposes, and that the line is to be under the charge of the Interstate Commerce Commission, I think it will be the end of the enterprise. That is my notion of it.

I should like to have natural gas excepted. I have no other interest in the matter. I do not care what you do about oil or water, although perhaps I ought to object to the provision about transporting water from one State to another, because the truth is we, at Cincinnati, get our water, under the new waterworks arrangement, from the Kentucky side of the river, over, as the Senator from Kentucky well knows, on the sand bar opposite Dayton, on the Kentucky side. We go across there by permission of Kentucky, and we take our water from there, it being purer water than we can get on the other side. Now we are to be put under the Interstate Commerce Commission. It is simply carrying this thing to a ridiculous extreme. I do not know of anybody complaining about the transportation of water from Kentucky to Cincinnati or the transportation of natural gas from West Virginia to Ohio to light our cities. I have never heard any complaint. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. TILLMAN. I should like to ask the Senator why the courts would not be open to the pipe line to compel a fair remuneration or a reasonable and just rate or a justly compensatory rate, or something like that, in the event that the Interstate Commerce Commission should undertake to oppress this corporation?

Mr. FORAKER. I do not know how the Interstate Commerce Commission can make us become a common carrier if we do not want to be. We are not building this pipe line with the idea of accommodating the people who have natural gas to sell, except only as we buy it from them ourselves. Our people are going there; they are acquiring natural-gas territory; they are opening up their own wells; they are supplying themselves therefrom; and it may be they will want to buy some gas, but they will buy it as their own. There is no other customer there except only this one company, which will own the pipe line. It is not our purpose to engage in the business of a common carrier, and I do not think we ought to be treated as a common carrier when we are not.

Mr. TILLMAN. I wish to call the attention of the Senate to a contention made by the Senator from Ohio in the beginning of this discussion. My idea is that if this monopoly of the gas fields of West Virginia is not put under some governmental instrumentality, this first concern which will bore in the gas field and get to the gas supply will have at its mercy the landowners around within the area of pressure. This first possessor of gas will have a monopoly and will exact tribute from every man who has gas under his land and who bores a well. You would create a monopoly similar to the oil monopoly, the Standard Oil, and I can see no reason under the sun why, if we want to put the Standard Oil under the control of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and compel it to transport oil of other producers at a reasonable rate, we should not compel gas lines to do the same thing.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. TILLMAN. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. I should like to ask somebody a question. I am not satisfied as to what the Senator from Massachusetts means by the term "municipal purposes." In my State we have certain water companies that are owned by the cities and certain other waterworks that are owned by private corporations. Now, are one or both of those to be subject to the provisions of this act?

Mr. LODGE. Both, I understand. It is not the purpose to determine it by the character of the ownership, because the language of the amendment is "municipal purposes." I think it is desirable to enlarge it, as has been suggested, by adding the words "domestic and irrigation purposes." If the Senator thinks it is defective——

Mr. ALDRICH. I do not know what the purpose of the Senator is. I am trying to find out what he means. I do not know whether he means to cover water used for irrigation.

Mr. LODGE. If there is any doubt about it I think it ought to be enlarged.

Mr. FLINT. I ask that the words "domestic and irrigation" be inserted after the word "municipal."

Mr. ALDRICH. Would that include a manufacturing purpose?

Mr. FLINT. I do not think so.

Mr. ALDRICH. The use of water for manufacturing purposes in my part of the country is the most important of any.

Mr. LODGE. I think the best way would be to omit water altogether.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio, which will again be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. In the modified amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts strike out the words "or water for municipal purposes;" so that it will read:

In the transportation of oil or other commodity, except natural gas, by means of pipe lines.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. Oh, Mr. President, I oppose that. I desire a division on that question. I think that is the most unjust amendment that has been offered.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I desire a vote on the pending proposition.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas demands a vote.

Mr. TILLMAN. Let us divide.

Mr. SPOONER. I ask that it be re-reported.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wisconsin requests that the amendment be again stated.

The SECRETARY. In the modified amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts, the Senator from Massachusetts proposes, after the word "commodity," to strike out——

Mr. LODGE. Excuse me. That is the form of my amendment, which I had the right to modify. I did not offer it as an amendment. The amendment now reads——

The SECRETARY. The amendment now reads:

In the transportation of oil or other commodity, except natural gas or water for municipal purposes, by means of pipe lines.

It is proposed by the Senator from Ohio to strike out the words "or water for municipal purposes."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. SCOTT. I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts what effect that has on the pipe lines through which they carry water for mining purposes in the West, and where they carry it for irrigation purposes?

Mr. LODGE. The proposition now is to strike out "water."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment, which has been stated. [Putting the question.] In the opinion of the Chair, the noes have it.

Mr. FORAKER. I demand a call of the roll.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The yeas and nays are called for. Is there a second? In the opinion of the Chair, there is not. The amendment is disagreed to.

Mr. CARTER. I propose to amend by inserting, in line 3, after the word "commodity," the words "except water."

Mr. LODGE. The Senator will pardon me for once more calling his attention to the language of the amendment. The amendment now reads, "or other commodity, except natural gas or water for municipal purposes."

Mr. CARTER. I object to the qualification "municipal purposes."

Mr. LODGE. The Senator wants to strike out the words "municipal purposes" and leave the exception natural gas and water.

Mr. TILLMAN. That would leave the gas to apply to the other.

Mr. LODGE. No, that has been voted down. The Senator desires to strike out the word "water."

Mr. CARTER. I do not desire the qualification "municipal purposes," as applied to water.

Mr. LODGE. I see.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Montana proposes an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to modify the amendment by striking out, before the word "water," the word "or" and insert "and;" and to strike out the words "for municipal purposes."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana?

Mr. CARTER. I understand the fact to be that the Senator from Massachusetts has an amendment coming in after the word "commodity." Let that amendment be stated.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will again state the modification.

Mr. LODGE. It is a part of the original amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state it.

The SECRETARY. After the word "commodity," it is proposed to insert "natural gas or water for municipal purposes."

Mr. LODGE. The Senate has just disagreed to an amendment excepting natural gas alone and withdrawing the qualification "for municipal purposes." What the Senator wishes to attain is to except water altogether?

Mr. CARTER. Without qualification.

Mr. LODGE. "Except water." Then the amendment ought to read "except water or natural gas for municipal purposes."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the proposed amendment.

Mr. LODGE. "Except water or except natural gas for municipal purposes;" so as to separate them.

The SECRETARY. "Except water or except natural gas for municipal purposes."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. CULBERSON. I should like to have the amendment stated again.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. At the request of the Senator from Texas the amendment will again be stated.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, while I have the floor, I will state that votes should be taken on amendments, and they should not be submitted by way of unanimous consent. I respectfully submit that the proper way is to put the question whether an amendment is agreed to or not, rather than to say "without objection, agreed to."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will be glad to accommodate the Senator from Texas.

Mr. FULTON. I should like to have the amendment read again.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon requests a restatement of the proposed amendment.

The SECRETARY. After the word "commodity," in line 3, it is proposed to insert "except water or natural gas for municipal purposes."

Mr. CARTER. And the word "and"——

Mr. FULTON. I submit that it should be "and" instead of "or."

Mr. GALLINGER. No.

Mr. FULTON. That is why I asked to have it read.

Mr. LODGE. I think it is necessary to divide them, as I stated—"and except gas for municipal purposes."

Mr. DANIEL. I have not heard any assignment of reasons for making any exception on this proposition. I will be glad if the Senator from Massachusetts will state the reason why he wishes the exception made.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Virginia will suspend until the Senate is in order.

Mr. DANIEL. I merely wish to inquire for what reason this exception should be made. I have heard it stated what the exception is, but what public service is to be subserved by making these interests exceptional to the balance of the bill?

Mr. LODGE. There are a great many cases where the municipalities own the water supply and the lighting supply, and it seems to me absolutely unnecessary that they should be put under the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Except water altogether.

Mr. LODGE. It does not seem to be necessary to put them in.

Mr. DANIEL. It does not do any harm to do it; it merely prevents any wrong being done.

Mr. LODGE. I had no better reason than that I thought it was needless.

Mr. ALDRICH. I think I will——

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. ALDRICH. Not at present. I think I will have to make the same inquiry. What does the Senator from Massachusetts mean by "natural gas for municipal purposes?"

Mr. TELLER. We do not hear the Senator over here.

Mr. ALDRICH. I want to ask the Senator from Massachusetts what he means by "natural gas for municipal purposes?"

Mr. LODGE. Lighting a city.

Mr. ALDRICH. There may not be half a dozen cities in the United States lighted by natural gas.

Mr. LODGE. Quite so.

Mr. ALDRICH. You do not pretend to exempt the city that is lighted by artificial gas?

Mr. LODGE. I had no intention of excepting that. I did not suppose there was much artificial gas in interstate commerce. Here and there there may be a case.

Mr. ALDRICH. There are many communities in the United States near a State line where gas is carried across the State line for lighting purposes by private corporations.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator does not think it goes far enough, all he has to do is to move to strike out the word "natural."

Mr. ALDRICH. I am trying to find out what is the purpose of the Senator. I am not making any suggestion.

Mr. LODGE. I did not suppose there was any considerable interstate commerce in artificial gas. It was my ignorance, which I freely confess; and if it is necessary—I am glad to see the Senator from Rhode Island is anxious to make it drastic—I will move at the proper time to strike out the word "natural."

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from Ohio this morning stated that cities outside of the city of Cincinnati were lighted by the gas companies of Cincinnati.

Mr. FORAKER. Until recently. They are not at this time.

Mr. ALDRICH. Not at the moment. But I have in mind a half a dozen cases. I suppose it is the intention of the Senator to except those?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly. That is met by leaving out the word "natural."

Mr. CARTER. In reply to the inquiry of the Senator from Virginia, so far as it applies to the transportation of water, I desire to say that my special solicitude in that behalf is to leave our irrigation canals subject to the local jurisprudence which is especially applicable thereto. For instance, one large system of canals conducting water from Idaho into Utah utilizes pipe lines to the extent of several miles. Therefore it would be unquestionably true, if this exception were not made, that the pipe lines and the canals thus constructed would be subject to the the regulations of the Interstate Commerce Commission. The same would be true with reference to a general scheme of irrigation involving flumes, pipes, canals extending across the line of North Dakota from the State of Montana.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Will the Senator permit a question?

Mr. CARTER. Yes, sir.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Would not the Senator's entire purpose be subserved by adding the words "for irrigation purposes," because water is transported from State to State for a large number of other purposes than irrigation and municipal purposes? I do not think anybody would have any objection to excepting water for irrigation purposes. I suggest that modification.

Mr. LODGE. Water is excepted altogether.

Mr. CARTER. I think the general exception will——

Mr. NELSON. It may be a little ungracious to make the suggestion, but this amendment has been adopted, and it seems to me we are discussing it after it has been adopted.

Mr. LODGE. I suggest that in order to make the purport of the amendment clear, it be made to read "except natural or artificial gas."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the modification will be made.

The SECRETARY. After the word "commodity," insert the following:

Except water and except natural or artificial gas for municipal purposes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALDRICH. I move to strike out "for municipal purposes," because gas is used all over the United States for a thousand purposes by gas companies engaged in interstate commerce. I move to strike out "except for municipal purposes."

Mr. GALLINGER. I make the point of order that the amendment having been agreed to in Committee of the Whole it is not competent to amend it.

Mr. ALDRICH. What amendment has been agreed to?

Mr. GALLINGER. The one you are trying to amend.

Mr. ALDRICH. It is a part of the Senator's original amendment that I am trying to amend.

Mr. GALLINGER. You are seeking to amend the Senator's amendment——

Mr. ALDRICH. I am seeking to amend a part of the Senator's original amendment, which, I submit to the Chair, I am entitled to do.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is inclined to agree that the amendment is in order. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Rhode Island be stated.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will again be stated.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let us understand it.

The SECRETARY. In the amendment just agreed to strike out the words "for municipal purposes."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Rhode Island.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

Mr. MALLORY. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. PETTUS. I ask for a vote by yeas and nays.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Alabama demands the yeas and nays. Is there a second? In the opinion of the Chair there is not.

Mr. HOPKINS. Before we vote on the amendment I should like to have it read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will report the amendment as it is amended, at the request of the Senator from Illinois.

The SECRETARY. In section 1, line 1, after the word "to" at the end of the line, insert:

Any corporation or any person or persons engaged in the transportation of oil or other commodity except water and except natural or artificial gas by means of pipe lines or partly by pipe lines and partly by railroad or partly by pipe lines and partly by water at any place within the jurisdiction or within the governmental authority of the United States, who shall be considered and held to be common carriers within the meaning and purpose of this act and to.

Mr. SCOTT. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. KITTREDGE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. PATTERSON], as I previously stated. Since the former vote was taken, I have arranged to transfer the pair to the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN], permitting me to vote. I shall not make further announcement of this arrangement. I vote "yea."

Mr. MORGAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON].

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 75, nays 0, as follows:

YEAS—75.

Aldrich	Culberson	Hemenway	Perkins
Alger	Cullom	Hopkins	Pettus
Allee	Dick	Kean	Piles
Bacon	Dillingham	Kittredge	Platt
Bailey	Dolliver	Knox	Proctor
Berry	Dryden	La Follette	Rayner
Beveridge	Dubois	Latimer	Scott
Blackburn	Elkins	Lodge	Simmons
Brandegee	Flint	Long	Smoot
Bulkeley	Foraker	McCreary	Spooner
Burkett	Foster	McCumber	Stone
Burnham	Frazier	McEnery	Sutherland
Burrows	Frye	McLaurin	Taliaferro
Carter	Fulton	Mallory	Teller
Clapp	Gallinger	Martin	Tillman
Clark, Mont.	Gamble	Millard	Warner
Clark, Wyo.	Gearin	Money	Warren
Clay	Hale	Nelson	Wetmore
Crane	Hansbrough	Overman

NOT VOTING—14.

Allison	Clarke, Ark.	Heyburn	Patterson
Ankeny	Daniel	Newlands	Penrose
Burton	Depew	Morgan
Carmack	Gorman	Nixon

So Mr. LODGE's amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. FORAKER. I move to amend by striking out the words "receipt, delivery, elevation, and," on page 3, line 7. I call attention to the fact that on page 3 the term "transportation" is defined, and the term "transportation" is defined to include the receipt, delivery, and elevation of goods transported in interstate commerce. The conclusion of that paragraph is that common carriers are required to furnish such transportation. In other words, common carriers are required to provide for the receipt of goods to be transported and for the delivery of goods after they have been transported, which, if it means anything at all, means delivery to the consignee at the place of consignment. They are required also to provide for the elevation of goods, which means, I suppose, to provide an elevator service. It seems to me those words are not necessary to the accomplishment of the purposes we have in view, and that they are only included to bring confusion, and it ought all to go out. I do not want to discuss it. I submit the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, line 7, strike out the words "receipt, delivery, elevation, and."

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. President, I regret that I am not quite able to agree with the Senator from Ohio in respect to this matter. One of the common abuses of interstate transportation is extortionate charges and discriminations in connection with the receipt and delivery and especially with the elevation of grain and such merchandise.

The theory of this definition of transportation is that whoever buys it buys all that there is connected with it. If a man desires grain sent from the interior to Chicago or New York, which requires special expenses for transfer and elevation and delivery at an intermediate point, such as Omaha, the object of this bill is that all the expenses incident to the interstate transit of the merchandise shall be included in the transportation, and the total price of it computed in the rate.

If these words are omitted, room is left for some of the most flagrant extortions and the most flagrant discriminations, especially in relation to the elevation of merchandise in transit. I should therefore hope that that amendment would not prevail.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. BAILEY. Let the amendment be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be again read at the request of the Senator from Texas.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, line 7, strike out the words "receipt, delivery, elevation, and."

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. FORAKER. I understand that we are working in accordance with the printed amendments in their order at the Secretary's desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendments are considered only as they are offered from the floor.

Mr. FORAKER. Then I offer another amendment to section 1. I move to amend on page 3, line 8, by striking out the words "ventilation, refrigeration, or icing;" and I send to the desk to be read as the only remarks I care to make about it, for I do not suppose anybody's remarks will do any good, a letter addressed to a Member of the House of Representatives from the State of Michigan, furnished me by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. ALGER]. It expresses the whole case, except that I want to say I have a great number of such letters from growers of peaches in Michigan, and a great number of letters from my own constituents in Ohio who are interested in the growing of peaches in northern Georgia, all writng to me to the same effect; but I ask that that letter may be read as a sample of all.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Ohio will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, line 8, it is proposed to strike out "ventilation, refrigeration, or icing."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The letter sent to the desk by the Senator from Ohio will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

HART, MICH., December 15, 1905.

Hon. ROSWELL P. BISHOP, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We, the undersigned fruit growers and shippers of Oceana County, Mich., desire to call your attention to a phase of the proposed legislation relating to railroad rates, etc., now before Congress at Washington, which keenly affects our interests.

As we understand the situation, practically all the bills now pending at Washington contain provisions that will put the so-called "private car lines" out of business. Such legislation, we believe, would be a serious blow to the fruit-growing interests of this county and State.

Our experience proves that car service, refrigeration service, and inspection service, like we have had in the past from the Armour car lines, is essential to the development and prosperity of Michigan fruit growing. Since we have had the Armour service our business has prospered. If we are deprived of that service, we have nothing to expect but a return to old conditions. Every progressive fruit grower hates to think of that. Briefly stated, the situation that confronts us is this:

In the days before we had Armour service in this district our market was confined almost exclusively to Chicago and Milwaukee. Those markets were and still are to the grower low-priced markets. We had to ship our fruit to those markets on consignment to commission men, and we were at their mercy. We had to take for our fruit whatever the commission man in his generosity might allow us. He could and often did report our consignments as arriving in bad condition and selling for barely enough, sometimes not enough, to cover freight charges. We had no redress.

Since we have had the Armour service we have become independent of the Chicago and Milwaukee commission men. We have the whole country for a market. We can send our peaches to the best markets. If we ship on consignment, the Armour service is a guaranty that our fruit will arrive at destination in good condition, and no commission man can cheat us with a report of bad condition.

But, still more important to us, with the Armour service we do not have to ship on consignment. The advantages and guaranties of that service operate to bring into our districts buyers from far distant markets—such as New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and so on—and we sell to those buyers for cash on track at our shipping point. This, as you will appreciate, is a great advantage to us. It relieves us of risk, and the competitive buying brings us better prices; or, to state the case in another way, the Armour service has compelled the commission man to become a merchant instead of a broker and has made him do business on his own money instead of ours. It has also made fruit growing a stable business instead of a gamble.

As we understand it, practically all of the opposition to the private car lines comes from commission men. From what we have stated you will readily appreciate and understand why a certain stripe of commission men are sure to be arrayed against the private car lines.

As to the complaint against rates for refrigeration and service on these private fruit cars, our position is simply this: We are willing to pay for service when the service enables us, as it does, to get enough more for our fruit to cover that charge and make an additional profit larger than we could get without the private car line service.

As to the proposition that the railroads should be required to furnish this refrigerator service, we must say we doubt the practicability of that plan. Leaving out of consideration the millions of money that fruit-belt roads would have to spend for fruit cars and also leaving out of consideration the disposition of those roads to provide enough cars for the fruit season and have them idle the rest of the year, our experience suggests these points:

The private car lines have an organization of picked men, trained to the business of looking after perishable fruit business, both at the shipping point and en route. It guarantees condition. It permits the shipper to ship to any point and over any road, and no matter whose road or how many roads the shipment goes over, the private car taking care of it all the way and responsible for it.

If the railroads undertake this refrigeration service, it will require a long time for them to perfect any sort of an organization. But even if a fruit-belt road should perfect such an organization we do not see how that road can guarantee us perfect service and care of our fruit after it leaves that road and goes over a road that handles coal or lumber principally, and probably never handles a car of fruit except what comes to it in transit from some other road. "Everybody's business is nobody's business." The Armour car lines give us a highly organized, specialized service and is expert in handling highly perishable commodities. We can not look for such service from ordinary train or yard crews.

This whole question and its sharp bearing upon us is illustrated by our local railroad situation. At the end of the past season the Armour car line service on the Pere Marquette Railway ceased, and that road agreed to provide the refrigerator service heretofore performed by the Armour car lines. Our experience with the Pere Marquette Railway has not made us enthusiastic believers in its ability to furnish service equally as good as that of the Armour car lines, as we are reliably informed the initial cost to the Pere Marquette Railway for car equipment would be at least two and a quarter millions of dollars.

But the Pere Marquette Railway is now in the hands of a receiver. Therefore its ability to fill the place of the Armour service before the next peach crop is gathered would seem to be out of the question.

You certainly appreciate where all this leaves us. With the Pere Marquette Railway tied up in a receivership, and legislation at Washington knocking out private car lines, will set us back ten years in our fruit industry; it will leave us without refrigerator cars for the coming season, except what the Pere Marquette Railway can borrow, will leave us without the help of an organized service, and will inflict serious damage to every peach or fruit grower in the Michigan district.

We have taken the liberty of thus addressing you at length on this question not only because our interests are affected, but because our interests can be regarded in this matter without injury to any other interests. There is no industry worth mentioning in Oceana County, in this Congressional district, or in this State that will be benefited by knocking out private fruit-car lines, but such legislation will irreparably damage the fruit industry.

We earnestly hope you will be able to give our interests in this matter your careful consideration, and hope you can conveniently call it to the attention of your colleagues.

If you desire information more in detail on the questions involved, any one of the undersigned will cheerfully furnish it.

Yours, respectfully,

E. R. Hubbard, F. L. Cerbin, D. Burns Hutchins, W. E. Snyder, A. A. Husted, J. K. Flood, Benton Gebhardt, T. S. Gurney, L. L. Shigley, Geo. A. Hawley, F. W. Van Wickle, of Hart, Mich.; F. E. Llewellyn and C. A. Sessions, of Shelby, Mich.; John Hanover and J. B. Conger, of New Era, Mich.; C. W. Tollant, I. W. Loomis, C. F. Hale, A. G. Saunders, C. E. Ellis, Wylie Bros., of Shelby, Mich.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. President, as the amendment of the honorable Senator from Ohio goes to the very heart of what is regarded by the shipping community as a very important, if not the most important, feature of the pending bill, I desire to submit a few words in reply to the statements made in the letter which has just been read. It recites an argument made very familiar to the Interstate Commerce Committee in the hearings which were held last summer, and it echoes arguments that have filled the public press during the last winter under the authority of the Armour car lines and other private car companies.

The trouble about the statements made in the letter is that they are not founded upon anything that is contained in this bill. The committee was strongly urged by fruit growers and fruit shippers and fruit commission merchant to totally abolish the private car system. This bill does not do that, and it does not go in the direction of that. The bill leaves every railway in the country enjoying the exact freedom which it now has to contract with the Armour car lines or other private car lines for any service which they may have for sale. It lays no limitation whatever upon the use of the private car equipment of the United States.

What does it do? It simply subjects the charges made against the shipper to the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission, by requiring the charges agreed upon between the private car line and the railroad company to be computed as a part of the cost of transportation and to be published as a part of the railroad rate.

Therefore the bill does not disturb any rental agreement or other contract by which the railways are enabled to avail themselves of the private car equipment of the country. It simply seeks to prevent extortion and discrimination arising out of the charges of these private car companies.

I have had in my possession a bale nearly of freight bills indicating not only extortion, but discrimination. I have seen freight bills in which the railway charged $26 for hauling a carload of berries, and the car company cheerfully charged up a very much larger sum for icing it on a twelve-hours' journey. I have seen freight bills of about the same date and about the same place with icing charges varying in amounts, indicating very curious discriminations among shippers.

The whole fruit industry of the United States has been bombarding Congress upon this subject; but the private cars and their icing and refrigerating charges do not attach only to the fruit industry. They attach to some of our greatest agricultural industries outside of fruit shipments. The people who are shipping poultry products are especially interested in them. The people who are shipping meat products and perishable vegetable products of a variety of kinds are interested in them.

The only effect of this definition of transportation is that a man who has fruit for sale and desires to ship it may go to the railroad company and find out what it will cost to take it to Chicago, including the icing and refrigerating charges, and when he finds out what it costs from the published railway schedules, if he regards it as extortionate or if in any other way it violates the interstate-commerce law, he goes with the railway rate to the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission for adjustment, disturbing in no way the use of private cars and disturbing in no way the long-time relation between the railway companies and the private car service of the country.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. McCUMBER. I offer the amendment which is printed on page 9 of the amendments.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 12, after the word "country," insert:

That all refrigerator cars, cold-storage cars, or other freight cars, whether owned by any common carrier or by any other person or corporation, used in interstate commerce shall be covered by the provisions of this act; that all charges paid by any railroad company for use or rental of any such cars shall be just and reasonable, to the end that the owner of such cars using the same for shipment of his own goods shall secure no unfair or unjust benefit or advantage over any other shipper of like goods, and all unjust and unreasonable charges by the owners of such cars for the use or rental thereof by any other shippers or for icing or other service in connection with the use thereof is hereby prohibited.

Mr. McCUMBER. It is almost impossible, Mr. President, to offer any amendment which will be complete in itself, which will not to some extent possibly duplicate or repeat some other word or some other phrase in the bill as it now stands. The bill itself is full of repetitions, and I presume if any amendment inadvertently repeats a single word or a sentence it can be remedied by the committee of conference.

The principal contention seems to crystallize around the one object of a court review. I anticipate, however, that there are many here who, either with the court review or without it, are desirous of perfecting the bill to such an extent that it will be more effective in its operation than the Elkins law, which is now upon the statute books. The amendment which I offer here is for that purpose, and for that purpose only.

If it is true that the bill as it now reads clearly brings all refrigerator cars or cars manufactured for special purposes under its provisions, then that portion of the amendment may not be wholly necessary. Is it true that it does? I want to call the Senator's attention to the provision which has already to some extent been discussed on page 3 of the bill, the definition of the word "transportation." That reads as follows:

And the term "transportation" shall include cars and other vehicles and all instrumentalities and facilities of shipment or carriage, irrespective of ownership or of any contract, express or implied, for the use thereof and all services in connection with the receipt, delivery, elevation, and transfer in transit, ventilation, refrigeration or icing, storage, and handling of property transported.

You will see, Mr. President, that this word "transportation" is sought to be so enlarged that it will cover and include material objects. While that broad definition is given to it, that definition is not adopted anywhere else in the bill. It is manifestly, therefore, useless to attempt to make a word mean something that is entirely opposite to its natural or grammatical use.

For instance, if the word "transportation" by this definition is intended to include not only the vehicle by which the thing is transported, but the thing itself, then "transportation" means a barrel of salt; and, conversely, a barrel of salt means transportation. Certainly the person who drafted this bill has been somewhat unhappy in the use of his terms. I can get no real meaning out of that section of the bill other than that it is intended that the word "transportation" shall include the means by which the thing is moved from one place to another, whether it is stored or otherwise. But, still, its meaning must be limited to the active part of handling the goods or of transporting them. The amendment which I desire to introduce here is to make that clear. I provide in this amendment:

That all refrigerator cars, cold-storage cars, or other freight cars, whether owned by any common carrier or by any other person or corporation, used in interstate commerce shall be covered by the provisions of this act.

That, Mr. President, is a simple proposition. We know exactly what it means, and if we will amend the other sections in conformity with the suggestion of the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY], and then insert this provision, we shall have a bill which will clearly mean what we intend it shall mean, that all refrigerator cars or cars used and constructed for special purposes, whether owned by the company or otherwise, shall be under the provisions of this act.

I wish to suggest, in connection with this, to the Senator from Texas that instead of transferring that portion of the amendment on page 3, which reads "shall include cars and other vehicles and all instrumentalities and facilities of shipment or carriage, irrespective of ownership," over to the definition of railroads—if, instead of that, we shall add after the word "terminal," in line 23, on page 2, the words "and transportation;" so that it will read:

Spurs, tracks, and terminal and transportation facilities of every kind.

Then, by adding after the word "thereof," on page 3, line 6, these words, "and the term 'transportation' shall include the elevation and transfer in transit, ventilation, refrigeration," etc., we would then have a clear meaning, not only in the words that will, in their definition, bring within them words of like character in the proper place, but we will have a further definition of the word "transportation" and a further definition of the words "transportation facilities."

If we amend it in that way, then we can amend it by inserting what I have provided in this amendment, making it clear, on page 2, line 12, after the word "country;" so that it will read:

That all refrigerator cars, cold-storage cars, or other freight cars, etc., shall be brought under the provisions of this act.

Mr. President, I have examined this proposed law and the old law to see whether or not the real thing intended to be obtained by this character of legislation is either in the old law or in the present bill.

Let us take a condition of this kind: We have had before us this morning the message of the President of the United States defining the method by which the Standard Oil Company has been enabled to secure a monopoly of the oil business of the country. I can make that clear in a few words. Let us take, instead of the oil company, the Armour Packing Company. They have, say, 500 cars all ready in their yards at Chicago. They have those cars ready to transfer to any one of the roads. They can say to any road desiring to secure business, "Here we have cars, 500 of them, ready to-day. The shipment at, say, $50 a car would be $25,000 in freight. We can turn this over in five minutes to one road or to another road. It is a matter of great importance to you; your trains are ready to move now, and you can take them without any extra labor whatever. We want the lowest possible charge—so low that we will be able to compete with our smaller competitors." The road, desirous to keep up its amount of traffic, will necessarily cut down to the very lowest for this great sum in order to hold that business. Now, what we want to strike at is the ability of those great trusts to so control the roads and drive them into giving such rebates as will enable them to drive other concerns out of the market. We can do it in two ways. The first method is by bringing them under the Interstate Commerce Commission, and the second in such a manner that the Interstate Commerce Commission will be able to determine what is a fair rental for the use of those particular cars.

Suppose this same company is shipping through cars to San Francisco. The amount is, say, $20 per car, which they charge to the railway company for the use of their private car. They have more cars than they wish for their own purposes, and they rent another car to their competitor—that is, to the railroad for the use of their competitor. That competitor must also pay $20 for the use of that car, or, rather, the principal company will get $20 back not only for the car for its own goods, but also for the other car.

Now, suppose that the real value will be only about $10 in a fair rental value, instead of $20, you will see, then, on each car that the owner of the private car conducting his own business will have an advantage of $10 per car, which, on 500 cars in a single day would be $5,000, or equivalent to $5,000 rebate over and above what would be just and proper. This enables him to more than compete with his smaller adversary.

I want to put it within the power of the Commission to say that the rental which will be paid on a railway to the owner of a private car shall also be just and reasonable, to the end that the owner will secure no unjust and unfair advantage over his competitor. This amendment is intended for that purpose, and that purpose alone.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. President, the complaints are pretty numerous that the House bill is crude and awkward in its construction, and therefore unpalatable to the Senate. I watched with a good deal of interest the efforts of the Senate to get into shape the amendment which has already been adopted, though I doubt very much if anybody would take a great deal of pride in it, either in the form in which it was introduced the first or the second time or as amended on the floor by the author and by other Senators or as it finally passed the Senate. So we ought to incline to drop any controversy about the crudeness and awkwardness of expression which has entered into the framework of the bill.

I think my honorable friend from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] will not deny that the first part of his amendment is rather effectually covered by the provision which the bill makes as to private cars.

I do not understand the reason for these complaints about our definition of the word "transportation." If the instrumentalities of shipment are not a part of the meaning of the word "transportation," the fault lies not altogether in this bill, but in the crudeness and awkwardness with which the original interstate-commerce bill was constructed twenty years ago.

If I understand the meaning of the word "transportation," it covers the thing which a man buys when he approaches a railroad freight office to have goods shipped. The most famous railway manager in the world appeared before the Interstate Commerce Committee last summer and testified that he was engaged in the business of selling transportation at so much per ton-mile. That was his whole pholosophy of the railroads' transactions with the public.

The bill sufficiently provides that jurisdiction over the railroad rate. It is not certain that we have any jurisdiction over this car company. They have denied our jurisdiction in the courts and before the Interstate Commerce Commission, and, I am inclined to think, correctly.

They were assailed by these Michigan fruit growers on account of their extortionate charges, and they replied with becoming humility that they were not engaged in interstate commerce; that they were not common carriers, but that they were engaged in the business—the thoroughly profitable business, indeed—of renting cars in the city of Chicago, and of icing them at various points; and we made up our minds, after a rather close investigation, that it was not well to encounter this doubt whether we had jurisdiction over a man renting cars in Chicago or renting an icehouse somewhere else. So we adopted the broad scheme of including the charges incident to transportation in the published railway rate. We know that we have jurisdiction over that.

There is some force in what my friend from North Dakota says about the regulation of a man's business who owns the car and the merchandise which the car carries. I think it will not be disappointing, however, to the Senator from North Dakota if I call his attention to the fact that this bill seems to have been drawn after some possibly crude meditation on that subject. If he will examine section 15, which is the great remedial section of this proposed statute, he will find, on page 12 of the printed bill, this provision:

> If the owner of property transported under this act directly or indirectly renders any service connected with such transportation, or furnishes any instrumentality used therein, the charge and allowance therefor shall be no more than is just and reasonable, and the Commission may, after hearing on a complaint, determine what is a reasonable charge as the maximum to be paid by the carrier or carriers for the service so rendered or for the use of the instrumentality so furnished, and fix the same by appropriate order, which order shall have the same force and effect and be enforced in like manner as the orders above provided for in this section.

I am not prepared to say that that provision is a perfect protection in the matter to which the honorable Senator refers, but, if it is to be made more perfect, I think it is not out of the way for me to suggest to him that an amendment offered to section 15 covering that point would be appropriate. For my own part, it appears to me that the Commission is given power there to deal with just such an abuse as he has so correctly described by requiring the owners of merchandise who transport it in their own cars to render an account, upon complaint before the Interstate Commerce Commission, of the contract between them and the railway company. If that is not effectually done in section 15, I, for one, would welcome a suggestion that would make the provision more effective.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER] is not entirely happy in defending the precise form of this bill with his quotation from "the greatest railroad manager in the world." The Senator quotes that great railroad manager as declaring that he was engaged in the business of selling transportation, which was a very sensible declaration from his point of view, and, indeed, from every point of view; but if that is to be accepted in the light of this bill, then that great railroad manager is selling cars and other vehicles and instrumentalities, which I think it is not the purpose of the railroad to do.

Mr. DOLLIVER. He is selling the use of them to the public.

Mr. BAILEY. If the Senator wants to sell the "use of them," very well, but it must be remembered that the act of transportation is performed in the use of them. However, I care nothing about that. I should like to see the bill pass the Congress in such a way that the school-teachers of the country would not have an opportunity of teaching their pupils that Congress did not know how to make a difference between an act and the instrumentality with which that act is performed.

I repeat for the second time that that is not especially important, because I do not think it seriously impairs the efficiency of the bill.

What I desire to call the attention of the Senate to—and it seems to have escaped several of the Senators—is that this bill requires the railroad to do in respect to these special services what it is every railroad's duty to do, and that is to equip itself for the purpose of transporting any property offered to it for transportation in a proper manner.

When the Michigan fruit growers say that under the old system their fruit rotted on the journey to Chicago and was reported by the commission merchants as unfit for use and sale, they stated a good cause of action against the railroads, because it is a common carrier's duty to provide for the citizen proper facilities to conduct its business. Any citizen of this country has a right to offer at the station of any common carrier any commodity in fit condition for transportation, and it is the duty of the railroad to be so equipped that it can transport that commodity to market in suitable condition.

This bill recognizes, as I believe it ought to do, that a condition has grown up in which certain individuals or corporations have been supplying the facilities which the railroad itself ought to supply. This bill does not interfere with that. This bill still permits, as I read it, any man engaged in any business to load his own cars, ice them in his own way, and tender them to the railroad for carriage; and when the cars are so tendered, the railroad carries them, its only charge being for the naked act of transportation. But, for my part, I rejoice that the Congress in this bill has recognized the duty and has sought to enforce upon the carrier the duty of properly equipping itself for the public service. It seems to have been overlooked that the very last part of the sentence under consideration provides:

> And it shall be the duty of every carrier subject to the provisions of this act to provide and furnish such transportation upon reasonable request therefor, and to establish through routes and just and reasonable rates applicable thereto.

That is simply giving the Commission a jurisdiction to enforce the obligation of the carrier as it exists at the common law.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. KITTREDGE. Mr. President, I present the amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of section 1 the following:

> Companies or persons owning, leasing, managing, or operating cars used in the business of carrying any kind of property, including live stock, though such cars run upon railroads not owned, leased, managed, or operated by such companies or persons, shall be deemed to be carriers engaged in the transportation of property by railroad within the meaning of this act.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from South Dakota to tell us upon what page of the collected print of the amendments his amendment may be found?

Mr. KITTREDGE. On page 17.

Mr. President, the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER], in his speech upon the pending bill delivered March 1, said:

> First of all, section 1 of the law was incomplete on account of a defective, or, I think rather I ought to say, an inadequate definition of the word "transportation." As defined in the bill, it has in practical operation this effect: It left the shippers, and especially shippers dealing in perishable products like fruit and vegetables and meats and others of a similar character, doing business not only with the carrier, but with an outside corporation, often entirely independent of the carrier, who charged, in addition to the charge made by the carrier, practically what it pleased for certain incidental services rendered in connection with the shipment; and if the shipper complains to the railroad about these charges he is informed that the charges are made by a car company with which the railroad has nothing to do; and when his complaint is presented to the car company, he is advised that the interstate-commerce law, or what has now come to be known as the legislative power of Congress, does not reach a car company renting cars in Chicago or running an ice house in New Jersey. So the shipper has been left in the hands of the Philistines. I have a job lot of these freight bills here, showing exactly how this additional charge which the railway does not make at all is made, the like of which have become painfully familiar to shippers of fruit and vegetables and other perishable products all over the United States. So flagrant have these abuses grown that even our greatest railways have not been able to protect themselves, much less their patrons, against these extortions and wrongs. Last summer a great national organization of producers and shippers and merchants met together and demanded that Congress entirely abolish private freight cars by making it unlawful for a railroad transacting interstate business to carry one of them. I do not agree with that position.
>
> I think it would injuriously limit the facilities of commerce, and I have lived here in the last few months in such an atmosphere of constitutional doubts that I begin to suspect that perhaps such a proposition might not pass the scrutiny of the courts. At any rate, it is obvious to nearly everybody that the ordinary railroad, having use for refrigerator cars only for a few days each year on its line, could not economically own them. Therefore, in framing this bill, we have left the railroads free to do exactly as they do now, in renting on any terms which they find satisfactory these cars, so that they can be kept in use the year round and sent where they are needed. This measure, therefore, does not make their use illegal; it leaves this $100,000,000 worth of equipment within reach of the railways of the country, but it requires the carrier to deal with the car company and the shipper to deal only with the carrier. It compels the railway company to make itself the sole beneficiary of the moneys paid for the shipment of merchandise. It follows that if this measure becomes a law all these extra charges must be computed in the transportation rate, subject to all the provisions of the interstate-commerce act; so that if they are unreasonable, or unjustly discriminatory, they can be dealt with as the statute provides. This is the first reform which this bill introduces into the existing law.

Most conservative are the statements of the Senator regarding the wrongs practiced by the private car line companies. The most flagrant abuses have flourished throughout the country. Rebates, discriminations, and unjust charges of every kind have thrived through such companies and have become intolerable.

Two remedies are presented:

(a) The elimination of such companies; or

(b) The regulation of them, as suggested by the Senator.

It is claimed that, for commercial reasons, their elimination can not be immediately accomplished, but should be effected in the course of a few years. Meanwhile, in any event, they should be regulated. If the rates and practices of these companies are left uncontrolled by law or by supervision of the Interstate Commerce Commission the result inevitably and speedily will be that the great advantages enjoyed by such companies in dealing with shippers will be a greatly increased number of car companies of all sorts and will enhance indefinitely the business transacted by them. Such expansion of the number and work of car companies may be expected to be indefinitely great in such a situation, and the railroads in that event would become little more than a mere instrument of such companies, as under such circumstances they would be the great carriers of the country in direct relation with the shippers. Unless the charges and other dealings of the car companies with their patrons—the shippers of the country—are regulated the whole plan of the proposed legislation respecting railroads becomes largely futile, for it is immaterial whether rebates are given or excessive charges made by the railroads themselves or by independent car companies. If the car companies are not embraced in it a statute relating only to the railroads and not to such car companies will leave many of the evils existing under present conditions in full operation. The Senator contends that the regulation of car companies is attained by section 1 of the pending measure. To this proposition I can not assent.

The section begins with the statement that "the provisions of this act shall apply to any common carrier or common carriers engaged in the transportation of passengers or property wholly by railroad," etc.

This limits and defines the application of the act, and consequently must be read into all its provisions. Indeed, the same language occurs in nearly all the sections of the bill. Nothing therein contained will apply to anyone not a common carrier by railroad.

Who, then, is within the act? A railroad company certainly, and, quite as certainly, no one else. The question is of importance chiefly as affecting "private car lines," as they are called, which own cars of peculiar construction and intended for special kinds of transportation.

These lines certainly are not common carriers. They run on no regular routes. They do not hold themselves open to carry any goods offered them. No one would think of indicting them for refusal to perform transportation service. They are merely persons with a plant fitted for certain particular kinds of transportation, who seek employment from those who need their service. Carriers they are, for their business is solely the transportation of goods; but common carriers they are not. Their business is quite like that of the owners of furniture vans, common in all cities, which transport goods to all parts of the country, always by railroad in case of long distances, but are under no public duty to do so.

It may therefore be taken as undeniable that the act as framed does not and can not act directly upon these private car lines in their relations to those who ship goods by them. No direct regulation of their business is attempted or intended by the act.

But it has been argued that this business is indirectly brought under the act by the amendment of the definition of "transportation" in this section. That definition is as follows:

> The term "transportation" shall include cars and other vehicles and all instrumentalities and facilities of shipment or carriage, irrespective of ownership or of any contract, express or implied, for the use thereof, and all services in connection with the receipt, delivery, elevation, and transfer in transit, ventilation, refrigeration or icing, storage, and handling of property transported.

In my opinion the definition is awkwardly expressed. "Transportation" can not be a railway car or other vehicle. If the definition can be construed it must be taken to mean that transportation includes all services rendered in the carriage of goods in cars or other vehicles and all services rendered through the use of any instrumentality or facility of shipment or carriage irrespective of ownership or of any contract, express or implied, for the use thereof, etc. That is to say, whatever services a common carrier renders to those who employ him in any way in connection with the carriage of goods shall be "transportation" within the act.

How does this affect the private car lines? They are not, as has been shown, common carriers. Therefore it is not important to those who employ them what "transportation" means. Whatever it means it does not affect them. Nor does the definition lay any foundation for charging the railroad companies with any responsibility for the dealings of the private car lines with their customers. All services which the railroad company performs in such cases it performs for the private car lines, not for the shippers by those lines. With them it has no relations and to them it owes no duties. It does not know them. The private car line presents to the railroad certain cars, with their contents, for transportation, and may require other services in connection therewith, and it is between the private car line and the railroad that any contract for transportation or other services exists, such as would be within the provisions of this bill. The shipper of the goods contained in the car has no agreement, express or implied, with the railroad company.

The provisions in question, therefore, while they bring within the act—what was probably there before—the relations between the car lines and the railroads, leave the relations between the shippers and the car lines unregulated, as they were before. The only case in which they appear to extend at all the scope of the law is in making it apply to the use by the railroads of cars not their own property in the performance of contracts of carriage which they may make directly with individual shippers. But this was also probably within the existing law.

The Senator from Iowa has construed the amendment as having the effect of making the carrier deal with the car line and the shipper deal only with the carrier. It is impossible to see how anything in the bill can effect such result.

Suppose the shipper makes the usual agreement with the car line, and the latter presents its loaded cars to the railroad for transportation. The railroad can not refuse to transport them. It must, as a common carrier, transport whatever is offered for transportation.

Again, the provisions of the bill, all the way through, provide that no "common carrier" shall demand or receive from any person more than certain rates or shall give any person an advantage in transportation. The only persons with whom the railroads deal in these cases are the car lines. They never demand nor receive anything from shippers. The present business may, therefore, go on as at present without any violation of law, so long as the railroads and the car lines are satisfied. The car line does not violate the law, because it is not a common carrier; if the railroad violates it the shipper has no remedy, because the only charge is made to the car line and to this charge no objection may be made. Nothing in the act will compel the shipper to deal with the railroad directly; nothing will compel the car line to give the railroad the use of its cars. Only the relations between the railroads and the car lines would be within the law. Only the car lines could take advantage of it.

If it be supposed that the railroad is to be held responsible for the charges for transportation and other services made by the private car lines to the shipper, there are two conclusive objections:

First. The bill is not, in other respects, so framed, for it only makes the common carrier, i. e., the railroad, responsible for what it receives or grants, and from the shipper the railroad never receives nor to him does it grant anything. What he pays or suffers, therefore, in such transportation is not within the act.

Second. If it were within the act it would clearly be unconstitutional thus to make one person answerable for the acts of another. To impose upon a railroad a penalty because of transactions of a car line, of which it knows nothing and which it is powerless to prevent, would plainly be to deprive it of its property without due process of law. Such a proposition is not debatable.

Perhaps it may have been thought that the railroad, being responsible for the car-line rates, would insist on regulating them; but it would have no power to do so. It can not refuse to transport the loaded cars at rates reasonable as to the car lines. There is no way in which it could compel the car lines to submit to a control which they would certainly refuse to recognize. Indeed, the bill itself could be invoked to compel the railroad to transport these cars at reasonable rates.

The act, however, after defining "transportation," declares:

> And it shall be the duty of every carrier subject to the provisions of this act to provide and furnish such transportation upon reasonable request therefor, and to establish through routes and just and reasonable rates applicable thereto.

This provision is almost unintelligible. What is the railroad to furnish? Must it provide special cars for special kinds of traffic such as the car lines provide? The Senator from Iowa expressly says that to require this is not intended, and it would be, he says, a most unreasonable burden. Does the provision mean merely that the railroad must furnish such transportation and other service as its facilities will allow? That every railroad does and, without special law, must do. As to requiring an individual railroad to furnish through routes and just through rates, that is impossible. No one road could do so alone, and to require it absolutely to come to an agreement with other roads would be, of course, indefensible, and a provision incapable of enforcement, for this again would make the railroad responsible for the conduct of others over whom it has no control.

I refer to this provision because it may have been in the mind of the Senator from Iowa in stating his view of the effect of this law. If the railroads are responsible for rates and must furnish all sorts of cars and service and establish through routes, then it might possibly be argued that the railroads will do the work directly, will themselves pay the car lines for the use of their cars, and, having thus direct control of the cars, will deal directly with the shippers.

Of course this is a perfectly untenable view. The railroad can not refuse to transport the car-line cars nor can it compel the car lines to permit it to use the cars. Neither can it compel the shippers to deal with it directly. If any of these choose still to deal with the car lines, the railroad will be helpless. Even if both shippers and railroad desire to establish the system hoped for by the Senator from Iowa, they will be unable to bring it about. The car lines have simply to decline to permit the railroads to use their cars and the whole plan will be frustrated. Of course they will so decline, and there is no power to compel them to consent.

Therefore it seems to me that the act as framed will not affect transportation by private car lines. As to the railroads, the car lines and not the owners of the goods in their cars are the shippers, and so whatever rights or remedies are conferred upon shippers inure to the benefit of the car lines. On the other hand, the car lines may deal with their customers as they please, may charge such rates and grant such rebates as they choose, and there will be no means of control.

Section 15 of the bill presents a persuasive argument in support of my contentions. It provides that—

SEC. 15. That the Commission is authorized and empowered, and it shall be its duty, whenever, after full hearing upon a complaint made as provided in section 13 of this act, or upon complaint of any common carrier, it shall be of the opinion that any of the rates, or charges whatsoever, demanded, charged, or collected by any common carrier or carriers, subject to the provisions of this act, for the transportation of persons or property as defined in the first section of this act, or that any regulations or practices whatsoever of such carrier or carriers affecting such rates, are unjust or unreasonable, or unjustly discriminatory, or unduly preferential or prejudicial, or otherwise in violation of any of the provisions of this act, to determine and prescribe what will, in its judgment, be the just and reasonable and fairly remunerative rate or rates, charge or charges, to be thereafter observed in such case as the maximum to be charged; and what regulation or practice in respect to such transportation is just, fair, and reasonable to be thereafter followed; and to make an order that the carrier shall cease and desist from such violation, to the extent to which the Commission find the same to exist, and shall not thereafter publish, demand, or collect any rate or charge for such transportation in excess of the maximum rate or charge so prescribed, and shall conform to the regulation or practice so prescribed. Such order shall go into effect thirty days after notice to the carrier and shall remain in force and be observed by the carrier, unless the same shall be suspended or modified or set aside by the Commission or be suspended or set aside by a court of competent jurisdiction. Whenever the carrier or carriers, in obedience to such order of the Commission or otherwise, shall publish and file joint rates, fares, or charges, and fail to agree among themselves upon the apportionment or division thereof, the Commission may after hearing make a supplemental order prescribing the portion of such joint rate to be received by each carrier party thereto, which order shall take effect as a part of the original order.

This section contains most important new legislation. It provides the remedies for the violations of the law and confers upon the Interstate Commerce Commission important powers relating to rates, regulations, charges, practices, etc. A mere inspection of this provision discloses the fact that the private car line companies are well beyond the reach of the extraordinary powers of the Commission. By no possible construction can private car line companies be held to be within the curative provisions of this section.

It must be conceded that the bill as reported at best will require judicial construction to determine whether or not private car line companies are included within its provisions. A measure of such importance should not contain an element of doubt. It should be perfectly clear and plain, especially as to the agencies of transportation to which it is to apply. A simple provision making the bill apply to private car lines, as proposed in the amendment offered, will accomplish this purpose without the possibility of impairing the structure of the measure.

Mr. FRAZIER. On behalf of my colleague [Mr. CARMACK], who is unavoidably detained from the Senate, I desire to submit an amendment to perfect an amendment heretofore offered by him to the pending bill. I ask that it be printed and lie on the table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ADJOURNMENT TILL MONDAY.

Mr. ALDRICH. I move that when the Senate adjourn to-day, it be to meet on Monday next.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. ALDRICH. If the Senator from South Carolina wishes to make a statement, I will withdraw the motion for that purpose.

Mr. TILLMAN. I should like to have the Senator make the statement that he made to me privately in regard to this matter, because I am very anxious to press this work. We have made very little progress to-day, and unless it should be obvious that we will make more progress by discussing things out of the Senate than we are making in it, I want to go on.

Mr. ALDRICH. What I stated to the Senator privately, I will state publicly. The senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] has some amendments to offer to the bill, but he is detained from the Senate by illness. I feel quite certain he will be out by Monday. I do not know how it is with other Senators, but my duty upon committees has absolutely taken all my time. There are several important matters before the Committee on Finance which we are going into at considerable length, and I should be very glad indeed to have a vacation until Monday. I feel sure the progress of this bill will be more certain and more rapid by an adjournment than by being in session to-morrow.

Mr. BAILEY. Will the Senator from Rhode Island permit me?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. ALDRICH. I yield.

Mr. BAILEY. I wish to say to the Senator from South Carolina that it is my opinion that more progress will be made by allowing Senators on the other side a day for their conference than can be made in three days of argument to the open Senate. I think the Senator will expedite his measure by agreeing to the suggestion.

Mr. TILLMAN. Getting it from both directions, from two such distinguished counselors, that we will get there quicker by stopping for a day, I withdraw my objection.

Mr. BAILEY. I venture that merely as a suggestion. I am not in the confidence of the other side. But I have always found that as the time approaches for a vote they find some way to get together, and I am more than half of the opinion that, as radical as their differences have appeared, they are now about to disappear. I think we will not get a vote on these amendments anyway until they are ready, and I think they can get ready quicker by using to-morrow for a conference than by using it in debate.

Mr. TILLMAN. In view——

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator will pardon me. I very much regret they are going to get together, because out of their divisions I saw some opportunity for the Democratic minority to render to the country a very valuable service.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Democratic minority being united. [Laughter.]

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator from New Hampshire reminds me of our own differences. Perhaps it does not come with good grace from this side to upbraid the other about its divisions. I think it possible that upon a call of the roll the division on the one side would be probably as serious as on the other, with this important difference, however, that the majority over here is for the protection of the people, while the majority on that side are not for the people.

Mr. ALDRICH. Both sides are for the people on this side of the aisle. I suggest to the Senator——

Mr. BAILEY. It is a pity that the people do not so understand it.

Mr. ALDRICH. That is their misfortune.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state that this debate is proceeding by unanimous consent.

Mr. TILLMAN. I wish to say to the Senator from Rhode Island that most of this has been in a spirit of badinage, because when he appeals to me to give consideration and respect to our comrade and colleague, the distinguished senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], I am ready to do anything to accommodate that Senator, because I think we will derive great benefit—at least I hope we will—from the amendments he wishes to propose.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask for a vote on my motion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Rhode Island moves that when the Senate adjourn to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to.

AGRICULTURAL LANDS WITHIN FOREST RESERVES.

Mr. CARTER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. FULTON. Will the Senator from Montana yield to me for a moment?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly.

Mr. FULTON. I wish to lodge a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill (H. R. 17576) to provide for the entry of agricultural lands within forest reserves was passed yesterday.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon enters a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill indicated by him was passed, and asks that the House of Representatives be requested to return the bill, it having been transmitted to the House.

Mr. FULTON. I do not wish to ask to have the motion acted on at this time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. No. The motion to reconsider is entered, and the request will be made of the House of Representatives to return the bill.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CARTER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After forty minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, May 7, 1906, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate May 4, 1906.

RECEIVER OF PUBLIC MONEYS.

Walter H. Sales, of Bozeman, Mont., to be receiver of public moneys at Bozeman, Mont., vice James M. Kelly, resigned.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate May 4, 1906.

SURVEYOR-GENERAL OF FLORIDA.

Charles H. Parlin, of Apalachicola, Fla., to be surveyor-general of Florida.

RECEIVER OF PUBLIC MONEYS.

Walter H. Sales, of Bozeman, Mont., to be receiver of public moneys at Bozeman, Mont.

APPOINTMENT IN THE NAVY.

Paul J. Bean, a citizen of Texas, to be an assistant civil engineer in the Navy from the 27th day of April, 1906.

SURVEYOR OF CUSTOMS.

Robert A. Ravenscroft, of Maryland, to be surveyor of customs in the district of Baltimore, in the State of Maryland.

POSTMASTERS.

ARKANSAS.

William C. Roberts to be postmaster at Rogers, in the county of Benton and State of Arkansas.

CALIFORNIA.

T. W. Henry to be postmaster at Paso Robles, in the county of San Luis Obispo and State of California.

D. F. Hunt to be postmaster at Santa Barbara, in the county of Santa Barbara and State of California.

CONNECTICUT.

Isaac L. Trowbridge to be postmaster at Naugatuck, in the county of New Haven and State of Connecticut.

ILLINOIS.

John A. Leu to be postmaster at Highland, in the county of Madison and State of Illinois.

W. W. Lowis to be postmaster at Greenville, in the county of Bond and State of Illinois.

INDIANA.

Charles Carter to be postmaster at Converse, in the county of Miami and State of Indiana.

William C. Nichols to be postmaster at Lowell, in the county of Lake and State of Indiana.

IOWA.

Gordon R. Badgerow to be postmaster at Sioux City, in the county of Woodbury and State of Iowa.

KANSAS.

John McPherson to be postmaster at Blue Rapids, in the county of Marshall and State of Kansas.

P. Moore to be postmaster at Weir, in the county of Cherokee and State of Kansas.

Thomas A. Sawhill to be postmaster at Concordia, in the county of Cloud and State of Kansas.

KENTUCKY.

William A. Waters to be postmaster at Springfield, in the county of Washington and State of Kentucky.

MASSACHUSETTS.

Frederick B. Horne, to be postmaster at Framingham, in the county of Middlesex and State of Massachusetts.

Reuben K. Sawyer to be postmaster at Wellesley, in the county of Norfolk and State of Massachusetts.

MISSOURI.

Henry A. Ayre to be postmaster at Oronogo, in the county of Jasper and State of Missouri.

NEBRASKA.

John Cusack to be postmaster at North Bend, in the county of Dodge and State of Nebraska.

Frank W. Wake to be postmaster at Genoa, in the county of Nance and State of Nebraska.

NEW HAMPSHIRE.

Fred H. Ackerman to be postmaster at Bristol, in the county of Grafton and State of New Hampshire.

OHIO.

Joseph A. Shriver to be postmaster at Manchester, in the county of Adams and State of Ohio.

TEXAS.

John A. Gray to be postmaster at Laredo, in the county of Webb and State of Texas.

TRADE-MARK TREATY WITH ROUMANIA.

The injunction of secrecy was removed May 4, 1906, from a convention between the United States and Roumania for the reciprocal protection of trade-marks, signed at Bucharest on March 31, 1906.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, May 4, 1906.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the naval appropriation bill; and, pending that, I ask unanimous consent that the time for general debate be controlled by the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. MEYER] and myself, the same as yesterday, without attempting to limit the time of general debate.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is under the impression that that order was made on yesterday.

Mr. FOSS. I think that order applied only to yesterday, and I would like to have it apply generally.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that all time consumed in general debate on the naval appropriation bill shall be divided equally between the majority and the minority, the time to be controlled, half and half, by himself and by the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. MEYER]. Is there objection?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, that exact request was made and consented to yesterday.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was under that impression, but the gentleman from Illinois thinks it covered only yesterday.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The request was not made for yesterday; it was made for general debate on this bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed that the Journal so shows, and the gentleman from Illinois is mistaken.

MARY DAGENFIELD.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 16215) granting an increase of pension to Mary Dagenfield, with a Senate amendment thereto.

The Senate amendment was read.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New Jersey that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. LOUDENSLAGER, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

WILLIAM F. M. RICE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 15687) granting an increase of pension to William F. M. Rice, with a Senate amendment thereto.

The Senate amendment was read.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New Jersey that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. LOUDENSLAGER, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

LEWIS DE LAITTRE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 15907) granting an increase of pension to Lewis De Laittre, with a Senate amendment thereto.

The Senate amendment was read.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New Jersey that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. LOUDENSLAGER, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

JEREMIAH LUNSFORD.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 11635) granting an increase of pension to Jeremiah Lunsford, with a Senate amendment thereto.

The Senate amendment was read.

Mr. SULLOWAY. I move that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New Hampshire that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. SULLOWAY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

SARAH M. D. HINMAN.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 10251) granting an increase of pension to Sarah D. M. Hinman with a Senate amendment thereto.

The Senate amendment was read.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New Hampshire that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. SULLOWAY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

LAURA B. IHRIE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 8226) granting an increase of pension to Laura B. Ihrie, with a Senate amendment thereto.

The Senate amendment was read.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the Senate amendment be concurred in.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New Hampshire that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

A message, in writing, from the President of the United States, was communicated to the House of Representatives, by Mr. BARNES, one of his secretaries.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 14397. An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907; and

H. R. 17576. An act to provide for the entry of agricultural lands within forest reserves.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 15435. An act to empower the Secretary of War to convey to the city of Minneapolis certain lands to exchange for other lands to be used for flowage purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bill and joint resolution of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 5372. An act to prevent dangers to navigation from rafts of logs or timbers on coast waters of the United States; and

S. R. 13. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to award the Congressional medal of honor to Roe Reisinger.

SENATE BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bill and joint resolution of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. 5372. An act to prevent dangers to navigation from rafts of logs or timbers on coast waters of the United States—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

S. 13. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to award the Congressional medal of honor to Roe Reisinger—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also bill of the following title, with Senate amendments:

H. R. 14397. An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

EDWARD GILLESPIE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 15397) granting an increase of pension to Edward Gillespie, with a Senate amendment thereto.

The Senate amendment was read.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New Hampshire that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

JOHNSON COUNTY, WYO.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 16521) directing the Secretary of the Interior to sell and convey a certain parcel of land to Johnson County, Wyo., with a Senate amendment thereto.

The Senate amendment was read.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Wyoming that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a message from the President; which was read, ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

[At the conclusion of the reading of the message there was loud general applause.]

[For message, see Senate proceedings of this date.]

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the naval appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 18750—the naval appropriation bill—Mr. CRUMPACKER in the chair.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I would ask how the time has been consumed up to the present time?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois has used three hours and one minute and the gentleman from Louisiana has used one hour and eight minutes.

Mr. FOSS. I suggest the gentleman from Louisiana use some of his time now.

Mr. MEYER. Mr. Chairman, I yield twenty minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD].

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, while the remarks which I will submit will not be upon the pending bill, they will be upon a subject most appropriate while the naval bill is under consideration. I desire to ask the attention of the House to a bill which has been reported from the Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions, to authorize the United States Government to participate in the Jamestown Tercentennial Exposition, to be held on the shores of the Hampton Roads, in Norfolk County, Va., in the year 1907, and to appropriate money in aid thereof.

This bill carries an appropriation aggregating $1,480,000, only $250,000 of which is a direct appropriation to the exposition company, the residue of the appropriation being for the Government exhibit, transportation of troops, entertainments, and other features in which the Government is directly interested.

While it is an assured fact that the Jamestown Exposition will be held, its magnitude and the impression produced by it upon foreign nations will depend largely upon this appropriation.

This exposition is to commemorate the first permanent English settlement upon this hemisphere. Such an event should be observed in a manner befitting the dignity of our great nation, and especially so since this nation has invited the participation of the naval powers of the world.

Mr. Chairman, the distinguishing feature of this exposition, above any the world has ever seen, will be the gathering of war ships of every naval power on the globe. In the ample waters of Hampton Roads will be such a naval demonstration as has occurred nowhere in all the realms of history, and such as has not been possible anywhere in the expositions of the past. There will likewise be a magnificent military encampment.

An industrial display will also be a feature of the exposition; but in the main it will be commemorative and historical. It is a common remark that the most momentous events in history have taken their rise from small beginnings. The Reformation that spread the illumination of Protestant Christianity over the Old World and over the New had its origin in a sudden pang of conscience and questioning of the soul by a monk as, upon his knees for penance, he climbed the steps of St. Peter's. So this land of political and religious freedom had, so to speak, a like elemental initiative. This mighty Republic, now spanning the continent with a continuous stretch of sovereign States, each in itself an empire, had its beginning in a colony of 105 half famished, unfriended souls, who, on the 13th of May, 1607, landed at Jamestown.

It would be hard to describe adequately the effect upon the history of mankind of the planting of that colony. It was not only the commencement of the English system of colonization, a system which has made Great Britain one of the foremost powers of the globe, but it resulted in the almost exclusive possession of the American Continent by the Anglo-Saxon race. Like unto this beginning of the greatest republic of modern times was the origin of the greatest republic of antiquity. Away back in the faint twilight of history a band of fugitives from the flames of Troy settled upon the shores of Latium and laid the foundation of mighty Rome, a republic that grew to be the mistress of the world. But majestic as was that republic, it is not to be compared in any of the essentials of greatness, in the attributes of mental and moral grandeur, in the attainments of the highest fruition of civilization, nor in that military prowess which was its supreme boast—in none of these constituents of greatness is it to be compared with the unique and wonderful Republic which originated in that settlement of English colonists within the domain of the Indian kind Powhatan and upon the banks of the river which at that time bore his name.

In this practical utilitarian age, when the spirit of commercial greed so largely predominates and the great object of life seems to many to be to put money in the purse, we occasionally meet with men who are disposed to ridicule and deride what they call "mere sentiment." Such men forget, however, that it is sentiment that rules the world. Many years ago Andrew Fletcher, a Scotchman, wrote to the Marquis of Montrose a letter in which he said:

I know a very wise man who believes that if a man were permitted to write all the songs of the people, he did not care who wrote their laws.

From time immemorial mankind has evinced an inalienable disposition to recall the traditions of the past, to preserve their ancient landmarks, and to cherish their sacred memories, and there can be surely no higher incentive to honor, to virtue, and to patriotism.

Mr. Chairman, a more appropriate, nay, an equally appropriate spot could not be found upon this continent than Jamestown in which to recall the august and romantic history of the past by a memorial exhibit, for it will be upon soil and amid scenes abounding in interesting and sacred memories alike of the colonial period and of the Revolutionary era.

As for a naval and marine display, there can not be found in all the harbors of America, or in the harbors of any continent on either hemisphere, so appropriate an expanse of water as the Chesapeake Bay and the ample and noble harbor of Hampton Roads, which forms the southern extremity of that bay. This harbor is more capacious than that which is entered by the Golden Gate, now consecrated to undying memory by the wreck of the splendid city to which it gave access and by the peerless and unshaken fortitude of its people. The harbor of Hampton Roads is more capacious than any other upon the Pacific coast, nor is it equaled in capacity or safety, in extent and depth, by any other upon the Atlantic coast, not excepting even the harbor of New York. It is sheltered from the ocean's storms by the two Virginia capes, the open gateway to the Atlantic, and the gateway through which civilization and freedom entered this continent. Upon its banks the two Virginia ports of Norfolk and Newport News sit like imperial queens of commerce, looking with proud gaze upon an expanse of water limited only by the sweep of the human eye, and upon whose bosom the naval armaments of all nations and the combined merchant marine of the entire world may ride at anchor with affluent berth.

Mr. Chairman, in historical interest, memorials of the colonial period and of the Revolutionary era, there is no environment upon this continent comparable to that in which the Jamestown Exposition is to be held.

At Jamestown Capt. John Smith was tried and acquitted by a jury, the first jury trial in America. When Lord De La Warr, the first governor of Virginia, came thither in 1610 he found at Jamestown a church, the first permanent religious edifice erected by Englishmen upon this continent. The ruined tower of this church is still standing. When Governor Yeardley began his administration he brought from the London council to the founders of the Jamestown colony an order to convene a general assembly, the name by which the Virginia legislature is called to this day. The members of this general assembly were to consist of burgesses, or borough representatives, of the plantations, towns, and hundreds. In pursuance of this order, on July 30, 1619, more than a year before the landing on Plymouth Rock, the first legislative body that ever sat in America assembled at Jamestown. The event was propitious; the old world had passed away and the new was born.

In 1710 Alexander Spottswood came as governor of the colony, bringing with him the great writ of habeas corpus, and thus Magna Charta was established in America.

When the Jamestown settlement was destroyed by fire during Bacon's rebellion, in 1676, the colony removed to a locality seven miles distant and there established the town of Williamsburg, the first colonial capital. The foundations of the capitol buildings are still to be seen where the house of burgesses met, and where Washington was received on his return from Braddock's disastrous campaign and was voted a sword as a tribute to his military skill and valor. It was the building, too, in which, in 1765, Patrick Henry wrote, upon a blank leaf torn from an old law book, his resolutions against the stamp act, and amid cries of "Treason!" advocated them with an eloquence which had never before in the new world fallen from mortal tongue.

This was the alarm bell, the signal gun, of the Revolution. Standing at the open door, and spellbound by the burning words of the orator, and the stupendous scene enacting before his eyes, was a youth of 22, a law student, who, eleven years afterward, was to write the Declaration of Independence, and later become the third President of the United States.

There at Williamsburg may also be seen the site of the old Raleigh Tavern, in which the burgesses convened when driven from the capital by Lord Dunmore for treasonable denunciation of the oppressive measures of the English King and Parliament. In the "Apollo room" of that historical tavern the committee of safety was organized and held those meetings which started the ball of the Revolution. And there, too, still stands the powder horn, or magazine, from which Lord Dunmore carried off the gunpowder which Patrick Henry, at the head of the Hanover Militia, compelled him to account for.

There, too, sat the memorable convention of 1776 that adopted the Virginia bill, or declaration of rights, written by George Mason, the most luminous epitome of political and personal rights and principles ever formulated by the pen of man, and upon which have been modeled all of the similar bills successively adopted by the States of the Union.

The same convention adopted the Virginia constitution of 1776, also from the pen of George Mason. This was the first written constitution of government ever adopted by a free people. The preamble of this constitution was written by Thomas Jefferson and was sent from Philadelphia, where he was in attendance upon the Continental Congress. It contained a declaration of the severance of Virginia from allegiance to the British Crown, and along with the constitution to which it was appended was adopted on the 29th day of June, 1776, five days before the adoption, on July 4, of the Declaration of Independence by the Continental Congress.

Not far distant from the old capital of Virginia is Yorktown, where now stands a lofty monument erected by the American Congress to commemorate the surrender of Cornwallis and the triumph of the Revolutionary armies on the 19th day of October, 1781. The old Moore house, in which Cornwallis signed the articles of capitulation, is still standing, as is the Nelson house, the home of Thomas Nelson, the war governor of Virginia during the later Revolutionary period, he who sacrificed his large fortune in the cause of independence, and who, at the siege of Yorktown, offered a reward of 5 guineas to any can-noneer who would throw a ball into his own dwelling house, which was supposed to be occupied by the British general and his staff.

I have alluded, Mr. Chairman, to a circumstance which associates by historical suggestion the beginning of our Republic with the foundation of the mightiest republic of antiquity. Let me refer for a moment to a coincidence in the early history of another ancient republic suggested by the momentous event in our history to which I have just alluded. Yorktown, the scene of the triumph of our armies over our British foes, is 12 miles from Williamsburg, the colonial capital of Virginia. About the same distance from Athens, the capital of Greece, is the field of Marathon, where 10,000 Athenians defeated the mighty hosts of Persia and delivered their country from the thraldom and dread of that haughty Empire, and opened the way to the freedom, the supremacy, and the splendor of Greece. The mound still stands in which were buried the dead of that memorable field. There nightly the ear of superstition may still hear the clangor of arms, the neighing of horses, and the echoes of their feet as they frantically rush across the plains. At Yorktown no audible sounds reach the ear, but the soul of patriotism is there stirred by memories of the mighty spirits and great achievement which secured our independence.

The celebration of these noble events, beginning with the first settlement of our race upon this continent, and coming down to the independence of our country, will take place on Virginia soil near the scenes of the historical events I have described. The people of the entire State of Virginia feel a deep interest in this event and naturally desire to see it a glorious success; and desire to see the bill as reported amended in a few particulars and passed.

They feel that Virginia's call for aid will be heeded by the Representatives of every State upon this floor, but especially by the Representatives of those States with whose founding she was so essentially identified. There are some, perchance, with whom her appeal should have greater weight than with others, but it is an appeal that should not be disregarded by the Representatives of any State in the entire Union.

Mr. Chairman, if there is one State Virginia should be able to appeal to with confidence that State is Massachusetts. Virginia and Massachusetts are linked together in a common destiny of sacred memories and of inextinguishable glory. When Virginia organized her committee of safety and correspondence, it was Massachusetts that, under the lead of Samuel Adams, responded to the signal and formed her similar committee, and through these committees the colonies kept in touch with each other throughout the exciting events that led up to the Revolution until what time the reverberation of the guns of Concord and Lexington summoned the Virginia troops to the assistance of their countrymen in the beseiged city of Boston.

The late venerable Senator Hoar, in an address before the Virginia Bar Association a few years since, made a beautiful reference to the historical and patriotic reminiscences that bind these two Commonwealths together:

When—

Said he—

a Virginian penned the Declaration of Independence Massachusetts furnished the greatest advocate on the floor of Congress. When Virginia produced Washington Massachusetts called him to the head of the Army. When Virginia gave Marshall to jurisprudence it was John Adams, of Massachusetts, who summoned him to his exalted seat.

But, Mr. Chairman, Massachusetts is not the only State to which Virginia can appeal with confidence. We can surely depend upon Kentucky, cut as she was from Botetourt County, an ancient Virginia county extending in 1792 to the Mississippi River, from which in that year the beautiful State of Kentucky was taken and presented by Virginia as her fairest daughter to the Union.

And there are the elder daughters of Virginia—Ohio, Illinois, Indiana, Wisconsin, and Michigan. The first four and half of the fifth were formed out of the northwestern territory which Virginia, with a lavish and patriotic prodigality, by the ordinance of 1787, gave to the Union to heal the discords that threatened to prevent the adoption of the measures by which a "more perfect union" was to be formed. And then there are those great Commonwealths that lie between the Mississippi and Oregon rivers, formed from that vast territory which the foresight and patriotism of Virginia's son, Thomas Jefferson, secured to our country. And Florida, which was acquired for the American Union by the wisdom of James Monroe, of Virginia, and finally the great Lone Star State, which was brought into the Union by the action of John Tyler, another Virginian.

Nor, Mr. Chairman, should the appeal of Virginia be disregarded by the Representatives upon this floor of any State in the Union. As was said by Hon. John Goode, in an address delivered before the committee from which this bill was reported:

The American Union is in great part the creation of Virginia. * * * It was her son who penned that immortal document which declares that whenever government becomes destructive of the ends for which it is created it is the right of the people to alter or abolish it and institute a new government. * * * It was her son who was confessedly the father of the American Constitution. * * * It was her son who presided over the Supreme Court from 1801 to 1835, and blazed the way for his successors in the interpretation of the Constitution. It was her son who stood by the helm of the ship of state on its perilous voyage, and is now by universal acclaim of all mankind recognized as the greatest of good men and the best of great men, that illustrious son of whom the poet has beautifully sung:

All discord ceases at his name,
All ranks contend to swell his fame.

But, Mr. Chairman, this is not a matter in which Virginia is solely interested, nor in which one particular State is solely interested. It is a commemoration of the planting of the first English colony upon this continent; the beginning of the settlement and occupation of this country by our ancestors, and the introduction of Anglo-Saxon civilization into a wilderness. It is intended to commemorate the birth of the American nation in order that the great events which have resulted therefrom may be accentuated to the present and future generations of American citizens.

Is it not fitting that we shall hand down the beginning of such great events to future generations, and can we look with unconcern upon the endeavor to commemorate this beginning?

If so, we shall be unmindful of the truth uttered by Edmund Burke, that—

Those who are indifferent to the past will never do anything worthy of the future.

If so, we shall have degenerated from the generous spirit of our illustrious countryman, James G. Blaine, who, in his "Thirty Years in Congress" urging for a sufficient allowance to be made Virginia by the General Government to compensate, at least, for that part of her public debt which might be presumptively presented by the territory taken from her in the creation of West Virginia, uses these words:

Nor should it be forgotten that the State of Virginia before the war might well be regarded as the creditor and not the debtor of the National Government. One of her earliest acts of patriotism as an independent State was the cession to the General Government of her superb domain on the north side of the Ohio River, from the sale of which more than $100,000,000 have been paid into the Treasury.

He concludes his interesting chapter with this beautiful tribute to the old mother of States and statesmen:

In the formal and necessarily austere administration of public affairs there is little room for the interposition of sentiment. Yet sentiment has its place. We stimulate the ardor of patriotism by the mere display of a flag, which has no material force, but which is emblematic of all material force and typical of the glory of the nation. We stir the ambition of the living by rearing costly monuments to the heroic dead. It may surely be pardoned if Americans should feel a deep personal interest in the good name and good fortune of a State so closely identified with the early renown of the Republic—a State with whose soil is mingled the dust of those to whom all States and all generations are debtors—the Father of his Country, the author of the Declaration of Independence, the chief projector of the National Constitution.

Mr. Chairman, as her humblest son, I am not afraid of being esteemed arrogant when I avow the belief that whilst this nation may becomingly commemorate the fame of that ancient Commonwealth it can not amplify her renown.

I am confident that those in this body who have ingenuously studied her annals will not look with disfavor upon this appropriation.

Our governmental organism pulsates with her life. Our enduring institutions are the lengthened shadows of her sons. She has vivified our history with a spirit which is immortal.

Nor strong tower, nor walls of beaten brass,
Nor airless dungeons, nor strong links of iron,
Can be retentive to the strength of spirit.

[Loud applause.]

Mr. MEYER. Mr. Chairman, I yield forty minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida is recognzed for forty minutes.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, unwillingly I find myself in a position where I am forced to attempt to say something about the tariff. I have been chary of undertaking to make tariff speeches since I heard a story some years ago, Mr. Chairman. It is said that a certain man was arraigned in court upan an indictment charging him with murder. He had no counsel, and said that he desired none, but simply asked permission to make a statement to the court in extenuation of his offense, which was accorded him. He said to the court:

It is true, Judge, that I killed the man. I admit that I killed him; but I want to tell you why I did it and how I did it. I am a farmer, and on the day that the offense was committed I was sitting on my veranda, at my own home, quietly reading my county newspaper, late in the afternoon. I was at peace with all the world. I had naught against any living man, but this man finally came into my gate, came up to where I was, and proceeded without the slightest provocation to curse and abuse me. I did not resent it. I allowed him to continue until he was tired, and finally becoming tired he left me, went back to the rear of the house where my wife was engaged in her household duties, proceeded to curse and abuse her, and still I did not resent it. When he had tired of that he went out into the yard where my children were at play, abused them in my presence, and I permitted that. When he left off that he went out and kicked and cuffed my dog; and I even took that. When he had finished with the dog he came back to where I was, and when he reached in his pocket and pulled a manuscript therefrom and proceeded to deliver to me a speech on the tariff I rose up in my might and I slew him.

[Applause and laughter.]

That has deterred me, Mr. Chairman, from ever attempting to say anything about the tariff, but I find myself now where it appears to be imperative that I say something upon that subject, and I want to say, Mr. Chairman, and I shall detain the committee but a few minutes, that the Democratic party, to which I belong, has never at any period in its long and eventful history been a free-trade party. That persons of prominence who were free traders have been members of the Democratic party; that men of great prominence who are to-day advocates of free trade are supporters of the Democratic party is undoubtedly true, but the injustice of attempting to bind a great political party to support of a particular doctrine merely because individual members of that party are its supporters is apparent. The only just rule by which the position of a political party on a given question can be and should be determined is by an investigation of its platform declarations upon that subject and by an investigation of its legislative enactments when in full control of the law-making power of the Government. This is the only just rule, this is the only fair test, and I contend that the Democratic party in no convention has ever declared for free trade or has ever declared for anything approaching free trade. I contend further, Mr. Chairman, when in control of this Government, and it was in control for a great many years, in control of all of its branches, the Democratic party has never written into the law of this land a single statute that smacks of free trade. So, I say, it is unjust to the Democratic party to charge it with being a free-trade party because some of its members are free traders, or very nearly so. It matters not, Mr. Chairman, what individual newspapers or statesmen, however prominent, claiming allegiance to the Democratic party, may have said about the tariff, that party has never in any platform declared for free trade or for a tariff schedule approaching free trade. The Democratic party, when in control of Congress, has never committed nor attempted to commit this Government to the policy of free trade. If free trade were a Democratic doctrine, why did not the representatives of the party write it into the laws of the land during its long lease of power? It is a presumption of law, I believe, that when it is shown that a man has it in his power to do a certain thing and does not do it, he does not want to do it. Therefore the conclusion here is irresistible that the Democratic party was not in favor of free trade, because it had the absolute power to declare for free trade, to enact free-trade legislation, yet during all its long years of power, in the control of the executive and legislative branches of the Government, both in their entirety, it has never declared for any such principle. So I am justified, Mr. Chairman, in contending that the Democratic party is not a free-trade party.

I want to call attention for just a moment to the declaration of the party on that subject in 1896. And this, Mr. Chairman, is but a specimen declaration in all of the platforms of the party. It is true here and there in Democratic national conventions words have been at times loosely used in setting forth a declaration of principles, but any fair-minded man who will examine the platform of any year in its entirety will find that it has steadfastly adherred to the doctrine that a tariff for the purposes of this Government was absolutely necessary, and they have never, as I said, broached free trade.

In 1896 they said this:

We hold that the tariff duties should be levied for purposes of revenue, such duties to be so adjusted as to operate equally throughout the country and not discriminate between class or section, and that taxation should be limited by the needs of the Government honestly and economically administered.

And in 1892, four years before, they said this——

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK] yield to the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Certainly.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. Did the gentleman from Florida read all of the plank on the tariff in the platform of 1896?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. No, sir.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. Will he kindly do so?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I will do it if the gentleman wants me to.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. It was the platform of 1896?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I was saving time. I will read the balance of it, as follows:

We denounce, as disturbing to business, the Republican threat to restore the McKinley law, which has been twice condemned by the people in national elections, and which, enacted under the false plea of protection to home industry, proved a prolific breeder of trusts and monopolies, enriched the few at the expense of the many, restricted trade, and deprived the producers of the great American staples of access to their natural markets. Until the money question is settled, we are opposed to any agitation for further changes in our tariff laws, except such as are necessary to keep the deficit in revenue caused by the adverse decision of the Supreme Court on the income tax.

But for this decision by the Supreme Court there would be no deficit in the revenue under the law passed by the Democratic Congress in strict pursuance of the uniform decisions of that court for nearly one hundred years, that court having sustained constitutional objections to its enactment which had been overruled by the ablest judges who have ever sat on that bench. We declare that it is the duty of Congress to use all the constitutional power which remains after that decision, or which may come by the reversal of the court as it may hereafter be constituted, so that the burdens of taxation may be equally and impartially laid, to the end that wealth may bear its due proportion of the expenses of the Government.

That, I think, is all of it.

I am very much obliged to the gentleman for calling my attention to it. I did not care to take up the time to read it, but, Mr. Chairman, it fully explains the Democratic principles on the tariff.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. Will the gentleman now read the platform declaration in 1892?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I am going to read that now.

We denounce Republican protection as a fraud—

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

a robbery of the great majority of the American people for the benefit of the few.

[Renewed applause.]

We declare it to be a fundamental principle of the Democratic party that the Federal Government has no constitutional power to impose and collect tariff duties, except for the purposes of revenue only, and we demand that the collection of such taxes shall be limited to the necessities of the Government when honestly and economically administered.

[Renewed applause.]

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. I would like to ask the gentleman now——

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I will read the balance of it; better let me read it all.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida declines to yield.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I will read it all, and then I will yield to the gentleman.

We denounce the McKinley tariff law enacted by the Fifty-first Congress as the culminating atrocity of class legislation; we indorse the efforts made by the Democrats of the present Congress to modify its most oppressive features in the direction of free raw materials and cheaper manufactured goods that enter into general consumption, and we promise its repeal as one of the beneficent results that will follow the action of the people in intrusting power to the Democratic party. Since the McKinley tariff went into operation there have been ten reductions of the wages of the laboring men to one increase.

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

We deny that there has been any increase of prosperity to the country since that tariff went into operation, and we point to the dullness and distress, to the wage reductions and strikes in the iron trade as the best possible evidence that no such prosperity has resulted from the McKinley Act.

We call the attention of thoughtful Americans to the fact that after thirty years of restrictive taxes against the importation of foreign wealth in exchange for our agricultural surplus the homes and farms of the country have become burdened with a real estate mortgage debt of over two thousand five hundred million dollars, exclusive of all other forms of indebtedness; that in one of the chief agricultural States of the West there appears a real estate mortgage debt averaging $165 per capita of the total population, and that similar conditions and tendencies are shown to exist in the other agricultural exporting States. We denounce a policy which fosters no industry so much as it does that of sheriff.

[Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

Now I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. I will ask the gentleman if it is not practically the same platform upon which the English Government raises revenue to carry on the affairs of that nation?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I think not; but I am not so thoroughly informed as to the English taxing system.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. In other words, is that not the form of political declaration that is known as "free trade" among nations?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Not at all. I think not, sir. Now, Mr. Chairman, the position of the Democratic party upon this question——

Mr. NEEDHAM. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Certainly.

Mr. NEEDHAM. Is the gentleman in favor of the present tariff on citrus fruit?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I am, absolutely.

Mr. NEEDHAM. Upon what theory does the Democratic party base that?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I am right with the gentleman from California on that proposition.

Mr. Chairman, it will be seen that the position of the Democratic party, then, is this, as I understand it—and I do not want the Democratic party held responsible for what I say. I am not a leader of the Democratic party. My declarations do not make Democratic law. My opinions would not be accepted as Democratic authority; but as an humble Democrat, as an humble member of the party, I have the right to my opinions as to what the party stands for; and my opinion is that the Democratic party on this question stands for a tariff for revenue sufficient to support the Government when its affairs are administered economically, but not niggardly; not in favor of a tariff levied solely for the purpose of protection. I am not in favor of the levy of a duty which in its practical operation will be prohibitive. I am in favor of the levy of a duty which will produce the necessary revenue for the purposes of the Government; and whenever the taxing power goes further than is necessary to raise the money to pay the expenses of the Government, economically and honestly administered, it goes, in my judgment, beyond the constitutional power to tax. [Applause.] We should levy a duty with a view to raising revenue for the purposes of the Government economically administered and not solely for the purpose of protection. Whenever a duty is levied upon an article imported into this country for sale to the American people it must undoubtedly increase the cost of that article to the American purchaser, and to that extent it is a burden on such purchaser——

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Let me finish this sentence, please. And to the same extent is a benefit to the American citizen who has articles of the same kind for sale, grown or manufactured in this country. Now I will yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. The gentleman states that the effect of a protective tariff is to increase the price of the article.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. The effect of any tariff.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. That the effect of any tariff is to increase the price of the article protected by the amount of the tariff.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Approximately.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. I will ask the gentleman if he can cite a single article manufactured in this country the price of which is higher to-day than it was the day the tariff was placed upon the article?

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; nor higher anywhere else.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I do not know that I can at this moment, because I have not investigated that.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. I will say to the gentleman from Florida that that challenge has been made, in answer to that assertion, time and time again, and I have never yet had cited a single manufactured article that is higher to-day than it was the day the tariff was placed upon it; and if the gentleman can cite any such article I should like to have him do it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, if the gentleman from Florida will permit a further interruption——

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I would suggest that he might challenge the gentleman from Indiana to name a single article upon which there is an American import duty levied, and which is lower now than it was at the time the import duty was levied, the price of which is not also lower in Great Britain, Cape Colony, Australia, the Argentine, all over Europe, and everywhere else—especially where there is no protectionism. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. If the gentleman will permit me——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Florida yield to the colloquy between the gentleman from Indiana and the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes; I yield.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. With the kindness of the gentleman I will say that along about 1883 we placed a tariff of $4 a hundred upon wire nails. At that time, if the year is correct, there were no wire nails manufactured in this country. According to the theory of the gentleman from Florida, the price of wire nails should have been increased by the amount of the tariff. The price was somewhat increased for some months, but a wire-nail factory was started in the United States, and soon the price fell from $6 to $5. More wire-nail factories started, and the price dropped to $4. In the course of a year or two it dropped to $3, then to $2.50, to $2, and finally to $1.85——

Mr. WILLIAMS. But the price has gone up since.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. The duty still remained at $4 a hundred. Now, according to the theory of the gentleman from Florida, the price of wire nails should have been continued as long as that tariff existed at the original price plus $4, when, as a matter of fact, the price fell as low as $1.85.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, if the gentleman will pardon me, the gentleman has not quite stated all of it. After he got his wire nails down to $1.85 he neglected to state the point to which they have risen since.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. I think the price of wire nails at the present time is about $2.20 or $2.30.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And that rise began to take place immediately upon the formation of the wire-nail trust?

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. Well, I would not be surprised if that were true.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, in further answer to what the gentleman has said, this is also true: While wire nails have gone down here, upon the whole, in price—and he has substantially stated the history of their going down, with the omission which he has just corrected—it is also true that wire nails made in Belgium and in Great Britain have gone down exactly in the same proportion, and it is also true (which the gentleman has failed to mention) that while wire nails are being sold now in the United States at the price which he has given American wire nails are being sold in Cape Colony, a British possession, transported by the back door of Great Britain, and are, or were a year ago, sold there at a price far below what they are sold for in the American market.

The answer proves two things: First, the American tariff has had nothing to do with the reduction of the price of wire nails, except to impede the process, as is demonstrated by the fact that they have gone down where no tariff existed, and, secondly, the tariff has had something to do with enabling the American producer of wire nails to fix a higher price than was necessary to the American consumer in a sheltered market while he sells at reasonable profit to the subjects of Great Britain in Cape Colony.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. I will say to the gentleman from Mississippi that the position he assumes is entirely untenable, and I place before the gentleman now the challenge that has been made time and time and time again, that no Democrat living has yet cited a single manufactured article upon which there is a protective tariff that is not lower in price to-day than it was the day the tariff was placed on the article. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is true, and the answer to it is true.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I am very glad to hear these gentlemen. [Laughter.]

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. I ask the pardon of the gentleman from Florida, and will simply say that I was led to rise and interrupt him because of his statement that the effect of levying a protective tariff was to increase the price of the article by the amount of the tariff.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I understand, and I yielded to both gentlemen with great pleasure, because I have time enough to get through with the few remarks that I want to make, and I am always very glad to hear both of them. But I do not care to discuss particular items, and I have not prepared a tariff speech. I stated in the beginning the reason why I never attempted to make one, and I simply want to call attention to one or two general propositions.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Florida will pardon me, this is pertinent and it will not take long. I read from a list given in the Exporters and Importers' Journal of June 18, 1904, published by Henry W. Peabody, 17 State street, New York City, and I find on that list that the export price of barbed wire per hundred pounds was at that time $2.20 and the home price $2.70, with a difference of 23 cents per hundred, and upon black fence wire, per hundred pounds, the export price was $1.25 and the home price $2, with a difference of 60 cents per hundred. I will ask the gentleman to answer that.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. What does that prove?

Mr. WILLIAMS. It proves enough for you, unless you can deny it, or get around it, or evade it, to defeat you in the next election. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. I can not see how it is relevant at all.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I want to submit a few general propositions. I have not investigated these isolated items, but, Mr. Chairman, I am undertaking to argue from reason and a common-sense view of these propositions, and I can not for the life of me understand how it is that a duty can be levied upon an article imported into this country, where it will come into competition in the open market with other articles of like character grown in this country, and not increase the price of the article to the consumer. If it does not do that, then the American business man is not the shrewd, calculating individual that we have always given him credit for being, and the Republican party's boast of protecting American industries and American labor vanishes into thin air.

Why, Mr. Chairman, in the very nature of things, when goods are imported into the United States upon which duties are paid and which compete in the American market with domestic goods it must inevitably have the effect of increasing the cost to the purchaser and benefit the person who has goods of that character for sale. I think, Mr. Chairman, there can be no escape from it. There may be an isolated case here and there where the price of the article has not increased, due to combinations of one kind or another—due to some kind of trade relation or agreement—but the effect is, the logical effect is, and the inevitable effect is, to increase the price of the article approximately to the extent of the duty collected.

Now, Mr. Chairman, recognizing this to be true, recognizing the undeniable fact, as I take it, that in the collection of tariff on imports some of our people must be burdened with the tax and some of our people must be benefited on account of its levy and collection, it seems to me that the true policy of statesmanship would demand a system by which and in the operation of which the burdens and the benefits should be so distributed as to affect all classes of the people as nearly alike as possible and not to enrich a few favored manufacturers at the expense of the great masses of the people.

That is my position in this House, Mr. Chairman, on this question, and I am going to get to my own bill now in a few moments. The farmer, the producer of the raw material, should share in the benefits of this system of taxation along with the manufacturer.

If benefits are to be derived, and you can not prevent it, it is idle to talk about levying a tariff and benefiting nobody. It is folly to talk about levying import duties upon various articles and benefiting nobody in America having those articles for sale. You must benefit them. They will be benefited. So I say that the system ought to be so framed, the tariff schedule ought to be so drawn, as to give the farmer, the producer, who earns his bread in the sweat of his face beneath a June and July sun, some of the benefits while the protected manufacturer is being made richer and richer as the years go by.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Then, I take it, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman does not agree with the last declaration of the Democratic party, of 1904.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I would like to quote that declaration, if the gentleman will let me have it. I looked for it this morning, but could not find it.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. If the gentleman will pardon me just a moment, I would like to ask the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] a question in the interest of the truth of history.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I yield for just a moment.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. In making this platform I think the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] was a member of the committee, which was out for sixteen hours in the convention at St. Louis, and as the platform went in to the committee it was a different document from that which came out. They were two different propositions entirely. As published in the public press when it went into the committee we find that it was as follows:

> We favor a wise, conservative, and businesslike revision of the tariff made with due regard to existing conditions.

That is the way it went in, according to the public press, and when it came out the words "we favor a wise, conservative, and businesslike revision made with due regard to existing conditions" were stricken out. So that it now reads, "We favor a revision and a gradual reduction of the tariff." Which is the correct form, I would like to ask the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, it is rather unprecedented to ask a Member who is sitting down a question, but since the gentleman has asked it, and the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK] kindly yields, will the gentleman from Connecticut please make his question intelligible? He has asked which was the true expression.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Which is the platform of the Democratic party—that the revision should be made on a wise and intelligent basis with due regard to existing conditions, or was it to be a straight revision?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Surely it does not need one-twentieth of the intelligence which is possessed by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] to know that the real Democratic platform as adopted was the platform as it came out of the committee.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. I understood it was reported to the convention the other way.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Now, if these gentlemen will permit me, I will read what the gentleman from Connecticut furnishes me and what I think was the Democratic platform on this question in 1904:

> We denounce protection as a robbery of the many to enrich the few, and we favor a tariff limited to the needs of the Government economically administered and so levied as not to discriminate against any industry, class, or section to the end that the burdens of taxation shall be distributed as equally as possible.

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. I would like to ask the gentleman squarely if he thinks a tax of 10 cents a pound on cotton is not purely a protective tariff.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I am coming to that in a moment. Now, Mr. Chairman, the Democratic convention, in that platform, said, "We denounce protection as a robbery," and that is what these gentlemen harp on continually. What protection were they denouncing as a robbery? There can not be a single levy of a tariff without some kind of protection. That is true. It must benefit somebody, and when it benefits somebody it protects somebody. They were denouncing the protection of the Republican party, not protection pure and simple, but protection as practiced by that party; protection as levied by them to build up the great trusts that are now absolutely threatening the stability of this Government. That is the kind of protection they were denouncing as robbery, and it can not be anything else. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I want now to come to my cotton proposition—the little infant that my friend from Illinois [Mr. BOUTELL] talked about the other day and that the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] asked me about.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MEYER of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman, I yield ten more minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I introduced that bill with no idea of being wedded to the particular amount named in the bill. I introduced it very much upon the idea that a lawyer in drafting a declaration in a damage suit fixes the amount of his damages. He alleges $25,000 when he perhaps expects to recover $3,000. So I put that amount in the bill——

Mr. BOUTELL rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. In a moment—in the bill, expecting that when it went to the Ways and Means Committee and when they undertook to frame a schedule that if they saw fit to put a tax upon Egyptian cotton at all they would put an amount that would be reasonable and just and produce a revenue for the Government. [Applause on the Democratic side.] That, Mr. Chairman, was——

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. That was subject to a percentage of reduction——

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Characteristic of all arguments made upon your side on this proposition, equally ad damnum in their character.

Mr. WILLIAMS rose.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS. There was some confusion in the Hall, but as I understood the gentleman he said he expected that committee to reduce this rate or to make this rate whatever would be a revenue rate and not prohibitive in its character; and that he himself would not favor a prohibitive or a rate for protection?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Surely. Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to call attention just a moment to these figures. In 1901 there were 34,735,682 pounds of Egyptian cotton imported into this country. In the year 1902, 81,325,158 pounds were imported; in 1903, 63,554,773 pounds were imported; in 1904, 39,249,878 pounds were imported; in 1905, 52,436,073 pounds were imported.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if a duty of 5 cents per pound were levied upon that cotton, it would have produced in 1901 a revenue of $1,736,784.10. At 2 cents a pound it would have produced a revenue of $694,713.64. In 1902 a duty of 5 cents per pound would have produced a revenue of $4,066,257.90, and at 2 cents per pound would have produced a revenue of $1,626,503.16. In 1903 a duty of 5 cents per pound would have produced a revenue of $3,177,738.65, and at 2 cents per pound would have produced a revenue of $1,271,095.46. In 1904 a duty of 5 cents per pound would have produced a revenue of $1,962,493.90, or at 2 cents per pound would have produced a revenue of $784,997.16. In 1905 at 5 cents a pound it would have produced a revenue of $2,621,833.65, or at 2 cents a pound it would have produced a revenue of $1,048,733.46.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. And according to the gentleman's own theory it would have raised the price of every pound of cotton grown in the United States precisely according to the amount of duty.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Not at all.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. I understood you to make that claim.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. No; because, Mr. Chairman, this bill seeks to put the duty upon what we know as "long staple cotton." There is not any of it grown, so far as the Agricultural Department shows, anywhere in this country except in South Carolina, Georgia, and Florida.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Well, it would have raised the price of all that is grown.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Certainly. It would have raised the price, in my judgment, of all the sea-island or long-staple cotton that is grown in this country. It would have given the long-staple grower the benefit of that raise, Mr. Chairman; but I have just been contending that when his New England brother in Connecticut gets the benefit of the tariff upon the manufactured cotton goods, he in Florida ought to get some of that same benefit of Government, if benefit there must be. [Applause on the Democratic side.] That is all I am asking for, Mr. Chairman. I now yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. BOUTELL. I would like to ask two or three questions in reference to this cotton.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Well, I have only about three minutes remaining.

Mr. BOUTELL. First, the gentleman from Florida is absolutely sure that none of this long-staple cotton is grown in the State of Mississippi?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. The Government reports show it is only grown in the three States I have named.

Mr. BOUTELL. According to the Government reports, there is no long-staple cotton grown anywhere in the State of Mississippi?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. No sea-island cotton; I think there is none grown except in those three States.

Mr. BOUTELL. I will ask further whether a tax of 5 cents a pound or even 10 cents a pound would in any way effect the price of the short cotton?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I do not think it will. I do not think that the millions of bales of short cotton would be effected in the slightest degree.

Mr. BOUTELL. I could not see how they would be, even to the fraction of a mill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I have only about a minute.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think we can get more time. I think anything like a large duty upon Egyptian cotton would effect the price of short cotton, and would effect it by reducing pro tanto the price of short cotton.

Egyptian cottons are imported into this country solely for the purpose of being mixed with short cotton in the production of certain lines of goods. Their importation, therefore, creates a market here to a certain extent for the short cotton itself for the manufacture of those peculiar lines of goods. The Egyptian is a cream-colored cotton, and it goes into nankeen goods of various sorts and into other goods which my friend from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] will recall. So if it had any effect upon short cotton at all it would be a very slight effect, and it would be an effect to restrict its market, and therefore to the same extent decrease its price.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to state another fact as I understand it. The great bulk of this cotton is grown in Florida and South Carolina and in Georgia, and is manufactured—a great deal of it, at least—into the finer laces. I am told, further, that there are no factories, even in New England, that manufacture these fine laces, and that the great body of this product is sent to France and manufactured there and sent back here and sold to us at enormous prices.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have undertaken to make my position plain. I am not a free trader. I do not hesitate to say that if the Democratic party should declare for free trade to-morrow I would quit it on the spot. [Applause.] I look upon it as being absolute folly to talk about running the Government with a direct tax upon the people. It can not be done. So we are in favor of a tariff to run the expenses of the Government, economically, but not niggardly, administered. And I am in favor of so levying that tariff, Mr. Chairman, as that the farmer, the producer, will be benefited along with the manufacturer. Somebody has got to get the benefit of the tariff. When my friend from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] is getting the benefit of it, or his people are getting the benefit of it in these protected industries, when they who are manufacturing the cotton grown in our fields are getting the benefit, at least a portion of the blessing should come to the farmer who raises it. I say give the farmer a little whack at it, give him a little of the benefit. Now, Mr. Chairman, that is my position, and I think it is the Democratic position. Equalize the burdens, distribute the favors, help the farmer while you help the manufacturer. I am not wedded to a 10-cent duty, I am wedded to no particular duty; but I am wedded to that duty which will produce a revenue, which shall not be prohibitive, but which at the same time will give my people some of the benefits of government to which they are entitled under this system of taxation while forced to bear its burdens.

I thank the committee. [Applause.]

Mr. MEYER. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHACKLEFORD].

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Chairman, on several occasions during this session I have spoken in criticism of the methods and practices by which the Speaker represses the membership of the House. I have undertaken to show that ours is no longer a representative Government; that in defiance of the Constitution and the rules the Speaker exercises an absolute veto power over all legislation proposed here; that instead of being, as the Constitution contemplates he should, the servant of the House, the Speaker has constituted himself its master. I have laid out for my task to make it an issue before the country whether he shall not be required to give back to the people their free representative Government. I am gratified to find a hearty response to this call to arms. I will read a few extracts from the press from various sections of the country to show that the people are coming into a realization of the fact that Members of this House are no longer allowed to represent the people who sent them here, but must bend to the will of the Speaker. The following is from the Pasadena News:

THE AMERICAN CZAR.

Representative DORSEY W. SHACKLEFORD, of Missouri, made complaint yesterday against the absolutism of the Speaker on what must be recognized as well-taken grounds. Authority to prevent Members from blocking business—even so arbitrary authority as the counting of a quorum not present—is less repugnant than the exercise of a Speaker's authority to unduly influence the course of business and the action of the House. The specific complaint of Representative SHACKLEFORD was that the Speaker had packed the Ways and Means Committee with "ten men who would stand pat as men of stone against any and every attempt to amend the tariff." He went on to declare that if the standpatters would come out into the open they would not stand the ghost of a show, but that is neither here nor there. Neither does it matter whether the committee was packed not to amend or to amend the tariff. The objectionable principle is that one man, entitled to one vote, attempts indirectly to say what the House shall and what it shall not consider.

There is too much such arbitrary action by committees not specially selected. Only last week there was refusal to report, even adversely, the Philippine tariff bill. So it is that our legislation is not by Congress, but by the Speaker of the Congress and his committees. Why should the country not be entitled to the benefit of action by the whole Congress after full consideration and debate, as contemplated by the Constitution?

Uncle JOE CANNON is a mighty clever old man and the most popular personality in the House, but that does not satisfy the country at large for the exercise of extra and unusual powers. In personal appeals for support of measures the Speaker wields an immense influence, and this influence was exerted to the utmost in behalf of the joint statehood bill. Herein is another illustration of the pernicious extraneous growths that spring up in practice to destroy the purity of the Government as it was planned. Representative SHACKLEFORD'S assertion that no man in monarchical Europe exercises such absolute jurisdiction as the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the democratic United States has plenty of corroborative testimony to support it. The question is, why are these admitted evils which have crept into our system not corrected when they are so clearly seen?

Here is from an editorial in the Kansas City Journal, a stanch Republican organ:

Representative SHACKLEFORD may have lost prestige in the House by his plain talk to CANNON, but he has earned respect and admiration of the country. He told the truth, and did it bravely.

I read from the Columbia (Mo.) Daily Tribune:

Not only the statehood bill, but no measure is allowed to come before Congress unless it has the approval of the Speaker, and no Representative can secure recognition unless his bill is satisfactory and he has previously made his peace with Speaker CANNON.

Such tactics have been pursued before, always by Republicans, but not to the insolent extent to which Speaker CANNON has carried his methods. That it is a menace to representative government, if continued, is plain without argument. Congressman SHACKLEFORD has repeatedly called attention to the unprecedented action of the Speaker and the results of his methods.

The following is from the Ohio State Journal, a stanch Republican paper of extensive influence:

Representative SHACKLEFORD made a bitter attack on Speaker CANNON on the floor of the House the other day. Nothing in the palmy days of Speaker Reed's occupancy of the chair exceeded Mr. SHACKLEFORD'S speech in sharp, personal attack. "Unbridled will," "an enthroned despot," "crack your whip," "cowers at your feet," are some of the phrases that stuck out like bayonets from the speech.

Such an arraignment was expected sooner or later. As wise as Speaker CANNON is, as patriotic, he must not think he can escape assault for his arbitrary rule. Our theory of government does not provide anywhere for a censor over legislation. Really, it is a challenge to a republican form of government to hold that it is necessary.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD charged that "you have packed every committee so that no bill can be reported without your consent." This accusation seems to be true; at least that is the popular belief. This is not righteous legislative theory. The Speaker should not be the sole judge, and it does show some sycophancy on the part of his party adherents when they permit it. Why, isn't that bossism in its unadulterated form?

The occasion for this outburst of indignation was the dictatorial manner that Mr. CANNON assumed with reference to the statehood bill. He didn't like the change the Senate made in the House bill. Now, it is not possible that the Senate will always injure a House bill, and in this particular case there is an extended public opinion that it did not, but that, on the other hand, it improved it. And so, in this case of Mr. SHACKLEFORD'S attack, while there may not be an extended indorsement of its violence and ascerbity, there is considerable sympathy in its purpose, and we have no doubt that many Congressmen who are saying nothing and sawing wood smile fondly when they sit alone before their own firesides and think of that speech.

I read now from the Locomotive Firemen's Magazine:

DESPOTISM IN CONGRESS.

The employers' liability bill has passed the National House of Representatives. Should it become a law as it now stands, damages can not be recovered by a railroad employee's parents unless it can be proven that they were dependent on him. This feature is embodied in the words "dependent upon him," appearing in the first section. This is, of course, a gross and crying injustice to a railroad man's parents. It classes as of no consequence and altogether unworthy of consideration or attempted compensation the harrowing grief and heartrending sorrow in which the poor old mother of a slaughtered railroad man bends over his mangled form, and provides that unless she was "dependent on him" at the time of his death she shall be entitled to no indemnity, as though the loss of his association, of his sympathy, or of his support and protection in case that want should overtake her ought not to entitle her to damages.

The friends of the measure, in their attempt to secure the elimination of this outrageous provision, brought to light a condition of affairs which clearly demonstrates the tyrannical despotism with which corporation tools rule the national legislative body of the United States. The National House of Representatives is supposed to be, and under the Constitution should be, a deliberative body, but the procedure in this case clearly demonstrates that it is an oligarchy of the most pronounced type. It was sought by those desiring to improve the measure after it left the committee's hands to have it amended on the floor of the House when it came up for passage so that the parents would not have to prove dependency. The report of the incident is to the effect that to this "the Speaker would not consent," giving as his reason that Mr. LITTLEFIELD came to him a few days ago, saying that he was going away, and that he hoped the Speaker "would not permit the bill to be amended on the floor." This man LITTLEFIELD is a Member of Congress from Maine, and since his advent into Congress has, save a few bluffs at trust "busting," persistently opposed all legislation in the interest of labor and the people generally. He has doggedly and strenuously opposed this just measure both in committee and out, and would not, could he prevent it, have the bill to pass even in its present form.

CANNON, the Speaker, true to his compact with LITTLEFIELD, would not permit the offering of the desired amendment. It may be asked, how could he prevent the amendment from being offered? How could he tell what a Member was going to say when he recognized him on the floor? The answer to this is that no Member is recognized to call up a bill without first "fixing" it with the Speaker. He must first go to the Speaker and advise him as to the nature of the bill he desires to call up, including the amendments, if any, which he wishes to offer. If agreeable to the latter gentleman the Member is promised recognition on a certain day and at a certain time.

If the bill is objectionable to the Speaker he will not agree to recognize him for the purpose of moving its passage. And should any of the proposed amendments meet with the disapproval of this "lord" of the House, as was the case in this instance, he will not agree to recognize the Member having charge of the bill unless he agrees to not offer such amendment, and to oppose it on the floor should any other Member propose it. If he will not agree to this "star chamber" proposition all the howling he can do on the floor of the House will avail him nothing in securing recognition.

So it can, therefore, be seen how Mr. CANNON carried out his compact with LITTLEFIELD to crucify the interests of the parents of employees in this particular while LITTLEFIELD was absent from his public duties.

What is America drifting to when a corporation dishwasher can by his mere request prevent the enactment of legislation that involves the interests of some millions of its citizens? What is America drifting to when a tool of monopoly can by the intimation of a desire block the wheels of our legislative machinery in the interest of wealth, and have arbitrarily denied to the people's representatives in Congress the right to seek the enactment or amendment of laws in their behalf? Think of the thousands of railroad men's poor parents who may suffer gross injustice as a result of the diabolical conspiracy whereby they are thus discriminated against because his occupation classes him as a "railroad employee." The parents of a passenger (who does not wear the tag of railroad employee) can recover if he is killed, but Speaker CANNON and Member LITTLEFIELD, by virtue of the authority they have assumed and which they enjoy as a result of the prostitution of their sacred trust and the past indifference of the people, have decreed that railroad employees shall not enjoy the protection of the law as other citizens do, thus establishing rank discrimination against a particular class because—because what? Because the influence of corporations and wealth generally is greater than theirs—that is the only reason.

One JOE CANNON, of Danville, Ill., representing the Eighteenth district of that State, and one CHARLES E. LITTLEFIELD, from the Second district of Maine, accomplished this in one brief conversation. Could the Czar of Russia do more? Is it necessary to warn these gentlemen who, in their zeal to serve the money power, seem to have become oblivious of that fact, that they are not dealing with ignorant hordes of Russian peasantry who possess nothing but clubs or old flintlock guns wherewith to resist the power of autocracy?

Is it necessary to call their attention to the fact that they are conspiring against and trampling on the rights of hundreds of thousands of enlightened American citizens, each one of whom is armed, not with a club or flintlock gun, but with a ballot, by the proper use of which he can relegate to eternal oblivion the whole tribe of plutocratic usurpers who are bartering that birthright of constitutional liberty and equal rights guaranteed him by the blood of Revolutionary warfare? Do they know that the people are awakening? Do they realize that the people are free? Do they appreciate that railroad men are part of the people? If not, they soon will. What has the party of which these men are members got to say to the railroad men of this country in extenuation of this outrage on their constitutional rights? Does it propose to offer LITTLEFIELD and CANNON again for the suffrages of railroad employees? Will it seek the reelection of such enemies of our interests, and thereby demonstrate that it regards President Roosevelt—to whose every principle of reform this element in Congress is diametrically opposed—as being too much of a people's man and not just suitable for "political" purposes? If it retain control of the next House, does it propose to reenthrone CANNON and at his dictation readopt the present arbitrary rules of the House which make him the sole dictator of legislation? Political parties are but a means to an end. That the people are getting to realize this fact the immense independent vote in recent elections clearly demonstrates. Patriotism, love of good, clean government, and honesty in public office are fast superseding party "loyalty" and party "fidelity." America is awakening to such an extent that the officeholder and office seeker must stand on their merits. The day is fast passing when they can successfully hide their misdeeds behind party identity and hypnotize their constituents by crying for fealty to the "dear" party, "the party that has made our country what it is"—whatever that party may be—and return to office that they may continue to betray the people. The people will stand by the man in office who represents them honestly. They are demanding a square deal. Railroad men and their relatives are a part of the "people."

The employers' liability bill is now before the Senate, and, of course, every effort will be made to kill it in committee through the process of interminable, protracted, and oft-continued hearings. If the committee finally reports it for passage, attempts will be made to destroy its efficacy by amending it in the interests of railroad companies—in fact, every expedient known to legislative trickery will be resorted to to prevent its passage or render it useless if it does pass. Consequently every lodge should correspond with the Senators from its State and our members should write personal letters urging those gentlemen to support it, and giving them to understand that the railroad wage-earners of the country are very much in earnest in seeking its enactment.

I will not take the time of the House to read more, but I might cite hundreds of others from leading papers of all parties condemning in unmeasured terms the methods by which this House is controlled and the voice of the people suppressed. It is useless to talk of measures for the relief of the people as long as one man sits here exercising unlimited control over the people's representatives. The people must first recover their Government before they can hope to have it conducted in their behalf. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a question of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That no quorum is present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will proceed to count. [After counting.] There are 111 Members present. Therefore the point of order is overruled.

Mr. FOSS. I yield one hour to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, in opposing our naval policy, it is not my desire to criticise the members of the Committee on Naval Affairs for their action in reporting the pending bill. They have labored long and successfully for a reduction of expenses. They have brought in a measure which promises a check upon the ambitious and extravagant naval programme which has found so many advocates during the last four or five years. If they have been at fault in recommending an excessive amount for the construction of battle ships, a principal reason has been their opinion that in doing so they were responding to the will of the majority of the American people. There are many of us who have at some time yielded to the jingo spirit, when, if we had relied upon our own judgment, we should have favored a more conservative policy. President McKinley waited long before recommending action which led to the war with Spain. It was his desire to avert a conflict, but 70,000,000 of people demanded that we take up the sword.

It is with a hope to promote the cause of peace and to diminish the careless disregard of the calamities of war that I desire to address the House to-day. I shall give but passing notice to several valid objections to the present naval programme. One is its great expense, which has so increased that in the last four years it has exceeded by $50,000,000 that of the four years of the civil war. In the year 1905 there was expended upon the Navy $117,000,000, an amount four times as great as in 1896 and seven times as great as in 1888, and once and three-fourths as much as the total of all our national expenses in 1860. Although we are said not to be a military people, the cost of the naval and military establishments, with that of the pension list, a legacy of war, now approximates two-thirds of all the expenses of the United States Government. Other objections are that the construction of war ships is far outstripping the supply of men to equip them; also there is reason for apprehension that the Navy will not have either the homogeneity or that proportion of different kinds of ships which will best subserve the demands of the future should any unfortunate contest arise.

Under the five-minute rule I may address the committee with reference to the proposed additional battle ship. There is grave danger that if one of such a model is constructed, larger than any of those in the existing Navy, an almost overwhelming pressure will be brought to bear to replace the present battle ships, of which twenty-nine have been provided, with those of this larger model. We already have a Navy so formidable that it is far in advance of any reasonable present or prospective needs, and it is probable that nearly all of them will rust away without having fired a shot except for target practice. In saying this I do not take the position of the idealist who believes that wars are past. There will no doubt be occasional collisions between nations. There will exist a necessity for quelling disorders in foreign countries and for the protection of American citizens against injustice or violence. The world has not reached the golden age of peace, and yet every tendency is in that direction. It must be so in the very nature of the case. A potent factor in the abatement of war is the increasing attention of civilized nations to the pursuits of industry and commerce. Those who are engaged in these pursuits seek to prevent war, just as sanitary science guards against pestilence. Then, again, with the growth of the human intellect, with the absorption of men in intellectual pursuits, and with the increased influence of moral forces, war seems more and more appalling. Nations no longer exist for the sovereign; sovereigns must exist for the nation. The State may be supreme, but the individual is more and more year by year and generation by generation. "Nations," it has been said, "are now conquered not by armies, but by ideas."

But for the inertia which pertains to great political reforms war would have already disappeared. It is a striking fact that the political movements do not show the same orderly development or the same rational and uniform progress as the triumphs of science and of industry. Peoples are often kept back from wholesome advancement by the influence of favored classes, who are strongly intrenched in the possession of privileges, which they strive to retain. There is frequently a conservative element which stands by the traditions of the old régime, however objectionable they may be. So when the cobwebs which time has gathered are brushed away, the greatest achievement of a popular government will be to uproot some evil or remove some obstacle which stands athwart the onward march of progress. If we were to study our own political history, probably we all would agree that the most notable feature in the whole record was the destruction of the institution of human slavery rather than any affirmative achievement.

But governments, in their relations with their citizens and in their relations with other countries, must follow the march of public opinion. They can not linger long behind. On this subject a great historical writer has said, in words which are as applicable to war as to any abuse:

> Every system must fall if it opposes the march of opinions and gives shelter to maxims and institutions repugnant to the spirit of the age. In this sort of contest the result is never doubtful.

Then, after speaking of the dependence of certain systems on human life:

> * * * But the vigor of public opinion is not exposed to these casualties. It is unaffected by the laws of mortality; it does not flourish to-day and decline to-morrow; and so far from depending on the lives of individual men it is governed by large general causes which from their very comprehensiveness are in short periods scarcely seen, but on a comparison of long periods are found to outweigh all other considerations.

The manifest tendency in long periods toward a decrease of war is illustrated by the facts of history. In the first place, the attacks of barbarians upon civilized peoples, which caused such devastation in the olden time, have ceased. There are no longer any such incursions as those of the Goths and the Vandals, the Scythians and the Huns. With the invention of gunpowder and the progress of modern invention, science is made the handmaid of war. The barbarian must discover, if he attacks a civilized people, that he is confronted by superior implements of destruction and by the advantages which belong to discipline and to accumulated resources. Thus no uncivilized people will attack a civilized one unless actuated by the temerity of ignorance or the recklessness of despair. The uncivilized tribe or the barbarian may find refuge in inaccessible fastnesses or be protected by a pestilential climate, but the great invasions by them which brought such calamity, in which cities were sacked and nations overturned, can never again occur.

Then, too, religious wars, at least between different branches of the Christian church, have ceased. Practically they came to an end with the peace of Westphalia, in the year 1648, after the Thirty Years' war. This does not mean that at all times and in all countries since then religious toleration has existed or that religious differences have not aggravated the bitterness of conflicts, but nations have ceased to war with each other on account of religion. The struggles in which the religious issue is involved are now confined to contests with Mohammedan or with Pagan, whose warlike spirit is fostered by the bitter fanaticism which actuates the one or the other.

Wars for the aggrandizement of rulers have ceased. If a king or emperor should not find a barrier against his personal ambition in the attitude of his own country, he would surely find it in that of others. The contests which changed the map of Europe and caused the greatest calamities were largely due to the personal ambitions of sovereigns, as in the case of Louis XIV. The latest wars of this nature may be said to have been those in which Napoleon was engaged; but even he, in an important sense, was merely the embodiment or the beneficiary of an uprising by the French people. The French nation, notwithstanding frightful excesses, gained a new birth of liberty, and the other nations of Europe sought to interfere and to impose a king upon them. With that impetus for freedom which gives the greatest strength to a people, they overcame their foes, and then the glamor of Napoleon's victories led them still further on. Had it not been for the French revolution he might have entered the service of the Turk, as it is said he intended to do in his early years, and not have achieved the great career of conquest which he attained.

Another class of conflicts, those wars which are caused by uprisings of a people against the existing order and for freer government or greater privilege, are becoming less and less frequent. When men are seeking for a freer constitution, in spite of unrest and tumult it is found that the more rational way is by education and the forces of public opinion, by the establishment of legislative bodies; and thus this source of irritation and war, while not entirely disappearing from the earth, is diminishing year by year.

If we look for any date when this tendency took definite form and gained its greatest impetus, we may point to the year 1815, after the battle of Waterloo and the Napoleonic wars. Prior to that date the predominant condition in Europe was one of constant struggle between contending nations. Since then the predominant condition has been one of peace. The nations of Europe had found by bitter experience, by bloodshed, and by woe that war was a suicidal policy. The Holy Alliance, which has been criticised as having been formed for unholy purposes, nevertheless recognized that it was best for the nations represented to preserve the peace. What has been the result? In the ninety-one years succeeding that year of 1815 the growth of invention and the increase of the comforts and luxuries of life have been greater than in all the centuries preceding. It was quickly followed by the development of steam and the steamboat and by the beginnings of the railway, followed later by the marvels of electricity and by all those improvements of civilization which bring practical benefit to each man's home. It was the beginning of a triumphant progress which would have been utterly impossible had war continued.

The ideas and pursuits of men have radically changed since that year, and we may rank its advent as constituting an era in the world's progress worthy to be compared with the fifteenth century, with its twin events, the invention of printing and the discovery of America; for as they made a landmark in the progress of the race, so did the disposition toward peace after the fall of Napoleon mark another advance in the same direction.

There has been a great difference in the haste with which nations go to war since then. No country can take up the sword without grave occasion or it will have the condemnation of all the rest. There have been wars in Europe within the last sixty or eighty years in which one nation has engaged in combat under a serious handicap because of the potent condemnation of the public opinion of all other countries resting upon it, because it was thought that the war was unjustifiable. Annexations of conquered territory have been limited; no civilized nation is now allowed to overrun and annex another. A balance of power is preserved. When the defeated nation is at the feet of its foe congresses gather, as at Berlin in 1878, or the result of the victory is limited, as by the concert of action of three nations after Japan had defeated China in 1894. In the former case the acquisitions of territory by Russia from Turkey were restricted to a very small amount of land. In the latter case, in 1895, after China agreed upon a treaty giving territory on the mainland of Asia to Japan, three nations intervened and denied the right to take it. Acquisitions have often been limited to territory to which the victorious nation had some claim lasting, perhaps, for centuries, as was the case in 1866, when Prussia acquired Schleswig-Holstein; in 1859 and 1866, when Italy acquired, respectively, Lombardy and Venice, and in 1870, after the overwhelming victory of Prussia over France, when only Alsace and Lorraine were ceded.

It is an undisputed fact that the greatest growth in the strength of nations in the last forty years has not been the result of war, but has been illustrated in cases such as those of Italy and Germany, in which separate peoples of kindred blood have united in one great nation. True the sword had something to do with the uniting of each of these countries, but it had more to do in keeping them in a dismembered state, for the arms of Austria for a long time prevented a united Italy, and the severed states of Germany were largely the result of thirty years of war more than two hundred years ago. This shows that wars stood in the way of national unity, and the people themselves, by their patriotic impulse to be one, gained that power and prestige which come from a united empire.

We should ever keep in mind the analogy between the settlement of disputes between individuals and the settlement of controversies between nations. The feudal barons of the old time did not say that they must have war ships to protect their interests, because there were no war ships in that time. They did not say that they must have a strong navy, but they did require vassals, who must keep constantly under arms, and strongly fortified castles, so every hill was crowned with a fortress, every passageway over a river was defended by some baron, partly for military purposes and partly so that he might levy tribute. These feudal lords would not admit that the maintenance of armed dependents and fortresses was for the sake of aggression. The argument of the modern day that a large navy is required to preserve peace and for defense was used by them hundreds of years ago. Nevertheless they were frequently engaged in contests. They did not yield to the authority of the magistrate who sought to preserve order or give respect to the priest who sought to preserve peace, but this system was compelled to yield to a civilization in which there is a rule of law and in which brute force must give way. So the castles were dismantled or abandoned and there was substituted for force and lawlessness a rule of justice and order, under which the strong and the weak alike submitted their controversies to a tribunal which was to decide what was justice between them. No one now is in favor of going back to the old system where each man by his sword sought to enforce his rights and in which the duel was the common means for seeking personal redress.

All recognize the establishment of courts of justice to decide controversies between individuals as a great landmark in the progress of civilization. Another step just as inevitable is the establishment of similar courts as between nations. The world can not afford to maintain these military armaments. Their decrease and abandonment will not come in a year, but it will come. I would say nothing to-day against a Navy which, man for man and gun for gun, is one of the best in the world, or as I hope it may be the best in the world. I would say nothing against a state of preparedness. What I do say is that to maintain this great Navy is not in accordance with our best ideals, nor is it in accordance with our best interests, material or otherwise, [Applause.] And that instead of spending $100,000,000 a year this country of ours should take the lead in the cause of peace among the nations, a leadership which should belong to us, and which we ought to maintain. [Applause.] We are not lacking in strength for peace or for war. We possess that great abundance of resources which belongs to a people occupying a land yielding a great variety of products. In case of war between other nations the warring countries would seek to protect our commerce rather than to prey upon it, because they would need the products of our fields and of our mines. Thus we do not need a great Navy for our protection.

As regards leadership in the cause of peace and arbitration, I can not avoid the conclusion that with a republican form of government, with the stress laid upon free institutions, with the absence of those ambitions for conquest that more naturally attach themselves to a monarchy, we have a far better opportunity to avoid disputes ourselves and to aid in securing the settlement of the world's disputes by peaceful methods than any other nation on the globe could have.

Mr. Chairman, the chiefest glory of the Administration of Theodore Roosevelt, when it becomes a part of history, and his chiefest glory as an individual, will not be his part in San Juan Hill or in the many great events in which he has shown such splendid leadership; his greatest distinction will not be that he was elected by such an overwhelming plurality to the Presidential chair, the highest office on the globe, but that by his offices bloodshed was stayed and the war between the two countries of Japan and Russia was brought to an end. [Applause.] This is enough to make nations of all climes and of all continents rise up and call him blessed. His efforts were made the more efficient by the fact that he spoke for a free Republic, a Republic which had no ambition to subserve in the threater of that frightful war except those of a peaceful nature.

Just as there has been very great progress in doing away with war, so there has been equal progress in the peaceful settlement of disputes, especially in the last ninety years. From 1815 to 1900 more than 200 controversies between nations were settled by arbitration. Since 1900 there have been 40 more, and each successive bulletin adds to the list. In these the United States was a party in a very considerable share. These arbitrations have settled the most irritating questions, not only questions of boundary, of indignities to citizens, of property and personal rights, but all the great range of questions which in the olden times were incitements to war.

Among the countries which have resorted to arbitration there are not merely those of Europe and of North and South America, but also those of Asia, such as Persia and Afghanistan, and of Africa, such as the Transvaal Republic and Egypt. We are just at the beginning, as it would seem, of this manner of settlement of controversies in a peaceful way, especially since beginning in 1902 or 1903, as with a beam of light there has been a great movement for arbitration treaties in Europe and in America. These treaties not only provide for the settlement of existing controversies, but look to the avoidance of future collisions. England has entered into a treaty of arbitration with France, and both England and France with Italy and Spain. Numerous others have been framed in which it is true there is the reservation that the disputes submitted for decision shall not include questions of honor or independence or of vital interest, but in pursuance of these treaties long-standing controversies of wide-reaching importance have been submitted to courts of arbitration. In 1899 The Hague conference was called, and while it adjourned without accomplishing as satisfactory results as was hoped, it did provide for a general court of arbitration between nations, to which our own country has submitted a controversy with Mexico, which was amicably settled in a way which, if it did not give absolute satisfaction to both countries, at least has met with the cordial acquiescence of each, and this gives promise of the submission of further questions. Denmark and Holland have ratified a treaty agreeing to submit to arbitration any and all grounds of controversy without limitation, thereby assuring pepetual peace between these two countries. Neither of them can be regarded as lacking in martial spirit.

More than a thousand years ago the Danes held possession of the city of London and overran England. Holland came very near to capturing London as late as 1667, by sending her fleet up the Thames. This treaty was not an act of weakness on the part of these two peoples. They were rather keeping step with the progress of the age. On the South American continent, Chile and the Argentine Republic have agreed upon an arbitration treaty in the same terms and of the same scope, and as a memorial of it they have erected on the highest ridge of the Andes, on the boundary between the two countries, a statue of the Prince of Peace to commemorate the day when the two countries vowed that for all time peace and good will should prevail between them. Those opposing any abatement of the naval programme tell us, "Why, you can not say that wars have ceased; look at the terrible conflict between Japan and Russia that is so fresh in all our minds." But this is readily explained. There have been numerous conflicts between nations for the acquisition of the territory of less advanced countries. In times past these conflicts have been a fruitful source of war. Military operations have still continued for overrunning the waste places of the earth or the land of the less civilized tribes of Africa and other continents. Spheres of influence have been agreed upon—Germany with England, and both with France—and this gradual subjection of the uncivilized peoples of the earth by nations desiring to extend the area of their colonies has been going on for many years. But Russia was in a position altogether different from any of the rest. The expansion of France, of England, and of Germany must be over the sea, but the field of expansion for Russia was overland. Asia lay at her feet, and she might very naturally say, "Asia is mine." A great Russian railway traversed the northern part of Asia; another ran east from the Caspian Sea, and it seemed but a question of time when all this territory belonging to the inferior peoples would come under her control. But as Herodotus said of the balance of power between Europe and Asia more than two thousand years ago, "The pendulum swings backward and forward between the two," and a power arose in Japan which challenged the expansion of Russia. If Asia should gradually come under the control of the great Muscovite empire, Japan saw that its independence must be lost; so

Russia must not be allowed to go on unchecked. The people of Japan, after making marvelous strides in civilization, arose actuated with one idea—defense against a probable invader—and the result was the war. But it is not likely that further contests will occur between the two.

It is proposed that The Hague conference shall reconvene. I trust when it does meet the influence of this country will be in favor of the settlement of all national controversies by arbitration. [Applause.]

It sometimes seems that there is a readier excitation of the martial spirit in this country than in others. We have not the vivid realization which comes from the constant maintenance of a burdensome military and naval establishment, from the quartering of soldiers in our neighborhood. We have not the recent memories of thousands slain in war. And the absence of these sobering influences leads many to think lightly of armaments and of war. Had the fleet of a foreign country with which our relations were strained fired upon the fishermen of Gloucester off the New England coast as the Russian fleet fired upon the fishermen on Dogger Bank it is to be feared that the popular outcry for war would have been almost irresistible. But we can not close our eyes to the increased burden of expense which is resting heavily upon us or to the fact that, instead of looking forward to the rising sun, so long as we talk for war we are looking backward.

It has been said in this discussion that by this naval programme we were showing to the nations of the earth that we are going to protect our interests. Who is threatening our interests in the wide world? Where is there a sentiment in any nation that has one warlike note against the United States? The more we abstain from military armaments, the more we abstain from everything that looks toward aggression or the preparation for aggression, the more our interests will be respected in the rest of the world, the more we will be trusted and the greater will be our progress and the friendship for us among all the nations of the earth. [Applause.]

And then again, it is said that we need a navy to protect our trade. Where is there a country in Asia or Africa, or Europe or South America, where our products or manufactures are purchased because of the existence of any battle ship or cruiser of the United States?

There may be some place where somebody has seen the hull of a cruiser of the United States and then has made up his mind that he would buy a reaper from the country from which that cruiser came. If there is any such instance, however remote the place may be, I really should like to hear from it, and I trust we may learn of it in this discussion.

In this connection I wish to say a word of the work of the interparliamentary union in which there is considerable membership from this House, and which was recently presided over by our esteemed colleague [Mr. BARTHOLDT]. It has met twice in the last two years, and made up, as it is, of members and ex-members of legislative bodies all over the world, it has exerted a potent influence in bringing men of many nations together and devising means to promote peace and good will among the nations. It will meet again next year, at which time Russia, now having a legislative body, may be represented, and it is to be hoped that still further results may be accomplished. It is true there is one feature of the situation which is not a hopeful one, namely, the enormous preparation of all the civilized nations for war, and its ever-increasing expense, each one saying, "We do not intend to go to war, but we want to be prepared against our neighbor." Mr. Bloch, a very practical writer, after portraying in vivid language the evils of the present situation, concludes by saying:

> Such are the consequences of the so-called "armed peace of Europe"—slow destruction in consequence of expenditures on preparations for war, or swift destruction in the event of war—in both events, convulsions in the social order.

But the very fact that the tension has become so great affords the strongest hope that a change is near.

An argument is very frequently made that it is necessary to have the warlike spirit and an occasional war in order to promote courage and assure bravery. Some say, "In these piping times of peace people become effeminate; the stronger and more masculine virtues can not be maintained unless there is once in a while a fight."

If that is true, we are mistaken about civilization. The barbarous tribes which are constantly at war and live on what they obtain by force rather than by industry are fortunate, indeed, for they are constantly habituated by their surroundings to deeds of daring and to trials of their strength. If the argument referred to is valid, the old feudal times of which I have spoken were better than the present, for then every home was fortified and the thought of morning and of evening was of conflict. Is it not true that life has enough of emergencies and of tragedies to develop the heroism of a people without compelling the flower of its youth to stand in line to be shot at and to shoot?

Last January, in addressing a convention which had under consideration the improvement of the waterways of the country, I called attention to an act of heroism on the preceding day in the rescue of the crew and passengers from the stranded steamer Cherokee, off Absecon Inlet, in New Jersey. This passenger steamer had grounded some miles out at sea and a fearful storm arose. No tug could pull it off, and no lifeboat could be floated. The life-saving crew could not take off the passengers. Meanwhile the billows were rising higher and higher, and it seemed to those on board on that Sunday that each would sink into a watery grave with no Sabbath bell to toll a requiem. But the officers and men of a little sailing craft went out from the shore, braving the tempest and the storm, came to the side of the boat, and by a life line conveyed the passengers and crew of the stranded steamer to their boat and sailed triumphantly into Absecon Inlet with the hurricane behind them and still waters and safety before them. The people give enthusiastic applause to a conquering general on his return from the field of conquest. The crowds shout aloud when the marching host passes by with its waving banners, but was there ever louder acclaim due to soldier or general than to these sailors who, notwithstanding their lowly lot and their limited opportunities, showed in this perilous rescue that they could be heroes in saving life rather than in destroying it? [Loud applause.]

So there is heroism outside of carnage. If people are looking for opportunities for the display of courage they will find them, and it will not be necessary to go to the tented field to develop manly qualities.

Lord Brougham in treating of the law as between individuals said:

> It was the boast of Augustus that he found Rome of brick and left it of marble. But—> now much nobler will be the sovereign's boast when he shall have it to say that he found law dear and left it cheap, found it a sealed book and left it a living letter; found it the patrimony of the rich, left it the inheritance of the poor; found it the two-edged sword of craft and oppression, and left it the staff of honesty and the shield of innocence.

He added—

And now that the world is coming nearer and nearer to one common brotherhood, may I not say how much nobler yet will be that nation's distinction that found liberty the birthright of the strong alone and gave it to the weak; that found international justice a neglected principle and made it a controlling force; a nation which sought no conquest, but freely offered refuge; one which, not unmindful of national strength or honor, gained its chiefest glory in the happiness and increased opportunity of the individual citizen; a nation which found its competitors limiting their horizon to the mountains and rivers which bound them and taught them to look forth beyond all barriers and learn that all men are made of one blood and have one common destiny.

One hundred and eighty years ago Bishop Berkeley, distressed at the failure of many of the reforms which he had advocated and wearied by constant civil strife, turned his eyes toward the New World, hoping that here there would be found, if not a Utopia, at least a land of nobler traditions and ideals, and he wrote a poem prophetic in its forecast of the future America, closing with the words:

> Westward the course of empire takes its way;
> The four first acts already past,
> A fifth shall close the drama with the day:
> Time's noblest offspring is the last.

In material progress, in the general diffusion of knowledge, in the privileges and opportunities which belong to an American citizen, we have no doubt reached a plane more lofty than the good old bishop could have even hoped, but if he undertook to sing to us to-day a new song or speak to us another word, I believe it would be in this line: Enjoy, children of the New World, the luxuries, the comforts, and the privileges which I dreamed not of, but still further there remains a golden opportunity, which I trust that you may grasp. It is that mankind in this later day may look to your country, to the United States, to take the lead in the paths that lead to the world's peace. [Loud and long-continued applause.]

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I yield one hour or so much of it as he may need to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] is recognized for one hour.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, in this public place, and in the most public way, I desire to congratulate my friend from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] upon his effort. It is the best that he has made, in my judgment, since I have been a Member of this House. [Applause.] I have not joined the Members who have shaken his hand, but I wish the RECORD to show that in my humble way I commend him for speaking in behalf of peace. At the same time I commend him for having, when the occasion demanded, voted with me for war. [Laughter.] Mr. Chairman, without reflection upon our records, and without criticism of each other for what we have done or praise each other for what we propose to do, I shall strive to reach the same conclusion as that reached by the gentleman from Ohio, but through other channels. I shall make no attempt at declamation nor deal in fine phrases; first, because of my inability, and secondly, because of my disinclination. I shall speak by the record and endeavor to prove that while we are progressing along peaceful lines and are approaching the day when all nations will reduce their armaments, yet when that day comes the result will be reached not by reason of persuasion used in the effort for peace, but because we have the means which we can employ for its enforcement.

The gentleman from Ohio pleads for settlement of international disputes by arbitration. In this appeal he is not alone. The well disposed for more than two thousand years have urged the same policy. While it is old, no one will deny its advantages to the races if it could be enforced. The gentleman speaks for the ideal life and advocates greatly to be desired conditions, but fails to prescribe a remedy for existing ones. I shall speak of man and his government as they have been, as they now are, and as they promise to be. I shall advocate means to save man from his own fury until civilized methods have tempted him to enter the ideal state.

Before I approach my subject, I venture a word for this great bill, prepared with care, and which, as you know, treats of both persons and things. It provides for the needs of the former and the care of the latter. Its purpose is not to increase, but to maintain; not to expand in size, but to promote in efficiency. While in its constant preparation the American Navy is intended to be the active, though silent, advocate of peace, its engines are designed for the destruction of human life and the infliction of terrible damage upon the property of persons and nations who may engage us in war. The sailors who sail these ships in defense of Americans and American honor are to be paid their salaries already provided for by existing law. No attempt has been made to increase the pay of any of them, nor has any addition been made to their number fixed by legislative action. All efforts in either direction have been successfully resisted; not for the reason that merit is wanting or additions unnecessary, but it was believed by the committee having the duty imposed upon it that the Treasury ought not to be taxed at this time beyond the limit herein reported and for the purposes named.

The attempt has been faithfully made to supply the personnel of our Navy with every reenforcement that will add to its comfort, secure its safety, and endow it with strength to overcome any enemy which the Congress may direct it to engage. The improvements already begun in the navy-yards have been directed to continue, but further development, except in a few imperative instances, has been denied. Stations established where our ships may stop for coal and temporary repairs have not been overlooked, but provision for them has been modest and in keeping with the retrenchment which the committee has sought to maintain.

Places where the sailor man may acquire his art have received attention and marksmanship has been encouraged. Allowances are made for ships that give notice of threatened disaster, others that will avert it. A new magazine for ammunition has been provided for, where its presence will not endanger the lives of its neighbors, but sufficiently accessible to avoid unnecessary expense of transportation. The ammunition has been increased, so that a large reserve will be immediately at hand, and an addition of guns of modern make has also been provided. Three battle ships need the attention of the builder and have been ordered to the yards. They are to be modernized under the direction of the architects, so that their complete usefulness may be again assured.

Further detail on the bill at this time will be tiresome. Its many provisions are commended by the committee that made them. Large reductions have been made on the estimates furnished, but confidence is expressed that our Navy (its personnel and its matériel) is to receive all that is absolutely necessary to maintain the efficiency which our splendid sailors have attained and to preserve its stability in both form and reputation.

Is the man with the gun an evil? If so, is he a necessary one? Whether the maintenance of great military establishments insure peace is a question no longer in dispute. It has been resolved in the negative. Does the presence of a great body of fighting men, armed with guns and swords, trained in their use, bend the natural inclinations of men toward peace? The world has resolved this problem in the negative. But does the armed power of a nation well equipped tend to prevent war? This well-explored question the races seem to have concluded in the affirmative. If this conclusion is wrong, then, in my judgment, these enormous expenditures of public money are wrong.

The history of the old and middle ages shows that peace was usually secured upon the mountain tops of fire and in the valleys of death, and the nation with the strongest arm and thickest armor always went home with the fullest bag. In those days men armed to fight, not to prevent it. Our nation is known the world over as slow to wrath and only to arouse under great provocation. Every American is a volunteer counsellor of peace, but most of them clinch their fists in their pockets while they advocate the adjustment of differences by persuasion.

Since Miltiades overcame the Asians at Marathon and the Germans threw their legions against the hosts of Cæsar, no nation has presented the fighting man equal in valor and intelligence to that of the North American soldier. [Applause.] His record shows that he has overcome his adversary in 82 per cent of the battles in which he drew the trigger or crossed the sword. The glory of his own country is the consideration that leads him to arms, while the milk of the American mother has furnished him all the stimulation required. His own performance is his just biographer. The American people have pronounced their benedictions. His fame is fixed.

Have the nations honestly endeavored at any time to maintain peace except through the application of force? They have not. When man agrees to submit all his differences to an adjustment to be made by others he sinks in good part his identity. When a nation agrees that all its rights and all its wrongs shall be surrendered to the arbitrament of other nations, it loses its sovereignty, and what nation stands ready to confess its own impotency? Does not complete submission involve largely relinquishment of physical, intellectual, and moral strength? Is man ready for the sacrifice? If not, how can you expect more from the nation he creates and whose will is his will and subject to his subversion? Go to the history of all the nations and learn of their unsuccessful efforts to find the paths which lead to peace. They have hunted for them for three thousand years, while they blazed their course with the dagger and nailed their pointer boards to the end of their guns.

I believe universal peace can be secured without the use of shot and shell, but it can not be maintained unless it is followed by immediate and complete disarmament by every nation capable of bearing arms. When this hour arrives we will go to court for our redress and, waiting for the arrival of the aggressor until patience succumbs to old age, bequeath our grievance to our successor.

International arbitration is the only tribunal to which we can turn, and at its doors all nations should be persuaded to enter. While we parley, we will not fight; in the delay the races will benefit even although they may spend their time in rest and preparation. It is insisted by some opposed to international peace that pacification by persuasion is expensive; that men who won't fight become corrupt and only comply with decrees while standing on the auction block. Why should the cost of the trial influence the undertaking? It is said that it cost Cæsar two millions when he risked the experiment of a generalship in Gaul. If Cæsar had not crossed the Rubicon bearing the recollection of his many obligations in mind, what would his creditors have said of his disposition to do them justice?

While it is true that but few attempts have been made to bring about universal peace during the past century, history places to the credit of those who prefer conciliation to battle 434 instances wherein pacific adjustment of international disputes were secured. It is true that these settlements only involved principles applicable to international arbitration. Let the pacifier adopt such name as he may please, he is aiming in the right direction and has the approval of mankind.

Mr. Chairman, if all the nations agree to disarmament—and I hope my friend from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT], who is so largely interested in the subject of international arbitration, will answer me this question, for I have hunted long to find a solution—when can they in safety to themselves disarm?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. What I have to say in reply to the question of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] can not be crowded into simply an answer to a question, but I will answer the question in this way as briefly as possible. I will say that nations can disarm and can have peace as soon as they agree to do so.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. I am much obliged to my friend for his answer; and for a reply to the gentleman, who is a man of sense, he knows as well as he knows the road from here to St. Louis, as well as he knows the valor of the people from whom he comes, that what he says is impossible. Where will be the force to execute the agreement to keep peace? Man does not always keep his agreements. Why should you expect more of his government? If a man can be relied upon to obey decrees and discharge his obligations, why not remove the disobedient and blow up the houses of detention? Why not abolish the time-honored sheriff and constable and forget the writs they serve and the processes they carry to enforce the judgments rendered against the unwilling? I will hope to show the gentleman his error before I have concluded.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Will the gentleman permit another interruption?

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. We believe that the affairs of nations can be adjusted in exactly the same manner as the affairs of individuals. When the gentleman and myself have a difficulty, the law does not permit us to take the law into our own hands, but we are told to go to court.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. That is right.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. And we claim that nations can do exactly the same thing, and in fact should be held and compelled to do the same thing. In other words, what is law for the individuals should be law for the nation. That is our position, and we hold that when a nation compels a man to go to court that the government itself should first obey that mandate and should be controlled by the same law that it imposes upon its citizens.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, if I owe the gentleman, does he not think that I will respond? But suppose that I decline, how is he to obtain that which is his own? Would the gentleman appeal to a court for redress when it had not the power to enforce its decrees? Think it over and answer me. What kind of a civilization would we have if we should abolish the power to compel submission?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Would it be civilization to knock the gentleman's front teeth out?

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Oh, my friend and I are 50 years old, and why do we parley in such dispute? While civilization recognizes the application of force and struggles to minimize it, nevertheless there are times when our teeth might have been knocked out if we had not had sufficient force to resist the attempt. My friend is dealing with man's wicked side, and to restrain him I am advocating what seems to me proper methods entirely within the rules of civilization.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. The first rule of civilization is self-restraint.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. The first international attempt to secure and maintain peace through the means of an international tribunal was made by the Amphictyonies more than five hundred years before Christ appeared with the consoling declaration in favor of peace upon earth with good will toward men. The independent tribes of Greece came together twice a year at a little town in the Pass of Thermopylæ. At the temple of Delphi they assembled to reason with each other in the effort that peace might remain among them. It seems almost a travesty that within sight of the meeting place of these "dwellers around" Leonidas, the King of Sparta, subsequently confronted the hordes of Persia, and upon the very ground where these peacemakers had struggled with partial success to prevent their wars sleep the 400 and the 300 of their countrymen in whose memory there is erected the historical shaft on which there is the doleful inscription, "Go tell our countrymen that we lie here in obedience to their expressed command."

These promoters of peace bound themselves not to destroy any Amphictyonic towns nor turn away from them their running waters, either in time of war or time of peace, and to punish those who would violate this compact the Amphictyonies pledged themselves to employ their hands, feet, tongue, and their whole power to bring them to punishment. Even these semibarbaric strivers for peace encouraged war as an unavoidable means of settling disputes between two sides, not for destruction and devastation, but as a means of bringing the dispute to a conclusion.

In their decrees they taxed the lands of their enemies, to God enslaved their inhabitants, and made their lands an eternal waste and an everlasting wilderness. The decisions of the council were held sacred and inviolable and even arms were taken to enforce them. It is true that this great council seemed to have no organized means to enforce its decrees, yet it is shown in its history that it always had near at hand strong and active partisans who were ready and waiting to undertake the duty. This great council, the first peace effort known in history, the object of which was to prevent strife, fell into the hands of Philip of Macedon, who turned it to his own selfish purpose, and finally used it to overthrow Sparta; Philip alleging as a reason that the Spartans themselves had become the victims of the tyranny and the cruelty of the Amphictyonies. It is interesting to note that while this council made not the policy of Greece, nor did it assume power to settle disputes, except among its members, it always had at its door hordes of men armed and trained to do the duty of enforcing its decrees.

All the designs for universal and international peace that have been submitted to the world from that time to this contain some provision by which its decrees can be enforced, or else the world refused to consider them.

This great association, composed of the twelve neighoring tribes, was as powerless to prevent bloodshed even among its own members as the wiser nations of this day seem to be. The historians dismiss their account of this great council as powerless for good, inasmuch as it lacked ability to execute its own decrees.

Two thousand years passed since the first effort for peace was made until the second one was tried at The Hague, in which our nation took so important and conspicuous part. I do not mean by this that treaties effecting peace and providing for its restoration and maintenance have not been made. I mean that the nations having friendly relations with each other have not assembled from that day to this (except in the instance related) for the purpose of establishing peace and then keeping it when established. Many plans have been suggested, but none of them have been considered worthy of notice by the nations, because their adoption involved a surrender of questions and traditions which the nations preferred to settle in their own way.

Henry the IV in 1603 proposed, by the elimination of envy and the removal of the balance of power, to maintain the peace of the whole of Europe. He planned to divide Europe evenly between a certain number of powers, and thus parceling to each power the same amount of territory no fear could be had of war because of the establishment of equality. The States he reduced to fifteen, each being required to subscribe to reciprocal pledges regarding religion and politics as well as the liberty of commerce.

The Amphictyonies furnished the model, and their policy was adopted with some modifications. Henry planned for a continual session of ministers, to whom were to be submitted all occasions for quarrels, with authority invested in the convention to pacify them.

Mr. Chairman, to execute the decrees of this great tribunal, what was proposed? Answer me the question when you reply to-morrow.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I can tell you now.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. While Henry's plan has been commended by some authorities, it involved the equal distribution of territory conquered from nations not included and the perpetual tax upon those who participated to maintain an armed force to execute the council's decrees.

Mr. BARTHOLDT rose.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. To-morrow, if the gentleman pleases, I can not stop now; look at the clock——

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Just a moment. It might be a point you have not followed.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. It is disconcerting, but I always yield to a friend.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Just one moment. In Sully's Mémoires this plan of Henry IV is described, and he says the plan was to annihilate Austria, and the other countries were to combine for that purpose, and these armies were to be parceled out to each one, and each one had to raise so much money——

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. I have read it——

Mr. BARTHOLDT. But the whole plan fell through, because of the assassin's hand.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Such a scheme of pillage and plunder nowhere blackens the pages of history, and yet we are assured of its execution had not Providence interfered in behalf of its defenseless people by promptly removing Henry and placing him where his power of subjugation was broken by providential decree. There is authority for the statement that Elizabeth, the English Queen, had agreed to become a party to what was known as the "Christian Republic," and had consented that Henry, the King of France, should set the day, time, and place at which the means were to be devised for the invasion of Spain, and from each confederate was to be collected its share of cost incurred in the endeavor. All this in the effort to secure peace. The same application of brute force to obtain peace that has followed civilization since its dawn. This proposition of King

Henry can not be taken as the initiative of our present programme for peace, as it did not include the benefits to be derived from international arbitration.

This plan of the French King suggested to William Penn, the apostle of peace, a scheme in which Penn himself said that he desired "first to show the desirableness of peace and that the truest means of it were justice, not war." In Penn's design he provided "that before this sovereign assembly should be brought all differences depending between one sovereign and another that can not be adjusted by diplomatic means before its sessions begin." This is a most perfect conception of the object to be reached and would have accomplished the author's intentions had all nations agreed thereto and after agreement kept the faith. But the great author, doubting the effectiveness of his own tribunal, made a further provision:

That if any of the sovereigns constituting this imperial diet should refuse to submit their claims or pretensions to the diet, or to accpet its judgment, and should seek their remedy by arms, or delay compliance beyond the time specified, all the other sovereignties, uniting their forces, should compel submission to and performance of the sentence and payment of all costs and damages.

In his comment on this provision he concludes that an acceptance of the compact would of itself deprive the sovereign of power and could not show the will to dispute the conclusion; consequently peace would be procured. It is but just to the author of this great document that he does not recommend disarmament. It is also just to him to conclude that he anticipated such result would follow the execution of the compact. No man understood the frailties of human nature better than Penn, so he suggested the first assembly should be central and that "to avoid quarrel for precedence the room may be round and have several doors to come in and go out at." Thus it is plain that while he was striving to increase "personal friendship between powers and states," he was at the same time doubtful of his ability to maintain peace even while the delegates were preparing for it.

I believe there is no man known to history who so greatly desired peace as did this convert to the religion of George Fox, of whom he was a compatriot and at the same time beloved follower; yet he doubted the success of his own design for the reasons found in the statement which he appended to it:

That the strongest and richest sovereignty will never agree to it, and if it should, there would be danger of corruption more than of force one time or other; that it will endanger an effeminacy by such a disuse of the trade of soldiery; that if there should be any need for it, upon any occasion, we should be at a loss as they were in Holland in 1672; that there will be great want of employment for younger brothers of families, and that the poor of that time must either turn soldiers or thieves; that sovereign princes and states will hereby become not sovereign—a thing they will never endure.

William Penn's "peaceable expedient" was approved by his own people in religion, but failed to receive the notice of those who prefer personal property to personal friendship, real estate to real love. "Those who would not prefer Jerusalem above their chief joy" were in the great majority and were in no wise influenced by Penn's expressed distrust in his own scheme.

This great counsellor, whose word and deed were always consistent, concluded his well-meaning and sensible advice with the admonition that—

By the same rules of justice and prudence by which parents and masters govern their families and magistrates their cities and estates and their republics and princes and kings their principalities and kingdoms, Europe may obtain and preserve peace among her sovereignties.

Penn admits that his "expedient" was but the modified design of Henry IV, as this great prince conceded to the Greeks the origin of the proposal which he submitted, a trial of which the red hand of Ravaillac alone prevented. From the days of these two peacemakers to the present no less than forty-four different schemes have been proposed, but none of them accepted with a seriousness productive of results. In none is disarmament provided for except in the substitution of an international force with which to compel obedience to the council's decrees.

The combined wisdom of all the attempts may be summed up in the words of Sprague, who says:

It will only be expedient to state now that any tribunal which has not an accessory physical power sufficient to procure the execution of its decrees must be essentially a tribunal of arbitration, no matter what it may be denominated.

The unanswerable question comes to the human mind, Where will be a corresponding power to restrain the one provided for in Sprague's scheme? The author does not offer a solution because his reason ends at this stage.

Arbitration, to be effective, must assume to settle all disputes. A little can be gained by delay, although we may reason one week and fight the next week. Every hour of peace furnishes so much to the betterment of the races and minimizes the horrors of war and renders them less frequent. We can't settle all differences by means of arbitration, for the one reason that all the nations insist that all disputes affecting their autonomy or their independence shall be excepted. The power of different states to give each to itself its own law will always remain in the state. Nearly all our wars have been fought to obtain independence of government. No patriot will consent to the sacrifice which such a surrender involves.

The result obtained through The Hague conference, in my judgment, indicates the beginning of a new epoch in the history of nations. Here were assembled the representatives of twenty-six governments, comprising one thousand six hundred millions of people and whose dominions and dependencies cover nine-tenths of the planet. The outcome was good because it was in the direction of good. But what was accomplished by this great tribunal looking toward the world's disarmament?

"On the question of armaments, agreement between the powers was, as had been anticipated, plainly out of the question; the difficulties were unsurmountable and national distrust too deep." The conference declared "that the limitation of military burdens is greatly to be desired for the increase of the material and moral well-being of humanity;" and it resolved "that the governments, taking into consideration the proposals made at the conference, should study the possibility of an agreement concerning the limitation of military and naval forces and of war budgets." This proposal is said to be a sufficient indorsement of the Czar's appeal for universal peace.

It will not impose a great burden upon the memory of man to recall the fact that Great Britain, Russia, and Japan earnestly indorsed this proposal. On the question of armaments three declarations were made and three agreements reached, forbidding the throwing of projectiles from balloons, the use of those only intended to diffuse asphyxiating gases, and the employment of expansive bullets.

The commentator on the results secured by this conference of nations says that while "something has thus been done in the way of mitigating the horrors of war in the future, but the regulations, however admirable, appear somewhat inconsistent." I believe that the world has concluded that the only real advantage obtained through this conference was to minimize the horrors attending war.

Can it be expected that any one of the nations participating in this conference should proceed to the arrest of its armaments when all the other nations are contributing to increase them? No one can dispute the fact that the existence of a permanent court of arbitration invites the settlement of disputes by argument. Arbitration, however, will never be completely successful until it can be made obligatory. This, of course, is impossible until all the nations conclude to forfeit their autonomy.

The peacemakers representing our Government were unwilling to affix their names to the conclusions reached by The Hague conference until this amendment was added to them:

Nothing contained in this convention shall be so construed as to require the United States of America to depart from its traditional policy of not entering upon, interfering with, or entangling itself in the political questions or internal administration of any foreign state. Nor shall anything contained in the said convention be construed to require a relinquishment by the United States of America of its traditional attitude toward purely American questions.

Thus our nation agreed that while all the other nations might arbitrate, if they saw fit, any question they pleased, we would reserve to ourselves the right to settle all which might be adjudged purely American. This was right. But who are to determine whether the question raised is purely American? The tribunal was silent when this amendment was made, and its record shows an immediate and final adjournment. Thus our autonomy was reserved, and universal and permanent peace postponed.

Peace the whole world over can not be maintained without armaments, because the world does not contain the same people with the same speech, with the same views upon the same subjects, entirely different in race, dissimilar in appearance, and with differing ideas of civilization.

The Amphictyonies spoke the same tongue, and those who would feel themselves strangers because they were not united by a peculiar tie were not invited and were not expected at their councils.

The first attempt of different races was made at The Hague, and civilization looks to this tribunal alone not for the establishment of universal peace, not in the expectation that through conference nature will be changed, but for the remedy that will result not in complete disarmament, but in its great reduction.

This is all that can in reason be expected, the beginning of which, regretfully to be said, nowhere appears.

Since the day when Henry the IV proposed to relieve the miseries of the European races by enforcing with arms the remedies proposed in his "grand design," European nations have spent almost two-thirds of their time in actual war.

During those three centuries the wars among the nations have decreased in number, while many of their attending barbarities have been eliminated. History stands for this statement.

If the advance of the British and the Egyptians upon Khartoum, covering a period of three years, can be included, Great Britain, with her millions uncounted and her soldiers and sailors standing constantly at "attention," has ninety-five years of war to her credit during this period. Yet it would be well to remember that since the Crimea to this time this nation has fought but two years, and they were spent in the absorption of the South African Republic. Has Great Britain become the leading advocate of peace or has her great armament, constantly increasing until it is twice that of any other two nations, put the balance of the world in fear of her? Does her complete preparation keep her from harm? Her statesmen contend for this conclusion. The annals seem to justify it. Do the great guns on her sixty-one first-class battle ships and her thirty-nine armored cruisers supply the influence her diplomats and her pacifiers fail to command? Has the knowledge that her battle line exceeds that of France more than twice over and of the United States and Germany each three times over promoted the peace of the world during the past twenty-five years? Great Britain is making the experiment of arming to maintain peace. The world watches it with anxiety.

Since the French laid the siege which resulted in the capture of La Rochelle, nearly three hundred years ago, France has spent one hundred and four years of her time in enforcing her views upon others through the lights made by the blazing gun.

Spain, since the days of the archdukes, kept at the throat of what she called her enemies sixty years, between 1624 and 1783, and the question might be in kindness asked, What has been the advantage to either France or Spain in property or person for their struggles in behalf of national rights?

Yet no man who has the power of reflection would contend that all these wars could have been averted without the loss of honor which patriotism would not approve and human nature tolerate.

Since Russia made her war against the Tartars, 1686, and a few years later conquered Azor, which marks her entrance into the politics of southeastern Europe, she has had but forty-six years of war.

Since the Sultan invaded Hungary in 1526 and later fled from Vienna, Turkey has been engaged in war one hundred and three years, and yet civilization seems to make no demand upon Turkey for more than an occasional expression of good will toward others.

Since the day when John George, the elector of Saxony, obstinately refused to break his neutrality and thereby assist in the dismemberment of the Empire and later surrendered to the persuasion of Gustavus Adolphus and allied himself against it, Sweden has enjoyed the absence of external discord three hundred years, except in long intervals when she has been compelled to fight. During these three hundred years she is credited with but sixteen years of war.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. If the gentleman will yield to me, I simply desire to call his attention to the fact that for thirty-five years there has been no great European war. It is true that Spain had her bloody encounter in America, England in Africa, and Russia in Asia, but during these many years there has not been a European war between two great nations, and the writers on this subject have reached the conclusion that the great powers of Europe are really afraid to-day to set the machinery of war in motion, and to wage the war for which they have been preparing for so long a time.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Prussia accepted France, Bavaria, and Spain as allies and made the Silesian war in 1740. From that time until her coalition she fought only sixteen years. It can be said to the honor of Austria since she made her peace with Russia at Dresden, 1745, she has been engaged in war but sixteen years. This is an account of the wars among the different nations named herein and does not include the campaigns which they may have made against their own people.

The history of these nations during the period which I have so quickly covered shows that the grand design of Henry IV made no impression upon them which lasted longer than the short hour consumed in reading it. They turned a deaf ear to the projects of Crucé, who prayed that they might be read by the kings of the whole world and designated truth as their escort. They denied the learning of Ernest Landgrave, who had commanded the united armies of Germany and smote his religious ideas with the arguments of maniacs. With defiant shouts they trampled upon the scheme of William Penn and laughed in the face of John Bellers, who proposed a general council to which all religious persuasions might go, not for dispute, but settlement. They snubbed the "elaboration" of St. Pierre, who asked them to subscribe to the agreement that any sovereign who should take up arms against another member of the great "Peace Society" should be considered its enemy. These fighting monarchs threw the extracts of Rosseau and Puffendorf in their camp fires, and after smearing the essay of Grotius with the blood of their offenders, hoisted it upon their pikes and carried it from the Dardanelles to Culloden field, terrifying peace until she fled from the whole of Europe not to return until she discovered that constant war meant annihilation through the increased armaments which the nations' discord demanded.

For Europe was seldom at rest in those days. Her history compels her to confess to seventy-seven years of war during the seventeenth century. The eighteenth shows a better record, for she spent but sixty-five years of it on the battlefield. The nineteenth shows the effect of pacification upon the militant spirit of the European, for he spent fifty-three years of it in peace and fought but forty-seven. To our encouragement we must bear in mind that the nations of Europe engaged in war but fourteen years between 1850 and 1875, and only nine years between 1875 and 1900.

Has the spirit of man been broken, or does he walk in humility with his ambition delivered up and his lust repressed? No; he is fast learning that war means destruction of his fortune. Its damage to the morals of those who engage in it the nations have not made prominent, but the effect on their budgets is receiving their most earnest and attentive consideration. Nations moan under the load of great armies and fast multiplying fleets, yet they are afraid to reduce them. Let them continue to add to their burdens until they conclude it to be cheaper to talk than fight, then they will consent to shift their accounts so that they may balance. A battle between two great nations costs ten times as much in money as it did a hundred years ago, and will cost more as man's adroitness is employed in working out contrivances to destroy whole armies in one day to march in triumph to the disputed territory in the next.

Great mobilization tends to confine war to selected spots. Pointed instances are fresh in our minds. Belligerents rarely listen to advice. They are quite ready to obey the command of those enabled to enforce it. If war must be, let us limit the conflagration to boundaries in which the interests of others are not found. If our armaments bring us to no other good than this, we will find our money well spent.

What has been our record since the dedication of America's sacred honor, her lives, and her property to the cause of liberty? Beginning with this declaration, our wars, including those with the Indians, cover a period of sixty-two years; excluding those engaged with the Indians, twenty-five years.

They are: 1775, the war of independence; 1776, Cherokees attack the settlements in eastern Tennessee and North Carolina; 1778, massacre at Wyoming, in Pennsylvania; 1779, expedition of General Sullivan against the Iroquois; 1798, war with France; 1790, Indian war; Harmar defeated 1790, St. Clair 1791, and Wayne victorious 1794; 1802, war with Tripoli; 1803, Navajos in hostility to the whites; 1811, war incited by Tecumseh; 1812, second war with Great Britain; 1812, Winnebagos and Dakotas take sides with the English in the war against the United States; 1813, Creek war; 1817, border warfare of the Seminoles; 1832, Black Hawk war; 1835, Seminole war; 1846, war with Mexico; 1848, trouble with Oregon Indians; 1855, Rogue River war; 1861, the civil war; 1862, Sioux rebellion; 1862, Apache outbreak; 1865, outbreak of Shoshones; 1872, Apache outbreak; 1873, Modoc war; 1876, Sioux rebellion; 1879, war with the Utes; 1890, Dakota rebellion; 1898, war with Spain; 1899, Philippine insurrection; 1900, Chinese expedition.

It is true the professional campaigner does not include the Indian wars in our actual fighting time, and to escape the terrible record of strife we have made he waves his hand and replies: "You can't count Indian killing as war." If the Indian wrote our history the inference is safe that he would give his instances of battlefield struggle the name of war.

The minutes kept by the time marker show us to have been quarrelsome—ready to settle, equally ready to fight. This part of our history some Americans wish to defend and explain, but our victories every one of us applauds. It is true we are under the restraint which our foremost place in the civilized rank imposes upon us, but our willingness to submit our disputes and surrender our traditions will not entitle us to the first reward when the arbitration day arrives and our ships drop their armaments into the sea at the command of the "Great Council."

Who is there among us to condemn the American delegates to The Hague conference because they refused to subscribe to the final act until an amendment was added thereto reserving to us the right to settle in our own way all purely American questions? This position was right, of course, but lacked the degree of submission necessary to secure universal peace.

Oppenheim, in a treatise published last year, sums up the effect which The Hague conference had upon the world's peace:

Soon after The Hague peace conference, in October, 1899, war broke out in South Africa between Great Britain and the two Boer Republics, which leads to the latter's annexation at the end of 1901. The assassination of the German ambassador and the general attack on the European legations in Peking in 1900 led to a united action of the powers against China for the purpose of vindicating this violation of the fundamental rules of the law of nations. In December, 1902, Great Britain, Germany, and Italy instituted a blockade against the coast of Venezuela for the purpose of making her comply with their demands for indemnification of their subjects wronged during civil wars in Venezuela, and the latter consents to pay indemnities, to be settled by a mixed commission of diplomats. But as other powers than those who had instituted the blockade likewise claim indemnities, the matter is referred to the permanent court of arbitration at The Hague, which in 1904 gives it verdict in favor of the blockading powers. In February of 1904 war breaks out in the Far East between Russia and Japan on account of Manchuria and Korea.

While the results have not been positive, our first attempt has proven its worthiness in that it will inspire repetition.

The past ten years show the "curse" to be still with us, yet we have confined it to isolated sections of the world. Russia and Japan refused to reconcile, but they consented to confine their battles to the fields of Manchuria upon the urgent request of the nations having sufficient guns to compel a compliance. Did the guns influence the seclusion? The nations who had them entertain that opinion.

I believe the great armaments and the fear which the nations possessing them have of each other have secured us, at least, a partial "armed peace." Persuasion has proven a failure. A few appealed for peace. Meanwhile the multitude appeals to arms.

How did a trial of Emerson's love, as a state basis, address itself to our sisters of South America? They were once tempted to agree to arbitration, but the effort to develop the "love basis" was not accepted with a seriousness that shows perfect appreciation. A plan of a permanent tribunal of arbitration was adopted by the International American Conference April 18, 1890, and the signatures of eleven States were obtained—Bolivia, Ecuador, Haiti, Honduras, Nicaragua, Salvador, the United States of America, the United States of Brazil, the United States of Venezuela, and Uruguay.

The treaty proposed lapsed, but the following Governments, in consequence of a form of extension submitted October 28, 1891, signified their acceptance of the proposal to revive the lapsed treaty: Ecuador, Guatemala, Honduras, Venezuela, Nicaragua, Salvador, and Bolivia; but the matter never progressed beyond this stage. Ecuador was in the throes of a rebellion in 1895; in 1893–94 Honduras and Nicaragua were at war; and in Honduras in the last three decades military revolts have been constant; the circumstances leading to the blockading of the ports of Venezuela and the dissensions that have beset that country are well known; an outbreak in Granada in 1891 led to a general insurrection in Nicaragua in 1892, and since 1897 there have been revolts at Nargote, San Juan del Sur, Rivas, and elsewhere; all this in addition to the war against Honduras; a military revolt occurred in Salvador in 1898, and other risings attended with bloodshed have occurred in that Republic; Bolivia was the seat of disturbances in 1899.

Our Government was one of the signatures, but did not sign the treaty. The reason for its failure is not plain, and perhaps had better be misunderstood. I hope that the history of our country written by strangers will not slander us and assign as a reason that we concluded it would cost our Government less time and money to fight than mediate.

These countries proposed that all controversies which did not imperil their independence should be submitted to arbitration. No other was excepted. Would our subscription to obligatory arbitration, in which all our differences should be settled, shake the opinion of the other great powers in our ability to provide for ourselves in our own way? Why did we not agree with our neighbors who had no armament, neither had they money with which to buy it? We had both. Was it worth while for us to surrender a principle we had secured with force in order that we might avoid further conflict? We need not look for such submission until we are ready to confess our own weakness of purse and forsake the policy of armed resistance.

The great powers, as well as the small, have made several unsuccessful attempts to preserve peace through means of arbitration. The outcome was not entirely without hope. The first modern arbitration treaty was that between the United Sates and Great Britain of November 19, 1794, which instituted three arbitrations. In 1812 the United States and Great Britain made war. The United States and Spain signed treaties involving arbitrations October 27, 1795; August 11, 1802; June 16, 1870; February 12, 1871, and February 28, 1885, and made war in 1898.

Austria, France, Great Britain, and Russia were the signatories to an arbitration treaty of November 20, 1815, and France and Russia, by an additional article to the treaty of peace of May 30, 1814, instituted a special arbitral commission for certain-named purposes. The Crimean war occurred in 1853–1856, the Austro-Prussian war in 1866, and the Franco-Prussian war in 1870–71. France and Mexico signed a treaty involving an arbitration March 9, 1839, and made war in 1861–1867. The United States and Mexico signed an arbitration treaty April 11, 1839, and made war in 1846–1848. Chile and Peru signed treaties of arbitration September 27, 1871, and made war in 1879. Bolivia and Chile signed, December 5, 1872, a treaty providing an arbitration, and made war in 1879. Colombia and Venezuela signed a treaty of arbitration September 14, 1881. In 1899 Colombia had to deal with an insurrection which is declared to have been aided from Venezuela.

I am satisfied that we have but started on the way toward that condition of amity which forms perfect society and would form perfect international relationship. I am also satisfied that man is yet much nearer the animal than the angel, with the attractions of the former so great that his advancement toward the latter is seriously impeded. Is all this an excuse for militarism? No; but it offers a reason.

We are safe in the deduction that during the past three hundred years history shows that the voice of the peacemaker has been drowned in the din of battle. A comparison of the present time with the past forces upon us the lamentable conclusion that we have made but little progress toward general peace that is not secured through armaments.

While we have escaped from the age of fable, we have not reached that degree of human completeness that will enable us to maintain universal peace and at the same time preserve our own sovereignties. These sovereignties have always been protected by arms and not by love. When will we reach a condition of nature where we may in safety completely disarm?

With sin came selfishness. To restrain men from their selfish purposes civil government was established. To inform the well disposed and to constrain those who would do evil, laws are made and above all are enforced when made. No height of civilization seems to bring with it absolute obedience. Many are willing, many are unwilling; to the latter force must be applied to obtain submission. When will we lay down arms?

When the soul of man gives up its covetousness and hastens to hides its avarice; when the itching palm is supplanted by the one that is stretched forth in its fullness; when the merchant rushes to the market place to give, not to sell; when the whir of the bullet is exchanged for the anthems of praise; when the "sword of the spirit" redeems the one that wounds the flesh—then, and not till then, can each nation lay down its arms and enjoy the peace secured through love; then will the races have reached the state where the soldier will abandon the parapet to prostrate himself at the altar. The sailor will strike his colors for the last time, donate his ship to the plutocrat in which to sail the world over, distributing his wealth equally among the unfortunate, and the 12-inch gun will be converted into sewer pipe through which the moral filth of ten thousand years' accumulation will be carried from our sight. The farmer will yoke himself with his ox to relieve the burden of the latter, while the trader and changer will pile their goods in the roads for the enjoyment of all their neighbors. Then will memory be preferred to inheritance and man shall, as Pitt did, marry only his country. Then will some of the Ten Commandments become obsolete, for the desire to steal and to kill will have departed from man's soul and his neighbor's ass will be no longer the subject of his covetousness. Then we will disarm and exchange the cannoneer for the priest, the flag for the cloth, for the fangs will be drawn from the serpent; but we will never consent, until we see the fangs of the other serpents safe in the lap of love, that America should become her own dentist. The possibility of such a condition would be a nightmare to civilization. In such a state the ambition of men would die within them, and they would walk the world over without aim and without spirit. The suggestion bears upon its face its own absurdity; yet men would not then fight.

When I came to this House ten years ago my coming was unheralded, and when I go my going will be unnoticed. While my stay here has been without great profit to my country and my constituency, it has afforded me the chance of hearing from the same lips appeals for conversion and votes for war. When I asked for an assignment to the Committee on Naval Affairs, it was with an avowed purpose of using a determination to prevent a further increase of the American Navy. Within a year from the time my membership began the present Speaker of the House reported a resolution from his committee providing "for the national defense and for every purpose connected therewith, and to be expended at the discretion of the President, to remain available until January 1, 1899, $50,000,000." On this resolution the yeas were 313 and the nays were none, immediately followed by loud applause. I had joined the majority. Preceding the adoption of this resolution, many patriotic speeches were made, all encouraging war upon a nation loaded with debt and from which its former glory had all departed. Not one word in favor of peace. The people's representatives wanted a fight.

Monday, April 11, 1898, the President of the United States sent a message to Congress, from which I have extracted the following:

> And in the interest of humanity and to aid in preserving the lives of the starving people of the island, I recommend that the distribution of food and supplies be continued, and that an appropriation be made out of the Public Treasury to supplement the charity of our citizens.
> The issue is now with Congress. It is a solemn responsibility. I have exhausted every effort to relieve the intolerable condition of affairs which is at our doors. Prepared to execute every obligation imposed upon me by the Constitution and the law, I await your action.

God bless the name of William McKinley, and may posterity read of him as we knew him, and appreciate his effort to prevent the spilling of human blood that the American people demanded he should spill.

Nearly every American wanted a fight. Congress had not the power to resist had it been inclined, and had it not been for the determination of the intellectual and physical giant who presided over the House, those of you who were here at that time know, we would have made the mistake of beginning the fight before we had the gun loaded. The most pronounced advocates of peace explained as their reason for wanting a fight that humanity might be relieved. While the combination of peace-war people claimed that our honor was at stake, the everyday American of passion and muscle wanted a fight because we had been insulted.

Remember all this occurred but eight years ago. Are we better restrained now than then? Monday, April 25, this House passed these two resolutions unanimously:

> First. That war be, and the same is hereby, declared to exist, and that war has existed since the 21st day of April, A. D. 1899, including said day, between the United States and the Kingdom of Spain.
> Second. Resolved that the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, directed and empowered to use the entire land and naval forces of the United States, to call into the actual service of the United States the military of the several States, to such extent as may be necessary to carry this act into effect.

The work was done. America had gone forth not for conquest, but relief. She has become a world power, and her armaments must be increased to enable her to properly keep her place.

The RECORD has no reference to any Member raising his voice in opposition to this declaration of war against a nation that had withered and decayed with only a recollection of her former greatness to sustain her. Young Americans, for the first time in our history, volunteered to cross the seas and fight the battles of their native land, while their parents took to their knees and prayed the Master to deliver their sons from the hands of men who could not fight and did not want to fight. I have only words of praise for those who made our battle, and no criticism for those who encouraged them, for the cause justified us, as subsequent events have proven. I am begging for the patience of those who, insisting upon this war, now show irritation, not over its victories, but with its consequent calamities and unavoidable results.

We would not have fought the Spanish-American war had we been fully and thoroughly prepared. Three more great battle ships on this coast where the Spanish could have seen them, and they would have kept their thin-skinned ships at home and we would have our graveyards yet to fill and our money yet to spend.

Then the Spaniard became obstinate and would not surrender his sovereignty over the Philippines until we paid him $20,000,000. The law of humanity as well as the law of nations required us to retain the islands and take up a great duty in a land of blinding sunshine by day and terrifying darkness by night. Dewey obeyed instructions from his Government when he destroyed the only power which Spain possessed to maintain peace in the Philippines. We were bound under the laws prevailing among the nations to supply it. Congress was asked for $20,000,000 to carry out the treaty of obligations between the United States and Spain. Who was deceived as to the purpose for which this money was to be used? No Member of this House who sat in it on the 20th day of February, 1899, was misled. He was forewarned by Mr. Dockery, who offered his defective amendment defining our policy toward the Philippine Islands and declaring it to be our intention not to corporate their inhabitants with United States citizenship. For this appropriation 219 gentlemen voted, while but 33 are recorded in the negative. The wisdom of this Congressional act has been submitted to the source of power, the American people, and has their approval. I was among those who voted for this appropriation with full knowledge of its consequences and stand ready to accept my unimportant share of the responsibility.

The Philippines offer but few inducements to the pilgrim or the plowman; but oh, what a field for a conqueror. Does the fear of an undiscovered would-be conqueror furnish an excuse for urging great armaments? No; but it presents a reason. Our ownership of his sovereignty constitutes us his protector and puts upon us the burden of bearing arms in his defense. The duty to feed and educate the Filipino carries with it the corresponding duty of protection to his home and his property, whether his rights are invaded from within or without.

I believe it to be the common understanding of all Americans that the Filipino should have the sovereignty of his islands at such time that he may be able to satisfy them of his capabilities to manage well for himself. When that time will arrive no one now living can with even reasonable certainty prophesy. I believe the people now born will have secured their passports to immortality before the Filipino will have satisfied the American people that he has sufficiently matured to stand alone. The standard which he must approach to secure his independence of us no man can with accuracy describe. While none of us expect him to Americanize, he must certainly learn to live in a social community where respect for household ties is observed before he will have reached a measure of domestication that will receive American commendation. Since the time when Christopher Columbus offered the new world to Henry VII, in their views upon the domestic relation it has been the proud boast of every American that his countrymen were in the right. Our views upon the method of civilization may have made much discord, creating new methods and offering new ideas, but upon the immutability of the nuptial tie we have always agreed.

When will the Filipino learn that obedience is the first step to self-government? Until he manifests a resignation to the law of his own land, whether made by Americans or his own people, and we are satisfied of his sincerity, his destiny is in our hands.

Whether the possession of these islands by our Government is important to us in the eastern equation should have no weight with us in the final settlement which we may make with the Filipino. We did not embrace the occasion to extend our empire; we should not consider the Filipino's wealth when the day of his independence is at hand. We can afford generosity, but never meanness. That there was an imperative reason for the acquisition of these islands is apparent in the purchase of what we had already taken by conquest. They came to us in the entirety, and when they go from us they shall be undivided. The most desolate and empty portion of the islands, along with their unopened mines of wealth, is equally entitled to our defense; not one small acre of them will be disposed of to another nation without its owner's consent.

Until the hour of his preparation is reached, when he can stand unsupported or when he can with intelligence decide between us and another, we must bear the burden of his defense and further embellish our great name by bearing it without complaint. We must not forget that we compacted by treaty with Spain, December 10, 1898, when she relinquished her sovereignty to us, to secure all the inhabitants of these islands in the free exercise of their religion and guaranteeing to all Spanish subjects therein their rights of property and the uninterrupted opportunity of carrying on such industry, commerce, or profession in which they might be at that time engaged. Shall we run from our obligations and designate another keeper to whom these defenseless people might object? Spain was satisfied with our offer of guardianship. We will not surrender it willingly or unwillingly until our dependents assent.

The example of our civilization shall be set at all times before the Filipino in the hope that barbarous conditions may disappear. The process must be slow, the American patience abundant. Has the conqueror appeared? He has not; but we intend to indefinitely delay his appearance by the conservation of our great and admittedly capable armaments. Does the proper defense of these islands furnish an excuse for our armaments?

No; but it presents a good reason. We offer lands and possessions for protection. We have traditions which neither the fear of the sword nor the proffer of gold nor the prayers of the weak will tempt us to abandon. Questions, purely American, reserved to our own keeping for our own settlement, according to our own conceptions, over which we deny the right of suggestion from others. By our armaments alone are they secured to us, not in battle, but in its postponement.

Since the father of our race, when Abraham was bidden to go to the south and was promised to be made a ruler of the land in which he might be a stranger, the human family has wandered. The Americans grow tired of looking around upon the same sameness and stray away into the recesses of forests after riches and pleasure. When they are imprisoned through the humor of a despot or held for ransom by a bandit what have we to depend upon to extend the American breastwork of influence but our sailor man in blue, with his white squadron? High-mettled fellows, with hearts of oak, they are ready to obey with or without weapons; they don't beg for protection for themselves, but for their Government, whose majesty is so cheerfully committed to them. The crossbow, the sling, the catapult, and the battering-ram will not repress the desire of him who would prevail over us. A longer-range gun than that of him whose appetite would tempt him to approach will maintain the distance between him and the object he would devour. Who is to determine the weight and extent of our armaments? The Congress. Who is to advise the Congress? Those in whose skill and attainments the Congress has confidence.

For reasons already made known to you we have been compelled to reduce the estimates submitted for our naval defense, but we have done it with great care and with a view of adding to its strength rather than adding to its size. We have reported to you only those reenforcements which our great naval experts insist are absolutely necessary to increase efficiency and maintain preparation. We should continue to arm that battles may be delayed. The fear of awful slaughter and the enormous cost attending hostile attack, with the uncertainty of results, will encourage unwillingness and prolong discussion. Make war expensive and man's selfishness will avert it rather than provoke it. All other remedies have failed. The races have concluded to employ this one.

Great Britain settled by arbitration 124 international disputes in which she was interested during the past fifty years; she had but two years of international war during the same period. While her arguments persuaded, the knowledge of her guns furnished the food for reflection. The policy of our Government is fixed, and we must not willingly set aside the influence which we should exert in coming conferences to settle the equality of national defense. That influence will be overpowering if our arms are kept brightened. It will be lost if they are decreased in numbers and capability.

When the people grow tired of the burdens which great armaments entail, their militant spirit will surrender to their cupidity, and, groaning under the fear of bankruptcy, they will demand the reduction of armaments through the mediation of international tribunals. When that great day comes we will rise to the supreme task which civilization imposes upon us and lead in the movement to diminish, but not debilitate. The weight of our word will be measured by the weight of our armaments.

Our only hope for this result lies through international agreement. Let us keep the hope constantly within us and apply ourselves diligently to this end. If the nations should engage in war and destroy every battle ship afloat, they would immediately proceed to supply them with others. Russia now presents this example. Then why fight to be rid of our armaments? Don't let us strive to wholly disarm by force or persuasion, but to reduce. No well-prepared nation can be expected to set the example, but the time can not be far in advance when they will all take the initiative. International wars will not be contemplated, but compromise expected. Each nation will retain sufficient armed force for the suppression of disorder, the maintenance of its independence, the protection of its own people and property, the enforcement of its own decrees, the settlement of its own questions, and the defense of its own traditions. All questions arising between nations will likely go to court for adjustment because of the absence of preparation for international war. The ideal state will be reached. Compulsory international arbitration is a dream, and involves complete disarmament. It is not looked for, and should not be hoped for. Man is not ready for submission that deprives him of his independence and his state of its sovereignty.

Don't let our modesty tend to an underestimation of our own importance, and don't let our official acts interrupt the humanizing influence which our nation sows broadcast throughout the world. Don't let us fritter away our opportunities in reviving theories that have proven failures. Every place where our national influence reaches quickens with life and blossoms with prosperity. Let us give our Government the armament she desires for the work she has to do, and make laws of sense which even the madman of the earth will be bound to observe. [Applause.]

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I yield twenty minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CALDER].

Mr. CALDER. Mr. Chairman, I have listened with great interest to the addresses of the distinguished gentlemen from Ohio and from Pennsylvania and subscribe heartily to the views expressed by the peace-loving Quaker from Pennsylvania.

Mr. Chairman, history informs us that during the Administration of President Monroe the people of this country were generally prosperous and contented, and we have always been pleased to refer to that time as the era of good feeling. In some degree this might be compared to the accession of President McKinley to the Presidency on March 4, 1897. The country had passed through four years of severe business depression to awaken with new hope after the result of the elections of 1896 became known.

I do not propose to enter into a discussion of the causes of this revival. We on this side of the Chamber attribute it largely to the protective tariff system, while the gentlemen on the other side contend it is the result of the great discoveries of gold and the general development of the country. The facts are that during the past nine years we have made greater strides in every phase of human existence than any other country on the face of this globe in double that period. In 1896 we were classed as the most influential nation on the North American continent; to-day we are the dominating influence in the Western Hemisphere and in the very first rank of the nations of the world, excelling all of them in our institutions of learning and our agricultural products and competing successfully in all of the markets of the world in every branch of manufacture. We are indeed a great nation.

During the past nine years we have acquired vast territory—in the West Indies, the Pacific Ocean, and in the Orient—so that to-day it may almost be said that the sun never sets on our domain. All of this has brought us new and greater responsibilities, and we are compelled, as a guaranty to the peace of the world, to make this country a great naval power.

Mr. Chairman, the bill under consideration is, in my judgment, of greater importance to the people of this country than any other measure we will be called upon to consider at this session.

Here on the floor of this House protests have been made against the expenditure of large sums of money for our naval establishment. I, for one, as long as I remain a Member of this House, will vote and use my influence for the building of a navy equal to that of Great Britain; this, as I have already said, would guarantee a lasting peace between this and the countries of the earth.

Mr. Chairman, I submit the following tables, showing the relative naval standing of the leading nations in the years 1880, 1890, 1900, and 1905:

OFFICE OF NAVAL INTELLIGENCE,
April 27, 1906.

Sea strength of the principal naval powers, 1880.

Class.	Great Britain.		France.		Russia.		Germany.
	No.	Tonnage.	No.	Tonnage.	No.	Tonnage.	No.	Tonnage.
Armored vessels	48	306,410	41	214,937	31	94,112	23	95,917
Unarmored vessels	75	132,954	67	103,424	40	49,160	24	45,102
Total	123	439,364	108	318,361	71	143,272	47	141,019

Class.	Italy.		United States.		Spain.		Japan.
	No.	Tonnage.	No.	Tonnage.	No.	Tonnage.	No.	Tonnage.
Armored vessels	13	67,913	14	27,600	7	32,165	5	10,877
Unarmored vessels	12	16,754	26	54,528	29	43,337	3	2,313
Total	25	84,667	40	82,128	36	75,502	8	13,190

Rank of principal naval powers.

Great Britain first, France second, Russia third, Germany fourth, Italy fifth, United States sixth, Spain seventh, Japan eighth.

At this date all nations were building torpedo boats, but few were completed.

See strength of the principal naval powers, 1890.

Class.	Great Britain.		France.		Russia.		Italy.		Germany.		United States.		Spain.		Austria.		Japan.
	No.	Tonnage.	No.	Tonnage.	No.	Tonnage.	No.	Tonnage.	No.	Tonnage.	No.	Tonnage.	No.	Tonnage.	No.	Tonnage.	No.	Tonnage.
Armored	72	507,490	59	348,490	40	167,122	19	143,121	26	105,721	21	48,663	7	38,683	15	65,800	6	12,437
Unarmored	182	290,269	112	161,229	57	74,628	35	55,417	42	77,396	33	73,706	43	69,921	29	40,008	21	34,191
Torpedo boat	86	4,955	125	6,100	119	4,520	60	5,000	60	5,000	1	100	14	1,464	31	2,100	20	300
Total	340	802,714	296	515,819	216	246,270	114	203,538	128	188,117	55	122,469	64	110,068	75	107,908	47	46,928

Rank of principal naval powers: Great Britain first, France second, Russia third, Italy fourth, Germany fifth, United States sixth, Spain seventh, Austria eighth, Japan ninth.

Sea strength of the principal naval powers, 1900.

Type.	Great Britain.				France.				United States.
	Built.	Tons.	Building.	Tons.	Built.	Tons.	Building.	Tons.	Built.	Tons.	Building.	Tons.
Battle ships, first class (above 9,000 tons)	45	562,470	11	154,900	19	197,920	1	12,580	9	99,830	6	78,000
Battle ships, second class, and coast-defense ironclads (below 9,000 tons)	25	142,355			25	123,725			8	35,030	4	11,020
Armored cruisers	11	71,260	14	167,600	10	63,050	11	104,000	2	17,415	6	76,500
Cruisers, protected and unprotected, not armored (above 3,000 tons)	77	446,490			22	105,495	2	7,860	18	86,300	9	43,200
Cruisers, 1,000 to 3,000 tons	72	134,615	8	11,600	17	30,250			23	32,915
Cruisers, below 1,000 tons, gunboats	55	42,870			15	8,635			3	2,530
Destroyers	108	34,920	42	12,600	55	9,085			4	1,095	16	6,695
Torpedo boats	167	7,295	2	350	228	14,245	14	1,220	23	2,400	12	2,005
Training vessels	9	6,085			9	36,175			8	25,105
Total displacement	569	1,448,360	77	347,050	400	588,580	28	125,610	98	302,650	53	217,420
Total built and building ..... tons..	646—1,795,410				428—714,190				151—520,070

Type.	Germany.				Japan.				Russia.
	Built.	Tons.	Building.	Tons.	Built.	Tons.	Building.	Tons.	Built.	Tons.	Building.	Tons.
Battle ships, first class (above 9,000 tons)	9	95,782	5	60,000	4	54,400	2	30,400	15	162,915	7	92,300
Battle ships, second-class, and coast-defense ironclads (below 9,000 tons)	26	88,920			5	17,505			19	74,490
Armored cruisers	4	35,760	2	17,740	6	51,285	1	9,850	11	82,730	1	7,800
Cruisers, protected and unprotected, not armored (above 3,000 tons)	9	49,210			10	41,485			8	46,680	8	44,860
Cruisers, 1,000 to 3,000 tons	20	38,660	3	8,400	16	27,995			19	28,875
Cruisers, below 1,000 tons, gunboats	9	8,185			13	7,540			11	6,295
Destroyers	16	5,275	8	2,800	11	3,180			25	7,215	12	3,280
Torpedo boats	132	11,498			55	3,730	11	940	186	11,240	10	900
Training vessels	10	25,610			4	2,560
Total displacement	235	358,900	18	88,940	124	209,680	14	41,190	294	420,440	38	149,140
Total built and building ..... tons..	253—447,840				138—250,870				332—569,580

Rank of principal naval powers: Great Britain first, France second, Russia third, Germany fourth, United States fifth, Japan sixth.

OFFICE OF NAVAL INTELLIGENCE, January 1, 1906.

Sea strength of the principal naval powers—Number and displacement of war ships, built and building, of 1,000 or more tons, and of torpedo craft of more than 50 tons.

Type of vessel.	Great Britain.				France.				Germany.				United States.
	Built.		Building.		Built.		Building.		Built.		Building.		Built.		Building.
	No.	Tons.	No.	Tons.	No.	Tons.	No.	Tons.	No.	Tons.	No.	Tons.	No.	Tons.	No.	Tons.
Battle ships, first class [a]	55	754,450	6	99,050	19	216,425	6	89,190	18	204,581	6	78,000	14	167,225	11	166,304
Coast-defense vessels [b]	5	43,700			17	73,273			13	68,602			12	47,445
Armored cruisers	30	313,900	13	185,100	19	158,803	5	66,360	6	55,740	2	21,660	6	72,335	6	85,360
Cruisers above 6,000 tons [c]	21	201,000			4	31,754							3	24,450	2	19,400
Cruisers, 6,000 to 3,000 tons [c]	52	224,840			18	74,476			14	63,840	6	19,650	17	61,379	3	11,250
Cruisers, 3,000 to 1,000 tons [c]	37	70,230			17	30,469			23	46,040			24	33,153
Torpedo-boat destroyers	144	54,068	18	7,510	31	9,250	23	8,650	53	20,281	6	2,478	16	6,695
Torpedo boats	91	8,150			230	21,192	75	7,120	74	9,000			30	4,820	2	468
Submarines	19	3,000	10	3,000	37	4,033	32	9,963			1	190	8	913	4	600
Total tons built and total tons building		1,673,338		294,660		619,675		181,283		466,084		121,978		418,415		283,382
Total tons built and building ..	1,967,998				800,958				588,062				701,797

[a] Battle ships, first class, are those of (about) 10,000 or more tons displacement.
[b] Includes smaller battle ships and monitors.
[c] All unarmored war ships of more than 1,000 tons are, in this table, classed according to displacement as cruisers. Scouts are considered as cruisers in which battery and protection have been sacrificed to secure extreme speed. The word "protected" has been omitted because all cruisers except the smallest and oldest now have protective decks.

Sea strength of the principal naval powers—Number and displacement of war ships, built and building, etc.—Continued.

Type of vessel.	Japan.				Italy.				Russia.				Austria.
	Built.		Building.		Built.		Building.		Built.		Building.		Built.		Building.
	No.	Tons.	No.	Tons.	No.	Tons.	No.	Tons.	No.	Tons.	No.	Tons.	No.	Tons.	No.	Tons.
Battle ships, first class[a]	9	120,240	3	52,200	13	165,969	4	50,500	8	92,429	4	57,233	1	10,600	2	21,200
Coast-defense vessels[b]	5	29,657	.....	.....	1	3,913	.....	.....	7	43,199	.....	.....	10	67,090	.....	.....
Armored cruisers	9	81,372	3	42,000	6	39,783	1	10,000	3	31,270	3	27,000	3	18,820	.....	.....
Cruisers above 6,000 tons[c]	2	13,130	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	5	33,110	3	20,025	.....	.....	.....	.....
Cruisers, 6,000 to 3,000 tons[c]	10	40,275	1	3,420	5	17,663	1	5,500	4	15,765	.....	.....	2	8,128	.....	.....
Cruisers, 3,000 to 1,000 tons[c]	10	19,774	.....	.....	12	27,107	.....	.....	7	8,760	2	3,916	7	14,250	.....	.....
Torpedo-boat destroyers	24	8,166	24	9,120	13	4,150	4	1,520	33	10,583	51	21,540	1	330	.....	.....
Torpedo boats	81	7,317	.....	.....	97	8,036	27	5,580	82	8,000	.....	.....	38	3,478	.....	.....
Submarines	9	1,200	.....	.....	1	107	5	600	13	1,485	12	1,380	.....	.....	.....	.....
Total tons built and total tons building	.....	321,131	.....	106,740	.....	266,728	.....	73,700	.....	244,601	.....	131,094	.....	122,756	.....	21,200
Total tons built and building		427,871				340,428				375,695				143,956

[a] Battle ships, first class, are those of (about) 10,000 or more tons displacement. [b] Includes smaller battle ships and monitors.

[c] All unarmored war ships of more than 1,000 tons are, in this table, classed according to displacement as cruisers. Scouts are considered as cruisers in which battery and protection have been sacrificed to secure extreme speed. The word "protected" has been omitted because all cruisers except the smallest and oldest now have protective decks.

N. B.—The following vessels are not included in the tables: Those over twenty years old, unless they have been reconstructed and rearmed; those not actually begun, although authorized; transports, colliers, repair ships, torpedo-depot ships, converted merchant vessels or yachts; vessels of less than 1,000 tons, except torpedo craft; torpedo craft of less than 50 tons.

Relative order of war-ship tonnage.

At present.		As would be the case were vessels building now completed.
Nation.	Tonnage.	Nation.	Tonnage.
Great Britain	1,673,338	Great Britain	1,967,998
France	619,675	France	800,953
Germany	466,084	United States	[a]701,797
United States	418,415	Germany	588,062
Japan	321,131	Japan	427,871
Italy	266,728	Russia	375,695
Russia	244,601	Italy	340,428
Austria	122,756	Austria	143,956

[a] This does not include the Michigan and South Carolina, battle ships of about 16,000 tons, authorized, but not building.

It will be observed that while in 1880 the United States was the sixth world power, to-day we are third, Great Britain being first and France second.

Mr. Chairman, I am going to ask the indulgence of the House for a few moments to discuss the wisdom of building war ships in the navy-yards of the country, and will incorporate in my remarks a table giving the names and character of the ships authorized by Congress and constructed since 1895, with the places where they were built, the cost, and the time consumed in their construction in excess of the time allowed in the contracts.

Vessels built since January 1, 1896, with cost and excess of contract time.

Name of vessel.	Type.	Built by—	Date of contract.	Contract date of completion.	Preliminary acceptance.	Excess over contract time.		Cost of vessel to December 31, 1905.
						Months.	Days.
Kearsarge	Battle ship	Union Iron Works, San Francisco, Cal.	Jan. 2,1896	Jan. 2,1899	Nov. 8,1899	10	5	$4,429,890.69
Kentucky	do	do	do	do	Dec. 30,1899	11	27	4,418,094.99
Illinois	do	Newport News Co., Newport News, Va.	Sept. 26,1896	Sept. 26,1899	Sept. 16,1901	23	20	4,073,429.26
Alabama	do	Wm. Cramp & Sons, Philadelphia	Sept. 24,1896	Sept. 24,1899	Oct. 22,1900	12	27	4,077,010.09
Wisconsin	do	Union Iron Works, San Francisco, Cal.	Sept. 19,1896	Sept. 19,1899	Jan. 17,1901	15	28	4,162,617.53
Dahlgren	Torpedo boat	Bath Iron Works, Bath, Me	Oct. 6,1896	Apr. 6,1898	Nov. 24,1899	19	17	200,771.07
T. A. M. Craven	do	do	do	do	Mar. 20,1900	23	13	200,722.84
Farragut	do	Union Iron Works, San Francisco, Cal.	Oct. 5,1896	Apr. 5,1898	Jan. 30,1899	9	24	246,902.23
Davis	do	Wolff & Zwicker Iron Works, Portland, Oreg.	Oct. 6,1896	Oct. 6,1897	Jan. 26,1899	15	19	97,661.97
Fox	do	do	do	do	Mar. 13,1899	17	6	100,285.93
Morris	do	Herreshoff Mfg. Co., Bristol, R. I.	do	do	May 12,1898	7	5	94,923.87
Talbot	do	Herreshoff Mfg. Co., Bristol, R. I.	Oct. 6,1896	Oct. 6,1897	Mar. 26,1898	5	19	41,863.00
Gwin	do	do	do	do	do	5	19	41,688.24
Mackenzie	do	Chas. Hillman S. & E. B. Co., Philadelphia, Pa.	Oct. 7,1896	Oct. 7,1897	Jan. 7,1899	15	.....	66,334.59
McKee	do	Columbian Iron Works, Baltimore, Md.	do	do	May 24,1898	7	16	59,003.71
Stringham	do	Harlan & Hollingsworth Co., Wilmington, Del.	July 29,1897	Jan. 29,1899	(a)	.....	.....	274,280.35
Goldsborough	do	Wolff & Zwicker Iron Works, Portland, Oreg.	July 30,1897	Jan. 30,1899	(b)	.....	.....	262,170.91
Bailey	do	Gas Engine & Power Co., Morris Heights, N. Y.	July 28,1897	Jan. 28,1899	May 29,1901	28	.....	234,299.09
Chesapeake	Training ship	Bath Iron Works, Bath, Me	Mar. 16,1898	June 16,1899	July 22,1899	1	5	357,641.96
Maine	Battle ship	Wm. Cramp & Sons, Philadelphia	Oct. 1,1898	June 1,1901	Dec. 29,1902	18	27	4,566,642.69
Missouri	do	Newport News Co., Newport News, Va.	Dec. 30,1898	Aug. 30,1901	Dec. 1,1903	27	.....	4,438,925.08
Ohio	do	Union Iron Works, San Francisco, Cal.	Oct. 5,1898	June 5,1901	Sept. 10,1904	39	4	4,475,180.32
Bainbridge	Torpedo-boat destroyer	Neafie & Levy S. & E. B. Co., Philadelphia, Pa.	Oct. 1,1898	Apr. 1,1900	Nov. 4,1902	31	2	303,900.63
Barry	do	do	do	do	Oct. 30,1902	30	28	303,389.15
Chauncey	do	do	do	do	Oct. 22,1902	30	20	303,287.48
Dale	do	Wm. R. Trigg Co., Richmond, Va.	Nov. 16,1898	May 16,1900	July 17,1902	26	.....	278,990.25
Decatur	do	do	do	do	Apr. 1,1902	22	15	276,038.01
Hopkins	do	Harlan & Hollingsworth Co., Wilmington, Del.	Oct. 19,1898	Apr. 19,1900	May 27,1903	37	7	313,350.79
Hull	do	do	do	do	Mar. 18,1903	34	26	318,316.05

[a] Forfeited to Government Nov. 27, 1903. [b] Forfeited to Government Jan. 21, 1902.

Vessels built since January 1, 1896, with cost and excess of contract time—Continued.

Name of vessel.	Type.	Built by—	Date of contract.	Contract date of completion.	Preliminary acceptance.	Excess over contract time.		Cost of vessel to December 31, 1905.
						Months.	Days.
Lawrence	Torpedo-boat destroyer.	Fore River S. B. Co., Quincy, Mass.	Dec. 3,1898	Apr. 3,1900	Apr. 7,1903	36	3	$296,659.77
MacDonough	do	do	do	May 3,1900	July 3,1903	38		297,023.98
Paul Jones	do	Union Iron Works, San Francisco, Cal.	Oct. 5,1898	Apr. 5,1900	July 19,1902	27	13	301,279.01
Perry	do	do	do	do	May 31,1902	25	25	303,390.47
Preble	do	do	do	do	June 21,1902	26	15	302,882.71
Stewart	do	Gas Engine and Power Co., Morris Heights, N. Y.	Sept. 30,1898	Feb. 28,1900	Nov. 14,1902	32	16	299,877.30
Truxtun	do	Maryland Steel Co., Sparrows Point, Md.	Oct. 4,1898	Apr. 4,1900	Aug. 16,1902	28	11	304,537.10
Whipple	do	do	do	do	Oct. 9,1902	30	4	303,754.39
Worden	do	do	do	do	Oct. 17,1902	30	12	303,301.00
Bagley	Torpedo boat	Bath Iron Works, Bath, Me	Oct. 19,1898	Oct. 19,1899	June 12,1901	19	23	166,065.40
Barney	do	do	do	do	May 31,1901	19	11	165,752.26
Biddle	do	do	do	do	Aug. 5,1901	21	16	165,804.01
Blakely	do	Geo. Lawley & Sons, South Boston, Mass.	Sept. 27,1898	Sept. 27,1899	Sept. 14,1904	59	17	182,105.02
De Long	do	do	do	do	Aug. 11,1902	34	14	174,810.88
Nicholson	do	Lewis Nixon, Elizabeth, N. J	Sept. 26,1898	Sept. 26,1899	(a)			202,193.49
O'Brien	do	do	do	do	(a)			215,688.26
Shubrick	do	Wm. R. Trigg Co., Richmond, Va.	Nov. 16,1898	Nov. 16,1899	May 31,1901	18	14	145,299.20
Stockton	do	do	do	do	Jan. 18,1901	14	1	137,729.64
Thornton	do	do	do	do	Apr. 1,1902	28	15	144,425.90
Tingey	do	Columbian Iron Works, Baltimore, Md.	Oct. 1,1898	Oct. 1,1899	Dec. 15,1903	50	13	196,707.65
Wilkes	do	Gas Engine and Power Co., Morris Heights, N. Y.	Sept. 30,1898	Sept. 30,1899	July 27,1902	33	26	162,057.07
Plunger	Submarine torpedo boat	Holland Torpedo Boat Co., New York, N. Y.	Nov. 19,1900	Oct. 19,1901	June 24,1903	20	4	196,034.45
Adder	do	do	Aug. 25,1900	Apr. 25,1901	Jan. 9,1903	20	14	173,657.80
Grampus	do	do	do	do	May 11,1903	24	15	173,364.35
Moccasin	do	do	do	May 25,1901	Jan. 13,1903	19	18	173,671.04
Pike	do	do	do	do	May 11,1903	23	15	173,288.41
Porpoise	do	do	do	June 25,1901	June 24,1903	23	29	171,843.44
Shark	do	do	do	July 25,1901	do	22	29	171,431.34
Denver	Cruiser	Neafie & Levy S. and E. B. Co., Philadelphia, Pa.	Dec. 14,1899	June 14,1902	May 5,1904	22	20	1,135,853.66
Des Moines	do	Fore River S. B. Co., Quincy, Mass.	do	do	Mar. 5,1904	20	19	1,156,256.68
Chattanooga	do	Lewis Nixon, Elizabeth, N. J	Dec. 14,1899	June 14,1902	(a)			1,377,717.78
Galveston	do	Wm. R. Trigg Co., Richmond, Va.	do	do	(b)			1,426,111.45
Tacoma	do	Union Iron Works, San Francisco, Cal.	do	do	Jan. 18,1904	19	3	1,113,395.45
Cleveland	do	Bath Iron Works, Bath, Me	do	do	Oct. 29,1903	16	14	1,098,320.33
Pennsylvania	Armored cruiser	Wm. Cramp & Sons, Philadelphia, Pa.	Jan. 10,1901	Jan. 10,1904	Mar. 9,1905	13	26	4,819,696.37
Colorado	do	do	do	do	Jan. 10,1905	12		4,792,510.44
West Virginia	do	Newport News Co., Newport News, Va.	Jan. 24,1901	Jan. 24,1904	Feb. 23,1905	12	29	4,725,920.90
Maryland	do	do	do	do	Apr. 18,1905	14	24	4,744,771.71
Charleston	Cruiser	do	Mar. 30,1901	Mar. 30,1904	Aug. 31,1905	17		3,081,073.76
Rhode Island	Battle ship	Fore River S. B. Co., Quincy, Mass.	Feb. 15,1901	Feb. 15,1904	Feb. 12,1906	24	2	5,060,935.00
Dubuque	Gunboat	Gas Engine and Power Co., Morris Heights, N. Y.	May 29,1903	Nov. 29,1904	May 31,1905	6	1	322,999.67
Paducah	do	do	July 6,1903	Mar. 6,1905	Aug. 31,1905	5	24	361,094.08
Boxer	Training brig	Navy-Yard, Portsmouth, N. H.	(c)	(c)	(c)			94,703.14
Arkansas	Monitor	Newport News Co., Newport News, Va.	Oct. 11,1898	Mar. 11,1901	Sept. 8,1902	17	27	$1,413,962.99
Nevada	do	Bath Iron Works, Bath, Me	Oct. 19,1898	Mar. 19,1901	Mar. 5,1903	23	13	1,396,488.61
Florida	do	Lewis Nixon, Elizabeth, N. J	do	do	do	23	13	1,306,992.73
Wyoming	do	Union Iron Works, San Francisco, Cal.	Oct. 5,1898	Mar. 5,1901	Dec. 1,1902	20	25	1,372,093.16

(a) Forfeited to Government Aug. 14, 1903.
(b) Forfeited to Government May 14, 1903.
(c) Was begun at the navy-yard May 12, 1903. Construction period fixed as ending July, 1904, and reported completed May, 1905. Cost of vessel to December 31, 1905, furnished by the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts.

It will be observed that of the seventy-seven vessels included in this list only one—the training ship Boxer—was constructed at a Government yard, and every single one of them exceeded the contract time allowance, some as much as four years and very few less than two years. I also submit a list of the ships authorized by Congress and now being constructed in private yards:

Vessels building under contract.

Name.	By whom building.	Estimate of—		Contract time.	Expiration of contract time.
		Degree of completion July 1, 1905.	Probable date of completion.
BATTLE SHIPS.		Per cent.		Months.
Virginia	Newport News Shipbuilding and Dry Dock Company	89.7	Feb. 1,1906	36	Feb. 15,1904
Nebraska	Moran Brothers Company	75.0	Sept. 6,1906	36	Mar. 7,1904
Georgia	Bath Iron Works	82.6	May 6,1906	36	Feb. 18,1904
New Jersey	Fore River Shipbuilding Company	86.2	Mar. 18,1906	36	Feb. 15,1904
Rhode Island	do	88.8	Feb. 3,1906	36	Do.
Louisiana	Newport News Shipbuilding and Dry Dock Company	80.7	June 15,1906	41	Mar. 15,1906
Vermont	Fore River Shipbuilding Company	53.6	May 12,1907	42	Dec. 20,1906
Kansas	New York Shipbuilding Company	55.1	Jan. 27,1907	42	Dec. 16,1906
Minnesota	Newport News Shipbuilding and Dry Dock Company	68.0	Dec. 20,1906	42	Dec. 20,1906
Mississippi	Wm. Cramp & Sons	31.2	Mar. 25,1907	38	Mar. 25,1907
Idaho	do	29.5	May 25,1907	40	May 25,1907
New Hampshire	New York Shipbuilding Company	11.2	Feb. 27,1908	38	Feb. 27,1908
ARMORED CRUISERS.
California	Union Iron Works	78.3	Aug. 1,1906	36	Jan. 10,1904
South Dakota	do	76.1	Sept. 1,1906	36	Do.
Tennessee	Wm. Cramp & Sons	79.4	Aug. 9,1906	42	Aug. 9,1906
Washington	New York Shipbuilding Company	79.1	Aug. 10,1906	42	Aug. 10,1906
North Carolina	Newport News Shipbuilding and Dry Dock Company	9.1	Jan. 3,1908	36	Jan. 3,1908
Montana	do	7.9	Jan. 15,1908	36	Do.

Vessels building under contract—Continued.

Name.	By whom building	Estimate of—		Contract.	Expiration of contract time.
		Degree of completion July 1, 1905.	Probable date of completion.
PROTECTED CRUISERS.		Per cent.		Months.
St. Louis	Neafie & Levy Shipbuilding Company	67.4	July 30, 1906	36	Mar. 11, 1904
Milwaukee	Union Iron Works	75.2	Oct. 17, 1906	36	Apr. 17, 1904
Charleston	Newport News Shipbuilding and Dry Dock Company	97.0	Aug. 31, 1906	36	Mar. 30, 1904
SCOUT CRUISERS.
Chester	Bath Iron Works		May 4, 1908	36	May 4, 1908
Birmingham	Fore River Shipbuilding Company		Nov. 17, 1907	30	Nov. 17, 1907
Salem	do		Mar. 17, 1908	34	Mar. 17, 1908
TORPEDO BOATS (SUBMARINE).
No. 9	Electric Boat Company		Sept. 6, 1906	12	Sept. 6, 1906
No. 10	do		do	12	Do.
No. 11	do		Sept. 18, 1906	12	Sept. 18, 1906
No. 12	do		do	12	Do.

With the exception of the Louisiana, I am advised that the time consumed in the building of these ships will exceed the time limit of the contracts.

I also submit a list of the ships now being constructed, or authorized to be constructed in the navy-yards of the country:

Vessels building at navy-yards.

Name.	Where building.	Estimate of—		Constructional period.	Expiration of constructional period.
		Degree of completion July 1, 1905.	Probable date of completion.
BATTLE SHIP.		Per cent.		Months.
Connecticut	Navy-yard, New York	80.7	June 15, 1906	41	Mar. 15, 1906
TRAINING SHIPS.
Cumberland [a]	Navy-yard, Boston	95.0		20	May 1, 1905
Intrepid [a]	Navy-yard, Mare Island, Cal.	97.5		20	Do.
COLLIERS.
Vestal [b]	Navy-yard, New York
Prometheus [c]	Navy-yard, Mare Island, Cal.

[a] Work suspended pending Congressional action as to additional appropriations to complete. [b] Formerly Erie. [c] Formerly Ontario.

It will be observed that of the ships now being constructed and excluding the colliers only three out of thirty-one are being built in the navy-yards, and a total of 4 out of the 108 ships authorized in the past ten years, so that it surely can not be said that these great Government plants, constructed and maintained at a large cost to the Government, are getting more than they are entitled to.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the only means of comparison we have in this matter is in the battle ships Connecticut and Louisiana. These vessels were authorized at the first session of the Fifty-seventh Congress. The Louisiana is being constructed by the Newport News Shipbuilding and Dry Dock Company and the Connecticut in the navy-yard at Brooklyn, N. Y. The limit of cost for each, exclusive of armament and armor, was fixed at $4,212,000. Both are now practically completed, and for the first time in battle-ship construction will be finished within the time limit. This is the result of the pace set by the navy-yard and the determination of the Newport News people not to be beaten. The facts are that vessels contracted for with the Newport News Company one year before the Louisiana are not as far advanced.

It has been argued that we should not have another battle ship built at a navy-yard, for the reason that it costs more to construct. What are the facts?

The cost of the Connecticut and Louisiana up to December 31, 1905, including armor, was: Connecticut, $5,374,000.54; Louisiana, $5,185,655.01, a difference of less than 2 per cent.

I observe that the bill under consideration carries with it a provision to increase the limit of the cost of the Connecticut $400,000, while I am not prepared to admit it will cost that much more than the Louisiana. For argument's sake, granting it to be so, it would only mean a matter of 9½ per cent; this is infinitely less than the figures submitted when the bill authorizing the construction of these vessels was under consideration in the Fifty-seventh Congress, at which time the statement was made by the chairman of the Naval Committee, on the authority of the then Naval Constructor Admiral Bowles, that it would cost from 25 to 50 per cent more to build at the navy-yards.

Permit me to quote the figures relating to certain alterations in these two vessels, the result of an inquiry by my colleague [Mr. FITZGERALD], and contained in House Document No. 539, which show that the alteration in the plans of the Connecticut cost $112,009, while in the Louisiana they cost $132,986.

Now, Mr. Chairman, as a matter of good governmental policy, is it not best that we should make it a fixed rule to have this construction of vessels continue without interruption in the navy-yards of the country, even if it does cost slightly more to build them there than in private yards?

I am going to cite the yard at Brooklyn, N. Y.

How many Members of this House have visited; or, I might ask, how many members of the Committee on Naval Affairs have visited it? It is the largest and best equipped of any of the Government yards, and will compare with the private yards of the country. It covers 118.77 acres of land, and 59.05 acres are under water; it has three dry docks, and is constructing a fourth; it can float, and is equipped to construct, any vessel Congress will authorize; the land occupied by the yard is valued by the Government at $12,354,000, although actually worth $20,000,000, and the buildings, docks, machinery, etc., exclusive of tools, is valued at $11,578,489. Located in the heart of the great city of New York, with its magnificent harbor and unequaled railroad facilities, it is easily the best fitted for the largest shipbuilding plant in the world.

We were compelled, in the construction of the Connecticut, to create an organization for the purpose of building this ship. It was our first effort; much time and money was lost in preliminaries. Our organization is still intact. It will not now be an experimental matter, and I will venture the statement that in our next undertaking, even considering the fact that at the navy-yard our men work eight hours a day against ten hours in the private yards, we will be able to keep the difference in cost down to a very small figure, if not equal that of the private yards.

This is a great country; we have a great Navy, and will have a still larger one. Is it not best that, on the Atlantic seaboard, we should have at least one Government plant equipped for any emergency at a moment's notice, with men of the greatest skill, to handle any naval proposition the Government might be called upon to face? [Loud applause.]

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri raises the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend and revise my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. It is doubtful if the committee will have authority to grant permission until first ascertaining whether a quorum is present or not.

Mr. FOSS. I will say to the gentleman from Missouri I am going to move that the committee rise.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, the chairman of the committee says that he is going to move that the commitee rise, and therefore I withdraw the point.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CRUMPACKER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 18750—the naval appropriation bill—and had instructed him to report that it had come to no resolution thereon.

SCHOOL SALARIES IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. WANGER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent to print a brief statement in the RECORD in connection with the bill H. R. 18442, which is on the Calendar of unfinished business.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to print a statement in the RECORD in connection with the bill H. R. 18442. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is this in relation to the bill to reorganize the schools?

Mr. WANGER. Yes, sir. It is in relation to the bill to fix and regulate the salaries of teachers, school officers, and other employees of the board of education of the District of Columbia.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does the gentleman want to debate it now?

Mr. WANGER. No. I asked to print in the RECORD a brief statement relative to librarians in the United States, so that it may be considered.

The statement referred to is as follows:

PUBLIC EDUCATION ASSOCIATION,
Washington, D. C., May 1, 1906.

To the Representatives in the Congress of the United States.

GENTLEMEN: On pages 5867 to 5868 in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for April 23 it appears that the questions of librarians in the public schools is laid over for the consideration of the individual Members of Congress.

The Public Education Association would therefore respectfully submit to you the following facts and suggestions showing the value which is placed upon school librarians in nearly every State in the Union. (See tabulated statement attached—Table I.)

A library is an absolutely necessary educational tool in every high school or central county school. Children who are not trained in the use of reference books and not taught to search for literary sources, general and special, will soon after they leave school sink back into ignorance. The people and the teachers, as well as the educational authorities, have recognized this importance by establishing numerous school libraries and appointing librarians for their successful use. There are now in the United States as many as 6,656 school libraries. There are, in fact, more school libraries than public institutions of that kind in this country. (See Table III.) In most of these school libraries professional librarians are employed. Where that is not the case, one of the teachers of the school performs these duties.

For further, more minute information we take the liberty of referring you to the annual report for 1903 of the United States Commissioner of Education. That record is replete with most interesting information on public school libraries in the United States. (See pp. 759–1017.)

Table II is a list of public school libraries of the District of Columbia in the order of the date of their foundation. It will be seen that they are not of recent growth, but have proved their value and should be fostered by the just and beneficent wisdom of Congress.

We respectfuly urge that the request of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia and of the board of education (H. R. 8472, p. 2, lines 21 to 22; and H. R. 18442, p. 6, lines 7 and 8) for specific salary provision for teachers and high school librarians be granted.

Respectfully,

GERTRUDE B. DARWIN,
Secretary of the Association.

TABLE I.—Public school librarians in the United States.

State or Territory.	Normal.	High.	Elementary.
Alabama	3	-------	-------
Arizona	1	-------	-------
Arkansas	-------	2	-------
California	6	10	45
Colorado	1	5	5
Connecticut	2	7	1
Delaware	-------	-------	1
District of Columbia	1	5	-------
Florida	-------	-------	-------
Georgia	2	1	1
Illinois	5	21	13
Indiana	3	10	7
Indian Territory	-------	-------	-------
Iowa	2	5	16
Kansas	2	12	6
Kentucky	1	2	-------
Louisiana	2	4	2
Maine	2	1	1
Maryland	1	1	1
Massachusetts	3	14	6
Michigan	5	17	31
Minnesota	4	14	19
Mississippi	1	3	1
Missouri	4	5	15
Montana	1	2	-------
Nebraska	3	4	3
Nevada	-------	1	-------
New Hampshire	-------	1	-------
New Jersey	2	6	13
New Mexico	1	-------	-------
New York	9	118	54
North Carolina	2	3	-------
North Dakota	2	1	3
Ohio	-------	7	26
Oklahoma	2	-------	-------
Oregon	1	-------	-------
Pennsylvania	12	11	19
Rhode Island	1	-------	1
South Dakota	2	-------	3
Tennessee	-------	-------	1
Texas	1	4	2
Utah	-------	-------	1
Vermont	-------	1	1
Virginia	2	-------	1
Washington	2	2	1
West Virginia	2	1	-------
Wisconsin	7	18	14
Wyoming	-------	1	1

NOTE.—In the above table are not included public school librarians having charge of less than 1,000 books.

The above table has been compiled with painstaking accuracy by the Public Education Association of Washington, D. C., from the official statistics of 1903 of the United States Bureau of Education. In the last three years the growth in the number of public school librarians has been marked, as this necessary branch of public school equipment was recognized and developed, but the latest statistics are not available at this date.

TABLE II.—Public school libraries in the District of Columbia, 1903.

Name.	Founded.	Volumes.
Curtis School (Peabody Library)	1873	9,000
Central High School	1880	6,200
Business High School	1890	1,000
M Street High School	1890	2,370
Western High School	1891	1,100
Eastern High School	1892	2,480
Teachers' library (normal school)	1895	10,000

TABLE III.—Public school libraries in the United States.

State or Territory.	Schools.	Volumes.
United States	6,656	4,107,086
North Atlantic division	1,493	1,268,179
South Atlantic division	401	180,273
South Central division	573	228,632
North Central division	3,778	2,171,172
Western division	411	258,830
North Atlantic division:
Maine	122	29,822
New Hampshire	47	14,407
Vermont	61	20,631
Massachusetts	224	139,353
Rhode Island	19	14,226
Connecticut	75	65,307
New York	406	635,360
New Jersey	99	83,479
Pennsylvania	440	265,594
South Atlantic division:
Delaware	11	2,588
Maryland	53	24,443
District of Columbia	6	7,951
Virginia	39	12,098
West Virginia	38	26,404
North Carolina	35	26,064

TABLE III.—Public school libraries in the United States—Continued.

State or Territory.	Schools.	Volumes.
South Atlantic division—Continued.
South Carolina	69	24,873
Georgia	110	43,705
Florida	40	12,177
South Central division:
Kentucky	70	33,393
Tennessee	58	17,031
Alabama	46	19,293
Mississippi	68	26,272
Louisiana	32	22,759
Texas	236	86,437
Arkansas	41	15,616
Oklahoma	19	6,981
Indian Territory	3	850
North Central division:
Ohio	733	365,188
Indiana	530	273,824
Illinois	392	220,867
Michigan	359	209,592
Wisconsin	224	200,892
Minnesota	153	174,294
Iowa	342	202,765
Missouri	302	153,761
North Dakota	37	22,752
South Dakota	87	39,022
Nebraska	338	87,006
Kansas	281	131,209
Western division:
Montana	25	15,716
Wyoming	10	4,903
Colorado	55	61,866
New Mexico	9	8,715
Arizona	4	2,350
Utah	10	5,505
Nevada	9	3,610
Idaho	13	7,933
Washington	78	36,709
Oregon	62	22,058
California	136	89,485

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a letter from the Secretary of the Interior submitting an estimate of appropriation for reproducing plats of surveys destroyed at San Francisco—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Navy submitting an estimate of appropriation for arms, equipage, etc., of the Marine Corps, to replace similar articles destroyed at San Francisco—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a letter from the Acting Secretary of War submitting an estimate of appropriation for State and Territorial homes for disabled soldiers and sailors—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a letter from the Attorney-General submitting an estimate of appropriation for jails in Alaska—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a letter from the Secretary of the Interior submitting an estimate of appropriation for rent of temporary offices for the General Land Office—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report of examination and survey of the harbor and approaches to St. Louis, Mo.—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. MANN, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 5890) to authorize the South and Western Railroad Company to construct bridges across the Clinch River and the Holston River, in the States of Virginia and Tennessee, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3793); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 5891) to authorize the South and Western Railway Company to construct bridges across the Clinch River and the Holston River, in the States of Virginia and Tennessee, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3794); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. LITTLE, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 18328), to regulate the practice in certain civil and criminal cases in the western district of Arkansas, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3795); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. ADAMSON, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 18532) to authorize the Kansas City, St. Joseph and Excelsior Springs Railway Company to construct a bridge across the Missouri River, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3796); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill of the House H. R. 18436, reported in lieu thereof a bill (H. R. 18964) to define and limit the immunity provisions of the Statutes of the United States, accompanied by a report (No. 3797); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. GROSVENOR, from the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 5572) to amend section 4348 of the Revised Statutes, establishing great coasting districts of the United States, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3798); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

Mr. HOPKINS, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 394) granting an increase of pension to Amanda Lucas, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3720); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. HOLLIDAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 442) granting an increase of pension to Francis Colton, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3721); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. HOPKINS, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 522) granting an increase of pension to Emma Worrall, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3722); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. DIXON of Indiana, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 557) granting an increase of pension to Mariot Losure, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3723); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. WEISSE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 678) granting an increase of pension to Albert Butler, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3724); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 869) granting an increase of pension to Baltzar Mowan, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3725); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. DIXON of Indiana, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 993) granting an increase of pension to Samuel J. Langdon, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3726); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 1508) granting an increase of pension to James A. Murch, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3727); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. WEISSE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 1513) granting an increase of pension to Harriett A. Rawles, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3728); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. EDWARDS, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 1705) granting an increase of pension to Lewis S. George, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3729); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. FULLER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 2043) granting an increase of pension to Andrew H. Wolf, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3730); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. CHAPMAN, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 2467) granting an increase of pension to Martin Clark, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3731); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. DIXON of Indiana, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 2851) granting an increase of pension to George Chambers, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3732); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. CHANEY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 2978) granting an increase of pension to Eli W. Knowles, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3733); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. BRADLEY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 3033) granting an increase of pension to Aaron F. Patten, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3734); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. CHAPMAN, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 3040) granting a pension to Mary C. Wilsey, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3735); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. EDWARDS, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 3219) granting an increase of pension to Joseph M. Allison, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3736); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. DEEMER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 3271) granting an increase of pension to Margarette E. Brown, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3737); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. CHANEY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 3299) granting an increase of pension to Spencer C. Stilwill, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3738); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 3483) granting an increase of pension to William L. Sheaff, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3739); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 3485) granting an increase of pension to Mathias Hammes, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3740); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 3797) granting an increase of pension to Ahimaaz E. Wood, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3741); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 3798) granting an increase of pension to Charles Farrel, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3742); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 4005) granting an increase of pension to Michael Quill, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3743); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. DIXON of Indiana, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 4048) granting an increase of pension to Henry S. Knecht, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3744); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SULLOWAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 4175) granting an increase of pension to John Caverly, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3745); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 4177) granting an increase of pension to Harlan P. Cobb, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3746); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. DIXON of Indiana, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 4239) granting an increase of pension to Job Rice, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3747); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. HOLLIDAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 4358) granting an increase of pension to Thomas McCormick, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3748); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 4361) granting an increase of pension to John W. Daley, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3749); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. BRADLEY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 4401) granting an increase of pension to George W. Tomlinson, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3750); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. HOLLIDAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 4457) granting an increase of pension to Louis A. Tyson, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3751); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. CHANEY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 4460) granting an increase of pension to Ann J. Thompson, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3752); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. HOLLIDAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 4525) granting an increase of pension to David Oglevie, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3753); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. CHANEY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 5247) granting an increase of pension to Jacob Wigal, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3754); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. HOLLIDAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 5163) granting an increase of pension to John Marah, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3755); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. CHANEY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 5082) granting an increase of pension to David N. Winsell, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3756); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. DEEMER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 5054) granting an increase of pension to George H. Woodard, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3757); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. DIXON of Indiana, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 4796) granting an increase of pension to Lorinda J. White, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3758); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. HOLLIDAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 4752) granting an increase of pension to Thomas J. Tidswell, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3759); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 4718) granting an increase of pension to George W. Gilson, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3760); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. CHANEY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 4692) granting an increase of pension to Adaline M. Thornton, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3761); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. DEEMER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 4665) granting an increase of pension to Lewis Du Bois, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3762); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. HOLLIDAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 4569) granting an increase of pension to Augustus A. Nevins, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3763); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. DIXON of Indiana, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 5343) granting an increase of pension to Ernest H. Wardwell, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3764); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SULLOWAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 5259) granting an increase of pension to William H. Ward, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3765); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. WEISSE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 5379) granting an increase of pension to Otto A. Risum, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3766); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SULLOWAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 5492) granting an increase of pension to Joseph F. Tebbetts, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3767); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. HOLLIDAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 5504) granting an increase of pension to Joseph Dickson, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3768); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. DIXON of Indiana, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 5516) granting an increase of pension to Alfred M. Hamlen, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3769); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 5522) granting an increase of pension to Charles E. Sischo, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3770); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. HOLLIDAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 5523) granting an increase of pension to Thomas J. Pickett, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3771); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. CHANEY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 5532) granting an increase of pension to Simon A. Snyder, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3772); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. WEISSE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 5539) granting an increase of pension to Hermann Muehlberg, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3773); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. CHANEY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 5562) granting an increase of pension to John Hull, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3774); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SULLOWAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 5571) granting an increase of pension to Betsey B. Whitmore, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3775); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. KELIHER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 5579) granting an increase of pension to Henry T. Sisson, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3776); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SULLOWAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 5603) granting a pension to Kate S. Hutchings, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3777); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. HOLLIDAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 5631) granting an increase of pension to Isaac M. Howard, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3778); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. WEISSE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 5640) granting an increase of pension to Clinton B. Wintersteen, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3779); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SULLOWAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 5641) granting an increase of pension to John W. Fletcher, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3780); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. DEEMER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 5658) granting an increase of pension to Nancy Pruit, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3781); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. WEISSE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 5668) granting an increase of pension to George P. Sealey, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3782); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SULLOWAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 5671) granting an increase of pension to Richard L. Delong, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3783); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. DIXON of Indiana, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 5673) granting an increase of pension to Hilton Springsteed, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3784); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. DEEMER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 5680) granting an increase of pension to Thomas J. Bowser, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3785); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SULLOWAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 5702) granting an increase of pension to Anna C. Bingham, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3786); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 5704) granting an increase of pension to Ruth P. Pierce, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3787); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 5735) granting an increase of pension to Andrew D. Danley, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3788); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 5736) granting an increase of pension to Mary Clark, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3789); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. DIXON of Indiana, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 5754) granting a pension to Hannah McCarty, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3790); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. WEISSE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 5780) granting a pension to Lorenzo E. Johnson, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3791); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SULLOWAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 4983) granting an increase of pension to John M. Farquhar, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3792); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BARTHOLDT: A bill (H. R. 18960) to revise and amend the statutes relating to patents—to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. ESCH: A bill (H. R. 18961) to promote the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads by limiting the hours of service of employees thereon—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. MOON of Tennessee: A bill (H. R. 18962) to authorize the Secretary of War to grant a permit to construct and operate an electric railway through the Chattanooga and Chickamauga National Military Park—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. JONES of Washington: A bill (H. R. 18963) authorizing the construction of a dam across the Pend d'Oreille River, in the State of Washington, by the Pend d'Oreille Development Company, for the development of water power, electrical power, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. LITTLEFIELD, from the Committee on the Judiciary: A bill (H. R. 18964) to define and limit the immunity provisions of the Statutes of the United States—to the House Calendar.

By Mr. SOUTHWICK: A resolution (H. Res. 418) authorizing the Clerk of the House to pay to certain House employees a specified sum of money—to the Committee on Accounts.

By Mr. LITTLEFIELD: A resolution (H. Res. 419) authorizing the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Agriculture to make an examination into the expenditures of that Department—to the Committee on Accounts.

By Mr. GREGG: A resolution (H. Res. 420) asking the Secretary of State for information in regard to the seizure of the fishing schooner Lizzie B. Adams, and the arrest and imprisonment of her crew—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. McLAIN: A memorial from the legislature of the State of Mississippi memorializing the Congress of the United States to endeavor to create a broader market for cotton and cotton goods—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ALEXANDER: A bill (H. R. 18965) to correct the naval record of George W. Bone—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. BARTLETT: A bill (H. R. 18966) granting a pension to John W. Ward—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BEIDLER: A bill (H. R. 18967) granting an increase of pension to Daniel W. Brumbaugh—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BELL of Georgia: A bill (H. R. 18968) granting a pension to Vance Perkins—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BENNET of New York: A bill (H. R. 18969) granting an increase of pension to Herman Hagemiller—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BONYNGE: A bill (H. R. 18970) granting a pension to William A. Johnson—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 18971) granting a pension to Alice Norton—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 18972) granting an increase of pension to Vinton G. Holliday—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BOUTELL: A bill (H. R. 18973) granting a pension to William Steers—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 18974) granting an increase of pension to Minna Hildebrand—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. COCKS: A bill (H. R. 18975) granting an increase of pension to William S. Myton—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CURRIER: A bill (H. R. 18976) granting an increase of pension to Nelson S. Preston—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CURTIS: A bill (H. R. 18977) granting an increase of pension to James Mulligan—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 18978) granting an increase of pension to Charles A. Goodwin—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 18979) granting an increase of pension to Ophelia C. Baldwin—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 18980) granting an increase of pension to John Durner—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 18981) granting an increase of pension to N. E. Murphy—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 18982) granting an increase of pension to Timothy O'Neil—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DAVIDSON: A bill (H. R. 18983) granting an increase of pension to Nathan B. Prentice—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DAVIS of West Virginia: A bill (H. R. 18984) for the relief of James H. Hooe—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 18985) granting a pension to Samuel T. Jones, alias Thomas Jenkins—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. DWIGHT: A bill (H. R. 18986) granting an increase of pension to Manning Austin—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FASSETT: A bill (H. R. 18987) granting an increase of pension to Augustus K. Ryno—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FORDNEY: A bill (H. R. 18988) granting an increase of pension to Giles E. Fellows—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 18989) granting an increase of pension to Henry B. Peacock—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GAINES of Tennessee: A bill (H. R. 18990) for the relief of the Fykes Grove Primitive Baptist Church, of Sulphur Fork, Robertson County, Tenn.—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. GREENE: A bill (H. R. 18991) granting an increase of pension to Catherine Cochrane—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 18992) granting an increase of pension to George H. Rock—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 18993) granting an increase of pension to James Shaw—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GUDGER: A bill (H. R. 18994) for the relief of G. B. Poteet, administrator of the estate of Aguilla Swann, deceased—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. HASKINS: A bill (H. R. 18995) granting a pension to Lucy Skinner—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. JONES of Virginia: A bill (H. R. 18996) for the relief of the estate of Robert R. Berry, deceased—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. LEVER: A bill (H. R. 18997) granting an increase of pension to Josephine Hardester—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. LITTLEFIELD: A bill (H. R. 18998) granting an increase of pension to Robert Hanly, 2d—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LIVINGSTON: A bill (H. R. 18999) granting an increase of pension to Harry C. McCool—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. McLAIN: A bill (H. R. 19000) for the relief of the estate of Emanuel M. Solari, deceased—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 19001) granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth A. McKay—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. MACON: A bill (H. R. 19002) to correct the military record of Thomas P. Allmond—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. MAHON: A bill (H. R. 19003) for the allowance of certain claims for stores and supplies reported by the Court of Claims under the provisions of the act approved March 3, 1883, and commonly known as the Bowman Act, and to provide for the payment of French spoliation claims recommended by the Court of Claims, under the provisions of the acts approved January 20, 1885, and March 3, 1891, and for other purposes—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. MOON of Tennessee: A bill (H. R. 19004) granting a pension to Sarah J. Watson, or Hunter—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 19005) granting a pension to Gideon M. Burriss—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. PUJO: A bill (H. R. 19006) for the relief of Adolph Hartiens, tutor—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. REYNOLDS: A bill (H. R. 19007) granting an increase of pension to John C. Sparks—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 19008) granting an increase of pension to Stacy Hoon—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. RHINOCK: A bill (H. R. 19009) granting an increase of pension to Lafayette H. McClung—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SLEMP: A bill (H. R. 19010) granting an increase of pension to Charles Edwards—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH: A bill (H. R. 19011) granting an increase of pension to E. K. Childs—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 19012) granting an increase of pension to A. P. Glaspie—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 19013) granting an increase of pension to Charles F. Robinson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SOUTHWICK: A bill (H. R. 19014) granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth A. Waller—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WELBORN: A bill (H. R. 19015) for the relief of the heirs of J. A. J. Rooker, deceased, and James Deatherage, administrator of estate of deceased—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 19016) granting a pension to Mary Wehrmann—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, the following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. ACHESON: Petition of the Methodist Protestant Church of New Brighton, Pa., for Sunday closing of the Jamestown Exposition—to the Select Committee on Industral Arts and Expositions.

By Mr. BARTHOLDT: Petition of citizens, against conditions existing in the Kongo Free State—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. BELL of Georgia: Paper to accompany bill for relief of John S. Dillard—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, paper to accompany bill for relief of Swinfield Stanley—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BENNET of New York: Paper to accompany bill for relief of William Winslow Bennett—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, paper to accompany bill for relief of Herman Hage Miller—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BUTLER: Petition of G. Albert Hinksay, Louis A. Green, and Grange No. 851, for the pure-food bill—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. CURRIER: Petition of citizens of the State of New Hampshire, against bill S. 529 (the ship-subsidy bill)—to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

By Mr. DRISCOLL: Petition of citizens of New York, against religious legislation in the District of Columbia—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. FOSTER of Vermont: Petition of the Amalgamated Association of Street and Electric Railway Employees of America, for retention of the present Chinese-exclusion law—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. FULLER: Petition of the Negro Development and Exposition Company of the United States of America, for an appropriation relative to said company's exhibit at the Jamestown Exposition—to the Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions.

Also, petition of S. R. Taber, against bill S. 5538, relative to superintendence of Indian affairs in Alaska—to the Committee on the Territories.

Also, petition of the Society for Political Study, of New York City, for bills S. 50 and H. R. 4462 (the child-labor bills)—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. GAINES of Tennessee: Paper to accompany bill for relief of the Fykes Grove Primitive Baptist Church—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey: Petitions of Fames, Linwood, Social, Goshen, Harmony, Beach, American Star, Purity, Tuckahoe, and Washington Councils, Junior Order United American Mechanics, favoring restriction of immigration—to the Committee on Rules.

Also, petition of Washington Camps, Patriotic Order Sons of America, of Atlantic City and Pemberton, N. J., favoring restriction of immigration—to the Committee on Rules.

Also, petition of Mary J. Hunt Council, Daughters of Liberty, of Millville, N. J., favoring restriction of immigration—to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. GOULDEN: Petition of members of St. Luke Council, No. 438, Knights of Columbus, for a memorial of Christopher Columbus—to the Committee on the Library.

By Mr. GRANGER: Petition of Rhode Island Chapter of the American Institute of Architecture, for preservation of Niagara Falls—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. GUDGER: Paper to accompany bill for relief of the estate of Aquilla Swan—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. JONES of Virginia: Paper to accompany bill for relief of estate of Robert R. Berry—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska: Paper to accompany bill for relief of Mary A. Peterson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LAMB: Petition of St. Andrew's School, Richmond, Va., for the Burton bill (H. R. 18024) for preservation of Niagara Falls—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. LEVER: Paper to accompany bill for relief of Mina A. Boswell—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. LIVINGSTON: Paper to accompany bill for relief of Harry C. McCool—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. MOON of Tennessee: Paper to accompany bill for relief of Sarah J. Watson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, paper to accompany bill for relief of estate of Washington Pryor—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. MUDD: Paper to accompany bill for relief of Frederick A. Holden—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. PAYNE: Paper to accompany bill for relief of Charles Koester—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. PUJO: Petition of the Society for Political Study, of New York City, for bills S. 2962 and 50 and H. R. 4462 (child labor and children's bureau)—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. REYNOLDS: Petition of the Civic Club of Cambria County, of Johnstown, Pa., against repeal of the Norris law relative to forest reservations—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. RHINOCK: Paper to accompany bill for relief of Lafayette H. McLeary—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH: Petition of citizens of Genesee County, Mich., against religious legislation in the District of Columbia—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Also, petition of Local No. 303, American Federation of Musicians, C. A. Bush, jr., president, for bill H. R. 8748 for relief of civilian musicians—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. SPERRY: Petition of professors and students of Yale University, favoring consolidation of third and fourth class mail matter—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. STEPHENS of Texas: Petition of citizens of Texas, against religious legislation in the District of Columbia—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. SULLIVAN of New York: Petition of the Society for Political Study, of New York City, for bills S. 50 and H. R. 4462 and S. 2762—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. SULZER: Petition of Gen. Green B. Raum, L. A. Grant, C. D. Macdougall, and Samuel J. Crawford, for bill S. 2162, creating a volunteer retired list—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, petition of the Frankfort Business Men's Club, against amendments to the pure-food bill calculated to impair its efficiency—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. WANGER: Petition of Washington Camp, No. 331, Patriotic Order Sons of America, of Edge Hill, Pa., favoring restriction of immigration—to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, May 5, 1906.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

FIVE CIVILIZED TRIBES.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the reprint of Public Law No. 129, entitled "An act to provide for the final disposition of the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent for a reprint of the public law designated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the naval appropriation bill in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 6022. An act to amend section 6 of an act entitled "An act to define and fix the standard of value, to maintain the parity of all forms of money issued or coined by the United States, to refund the public debt, and for other purposes," approved March 14, 1900; and

S. 5943. An act to authorize the Minnesota, Dakota and Pacific Railway Company to construct a bridge across the Missouri River.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (H. R. 17576) to provide for the entry of agricultural lands within forest reserves.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. 6022. An act to amend section 6 of an act entitled "An act to define and fix the standard of value, to maintain the parity of all forms of money issued or coined by the United States, to refund the public debt, and for other purposes," approved March 14, 1900—to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

LAND WITHIN FOREST RESERVES.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 17576) to provide for the entry of agricultural lands within forest reserves, with Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were read.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following request from the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (H. R. 17576) to provide for the entry of agricultural lands within forest reserves.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the request of the Senate be granted.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

BOARD OF VISITORS TO THE UNITED STATES MILITARY ACADEMY.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints the following Board of Visitors to the United States Military Academy:

Mr. HOLLIDAY of Indiana; Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH, of Michigan, and Mr. WILEY of Alabama.

BOARD OF VISITORS TO THE UNITED STATES NAVAL ACADEMY.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints the following Board of Visitors to the United States Naval Academy:

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts, Mr. LILLEY of Connecticut, and Mr. GREGG of Texas.

ASSISTANT CLERK TO COMMITTEE ON INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE.

Mr. CASSEL. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution from the Committee on Accounts, and ask that the substitute be read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania presents the following privileged report from the Committee on Accounts.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce is hereby authorized to appoint an additional clerk to said committee, who shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House at the rate of $1,800 per annum from and after July 1, 1906, unless otherwise provided for by law, and the Committee on Appropriations is hereby authorized and directed to provide for the salary of said clerk in one of the general appropriation bills: Provided, That the same shall be in lieu of the assistant session clerk to said committee authorized by House resolution adopted December 19, 1905.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I would like to ask the gentleman what necessity there is for this additional clerk.

Mr. CASSEL. This is not an additional clerk, but is making the assistant clerk an annual clerk, instead of being appointed from time to time by the committee.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What difference does it make to the Treasury?

Mr. CASSEL. It makes a difference of about $300 a year; probably more.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. How much?

Mr. CASSEL. Between three and four hundred dollars a year, I understand. This makes the salary $1,800 a year, and at the present time it is $6 a day during the session of Congress.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. They do not have any use for an assistant clerk when the committee is not in session, do they?

Mr. CASSEL. The chairman of the committee will explain.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say in regard to this matter that there is a great deal of business before this committee. There is a great deal of correspondence with individuals during the session and during the interval between sessions. Therefore I think it is a wise thing to make provision for two clerks, and any gentleman on the other side who is familiar with the work of the committee will know that it is a proper thing.

Mr. BARTLETT. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. HEPBURN. I will refer the matter to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. BARTLETT. This is a report from the Committee on Accounts. If it be recalled, the Committee on Appropriations, in the legislative, judicial, and executive appropriation bill, after investigation, made provision for this identical assistant clerk in the way this resolution does, and it went out on a point of order. Being a member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, I am satisfied that this resolution ought to pass. I want to say, to the credit of the gentleman from Iowa, who asked for it, that he has been more modest in asking for assistance from the Committee on Accounts than the chairman of any committee I know of in the House; and, from my own knowledge of the business of that committee, I think the resolution ought to pass. The assistant clerk is needed. The committee is considering and investigating a large amount of business, larger probably than it ever did before, and in connection with that, I desire to say that I investigated the matter in the Committee on Accounts, and voted for it in that committee. I think it ought to pass.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I am quite familiar with the amount of work done in that committee, and, speaking from my own knowledge, I believe that we ought to adopt this resolution. I think the clerk is absolutely needed to do the work.

The substitute was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

CLERK TO COMMITTEE ON PATENTS.

Mr. CASSEL. I submit the following report from the Committee on Accounts.

The clerk read as follows:

House resolution No. 405.

Resolved, That the chairman of the Committee on Patents is hereby authorized to appoint a clerk to said committee, who shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House at the rate of $2,000 per annum from and after July 1, 1906, unless otherwise provided for by law; and the Committee on Appropriations is hereby authorized and directed to provide for the salary of said clerk in one of the general appropriation bills: Provided, That the same shall be in lieu of the session clerk assigned to said committee.

The resolution was greed to.

CLERK IN HOUSE DOCUMENT ROOM.

Mr. CASSEL. Mr. Speaker, I report another resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution No. 398.

Resolved, That the Doorkeeper of the House is hereby authorized and directed to appoint a clerk to perform such duties under the direction of the superintendent of the House document room as may be required, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House until the end of the present fiscal year at the rate of $1,400 per annum, and the Committee on Appropriations is hereby directed to provide for the salary of said clerk in one of the general appropriation bills: Provided, That the position hereby created shall be in lieu of that of one assistant in the House document room at $1,400 per annum now provided for by law.

The question was taken; and the resolution was agreed to.

MACHINIST IN HEATING AND VENTILATING DEPARTMENT.

Mr. CASSEL. I present another report, Mr. Speaker.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution No. 364.

Resolved, That the Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds is hereby authorized to employ a machinist in the heating and ventilating department of the House of Representatives, whose compensation shall be $1,200 per annum, said position to be in lieu of that of one fireman at $900 per annum, the difference in salary until the close of the present fiscal year to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House to the person who shall perform the duties of the position of machinist hereby created. And the Committee on Appropriations is hereby authorized to make further provision hereunder from and after July 1, 1906, in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In lines 12 and 13 strike out the words "the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill" and insert "one of the general appropriation bills."

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Is this a permanent officer you are creating, or not?

Mr. CASSEL. It is not. This is a remarkable resolution, I want to say. This employee does not know, I believe, there is a resolution presented. He has occupied this position for a number of years. He occupies a very responsible position, and some of the Members of the House felt that he should be placed upon the same salary as the men who run the elevators.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What do you want with anybody to attend to the heating apparatus from now to the end of this session?

Mr. CASSEL. It is changing his position and increasing his salary, that is all. He has charge of the elevators.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Better be fixing up some cooling apparatus.

Mr. GOULDEN. This simply increases the salary of this man from $900 to $1,200 a year. He is a most efficient mechanic, one who could obtain this compensation anywhere else in a like position. Holding a responsible place and being a first-class man in every respect, he is clearly entitled to this recognition.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The resolution was agreed to.

ASSISTANT TO THE FILE CLERK OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. CASSEL. Mr. Speaker, I present House resolution No. 401 for consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House is hereby authorized and directed to appoint an assistant to the file clerk of the House of Representatives, whose compensation shall be $1,600 per annum, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House until otherwise provided for by law; and the Committee on Appropriations is hereby authorized and directed to provide for the salary of said office in one of the general appropriation bills: Provided, That said office shall be in lieu of the office of assistant to the file clerk of the House, at $1,200 per annum, now authorized by law.

The following committee amendment was read:

In line 4 strike out the word "six" and insert the word "five," so that it shall read "$1,500 per annum."

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution was agreed to.

EXPENSES OF SUBCOMMITTEE OF COMMITTEE ON NAVAL AFFAIRS.

Mr. CASSEL. Mr. Speaker, I call up House resolution No. 410.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the expenses incurred by the subcommittee of the Committee on Naval Affairs, which visited the Naval Academy during the present session, to investigate hazing, including stenographic services, be paid out of the contingent fund on vouchers duly certified by the chairman of said subcommittee and approved by the Committee on Accounts.

The following committee amendment was read:

In line 5, after the word "fund," insert the words "of the House," so that it shall read, "be paid out of the contingent fund of the House."

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. CASSEL, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the several resolutions were passed was laid on the table.

REPRINT OF REPORT ON NAVAL BILL.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, owing to the fact that the supply of reports on the naval appropriation bill have become exhausted I ask unanimous consent that there be a reprint of the same with corrections.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent for a reprint of the report (No. 3639) on the naval appropriation bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the naval appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. CRUMPACKER in the chair.

Mr. MEYER. Mr. Chairman, I now yield thirty minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, as I do not believe in gatling-gun Christianity and battle-ship commerce, it is perhaps an opportune time to express my disapproval of our present policy. More than a quarter of a century ago I gave this subject some thought and consideration. I came to the conclusion that there ought to be an international tribunal, clothed with power to hear and determine controversies between nations, just as courts hear and determine controversies between individuals. I was filled with the hopes of youth. As the years have passed, many of the fond ideals of youth have been shattered; but, sir, with the passing years, and with riper experience and a deeper and a broader grasp of human affairs, the conviction that great international questions should be settled in the forums of conscience and in the forums of reason rather than by the arbitrament of the sword, has grown stronger.

I discovered, when I had this matter under consideration, that the nations of the earth were engaged in one constant, never-ending struggle to increase their naval and military strength. One nation, impelled by the desire not to be outdone by some rival nation, goes forward building new and greater battle ships and equipping new and other regiments. The rival nation is compelled to pursue a similar course. Thus, year after year, the nations of the earth increase their naval and military strength, because their rivals are engaged in the same mad game of folly. What is the result of all of it? At the end of five, or ten, or twenty years the nations have not changed materially their relative strength. They simply move like death, that comes to the cottage of the rich and the poor with equal pace. Even now Great Britain is engaged in building the Dreadnought, the most powerful monster of human destruction that has ever been built by man. Germany, in order not to be excelled, has decided to change the type of some of the battle ships heretofore authorized and build them of the type of the Dreadnought.

It is said in the report of the Naval Committee on this bill that Japan, the Yankee nation of the Far East, quick to learn, is engaged in building three great battle ships of this type, and the Secretary of the Navy in his recommendation to Congress urges this body that if but one battle ship shall be provided for it shall be the greatest that has ever been constructed.

What will be the end of this game of folly? When Great Britain, and France, and Germany, and Italy, and Japan, and the United States shall each have six or a dozen of the Dreadnought type, their relative position toward one another will be just the same as it was when they had none. Since the beginning of the construction of what is called the new navy we have spent in building ships $252,272,667. The ships already authorized and not yet completed will cost $52,429,629 more, making an expenditure of $304,702,000 since 1883 in the construction of monsters of human destruction. The ships under construction when completed will require about 24,000 more men and officers, making the entire naval force about 60,000. What is the game as we see it played? The United States builds a battle ship with armor that no gun will pierce. It forthwith proceeds, out of the tax money of the people, to construct a gun that will pierce any armor. Other nations are engaged in like conduct.

Those who advocate this doctrine seem to be men of peace; they claim that the preparation for war is the best preventive of war. I deny the proposition. "You may as well go out into the highways and hedges and tell men that the best way to prevent personal encounters and personal violence is for each man to arm himself to the teeth. It is not true in fact, and it is not according to high Christian ideals." How can you expect to encourage peace when you engage in teaching men war, when you are making preparations for war by land and by sea? This is the greatest country on this globe. We are not great by reason of our wars, though I have not one word to say against the men who have fought our battles, whose deeds of daring have been told in song and story; but our greatness is due to the magnificence of our domain, to our splendid institutions, and to the magnificent citizenship of our men and women.

As the greatest nation in the world a responsibility rests upon us. The nations of the Old World, with their rivalries and jealousies of centuries, are suspicious of one another, but if this giant Republic out of the West shall propose to the nations of the earth to stop this mad game of folly, propose to quit building battle ships and monsters of human destruction, they will gladly join us. We not only have the opportunity, but it is our duty to speak, and that message should be spoken through the Chief Executive of our nation. He is a man of wonderful personality, of indomitable will power and ceaseless energy. If with his personal characteristics, coupled with the prestige of his great office, he will take the burden upon himself of asking the nations of the world to join in an agreement to stop further military and naval extensions, even if he can not get the consent of his mind to ask for disarmament itself, I believe that the nations of the world will gladly assent.

As was said yesterday by the learned and eloquent gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON], when the men of history shall record the deeds of the present Executive of the United States the greatest event in that active life will be the fact that his personality and his great prestige brought together the representatives of Japan and Russia. He not only brought the representatives of those nations together, but he did more. He snatched victory out of the very jaws of defeat and secured a treaty that was satisfactory to the nations involved and to the world. When the great coal strike was on, with his marvelous energy and his wonderful personality he stepped in and settled that controversy when no other living man could do it, and he carried joy to millions of American citizens.

We pose, Mr. Chairman, as a Christian nation. If we live up to our profession, if we make the Decalogue a living reality in our national and international life, instead of an irridescent dream, we would lead the nations in this great movement for the peace of the world.

You tell me that you are compelled to increase your naval power and that the whole past of human history is but the story of war and bloodshed. I answer, sir, that because men have been evil in the past is no reason for pursuing that mad course in the future. What we should do is to endeavor to lift up and make better the human race, instead of ourselves trying to excel all other nations in folly.

I plead, Mr. Chairman, for the peace of the world. I plead for the Christian nation of the earth to take the lead. Are we a Christian nation? When affliction and desolation were visited upon our fellow-citizens on the Pacific slope, the rich man out of his abundance and the widow out of her mite contributed to their relief. When will we come to the relief of our fellows, not only on the Pacific coast, but all over the wide, wide world? I plead, Mr. Chairman, for the overburdened taxpayers of all the countries of the earth. I plead for the men who bare their breasts to the storms of battle. I plead for the women, God bless them, who while they bear no arms, suffer all the agonies of war.

The maid who binds her warrior's sash,
With smile that well her pain dissembles,
The while beneath each drooping lash
One starry tear drop hangs and trembles,
Though heaven alone records the tear,
And fame shall never know her story,
Hath shed a drop of blood as dear
As e'er bedewed the field of glory.

The wife who girds her husband's sword,
'Mid little ones who weep and wonder,
And bravely speaks the parting word,
What though her heart be rent asunder;
Doomed nightly in her dreams to hear
The bolts of death around him rattle,
Has shed as precious blood as e'er
Was poured upon the field of battle.

I plead, Mr. Chairman, for all the people of all the earth to be relieved from this great unnecessary burden. I want this Christian nation to hasten the day spoken of by the prophet—

And they shall beat their swords into plowshares and their spears into pruning hooks, and nation shall not rise up against nation; neither shall they learn war any more.

[Applause.]

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a question of order. There is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and twenty Members are present, and the point of order is overruled.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I yield one hour to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT].

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, at the proper time I propose to offer an amendment to that section of the pending bill which provides for a new battle ship. My amendment reads as follows:

Provided, however, That if at the second Hague conference any measure should be agreed upon for the gradual reduction of the naval forces of the great powers, or for the settlement of international controversies by judicial decision and by means of arbitration treaties, the Secretary of the Navy shall have discretion to defer the construction of the ship herein provided for.

This amendment, Mr. Chairman, does not antagonize the present naval programme. It merely recognizes such conditions as may arise and enables the Government to defer to them. It refers, as I will show later on, to the judgment of statesmenship a question which from its very nature should be settled by statesmen and not by naval experts. It gives our Government the necessary discretion in case the agreements to be arrived at at the next Hague conference should render the construction of that additional large battle ship unnecessary. Its adoption will be hailed as a healthy exercise of the judgment of Congress, which is the people's judgment in matters of this kind. Naval budgets, as we all know, are manufactured in the shops of the Navy Department, and little or nothing is known there of the progress of the peace movement, at least no consideration whatever is given to such progress. We here do know, however, and in the judgment of many great Americans it is our bounden duty as representatives of the people to give heed to a changed condition which is presented by the willingness of all the great powers to join us in an effort soon to be made at The Hague at laying the foundation for more permanent peace. To me it has become perfectly plain, through contact with leading men of other nations, that the United States must take the lead in this great movement. The jealousies of European powers and their mutual distrust of each other do not permit any of them to proceed, but they are willing, aye, anxious, for obvious reasons, to join and follow us on the onward march to a higher civilization—a civilization where the tribunal instead of the sword will settle the questions of right and wrong. The adoption of the amendment which I shall offer will serve notice upon the world—and this is our only chance to serve such notice—that the Congress of the United States is in sympathy with the peace movement; that America expects actual results from the second Hague conference, and, if these results will justify it, that we are ready and willing to abide by them.

Mr. Chairman, with the permission of the committee, I shall improve this opportunity to briefly review the movement for international justice and world organization, and briefly outline the demands of the hour, upon which the friends of this movement, after mature thought and due discussion, have concentrated their efforts.

With the Roosevelt peace at Portsmouth—I hope it will go down into history by that name—the peace of the world was nominally reestablished. I say nominally not because the present peace is any less secure or any less sincere or in any way different from what the world has heretofore experienced—oh, no!—but I call it a nominal peace because it is the only kind of peace which, under present conditions, governments are capable of securing, and the only kind, by the way, which the human family in all its history has every been permitted to enjoy. In reality it is no peace at all, but merely an armistice—a temporary suspension of hostilities, with no guaranty or safeguard whatsoever as to its lasting qualities. The world has made progress in every respect but this. Human ingenuity has fettered the forces of nature; it has successfully guarded against their destructiveness, and has made them even serviceable to man. Human foresight by international agreement has guarded against epidemics and disease, but in the thousands of years of social evolution no effective remedy has as yet been provided against war, that self-inflicted and most terrible plague of the human race. Peace to-day is as changeable as the weather. It may be disturbed at any moment and upon the least provocation, and even by a single individual if that individual happens to be the ruler of a nation. What an intolerable condition! All countries have made it a law that the citizen or subject must have due regard for the rights of his neighbor—that is, he must keep the peace or the power of the State will make him do so; but the governments themselves have not yet seen fit to apply that same law to their own conduct toward each other. In internal affairs the power of all rulers, even of autocrats, is more or less circumscribed, but in a question of war or peace, that most momentous of all questions, involving, as it does, a greater risk of human happiness, of treasure, and of life than any other, the will of a ruler is usually arbitrary and supreme. And regarding that question the people are either not consulted at all or they can be easily fooled, duped, and deceived. For resourceful rulers it is not a difficult matter to inflame the passions of the people and incite their wrath by manipulation. A spurious telegram can set a nation on fire. When Bismarck was ready for the war with France, a telegram from Ems, that little watering place on the Rhine, announced that the German Emperor had been insulted, and in a moment the people of all the German States, divided though they had been, rose like one man and the "furor Teutonicus" was aroused.

Bismarck is reported to have said in great emergencies such means are justifiable to arouse the patriotism, the enthusiasm, and the war spirit of the people. Even in a country like ours, where the power to declare war is reserved to the National Legislature, the security of the people against deception is not absolute. Have they or their representatives full knowledge of all that is going on in the State Department? Is it outside of the range of possibility that party leaders, in order to perpetuate their power, might incite a foreign war by manipulation? Fortunately in our country this has never been attempted, but human nature is the same everywhere, and a system which is left unrestrained by law or by binding international obligations is sure to constantly invite the attempt. The history of Europe tells us of many a war frivolously and criminally begun by rulers, because of the discontent of the people and in order to turn their attention from home grievances to an alleged foreign foe. If in such cases there was no casus belli it had to be invented and was invented. Thus the people's peace, which from the standpoint of human interest, should be the strongest and most secure institution, is really the weakest and most insecure. And why? Because in spite of the boasted civilization of the twentieth century the nations have up to this day failed to substitute for a state of international anarchy a system of international law and order. With this chapter alone and to show how the people, the dear, good, credulous masses, have been fooled and deceived, I could take up all the time allotted to me, but I must hurry on with my argument. I have shown the uncertainty of peace or rather of the armed interim between the armed conflicts which people are wont to call peace. Now, let me say a word about the cost of this kind of peace. Before the Franco-German war the military budgets of Europe amounted to about $585,000,000 a year. In 1893 they were double that amount.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Does that include the naval budgets, too?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. That included both. Now their total is more than $1,400,000,000. In 1889 Lord Salisbury, by means of a confidential circular, ascertained the expenses of the armies and navies of Great Britain, Germany, Austria, Russia, Italy, and Spain for the years 1881 to 1888—that is, for seven years—to be £974,000,000, or nearly $5,000,000,000. The British prime minister transmitted these figures to the German Emperor who, as report has it, was so shocked by them as to immediately declare his intention of convening an international congress to consider measures of relief, but at that time France objected, and the project of a congress fell through. You are aware, of course, that our own expenses for the military and naval establishments have been at least doubled since the Spanish-American war, and these enormous expenditures, mind you, go constantly on; aye, they are constantly increasing. When nation A builds a battle ship, nation B builds two, and then the government of nation A points to its neighbor and asks the people to furnish means for three or four more, and so on, each successive appropriation begetting the necessity of an additional one, and no one can tell when and where the mad rivalry will ever stop. Evidently it will be carried to that extreme limit where mutual exhaustion and general collapse will be the inevitable result. Let me say right here, a peace which exacts such sacrifices should not be dignified with that name. In reality it is a state of suspended war rather than peace, with the characteristics of more suspense than peace.

To substitute for this costly and uncertain peace a condition of genuine lasting peace, a condition which embodies a law for its continuance and permanence is the sum and substance, the alpha and omega, of the modern peace movement.

And this leads me naturally to the discussion of the measures necessary to attain this end. Great progress has been made of late in the matter of bringing the problem down from the cloudy domain of theory and speculative thought to the solid ground of practical statesmanship. But let me premise a few words about the obstacles in the way of this greatest of all reforms and about the elements of opposition.

Victor Hugo once said that peace is the virtue, war the crime, of civilization. If this be true, and I certainly hold it to be true, then it should be the duty of every good man and woman to help promote the cause of peace in order that virtue might be enthroned upon the ruins of crime. Way down deep in their hearts the majority of people no doubt believe in the merits of the peace movement, but there are many who still doubt its final success, and these "doubting Thomases" constitute unknowingly the greatest possible impediment to the progress of the movement. In this class should also be included those who from prejudice or false notions glorify war as an exhibition of manliness and heroism, such as should be the boast of proud nations. Reduced to its last analysis, this theory would hold up the maddened bull in the bloody arena as the proper idol for us to worship. As if there was not more real heroism displayed in everyday life than there ever was in war!

To strike a blow in wrath is simply the operation of animal passion. But to manfully restrain that natural passion, even under provocation, is the result of human reasoning. If civilization means anything aside from the mere technical achievements, it is self-restraint, and the degree in which it is practiced is the measure of our culture. This self-restraint, I hold, should be practiced by nations as well as by individuals. And this lesson should be taken to heart even more especially by those who believe war to be a natural condition—a condition due to the inexorable laws of nature. Their theory, most interesting I admit, is that mutual slaughter is the rule of social growth; that our ancestors, pressed by necessity, made war perpetually upon one another and on all other living things, and that the best-advantaged race will devour the least or less advantaged.

War, they hold, is a question of food or wealth, and therefore always justifiable. And, mind you, they do not hesitate to draw the logical conclusion that might is right. They do not openly justify murder and cannibalism, but since the laws of nature do not change I can not see, if this theory is correct, why these laws should not require mutual slaughter to-day as they did in the dim ages. But you will notice at a glance what it is that this theory leaves out of its consideration. It is no less important a factor than that presented by the compact, the agreement, the law, of civilized society, by which the reign of brute force was made to give way to the reign of reason. In other words, the so-called law of nature has been tempered by that human self-restraint which gave birth to the law of society. One of the first lessons the student of law learns is that man in return for the privilege of living in a community must give up part of his natural rights and agree to bow to the law made by the community to secure peace and protection to all alike. And on this basis society has been organized everywhere. In the interest of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness natural law has been superseded by human law, so that justice instead of brute force will settle the questions of right and wrong. Thus our friends the war mongers will perceive that great advancement has been made, at least, by the separate nations from the primitive rule of mutual slaughter to a state of civilization governed by mutual respect for individual rights. But what a humiliating confession, that the mutual-slaughter rule should still obtain in international relations! And it does still obtain, the same as in mediæval times, the same as in the dim active ages when the ancestors of men went about on all fours killing and rending. In view of this amazing fact, I ask you, my friends, whether it is really so chimerical or whether you are really dreamers and rainbow chasers, when you demand that governments shall adjust their relations with other governments in accordance with the same civil laws with which they enforce and regulate the conduct of their own citizens? This is all the friends of peace demand, nothing more and nothing less.

Let me continue to enumerate the elements which are obstructing the world's progress toward more permanent peace. Our system of education, which holds up every soldier as a hero, should, of course, be mentioned here. European text-books on history are a glorification of war from beginning to end, and I regret to say we see in our own their mischievous images. This style of history is excusable, perhaps, in monarchical countries, but it is inexcusable in a democracy. The schools should be used to curb and not to stimulate the brute instincts of human nature, and the pupil's mind should at all times be impressed with the eternal truth "that peace hath its victories no less renowned than war." Moreover, the schoolroom is no place for military drills. Let us maintain a system of healthful physical exercise, which will prepare our boys for all emergencies, but be sure to banish everything from our school which smacks of the profession of war.

And now we come to the interested objectors. All other conscious or unconscious opponents of the modern peace programme are mere amateurs as compared with the man who suspects this programme of being a menace to his prerogatives and his throne. Any plan tending to interfere in the least with his war armament looks to him like an attempt at sawing off the limb upon which he is sitting. And yet, Mr. Chairman, there is good reason to believe that even the opinion of monarchs is undergoing a great change on this subject. Since the Franco-German and the Turkish wars there has been no great European war. As I said on yesterday, Spain has had her bloody encounters in America, England in Africa, Russia in Asia; but the great powers of Europe, though armed to their teeth, have for over thirty years dwelt peaceably together in neighborly friendship, without once during those many years resorting to arms, and whatever differences arose during that time were peaceably adjusted by agreements based on justice and reason. That is a great lesson.

Another instructive lesson was taught by both the Boer war and the Czar's experience with Japan. In the one case a mere handful of men held a powerful nation at bay for more than a year, and in the other case history will at best record a draw. The natural deduction from this is that it is not as easy as it used to be to vanquish even a weaker foe; in other words, war is much less effective than it formerly was to attain certain ends. The reason is simply that the frantic rivalry in the increase of armaments has produced the equal readiness of all, and this being the condition of affairs, it is nothing short of a delusion to suppose that ambitious plans could easily be carried out by war now as formerly.

Von Bloch, an eminent writer on this subject, goes so far as to express the belief that the powers are really unable to wage the war for which they prepare. "The greatest efforts of increase armaments," he says, "merely increase the probability of the inefficiency of war in a political or material sense." And this and other considerations are regarded by him as the forces which to-day are deterring the rulers from setting their war machinery in motion. This stage in the progress of political evolution is the great opportunity, it is needless to say, which the friends of peace have been awaiting these many, many years. It is the signal for the great moral forces which are engaged in waging war upon war to move all along the line. The question, too, as to how the advance is to be made and in what direction has fortunately been settled. It was a problem of no small proportions to harmonize the varied views of our friends and concentrate their scattered efforts upon the specific measures to be advocated as a remedy of existing conditions. There is naturally a very strong feeling everywhere in favor of disarmament, or at least gradual reduction of armament. In the opinion of many this would afford the quickest relief from military burdens which to-day in many countries are well-nigh unbearable. Then there is the proposition advocated in this country by our friend, Captain Hobson, that the United States build a navy so big and so powerful as to make itself the master of the world and force it to keep the peace. Others, again, believe it possible to make the powers agree simply never to resort to war on account of any differences arising between them, and so on. It is largely due to the Interparliamentary Union, an organization composed of the lawmakers of the world, that these divergent views have been harmonized, as far as it was possible, and a definite direction has been given to the peace movement of the present day.

The union has long ago ceased to advocate disarmament as an independent proposition. Its members realize that to strive for disarmament means to confound symptom and cause. The war armaments are merely the symptom, while it is desired to remove the cause. Besides, the powers show a disinclination to listen to such a proposition, as became evident at the first Hague conference, which, though called for the specific purpose of considering a programme of disarmament, took no action concerning it, except to express the wish that the powers take up this question in the near future. No intelligent friend of peace expected that problem to be solved at that conference. It was starting the reform at the wrong end, and the objections of the military powers were foreseen. The war men made it appear, of course, that the cause of peace had suffered the defeat predicted by them, but this is far from the truth, particularly in view of the grand results of that conference in other respects.

In this connection permit me to mention as an amusing incident that the commission which was called upon to deal with the question of disarmament consisted exclusively of military men. Just think of asking a colonel to abolish his own regiment! It is the same as if we were to call upon shoemakers to seriously consider a proposition to abolish boots and shoes. This question is not a military question at all; it is an economic question, and it should be settled not by military men, but by statesmen.

Time will not permit, Mr. Chairman, a full discussion of all the different remedies brought forward to cure the identical evil, but I will say just a word about the Hobson plan, previously outlined. And this has some reference to the pending bill. The friends of arbitration realize, and so do I, that as long as there is no agreement between nations to keep the peace we must be in readiness for all possible emergencies. Hence, the majority of them do not antagonize your naval programme as long as they are satisfied that its adoption is necessary for the national defense. This, I think, will make it plain to the friends of that programme that in order to defend it it is unnecessary and uncalled for to antagonize or make light of the peace movement. They need our cooperation the same as we need theirs, until we reach a point when we can all agree that armaments can safely be dispensed with and are as unnecessary as the revolver in the hands of the murderer.

But the requirements of the national defense mark the limit of our patience. A navy more powerful than is necessary for defensive purposes might invite its abuse, and in the hands of unscrupulous men might prove, instead of a protection, a menace to the peace of the world and to our own liberties. Surely no good American will want to see his country in the rôle of an international bully. Rather let us remember the injunction: "Stand fast and hold the traditions which ye have been taught." America's traditions are to set the world an example in the love of liberty and peace and in the ways of justice and fair dealing in all its relations with others.

The American people—

Says Professor Moore, of Columbia—

have been accustomed to look upon war as a measure that could be justified only as a choice of evils, and have always deprecated standing armies and elaborate preparations for war as a menace to liberty.

It is this proud record which qualifies the United States so well to hold out the olive branch to all the world and through its great President invite international agreements to secure to us and to those who come after us the blessings of everlasting peace.

And what is the programme of the modern peace movement? It consists of two demands—arbitration treaties between all the civilized nations and an international congress to declare what is to be international law.

No political party has ever framed a more simple or more practical platform. There is nothing visionary about it, and no practical statesman will deny that both of its planks are timely as well as reasonable and attainable. Their adoption by the several governments will mark the elevation of right over might and justice over brute force.

The Interparliamentary Union at its twelfth conference, held at St. Louis in September, 1904, adopted this platform, and in response to its request President Roosevelt invited the nations signatory to The Hague treaty to consider it at the second Hague conference.

Mr. GOULDEN. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I will.

Mr. GOULDEN. I think the committee would like to know how that interparliamentary peace union is made up and which of the great powers are actively associated with the movement?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I can say for the information of the gentleman and the committee that the Interparliamentary Union consists of members of the national lawmaking bodies of the world. Each parliament has a group of members who strive for international arbitration and use their influence with their respective governments to hasten the conclusion of arbitration treaties between the several governments of the earth.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Missouri yield to his colleague?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I will

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I would like to ask the gentleman how many nations have sent representatives to this Interparliamentary Union.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. All the civilized nations of the world except those that have no parliament, like Turkey and China and some others. All nations which have parliaments have a group for the promotion of international arbitration, and these different groups compose the Interparliamentary Union.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The gentleman has attended one or two of these meetings?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I have.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Do the representatives of the other great nations talk like the sentiment in their countries was in favor of a peace programme or not?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. That is their object.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The object of the members, of course, but what about the public opinion in the nations that they come from?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. They are merely making propaganda in their parliaments for this programme of peace, trying to persuade the governments to adopt the plan of having arbitration as a substitute for war.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The gentleman does not seem to catch my question. What do they say about the drift of public sentiment in their nations as to the peace programme? Do they say that it is growing or not?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Oh, I did not catch the gentleman's meaning. The reports at all conferences I have had the honor to attend, Mr. Chairman, were to the effect that the movement is growing all over the world, and that it only takes the initiative of some great nation—a nation like the United States—to carry out that programme. [Applause.]

Mr. GOULDEN. How many members attended the last congress, which was, I believe, the thirteenth conference of the Interparliamentary Union, held at Brussels in August last?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Upward of 500 members of lawmaking bodies of the different nations.

Mr. GOULDEN. Divided among the leading nations of the world?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Each nation can send as many delegates as it chooses. I am happy to say that the United States Congress was represented at the last congress by nineteen members, the largest number that ever represented us abroad. [Applause.] I may add also, without speaking boastfully, that the Americans, because of the advanced position they took, occupied the center of the stage at Brussels.

Mr. GOULDEN. Did not the position taken by the President of the United States in the matter of peace between Russia and Japan last August have much to do with the standing of the delegates among those of the other countries of the globe at this international conference?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Undoubtedly. We were asked when the news came that peace had been restored between Russia and Japan through the instrumentality of President Roosevelt—we were asked what we thought about it, and our answer was that the capital of the world had been transferred from Paris to Washington. [Applause.]

Mr. SCOTT. I would like to ask the gentleman how many nations were represented at the last congress?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Eighteen.

Mr. KEIFER. If the gentleman from Missouri can give me any information, I would like to know if Russia was represented there?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Russia was not represented, because she has no parliament.

Mr. KEIFER. Well, Russia did, through her Czar, initiate some of these negotiations, did she not?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Yes.

Mr. KEIFER. How did Russia drop out?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, I might mention in answer to the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] an interesting bit of history. When the interparliamentary conference met in 1897, the Czar asked some one the question whether Russia was represented in that conference.

Mr. GOULDEN. What year was that?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I believe in 1897. The answer was, naturally, that Russia was not represented, because she has no parliament and consequently could send no delegates to such a conference. Thereupon the Czar said that he greatly regretted the absence of Russian representation, and report has it that he made up his mind then and there to go a step further, and he called the first Hague conference for the consideration of the question of disarmament. [Applause.] So really the Interparliamentary Union is the inspiration—and you may say the mother—of that first Hague conference.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, I am very much interested in that conference. In what language was the business of the conference conducted?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. There are three official languages recognized—English, French, and German; but about two-thirds of the deliberations are in French, naturally, because that is, after all, the diplomatic language of the world.

Mr. KEIFER. How was Russia represented, if at all, at that first Hague conference which was called by the Czar?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Russia was represented, like every other nation, by three or four of her eminent statesmen.

Mr. RODENBERG. Appointed by the Czar?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Yes. Ours were appointed by President Roosevelt, and I am glad to say that the American delegates to the next Hague conference have already been appointed, and they are great and good men.

Mr. FOSS. At that Hague conference was not a resolution passed to the effect of discouraging the building up of navies on the part of leading nations of the world? Did not the conference pass a resolution to that effect in favor of disarmament?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. As the gentleman from Illinois remembers, the conference was called for the express purpose of considering the question of disarmament, but when these gentlemen came together it became apparent very soon that it would be impossible to reach any agreement upon that question, and as I have mentioned before, one of the reasons was, perhaps, that that question had been referred to a commission composed exclusively of military men. Instead of making specific recommendations upon that question, they passed a resolution in which the pious wish is expressed that the nations or governments in the very near future should take up this question of disarmament or the gradual reduction of armament.

Mr. FOSS. Is it not a fact since then that the leading nations of the world have promulgated greater naval programmes than ever before?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Well, that may be so. I do not doubt that; but that certainly has nothing to do with the merits of the proposition I am discussing.

Mr. FOSS. Oh, no.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question that naturally follows the question of the gentleman from Illinois. If all the nations of the earth—that is, all the civilized great nations—are increasing their military armaments by land and sea, then how can we assume that the peace propaganda is really growing?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, in answer to that I will say that in the history of the last hundred years more than 200 cases which, under different conditions, might have caused war between nations have been settled by arbitration, and more than that, in each one of those 200 cases the judgment of the arbitrators or of the court which passed upon them was accepted without any protest from any one of the interested parties. [Applause.] From that fact we infer, justly, so I think, that the cause of international arbitration is progressing, and progressing rapidly, but I admit that as long as there are no binding agreements between nations it is necessary for a nation to be ready for emergencies, and hence I do not antagonize the naval programmes.

Mr. BATES. Mr. Chairman, I would ask the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT] this: Could it not also be answered by the proposition that if a municipality, for instance, increases its police force it does so not for the purpose of provoking riots and disturbances, but for the sake of keeping them down and preventing disturbances, on the theory that a strong navy operates with a nation as a good police force does with a municipality?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I am not now prepared to say that my friend's logic is entirely correct.

Mr. COCKRAN. But what would the municipality gain, Mr. Chairman, by suppressing riot if the cost of maintaining the police force should be greater than any loss that would be likely to arise from the riot?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, that is a question which I have not raised, and I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BATES], who did raise it, will be given an opportunity at some other time to answer it.

Mr. Chairman, at a recent conference of the interparliamentary union at Brussels I had the honor, in behalf of the American group in congress, to present the detailed plans touching these two great propositions, viz, the draft of an arbitration treaty which, in our judgment, should be acceptable to all nations, and the draft of a constitution for an international congress. They have since been wrestling with these details in the parliaments of Europe, and with what results I shall speak instantly.

To some all this may be more or less unintelligible, so let me explain. In olden times might was right, and when two persons had a difficulty physical superiority usually determined the right. So late as the year 1818 the so-called "trial by battle" was solemnly decided by the English court of King's bench to be a valid and legal mode of trial which the King's subjects were free to adopt. It obtained in civil as well as criminal cases and consisted of a personal combat between the parties in the presence of the court itself, and was grounded on the idea of an appeal to Providence, the expectation being that heaven would give the victory to the innocent or injured party. In the sunshine of the twentieth century this system appears barbarous, and yet this very system obtains to-day between nations. I say war is no more justifiable and is as barbarous as was the ancient trial by battle. Courts have superseded such trials and our civilization demands that courts shall supersede the trial by battle between nations. Hence the demand for international arbitration. If the several nations will agree to submit certain questions to arbitration and to refer all those reserved for the arbitrament by the sword to a commission for investigation before resort to arms, so that in this latter case at least time may be gained, they will do exactly what they are requiring their own citizens or subjects to do in case of a controversy between them. And surely this is as it ought to be. What is law for an individual should be law for a nation. [Applause.]

To make the objects of the friends of peace still plainer, let me put it this way: Nations are governed by three departments—the executive, the legislative, and the judicial. This applies to monarchies as well as to republics, and human wisdom has not yet been able to evolve a better plan. It is proposed to extend this plan to the community of nations and regulate the affairs of the whole human family through just such agencies—an international executive, legislature, and judiciary. Thus it becomes as much a question of law and order as of peace.

By the establishment of the high court at The Hague, which I regard as the grandest achievement of the last century, the international judiciary has been created. But we propose to magnify this court by giving it jurisdiction over all questions specified in the arbitration treaty previously referred to, and how necessary an international legislature is will appear from the fact that the court, I mean the high court at The Hague, now has no system of law to apply to cases which might be brought before it for adjudication.

Mr. JOHNSON. Will the gentleman let me ask him a question?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Let me finish this first. What now passes under the name of international law is merely a compilation of precedents, opinions, maxims, and arguments, not one of which has ever received the sanction of law by a single parliament. As I said at Brussels, "It may not be necessary to change in a single instance the present system of maxims and opinions compiled by Grotius and others for the regulation of international society, but if it is to continue as the only recognized basis of negotiation and intercourse, if it is to be accepted by the coming ages of civilization as the universal common law among nations, then we must insist that it shall acquire the authority which can only be given to it through the solemn form of legislation. This legislation can not be secured in this constitutional age without an international legislature or a congress of nations. Now I am willing to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. JOHNSON. I want to ask the gentleman from Missouri if the decision of The Hague a year or two ago giving those nations that have blockaded ports priority in the collection of claims did not have a damaging effect on the question of establishing international peace generally, and if that difficulty would not be obviated by an international legislative body to settle international law?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Exactly. I felt as the gentleman does about that decision, but after I studied it more carefully I found that, under the system of laws or opinions or precedents under which they acted, they could not have decided otherwise.

Mr. JOHNSON. Perhaps so, but it might be well to have somebody in authority change those precedents and make laws in accordance with the high ideals of the twentieth century.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Precisely; and that is our purpose. An international legislature, Mr. Chairman, is an old American pet scheme which Elihu Burritt and others advocated in European peace congresses more than fifty years ago, but the same objections raised then were interposed last summer at Brussels, namely, that the plan would interfere with the principle of sovereignty. In spite of these objections, however, the American delegates stuck to their propositions so persistently that the plan, instead of being pigeonholed, was finally referred to a commission with instructions to report within three months. This was generally regarded as a significant American victory, but the more substantial part of the triumph was yet to come. A few months ago a cable dispatch announced that that commission had met at Paris and had practically decided in favor of the American plan of an international congress, without stating, however, how the congress was to be constituted. Mail advices have in the meantime supplied this information, and the news is of such a character as to justify the friends of peace to hail it with delight. The proposed solution of the problem will appear to them as what it really is, an inspiration. Listen how the commission proposes to constitute the congress:

"The next Hague conference is to be constituted into a permanent body, a sort of international senate, which is to assemble automatically and periodically, and the Interparliamentary Union is to be reorganized so as to act as a parliamentary official adjunct, or a lower house. In the senate each nation is to have the same voice or weight by vote, while in the lower house all representation shall be proportional."

Mr. DRISCOLL. Will not such nations as Russia and Turkey have trouble, inasmuch as they have representatives in the upper house and can have none in the lower of this international legislature?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Russia is now securing a legislature, we are all happy to observe, and no doubt Turkey will find some way of sending representatives to such a body.

Mr. STANLEY. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Certainly.

Mr. STANLEY. If Turkey and Russia should both refuse to be bound by any regulations, or a decision of this high court, or by any agreement between other nations, will we have anything particular to fear from both of them combined?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. No, sir; nothing whatsoever. I believe that the combined moral force of the agreement between three or four or five nations will be sufficient to hold all the others in check and make all others agree to whatever arrangement might be entered into.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT] has expired.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, I would like just a few moments in order to conclude. It may be five or ten minutes.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman sufficient time in which to conclude his speech.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Thus there would be two chambers. In the one the executive, in the other the parliamentary branches of national governments would be represented and carried up into that new international parliament. It will be noticed at a glance that in its results this plan will insure to the world, in the simplest and most practical manner possible, exactly what we had proposed at Brusesls, namely, an international legislature of two houses, one to be created and controlled by the executives, the other by the parliament or, which is practically the same thing, the people. The first duty to be performed by that new international body is declared to be "to codify international law and to keep it up to date."

The question naturally arises how this great international reform is to be brought about. In view of the early assembling of the New Hague conference it appears to be merely a question of inducing this body to proceed to the consideration of the plan. Its feasibility will surely be admitted by the delegates of the several countries as readily as the supreme necessity of the early compilation and sanction by the nations of what now passes under the name of international law. It would seem that the advocacy and presentation of the plan by so influential an organization as the Interparliamentary Union should of itself be sufficient to insure its respectful and favorable consideration by the conference. But in addition to this the members of the union will no doubt use their influence with their respective governments in favor of the proposition. To leave nothing to chance, however, I have introduced a joint resolution here authorizing and requesting the President to instruct the American delegates to The Hague conference to favor this plan and to do all that lies in their power toward securing its adoption. What favorable action by the conference upon this magnificent scheme would mean to civilization and to the cause of humanity and international justice is apparent to all. In addition to an international judiciary now afforded by the high court at The Hague, the world would be assured of the benefit of an international legislature, charged with the duty, first, of supplying the law which is to govern the judiciary in the adjudication of cases to be brought before it, and secondly, of agreeing on a system of arbitration by which the possibilities of war will be reduced to a minimum. A reduction of armaments will follow without further agitation and as naturally as ripe fruit falls from the tree. And this will be only one of the beneficial consequences of the proposed international organization. A permanent Hague conference, with the power to meet periodically and when it pleases, once assured, there will be no more need of the friends of peace and arbitration to prevail upon Czars or Presidents to call such a body into being.

It goes without saying that the change here proposed will require the sanction of all governments to give it force and effect, even after the second Hague conference has pronounced in its favor; but no one need feel any concern on that score. If the people are given a chance to pass judgment upon this reform—the greatest, most far-reaching, and most beneficial to mankind ever undertaken—they are sure to rise to the full height of their golden opportunity, and the moment they grasp the new dispensation in its full comprehensiveness their majestic power will force all other majesties, great and small, to capitulate unconditionally. [Loud applause.]

An international executive is still unprovided for. There are those who would create the high office of peacemaker; but for one I am inclined to think that the moral force of these international agreements, when once entered into, and the actual power behind them, will be far greater than any system of international police could possibly be.

This, then, Mr. Chairman, is the plan destined to ground the world's peace on the solid foundation of mutual compact; not the kind of peace which constantly trembles on the point of bayonets, but that natural, self-enforcing, lasting peace condition which can not be disturbed except by one or more governments rebelling against the supreme judicial will which voices the agreement of the community of nations. The plan is designed simply to substitute law and justice for force, or right for might, and demands that by international agreement differences between nations shall be adjusted in the same manner as differences between individuals, namely, by arbitration and judicial decision.

It is not a novel idea. More than three hundred years ago Henry IV of France, as my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] pointed out on yesterday, had conceived the idea of a general council of Europe to construct a system of laws for the guidance of all the different states in their intercourse with each other, and for the maintenance of peace. Unfortunately the assassin's hand struck him down before he could put the idea into execution. War upon war, it is true, has been waged since that time, but it is also true that many a bloody conflict has been averted in the same period by mediation and arbitration. When, in spite of the existence of The Hague tribunal, the Russo-Japanese war broke out, the friends of peace hung their heads in sorrow. But what is the actual result of that war? A stronger desire for peace and for a practical remedy to prevent the recurrence of such calamities than ever evinced before, because the world has been disgusted and sickened by that bloody spectacle. And the cause of arbitration has been wonderfully strengthened by the manner in which, thanks to President Roosevelt, peace was restored, and by which it was demonstrated that the contending parties might have reached an agreement before, just as well as after, they had fought and bled to the point of exhaustion.

It is said that governments must be constantly ready for the bloody business of war, in order to preserve their sovereignty at home and an equal opportunity to trade abroad. Since in this age religious wars are out of the question, the same as wars for mere conquest, this naturally is the only reason which can be assigned for the annual expenditure of these billions of dollars. How much easier, I submit, these rights could be vouchsafed by the plan I have here outlined. The time has certainly come for the rulers to seriously consider peace propositions, because the people constituting their nations are rapidly learning that their common interests are always greater than their real or imaginary differences, and all that is necessary is for the rulers or their representatives to peaceably assemble and by mutual agreement guarantee to each other not only sovereignty and equal rights to trade, but territorial integrity, security, and peace as well.

The peace platform I have outlined, let me say in conclusion, was put forth by representatives of the United States in good faith and with good grace, as I hope all will admit. Our military burdens are less onerous, our sacrifices for war preparations are less perceptible, than those of other nations. We have less cause to fear war and less reason to expect it than any other people on earth. Hence the world will be more inclined to believe us than it would others when we say our motives are disinterested, that we are actuated only by an honest desire to promote the cause of humanity and justice. Washington expressed it in these words:

My first wish is to see this plague of mankind, war, banished from the earth.

General Grant said:

Let us have peace.

President McKinley said:

Let us remember that our real eminence rests in the victories of peace, not those of war.

President Roosevelt has saved the life of The Hague tribunal by referring to it the first case. He has called the second Hague conference and has restored the peace of the world by bringing Russia and Japan together. It seems that it well becomes a nation which can boast of such Presidents to appear in the world's councils carrying the gospel of humanity and peace. [Long continued applause on both sides of the Chamber.]

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, it is evident that there is no quorum here, and we might as well take out.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri makes the point of order that there is not a quorum present. The Chair will proceed to count and ascertain.

After counting, the Chairman announced 120 Members present—a quorum of the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MEYER. I yield forty-five minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WEBB].

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Chairman, there is now a bill on the Calendar for consideration by the House, carrying an appropriation of $30,000 for the erection of a monument on Kings Mountain battle ground, to commemorate the great victory gained there by the American patriots over the British forces on October 7, 1870.

I trust that no Member will oppose the passage of this bill, for it is a shame that the National Government has already waited one hundred and twenty-six years to give fitting recognition of the importance of one of the decisive battles of the world. I use the words "decisive battle" advisedly. It will be remembered that the Revolutionary war had progressed in the North with varying fortunes to the American patriots. Lexington and Concord are hardly to be called battles—more properly important skirmishes. It is true that there it was that the shot was fired that was "heard around the world," but I propose to show this committee that the most important battle fought in the American Revolution was that fought at Kings Mountain. The Americans had fought bravely at Bunker Hill, but had lost. The fierce battle of Long Island, fought August 27, 1776, with 15,000 British against 8,000 Americans, was a decisive defeat for the American arms, with a loss of 970 killed and 1,077 wounded, while the British lost 400 only. The result of this battle was a sad shock to the American cause, coming so soon after our national Declaration of Independence. A little later, in December, however, our cause regained some of its lost prestige at the battle of Trenton, where our forces killed and wounded 30 British and captured 918, with a loss of only 2 Americans killed and 6 wounded. The battle of Princeton, fought in January, 1777, was also important in molding American sentiment and cheering American hopes. After the battle of Princeton yet another victory was added to the American arms at Monmouth, where the British lost 500 and the Americans 229.

At Brandywine, in September, 1777, however, Washington was driven from the field. This defeat fell heavily on the patriot cause. At Germantown, on October 4, 1777, the Americans lost 673 killed and wounded and 400 prisoners, and the tide of the battle was decidedly against us, recording another defeat for the patriots. Next comes the victory at Saratoga, in October, 1777, which gave fresh impetus to the cause of the rebellion.

During the year 1778 the war dragged along without any general campaign or important battles. At this time the French began to send us invaluable assistance. Clark, the veteran Western hero and pioneer, pushed his way to Vincennes and there captured that fort. It was a splendid feat of arms, performed after a march of 240 miles through the wilderness and forest. Clark's victory practically broke the British hold in the West.

With honors about even in the North, and with New York in the hands of the British, England decided that the quickest way to conquer America now was to overrun the South. Florida was invaded. Georgia and South Carolina were to be enrolled under the British flag and the rest of the Southern States were to yield immediately. Abundant ships and troops were collected by the British, and the southern harbors were blockaded.

In the fall of 1778 General Prevost marched out of Florida, and in a short campaign captured Savannah, Sunbury, and Augusta. On March 3, 1779, at Briar Creek, near Savannah, the Americans lost 1,000 men killed and captured, besides their cannon and small arms, while this battle only cost the British 16 men killed and wounded. Georgia was now in complete control of the British forces and influence, and the Government of King George was again thoroughly established there. A desperate effort was made by the Americans on the 8th of October, 1779, to recapture Savannah. In this sanguinary assault many of the patriot army were killed, among them being that prince of heroes, Count Pulaski, who fell mortally wounded and yielded up his life for the country which he had come so far to serve. This was another disastrous battle for the Americans, as our loss was more than 200, together with 600 French soldiers; while the British loss was very small. This defeat was a heavy setback to the cause of the Revolution in the South, and the outlook for success was becoming very gloomy. The militia of South Carolina and Georgia became discouraged and disbanded, and General Lincoln, with a small band of regular troops, fell back to Charleston. As said by Senator LODGE, in his Story of the Revolution, "Without men, without money, and without apparent ability for effective preparation, South Carolina seemed helpless if the enemy continued their invasion." Georgia was already completely and entirely in the control of the British, and South Carolina seemed destined to meet a similar fate. Charleston, the largest city in the State at that time, having a population of 15,000, was occupied by the American forces under General Lincoln.

During the Christmas holidays of 1779 Sir Henry Clinton and Lord Cornwallis sailed out from Sandy Hook, New York, with the splendid fleet of Admiral Arbuthnot, carrying 7,000 soldiers to commence an attack on the queen city of South Carolina. Only 4,000 Americans garrisoned the city. These soldiers were greatly dispirited on account of our losses in Georgia a short while before. On the 11th of February, 1780, the British fleet began the siege of Charleston, which continued for three long, gloomy, terrible months, by which time the enemy had gradually encircled the proud maritime city. Finally, on the 7th of May, after untold suffering on the part of the people of Charleston, the city surrendered. Many houses were burned during the siege, and 98 officers and men of the American forces were killed and 146 wounded. Five hundred of the 2,000 Continental troops were in hospitals. The regular American troops and sailors became prisoners of war. The English now sacked the city and divided the spoil among themselves to the amount of about one and a half million dollars. After the loss of Charleston it seemed as if the whole South were ready to surrender to the victorious troops under Cornwallis.

Colonel Tarleton was sent out to pursue Colonel Buford, whose regiment had failed to join the garrison at Charleston. Overtaking Buford at Waxhaw, Tarleton's Hessians and brigands attacked Buford's men as if they were savages, killing 113, while more than 100 were hacked to death, and only 53 prisoners were taken. This bloody butchery, which was commended by Cornwallis, added to the general depression among all classes of American citizens. But while it depressed many, it urged many others to a determination to fight for their country and never surrender. At this period of time Sir Henry Clinton, just before sailing for New York, reported to the royal authorities as follows:

Inhabitants from every quarter declare their allegiance to the King and offer their services in arms. There are few men in South Carolina who are not either our prisoners or in arms with us.

At this time the haughty Sir Henry spoke the truth, for it did seem that the whole South was either fleeing to the British standard or fleeing from it in terror. Those of the natives who were loyal to the American cause fled from South Carolina, leaving their homes to the torch of the invading foe.

At the battle of the Brandywine a gallant British officer of marked attainments was too brave and too noble to shoot General Washington in the back. This officer was wounded in that battle, but after complete recovery sailed with Sir Henry Clinton on his expedition to capture and overrun the South. This man, who played such a conspicuous part in the war from now on until his death, was none other than Maj. Patrick Ferguson. He had performed distinguished service in the Royal North British Dragoons in the wars of Flanders and Germany, where he distinguished himself for his coolness and his bravery. He was the inventor of a new kind of breech-loading rifle, which could be loaded and fired seven times in one minute. He was the finest rifle shot in the royal army, and possibly no other living man at this time surpassed him in unerring marksmanship. King George himself at one time attended an exhibition of his marksmanship. According to history and tradition, he could run his horse, suddenly check him, drop the reins on his neck, draw his pistol and throw it up into the air, catching it as it fell, take aim, and shoot the head off of a bird sitting on an adjacent fence. Major Ferguson also participated in the battle of Monmouth. Sir Henry Clinton selected him to accompany him on his expedition south and gave him a corps of 300 American volunteers to command, and for this special service he was given the rank of lieutenant-colonel. Two hundred Hessians were also added to Ferguson's corps. Irving says:

> Ferguson was a fit associate of Tarleton in hardy, scrambling, partisan enterprise, intrepid and determined, but cooler and more open to impulses of humanity.

But all will admit that Ferguson was a much higher type of man than Tarleton, who was called "the butcher of the Carolinas."

After the fall of Charleston Sir Henry Clinton dispatched Lord Cornwallis to make a campaign up through South Carolina and on into North Carolina, while Colonel Ferguson was dispatched to Ninety Six, S. C., where he arrived on June 22, 1780. Ferguson's winning ways, combined with the awe and fear which the enemy's invasion had created in the minds of the people, were causing many young men to enlist under his banner. These recruits were immediately drilled and prepared for warfare in the royal arms, and their training was perfect, for Ferguson was the best drillmaster in King George's army. Knowing the terrible impression that Tarleton's savagery had created among the people, Ferguson, in his march up through the Carolinas, made the following statement:

> We come not to make war on women and children, but to relieve their distress.

By this time the royal authority was fully established and recognized in all the up-country of South Carolina.

Draper, to whom I am indebted for many of the facts about this battle, says:

> The desperate, the idle, the vindictive, who sought plunder or revenge, as well as the youthful loyalists, whose zeal or ambition prompted them to take up arms, all found a warm reception at the British camp; and their progress through the country was marked with blood and lighted up with conflagration. During this period of several weeks the Tories scoured all that region of country daily, plundering the people of their cattle, horses, beds, wearing apparel, bee gums, and vegetables of all kinds—even wresting the rings from the fingers of the females.

In August, 1780, several skirmishes occurred between detachments of Cornwallis's army and the patriots under the leadership of Colonels Clark, McDowell, and Shelby, the most notable among them being Musgrove Mill, where the British lost 86 killed and 76 prisoners, while the Americans lost only 4 killed and 9 wounded. There were only about 250 Americans and about 300 British in this engagement. After this fight Shelby and McDowell and the other leaders dispersed their little band and fell back into the mountains to protect their homes from the enemy, and also to prevent complete annihilation from the forces of Cornwallis and Major Ferguson.

The most important military point in South Carolina was Camden. General Gates, in command of the American forces, marched against this point on August 15, 1780, and was met by Cornwallis and disastrously routed. The brave, chivalrous De Kalb was there mortally wounded leading the Maryland troops, and fell after having been pierced by eleven bullets. Gates, who had won distinction in the northern army, lost in this battle 800 of his brave soldiers. "His Northern laurels," as it was said, "had changed into Southern willows."

The American army was truly broken and destroyed. Thus, for the second time within ninety days the American army at the South had been practically annihilated. This was the darkest period in the history of the Revolutionary War. The whole South seemed prostrate at the foot of the enemy, while nothing but a triumphal march lay before Cornwallis and Major Ferguson. To add to the gloom which then overhung the struggling young Republic there came the news of the treason of Benedict Arnold, which thrilled the American patriots with a sense of horror. It seemed that their cause was lost, and that nothing was left the British but to reap the fruits of their successive victories. Arnold's treason was no doubt prompted by the feeling that the cause of American freedom was lost. In this awful period of depression even the unconquerable Washington said, "I have almost ceased to hope."

After his victory at Camden, Lord Cornwallis marched his army in September into North Carolina, and boasted that all the States south of the Susquehanna River would soon be in his grasp. When this victorious warrior reached Mecklenburg County in North Carolina he found a veritable hornet's nest of loyal patriots [applause], for on this soil Tories and deserters could not grow [applause], for here it was on May 20, 1775, that the first American Declaration of Independence was flung to the world in defiance of the King and all his army. [Applause.] All Mecklenburg was now united as one man in a determination to maintain this declaration with their lives and their sacred honor. [Applause.]

Cornwallis hoped to stamp out this spirit, and therefore pitched his tent in the plucky city of Charlotte. Major Ferguson was dispatched at the head of 1,100 soldiers to march into the Piedmont section of North Carolina to gather cattle and supplies for the army and to enlist all the natives who were willing to come under the King's standard. Charles McDowell, Clark, Shelby, and other leaders had fallen back into the mountainous section of North Carolina, and Ferguson entertained the hope of overtaking and capturing these leaders. Colonel Ferguson marched as far as Gilbert Town, in Rutherford County, N. C., and pitched his camp therefor several days. For many miles around Tories and weak-hearted natives visited the gallant officer and took the oath of allegiance, believing that since Charleston had fallen, Gates and Sumter routed at Camden, and the other patriot forces dispersed, that the patriot cause was absolutely hopeless. A portion of Ferguson's army marched as far as Brindletown, Burke County, and some even as far as the foot of the Blue Ridge Mountains.

At Old Fort, Colonel Ferguson rode up to the home of Capt. Thomas Lytle, a noted patriot leader, who then lived 4 miles from Old Fort. The captain was not at home, but Mrs. Lytle stepped to the door, elegantly dressed, and invited the colonel in, which invitation he declined, saying that his business required haste, as the King's army had restored his authority in the South, and that the rebellion was practically quelled, and that he had come to offer a pardon to Captain Lytle. Mrs. Lytle then told Colonel Ferguson that she did not know where the captain was, but thought that he was out with friends, whom the colonel had called "rebels." Whereupon Ferguson replied deprecatingly:

> Well, madam, I have discharged my duty. I felt anxious to help Captain Lytle, because I had learned that he was both brave and honorable. If he persists in the rebellion and comes to harm, his blood will be on his own head.

The brave little woman gave the colonel the following spirited reply:

> Colonel Ferguson, I don't know when this war may end; it is not unlikely that my husband may fall in battle; all I positively know is that he will never prove a traitor to his country.
>
> [Loud applause.]

So thoroughly was Ferguson imbued with the idea that the rebellion was over that when William Grant offered him a troop of cavalry for service in the King's cause he thanked him for his loyalty, but declined to accept them, "as the country was subdued and everything was quiet." This was in September, 1780, just thirty days before the great battle at Kings Mountain.

It was a critical and crucial moment in our history. Lord Cornwallis felt that he had the triumphant end of the Revolution in his hand. His chief lieutenants, Tarleton, Rawdon, Balfour, and Brown, had burned the people's property and hung the patriot leaders wherever they could be found.

Upon arriving at Gilberttown, Major Ferguson sent a verbal message by one Samuel Phillips, a prisoner and distant relative of Colonel Shelby, notifying the patriots who were then in the mountains that "if they did not desist from their opposition to the British arms he would march his army over the mountains, hang their leaders, and lay their country waste with fire and sword." No other words could have so thoroughly aroused the patriots. Colonel Shelby at once communicated the message to Colonel Sevier, who was the efficient officer of the Washington County militia, then in North Carolina, but now in Tennessee. These two brave leaders immediately resolved to raise all the men possible and to attempt to surprise Ferguson in his camp or wherever he could be found. Colonel Shelby also communicated with Col. William Campbell, of Washington County, Va. A rendezvous was agreed upon and the 25th of September was the time set for the meeting of the patriot leaders on Watauga River.

Cornwallis had intended to march his army from Charlotte to Salisbury, N. C., and expected Ferguson to join him there, and with their combined army to overrun North Carolina and Virginia and take them under the King's control. In the meantime the mountain men were gathering. The sacrifice they were about to make was great, for their wives and helpless ones would be left to the torch and scalping knife of the Indians. But they had become desperate and had now resolved to take their lives in their hands and to take every chance in order to rid their country of the invading foe. Colonel Cleveland, of Wilkes County, N. C., was also notified, and he agreed to collect as many men as possible and join in the expedition. The whole country was aroused and fired with the spirit and determination to rout Ferguson and his Tory outlaws, who had threatened to hang their leaders and burn their homes.

John Adair, the officer for the sale of North Carolina lands, loaned the patriot leaders $13,000 with which to obtain ammunition and equipment for the expedition, Colonels Sevier and Shelby binding themselves to repay the money if the legislature failed to ratify the loan. Adair hesitated about loaning the money, for he had no authority to do so, but finally said:

If the country is overrun by the British, our liberty is gone. Let the money go, too. Take it. If the enemy by its use is driven from the country, I can trust that country to justify and vindicate our conduct; so take it.

Promptly at the time agreed upon Campbell, with 350 soldiers; Sevier, with 240, and Shelby, with an equal number of men, assembled ready for the march. The soldiers had no uniforms, no band of music had they, no bristling bayonets, no glittering equipage. Their only weapon was the Deckard rifle, which most of them had learned to use as experts against the Indians and wild beasts. Their other equipment was simple, being a blanket, a cup, and a little parched corn meal mixed with maple sugar.

Before starting on their perilous march to meet Major Ferguson and his army the brave, simple, unsubdued patriots uncovered their heads while a devout minister, Rev. Samuel Doak, prayed to Almighty God that success might crown their undertaking, and closed a brief but stirring address to them with the biblical quotation, "The sword of the Lord and of Gideon!" Immediately they began their arduous and difficult march over the hills and mountains and through the valleys, some of the higher mountain peaks being covered with snow. Camping and moving, moving and camping, they passed around Roan Mountain, following Roaring Creek and the Toe River. The mountain scenery along their march is not excelled by any to be found in Switzerland or any other portion of the world. Around them on every hand were towering peaks, some of them rising to the height of more than 6,000 feet. A writer has well said:

Here, if we were to meet an army with music and banners, we would hardly notice it; man and all his works and all his devices are sinking into insignificance. We feel that we are approaching nearer and nearer to the Almighty Architect. We feel in all things about us the presence of the great Creator. A sense of awe and reverence comes over us, and we expect to find in this stupendous temple we are approaching none but men of pure hearts and benignant minds. But, by degrees, as we clamber up the winding hill, the sensation of awe gives way—new scenes of beauty and grandeur open upon our ravished vision—and a multitude of emotions swell within our hearts. We are dazzled, bewildered, and excited; we know not how, nor why; our souls expand and swim through the immensity before and around us, and our being seems merged in the infinite and glorious works of God. This is the country of the faries; and here they have their shaded dells, their mock mountains, and their green valleys, thrown into ten thousand shapes of beauty. But higher up are the Titan hills; and when we get among them we will find the difference between the abodes of the giants and their elfin neighbors.

They crossed the Blue Ridge Mountains at Gillespies Gap on the 29th of September. About this time Col. Charles McDowell and Maj. Joseph McDowell with 160 men joined the little army, while Colonel Cleveland and Major Winston with 350 troops joined them soon after. A portion of the army passed over Linville Mountain and stopped at Quaker Meadows, the home of Cols. Charles and Joseph McDowell.

Up to this time no head of the organization had been selected, but on Monday, October 2, by common consent, out of courtesy to Colonel Campbell, who was the only officer who had come from another State, all the others being North Carolinians, he was chosen commanding officer. Col. Charles McDowell, the senior North Carolina officer, was requested to go at once to the camp of General Gates and to notify him of the plans of the mountain men, while his brother, Col. Joseph McDowell, assumed command of his men. McDowell's command was largely increased in Burke County by the gallant colonel's relatives, friends, and admirers. On the 3d of October, at Cherry Mountain, in Rutherford County, the little army was increased by the addition of a few South Carolinians under Colonel Williams. Colonel Lacey, of South Carolina, and Colonels Graham and Hambright and Major Chronicle, of Lincoln County, N. C., soon joined the patriots.

When the army arrived within 16 miles of Gilberttown, where they still supposed Major Ferguson had his camp, they expected the battle to begin soon, for they intended to attack the royal officer wherever they found him. On October 3, Colonel Cleveland, who at that time weighed about 250 pounds, requested the little army to form a circle. He was a man of great courage and hoped to infuse some of his own spirit into the minds of his men. Campbell, Shelby, Sevier, McDowell, and Winston came into the circle with Cleveland, whereupon Cleveland removed his hat and said with great feeling:

Now, my brave fellows, I have come to tell you the news. The enemy is at hand, and we must up and at them. Now is the time for every man of you to do his country a priceless service, such as shall lead your children to exult in the fact that their fathers were the conquerors of Ferguson. When the pinch comes I shall be with you. But if any of you shrink from sharing in the battle and the glory, you can now have the opportunity of backing out and leaving, and you shall have a few minutes for considering the matter.

Not one of the men, be it said to their credit, accepted the invitation, but each one repledged his life and his fortunes to the perilous undertaking. [Applause.]

On the next day, the 4th of October, they learned that Ferguson had fallen back from Gilberttown for the purpose of avoiding battle. Ferguson had been informed by some native deserters that the mountain men were in pursuit of him; yet he fell back so leisurely that it became impossible for him to form a junction with Cornwallis before the patriots could overtake him. Ferguson dispatched two inhabitants of the country, carrying a message to Lord Cornwallis, asking for immediate assistance. These carriers passed Webbs Ford, on by Mooresboro, and on toward Kings Mountain, when some of the patriots, seeing them, suspected their mission and set out in pursuit of them, which compelled them to lie in hiding by day and travel by night. Hence they did not reach Cornwallis, in Charlotte, until the 7th of October, the day of the battle.

Ferguson marched almost in a southerly direction from Gilberttown, attempting to give the impression that his objective point was Ninety-Six, S. C. On the 3d of October he halted his army at Camps Ford on Broad River. In this neighborhood he remained two days. On the 5th he sent a dispatch to Lord Cornwallis, saying:

I am on my march toward you by the old road from Cherokee Ford, north of Kings Mountain. Three or four hundred soldiers, part dragoons, would finish the business. Something must be done. This is their last push in this quarter.

He crossed Broad River at Cherokee Ford in South Carolina, and on the afternoon of October 6 arrived on Kings Mountain, a small mountain ridge which received its name on account of a man named King having lived near there. This mountain range is several miles in length, running northeast and southwest. The principal peak is something like 5 miles from the ridge on which the battle was fought, the battle ridge being about 500 yards long and 200 yards wide—"so narrow," says Mills' Statistics, "that a man standing on it may be shot from either side," and being just over the North Carolina line in York County, S. C. The ridge is about 75 feet above the surrounding country. Ferguson thought this would be an ideal spot on which to camp, and so pleased was he with his camping ground that he declared that the Almighty could not drive him from it, and affirmed that he would be able to capture or destroy any force the patriots could bring against him. One writer says that he declared that "he was on Kings Mountain, that he was king of that mountain, and that God Almighty could not drive him from it.

Meanwhile the gallant little army of patriots was pressing upon his march with enthusiasm and determination. When they arrived at Gilbert Town and learned that Major Ferguson had fallen back, in order to follow him with greater speed all the foot soldiers were weeded from the ranks and left behind and only those on horseback proceeded, with great haste, to overtake the royal army. They marched nearly all of the night of the 6th of October, with the determination not to desist in their pursuit until they had forced battle on Ferguson or driven him into the army of Cornwallis. In the meantime Major Candler and Colonel Clarke, of Georgia, with their little band, joined the American forces. The men kept their guns dry by wrapping their blankets and hunting coats around the locks, exposing themselves to the rain rather than run the risk of destroying the usefulness of their trusty weapons. From some natives of that section they learned where Ferguson was camped and something of his strength. The combined force of the patriots was now 1,100 men, all of whom were well armed, and about 900 of whom were mounted, the remainder being foot soldiers. The patriots crossed the river at the same point where Ferguson crossed—Cherokee Ford. When within a few miles of the mountain a young girl, the daughter of a loyalist family, told the patriots that Ferguson was camped on the mountain. From some of the natives they had learned that Major Ferguson was dressed in a glittering uniform, but wore a linen duster to protect it. Each member of the army was apprised of this fact, and directed to look out for a man in such a dress and mark him for his rifle.

Finally they arrived within striking distance of the enemy and agreed upon their plan of attack. "Buford" was the watchword. Only 1 mile farther would bring them face to face with their long-sought enemy. The patriots were formed into two lines of battle, two men deep, Colonel Campbell leading the right line and Colonel Cleveland commanding the left. Each man understood that it was intended to surround the mountain on which Ferguson was camped, so that in shooting at him and his men there would be no danger of killing each other. The strictest orders were given that no talking would be allowed and that absolute silence must be maintained, which order was implicitly obeyed. This was about 3 o'clock in the afternoon on October 7. After the mountain had been surrounded the order was given to halt, dismount, and tie their horses. The final order was then given in these words: "Fresh prime your guns, and every man go into battle firmly resolving to fight until he dies!" This order was carried out with stoic determination. The idea of defeat was foreign to them. Dr. Lyman C. Draper, the author of the excellent history of this battle, well says in discussing this order:

> Never was war cry of the ancient Romans more ceaseless and determined that Carthage must be destroyed than was that of the mountaineers to catch and destroy Ferguson.

The provincial corps and well-drilled loyalists under Ferguson were carefully posted along the crest of the mountain. Here they were determined to stand their ground and never retreat. In Ferguson's army were about 1,100 men of the King's American Regiment, from New York, the Queen's Rangers, New Jersey Volunteers, and loyal militia. Every man in his army understood what actual fighting meant. They were specially skilled in the use of the bayonet, and the guns which were not provided with bayonets were provided with long knives, the handles of which were cut to fit the muzzles of the rifles.

In speaking of the class of men composing the patriot army, Doctor Draper says:

> They were better educated than most of the frontier settlers and had a more thorough understanding of the question at issue between the colonies and their mother country. These men went forth to strike their country's foes, as did the patriarchs of old, feeling assured that the God of battles was with them and that He would surely crown their efforts with success. They had no doubts nor fears. They trusted in God—and kept their powder dry. Such a thing as a coward was not known among them. How fitting it was that to such a band of men should have been assigned, by Campbell's own good judgment, the attack on Ferguson's choicest troops—his Provincial Rangers. It was a happy omen of success—literally the forlorn hope—the right men in the right place.

Campbell's corps was composed of his own regiment, Sevier's regiment, and McDowell's and Winston's battalions, and were to cross the southern end of the ridge and attack Ferguson. Cleveland's corps was made up of Williams's command, which included the men under Brandon, Hammond, and Candler, his own men from Wilkes and Surry, those commanded by Lacey, and also the troops from Lincoln County under Hambright and Chronicle. Shelby commanded a corps of his own men. These troops under Cleveland and Shelby were to be disposed on the left of the ridge and opposite to Colonel Campbell's troops.

Thus arranged the entire force consisted of four columns, two columns being on the north side and the other two on the south side of the ridge, the columns being commanded respectively by Shelby and Cleveland, Campbell and Sevier. All the troops being thus arranged, the leaders then appealed to the soldiers to conduct themselves like heroes in the impending fight. Thus, standing on the very verge of what was to be one of the greatest fights of the Revolutionary war, Campbell visited each command and said to the soldiers that if any of them, men or officers, were afraid, to quit the ranks and go home; that he wished no man to engage in the action who could not fight; that as for himself he was determined to fight the enemy a week if need be to gain the victory.

After giving the orders in a voice that could be heard by most of the men, Campbell placed himself at the head of his own regiment, and, after each of the other commanding officers had done the same, the order to march was given. A large number of the soldiers threw away their hats and tied handkerchiefs about their heads so as not to be retarded by the undergrowth or limbs in charging up the mountain. On the gallant army marched, two men deep, for the scene of action. The actual battle ground was now about 1,200 yards away. Arriving in shooting distance, the men under Shelby and the men under Campbell began the attack. Ferguson did not discover the presence of the patriot army until they had approached to within 400 yards of him; whereupon the alarm in his camp was given, "to arms" was ordered, and his shrill silver whistle was heard resounding through the forest calling his men to prepare for battle.

The first actual firing was done by Shelby and his men on the north side of the ridge; whereupon, according to prearrangement, the entire patriot army united in a loud ringing frontier war whoop and dashed forward into the fray. The moment Colonel Campbell caught first sight of the enemy he shouted to his men: "Here they are, my brave boys; shoot like h—l and fight like devils!" On all sides of the hill the firing became rapid and regular. About this time, Cleveland, in order to encourage his men, said to them:

> My brave fellows, we have beaten the Tories, and we can beat them again. They are all cowards; if they had the spirit of men they would join with their fellow-citizens in supporting the independence of their country. When you are engaged you are not to wait for the word of command from me. I will show you by my example how to fight. Fire as quick as you can, and stand your ground as long as you can.

Campbell led his men straight up the hill, pouring a deadly fire into the enemy. He and his men were immediately charged by Ferguson's men with fixed bayonets, and Campbell was driven down the hill. At the same time Shelby and his men were advancing in quick time on the other side of the ridge, so that Ferguson's army found it necessary to give their attention to Shelby's assault. As one has said:

> Shelby, a man of the hardiest make, stiff as iron, among the dauntless singled out for dauntlessness, went right onward and upward like a man who had but one thing to do and with but one thought, to do it.

But he and his brave fellows, like Campbell's, were compelled to retreat before the dashing charge of Ferguson's men. When driven to the foot of the hill, Shelby cried out to his men:

> Now, boys, quickly reload your rifles and let's advance upon them and give them another hell of fire.

[Applause.]

Thus back and forth, Campbell and Sevier on one side and Shelby and Cleveland on the other, the patriots charged up the hill three consecutive times and each time they were driven back and each time renewed the charge, until the whole hill was enveloped in flame and the rattle of the musketry sounded like thunder. The coils of the patriots—commanded by Campbell, Sevier, McDowell, Winston, Hambright, Cleveland, Lacey, Williams, and Shelby—were drawing closer around Ferguson, who galloped back and forth cheering his men and giving orders. Above the din and roar of the battle could be heard his shrill silver whistle, by which he gave his commands. The place of his encampment was cleared land, or rather bare of timber, which made his men easily seen and singled out by the attacking force; but the mountain sides were studded with trees, which furnished protection for the patriots. The distinguished Col. Harry Lee, after the battle, said of Ferguson's choice of the place:

> It was more assailable by the rifle than defensible by the bayonet.

The battle was now in progress on all sides of the mountain. The roar and din was terrific. Hon. Bailey Peyton, of Tennessee, said: "When the conflict began the mountain appeared volcanic; there flashed along its summit and around its base and up its sides one long sulphurous blaze."

At the first fire delivered by Ferguson's men Colonel Lacey's horse was shot from under him. The conflict was terrible and sanguinary. The patriots were trained with the gun and were "dead shots." The royal troops were well drilled, well armed, and well commanded. Thus the battle raged for more than an hour, much of the time being engaged in hand-to-hand fighting. Capt. William Edmondson, one of Campbell's men, dashed up the side of the hill, knocked a rifle from a Briton's hand, seized him by the neck, and dragged him to the foot of the hill. [Applause.] He returned again to make a similar conquest, when he fell mortally wounded. After the battle was ended one of his faithful men told him of the great victory, whereupon the dying man showed his great satisfaction of the result and passed away. Colonel Campbell took him by the hand and wept. He died with the shout of victory in his ears, "smiled, loosed his feeble hold on life, and the Christian patriot went to his reward."

Major Chronicle and Colonel Hambright, with their Lincoln County boys, were in the thickest of the fight, and while making a gallant charge up the mountain side Major Chronicle was struck with a ball by the enemy and fell; but Hambright took command and pressed on up the hill to victory. Many bold hand-to-hand fights took place during this terrible hour. The splendid steed which Colonel Cleveland rode was shot from under him. McDowell's men (Burk and Rutherford) did splendid service and were at all times where the bullets fell thickest. No regiment, no man, failed to do his duty. The brave Colonel Williams, on the top of the mountain, fell and died like a hero. His dying words were: "For God's sake, boys, don't give up the hill!" Each soldier of the army obeyed to the letter Shelby's battle cry, "Never shoot until you see an enemy, and never see an enemy without bringing him down." [Applause.]

At the end of an hour the brave fighters under Ferguson and De Peyster began to despair, for during the terrible preceding fifty minutes their numbers were rapidly decreased by the incessant and unerring fire of the mountain men. The Tories began to give way first, hammered and driven by Shelby and Campbell. At this time De Peyster, second in command, seeing that all was lost hoisted the white flag, whereupon Ferguson galloped up and cut it down with his sword. It is evident that Ferguson never intended to surrender, but his idea was to escape or die fighting. Accordingly he and a few of his closest officers made a daring attempt to break through the patriot lines for their freedom. Dashing forward, he cut and slashed on every side with his glittering sword. Some one in the American army cried out: "There's Ferguson; shoot him!" Whereupon more than a dozen muskets leveled at him and he fell from his horse after receiving eight fatal wounds, one of them being through the head. He died almost immediately. To the men in Sevier's column is due the credit of having delivered the fatal shots and prevented the escape of the royal commander.

Now a final hand-to-hand conflict between the contending forces ensued, which lasted about twenty minutes. Shelby and Campbell were leading the onslaught. The fighting was done within 100 feet range. This onset drove Ferguson's gallant rangers and well-drilled tories back to their tents, where most of the rangers were killed. At this point Captain De Peyster, who fought gallantly during the entire battle, again hoisted the white flag. The royalists were now huddled in a group on the top of the mountain. The patriots were ordered to close up and surround them and receive their surrender. [Applause.]

After the surrender it was proposed to give three cheers for "Liberty," which was done, and the old hills and caverns resounded with shouts of victory and freedom.

Ferguson died like a hero; De Peyster commanded like a veteran. Considering the numbers engaged, there was no more sanguinary battle fought during the Revolutionary war. It was one of the most complete and far-reaching victories that history records. Not one of Major Ferguson's army escaped, 456 having been killed and wounded and 648 taken prisoners. The American loss was 6 officers and 23 privates killed and 54 wounded.

Draper says that "so curious were the Whigs to see the fallen British chief that many repaired to the spot to see the body as it lay in its gore and glory." On the southeast portion of the ridge the valiant leader, wrapped in a raw beef's hide, without military cloak or hero's coffin, was buried, and his grave may now be seen by the passer-by, although this has been his sepulcher for more than a hundred years. Ferguson's famous silver whistle fell into the hands of Colonel Shelby, while Colonel Sevier took charge of his silken sash. To Colonel Cleveland was given Ferguson's beautiful white horse.

Thomas Young, in describing this battle, says:

> Awful, indeed, was the scene of the wounded, the dying, and the dead on the field after the carnage of that dreadful day.

Another says:

> The scenes of the battle ground the night after the conflict were heartrending in the extreme—the groans of the dying and the constant call of "Water, water!"

Says another:

> The groans of the wounded and dying on the mountain were truly affecting, begging piteously for a little water.
>
> The red rose grew pale at the blood that was shed,
> And the white rose blushed at the shedding.

Mr. Chairman, in the smoke and din of this terrible battle, in which were engaged twenty-two hundred sturdy fighters, was born this magnificent Republic, whose blessings we now share. [Applause.] The effect of this great victory on the people, both North and South, was electrical. Every American took fresh courage, and the cause of the patriots began to ascend from that hour, and grew stronger and stronger until the surrender of Cornwallis at Yorktown. This victory paved the way for his surrender. Ferguson, with his army, was the right arm of Cornwallis, and his loss and defeat compelled Cornwallis to evacuate Charlotte and hastily retire into South Carolina. Thenceforward the British cause waned, and the splendid fabric of this splendid Republic was made not only a possibility, but a reality.

Senator LODGE, in his Story of the Revolution, writing of this battle, says:

> It proved one of the decisive battles of the Revolution. It turned the tide of war in the Southern States. From that time the British fortunes declined, while the spirit of the southern people rose at a bound. The back country was freed, for Ferguson and his men constituted the force upon which Cornwallis counted to subdue the interior and crush out all local risings. That force and its very brave and efficient commander were wiped out of existence.

Speaking of the retreat of Cornwallis from Charlotte, the same author says:

> All the way his men had been shot down by the militia—something quite impossible before Kings Mountain. * * * Cornwallis had been forced to abandon his northern march.

Thomas Jefferson said of this battle:

> It was the joyful annunciation of that turn in the tide of success that terminated the Revolutionary war with the seal of our independence.

Dr. J. Watts De Peyster, an eminent authority, says that Kings Mountain was the decisive battle of the war in the South, and, perhaps, the decisive result everywhere. He further says that it was "the deadliest for the number who actually fought in it at the South." He says the tactics of the patriots in this battle were unexceptionable and, as applied to Colonel Cleveland, as "worthy of the strategem of Hannibal, which implies the highest commendation."

John H. Wheeler, the historian, says:

> This was the turning point of the fortunes of America. This decisive blow prostrated the British power for the time, vanquished the Tory influence, and encouraged the hopes of the patriots.

John Fiske, in his War of Independence, says:

> In the series of events which led to the surrender of Cornwallis the battle of Kings Mountain played a part similar to that played by the battle of Bennington in the series of events which led to the surrender of Burgoyne. It was the enemy's first serious disaster, and its immediate result was to check his progress until the Americans could muster strength enough to overthrow him.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have tried in my poor way to show the House the importance of this battle in establishing American independence and in delivering our country from Britain's yoke, and believing that those Members who have followed me in this discourse are satisfied that Kings Mountain was one of the most important, if not the most important, conflict during the entire Revolutionary war, and believing thus, everyone must feel a deep sense of mortification in the failure of this Government for more than a century to commemorate this battle in some suitable way.

The great heroes who fought there and shed luster upon American arms need no monument to their memory. If they did, the high peak of Kings Mountain, standing isolated from its lofty neighbors, keeps eternal vigil over the battle ground, continually pointing to the spot "where valor proudly sleeps;" but we, ourselves American citizens, who have reaped the benefit of their sacrifice and their glory can not afford to let this spot go unmarked by national recognition. So let us, by our votes in this House, build upon this sacred spot a magnificent shaft; and if love of country, if patriotism, could be the architect, I venture to say it would pierce the clouds beyond the flight of the eagle, for it was there on that stony mountain crest that these patriots planted the banner of liberty, and there "blazed out the path and made clear the way up which all the nations of the earth must come in God's appointed time."

> When honored and decrepit age shall lean against the base of this monument, and troops of ingenuous youth shall be gathered around it, and when the one shall speak to the other of its objects and the purposes of its construction, and the great and glorious event with which it is connected, there shall rise from every youthful breast the ejaculation, "Thank God, I—I also—am an American!"

But whether you build this monument or not, the example of the brave heroes who there fought and yielded up their stainless lives upon their country's altar will be a perennial inspiration to all the young people of this entire country—brave yeomanry! simple in their habits, lofty in their aspirations, patriotic in action, gallant in battle, and glorious in death! [Applause.]

But in justice to ourselves and to our country let us build to their memory a magnificent monument. In the language of Webster—

> Let it rise! Let it rise till it meet the sun in his coming; let the earliest light of the morning gild it, and the parting day linger and play on its summit.

[Prolonged applause.]

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I now yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TIRRELL].

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. [After counting.]

One hundred and seven Members; a quorum is present, and the point of order is overruled.

Mr. TIRRELL. Mr. Chairman, the chairman of this committee, in his opening remarks, made reference to desertions from the Navy during the last year. He stated that these desertions numbered 3,227, a decrease from the previous year, when desertions numbered 4,488. He assigned as reasons for these desertions three causes: First, the restless spirit of American youth; second, the hardships of life at sea, and, third, the oath they took to serve the Government not being taken seriously. To these reasons the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] added another, namely, that the hardships of the service itself was the cause of many desertions.

I desire to add one more reason, which has caused me a great deal of trouble, and I presume has caused other Representatives who live near the seashore, and especially near some large city, where many enlistments are made, namely, the enlistment of minors—and I mean by minors those under 18 years of age.

I have had very little trouble connected with the enlistment of those over 18 years of age, but an infinite amount of trouble from those who enlisted under 18. Now, the rules and regulations of the Department relative to the enlistment of minors under 18 years of age, if they were fully carried out, or explicitly and clearly explained by the recruiting officers, are not subject to much criticism.

The trouble is, in the anxiety to recruit the service these explanations are glossed over, and many immature youth—children, in fact, unable to judge for themselves and their interest, or the interest of the family with which they are connected—are enlisted by recruiting officers throughout the country. The rules and regulations are substantially to this effect: That a boy under 18 years of age, desiring to enlist in the Navy, must have the written consent of his father and mother, or one if the other is not living.

As a matter of fact, boys 15 and 16 years of age appear at the recruiting office, and the course of procedure follows somewhat in this way: They are presented with a paper, and that paper will contain certain questions in fine print. Up in the left-hand corner will be the age. They are not required to give their age explicitly, but the year and the month in which they were born. Certain other questions are to be answered. Having looked that paper over and signed their name to it, the recruiting officer takes the boy out and a more elaborate blank is prepared by the officer, and he passes that blank over to the boy and asks him to read it, and then asks whether he understands it and the contents thereof. He then signs that blank.

Then they take him into another room, where there is a placard on the wall which says something about regulations in the Navy, and ask him to read that; and he glances at it, and, apparently having read it, he is sworn into the service.

Now, in the cases which have come under my observation I have not found one where the boy has understood what he has been doing. I never yet have found one where it has been explained to him that if he swore falsely in regard to his age he has committed perjury, and that before he could be discharged from the Navy he must be tried by court-martial, and if found guilty must be imprisoned from six months to a year, which is the usual period, although it is somewhat modified in case of good behavior.

Mr. RIXEY. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. TIRRELL. Certainly.

Mr. RIXEY. Where the applicant is under 21 years of age, does he not have to have the consent of his parents?

Mr. TIRRELL. Yes.

Mr. RIXEY. If he goes with the consent of the parents by certifying that he is over 18 years of age, and in addition makes affidavit that he is over 18 years of age, how are you going to take any additional precaution?

Mr. TIRRELL. I am not finding any fault with that, and I am coming to the point that I will endeavor to make in these few remarks. I say that of the cases that have been brought to my attention—and they have been many, for there are many in eastern Massachusetts, and other Representatives have told me they are numerous in different part of the country—I have found that the boys have not had explained to them the facts, either orally or by anything in writing which has been submitted to them, that if they swear falsely in regard to their age this imprisonment follows. I want to say to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. RIXEY] that in one town in my district of about 11,000 inhabitants, where everybody knows everybody else, where the recruiting office is almost within a stone's throw of where the parents lived, there were two boys, 15 or 16 years of age, who were enlisted under the circumstances I have stated, and in order that I might know exactly how this was done in another case last summer I had myself associated as assistant counsel in a court-martial, so that I might learn all the details connected with the methods of enlistment which were followed by the Army and Navy in our country.

I found that this boy, who was within one month of 18 years of age when he entered the enlisting office, stated that he was 18 years of age the next month. There was no contradiction by any witness who was on the stand before the court-martial that he made that statement. I found that he was given a paper and that he filled it up, that they then made out another paper, and then asked him if he understood it. Then they took him to another room and pointed out to him a placard on the wall and asked him to read what was written on the placard. He said, at the trial, it was "Something about the Declaration of Independence." In other words, that boy did not have the slightest comprehension of the enormity of the offense and punishment to which he would be subjected provided he committed perjury in stating his age. Yet, notwithstanding those facts, notwithstanding that his father was sick and had been so sick for several years that he was unable to earn a dollar, and that this boy was the only support of a family of four or five children—for he worked in the shoe shops in the city of Marlboro—and that the family was dependent upon him for the support that he must give by so working, he was subjected under those circumstances to an imprisonment of one year on account of his having sworn falsely about his age. I presume they had the right to find from all the circumstances that he was not 18 years of age. What I say, Mr. Chairman, is not in criticism of the Naval Department, nor in criticism of the rule which they have laid down, because that rule is all right and proper provided it is understood. My criticism is relative to this particular point, and this particular point only, that the requirements are not such that the boys of immature age, 14, 15, 16, and 17 years, can comprehend or do comprehend from the methods of enlistment which are adopted the course which they are taking and the punishment to which they will be subjected provided a false statement is made.

This matter has been brought to the attention of the Navy Department by myself. They have the matter under consideration, and I insist that unless it is regulated and changed by the Navy Department it ought to have the attention of Congress in the way of legislation, in order that there shall be a rule in reference to enlistment to prevent these desertions by minors and that there shall not only be a written statement which they shall be required to read, explicitly stating that if perjury is committed in regard to any essential fact which they sign that they are liable to court-martial and imprisonment, but also that the recruiting officer shall be obliged to explain orally to these applicants what they are doing and the punishment which they may suffer.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Is it not true that they do not suffer now unless they themselves take advantage of their own perjury?

Mr. TIRRELL. Yes; but can you prevent it? Let me say that in every post-office in eastern Massachusetts, in every town of considerable size, as you enter the door you will see a placard in flaming colors——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman three minutes more.

Mr. TIRRELL. You will see a great placard in flaming colors which would make one believe that enlistment in the Navy was one long, sweet song, with a battle ship off in the distance and the flag of our country flying from her masthead, with a boat on the shore filled with natty midshipmen, with their blue suits and happy, laughing countenances, on the point of embarking for the battle ship beyond. And do we not all know that with an inflamed imagination boys 15 or 16 years of age, regardless of every other consideration, the state of things at home and of their own condition, will seek these recruiting offices and be enlisted if they can? If they are to be enlisted, then let these things be fully explained to them, and if they are fully explained—and I never yet have found a case, and I have had many of them, where they have been—then I believe that the desertions, which are now so numerous, will very much lessen and that the boys of the ages of which I have spoken will not be taken away from father and mother and subjected to the temptations of a life at sea. They are not old enough to resist the temptations to which they are subjected, and many a young fellow has been ruined for life thereby.

Mr. DRISCOLL. The usual custom. Does not the whole trouble consist in the fact that the ordinary American boy, by reason of his bringing up and his independence, is not fit to be a servant? That is, he is not adapted to the work of a servant, and the work in the Navy of a common sailor is a menial service very largely. Is not that the trouble?

Mr. TIRRELL. No doubt that is true to a great extent. Mr. Chairman, that is all I desire to say.

Mr. RIXEY. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. TIRRELL. Yes.

Mr. RIXEY. He states these boys are taken away from their parents. As I understand the rules of the Department, the parent has to give his written consent to any minor where the boy is under 21 years of age. Now, therefore, there can be no question about the boy being taken away from the parents where the parents object to it. Now, you complain of the advertisements for the Navy. You surely do not expect the Navy Department to advertise the disadvantages of the Navy. The Navy wants recruits. It puts forth the advantages of enlistment, and it is for the young man and the parents of the boy to decide whether that boy will go in or not.

Mr. MANN. If a private individual circulated that stuff through the Post-Office Department, they would be forbidden to use the mails on the ground of fraud.

Mr. RIXEY. Well, I do not know about that.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I yield one hour to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS].

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Chairman, I have no disposition to join in a general debate with my colleague from Massachusetts on the subject which he has just been discussing, but if it meant anything it was a criticism of the officers of the Navy who are detailed for recruiting service. Now, an officer detailed for that duty does not get credit for the number of men he enlists, but his record is made up and he gets credit for the number of efficient men he enlists, determined after these men have performed their term of service and have been discharged. It would be an offense subjecting an officer to punishment to enlist a minor without the consent of the minor's parents or guardian, and in my experience of now something like fifteen months the only case which has come to my attention where a minor has been enlisted was where he wrote a letter giving this consent, forged the signature of his guardian, and took the oath that he was over age, and when he got into the service he found, as a great many other young men find, that he did not like the life and he wanted to get out of the service, so he fell back on the statement that he was under age when enlisted. The fact is these are bad boys and have no business to be in the service under any circumstances. In all such cases the officer is deceived by the men he has enlisted, and if anybody deserves sympathy it is the officer who is being imposed upon, and it is the Government that is being imposed upon by these young fellows who are so ready to make a false oath.

Mr. TIRRELL. May I ask my colleague a question?

Mr. WEEKS. Certainly.

Mr. TIRRELL. Do you not think the recruiting officer is as anxious to get recruits and make a good record in filling up as anything else that induces him to do these things?

Mr. WEEKS. I have just stated, Mr. Chairman, that the officer did not obtain any credit for the number of enlistments made. The credit which he gets is determined by the number of efficient enlistments he makes, which can only be determined after the men have performed their term of enlistment of three years; so that there is no earthly reason why an officer of the Navy should enlist a man who is under age or who is not likely to be efficient.

Mr. FULKERSON. Do you not think that when the enlisted sailor and recruiting officer are in the same town that the Government should go to the parents and find out whether they give their consent or not?

Mr. WEEKS. I do not know about that. Possibly.

Mr. FULKERSON. I have a case in mind where a boy under 18 years of age made application, but neither of his parents ever heard of it until after he was already on the way to the coast. He was enlisted, notwithstanding he was under age and neither parent gave consent.

Mr. WEEKS. But he made oath he was over 18.

Mr. FULKERSON. That is true, but has not the parent some right in his boy until he is 21 years of age, and ought not the Government to respect the parents' interest to that extent?

Mr. KEIFER. They get them out——

Mr. FULKERSON. Oh, you can get them out on a writ of habeas corpus, but then they will be prosecuted for having made a false oath.

Mr. WEEKS. The fact is, a boy 18 years of age who will do that proves that he is a bad boy.

Mr. FULKERSON. That does not relieve the Government of the right to give the parents a fair show. It is the duty of the Government to see that the parents are protected in the right of their boy until he is 21 years of age, and if the Government did not get the parents' consent the boy should be sent home to them.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Chairman, I am surprised that any case has come to the attention of the gentleman from Missouri in which a young man under age has been enlisted without the consent of his parents or guardians.

Mr. FULKERSON. That fact exists notwithstanding, and the Secretary of the Navy admits it, and says it is wrong that such a thing should exist.

Mr. MANN. I could name twenty cases of that same kind that have come under my personal knowledge during my brief term here.

Mr. TIRRELL. I can name a number in my district.

Mr. WEEKS. All I can say to you, gentlemen, is that it is your duty to report these cases to the Secretary and it will be his duty to punish the offending officer.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I had a case of that same kind where the boy was under age. I attempted to have him released, and it was very strongly intimated that if he was released he might be prosecuted for perjury.

Mr. WEEKS. Why should he not be prosecuted for perjury?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I would like to ask the gentleman one question.

Mr. WEEKS. I will be glad to reply.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Where a boy under 18 years of age enlists in the Navy, and in order to get in makes an affidavit that he is over 18 years of age, and his parents find it out and want him discharged, does the gentleman think the Navy Department ought to undertake to fasten a stigma on the boy by prosecuting him for perjury or giving him a dishonorable discharge from the Navy?

Mr. WEEKS. I do not know why not.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Because he is a child.

Mr. KEIFER. He would not be a child if it was in anything else.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I do not think if a boy strains his conscience in the cause of patriotism and swears that he is over 18 years of age, and his parents want to take him out of the Navy for some good reason, that he ought to have a stigma put upon him. And that is precisely what they do.

Mr. WEEKS. As some of you gentlemen know, I am a graduate of the Naval Academy. In my time cadets entered the Academy between the ages of 14 and 18. They were obliged to enter under the age of 18. They took an oath when they entered the Academy to do their duty, to obey certain regulations, etc. Now, we have been condemning hazing at the Naval Academy, but if the position taken by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] is sound, any cadet who enters the Naval Academy under 18 and takes an oath to observe the regulations ought not to be held up to that oath, because he took it when under 18 and consequently was not responsible.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That is not a parallel case at all. I would object to those boys over there at Annapolis being prosecuted for perjury because they indulged in hazing. I am opposed to hazing, but I am not in favor of putting that kind of a stigma on a boy. I do not think it is right.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, I will say that I had a boy treated under similar circumstances to those the gentleman has stated, and he was released without a stigma of any kind.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That is a very strange way, to have one rule for you over there and then another one for us. That is the whole thing.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I would like to know how the gentleman proceeded.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I desire to state that I had a similar case not more than a week ago, where a young man 17 years of age went away from home and enlisted in the Navy, and as soon as the parents ascertained it they wanted to get his discharge. They ascertained that he had made an affidavit that he was 18 years of age. The naval authorities refused to have him discharged or to recommend his discharge, and that is a similar case to the one stated by the gentleman on my left.

Mr. WEEKS. If the Navy Department were to allow the discharge of such fellows on the statement that they were under age when enlisted it would lose one-third of the men enlisted before any reasonable service had been gotten out of them, and this recruiting is a very considerable expense.

I listened yesterday to the remarks of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] with great interest, and while they were not new, or were only in part new, I doubt if the views which he expressed have ever been stated more explicitly or with greater force; but similar statements have been made by gentlemen in this House and in other places ever since this Government was organized. I recollect when I was a youngster in school reading in a newspaper a statement made by a then distinguished Member of this House, Mr. Blount, of Georgia, afterwards known as "Paramount Blount," of Hawaiian fame, in which he made very similar statements to those made by the gentleman from Ohio yesterday, and I will read from the RECORD of May 14, 1876, to show this similarity:

In the first place, I do not consider that the continued keeping up of the Navy of the United States at a high state is at all consistent with the genius of our people any more than to maintain a large standing army.

It is our great good fortune that, unlike the great powers of Europe, which are continually meditating destruction of each other both upon land and upon sea, we are isolated, disconnected with those controversies which are continually and, as it would seem, necessarily arising there. While this Government has been in existence but a hundred years our Navy has been called upon but once worthy of mention to go out against a foreign foe and that was during the war of 1812. I know we have had other troubles, but they amounted to naught.

It was charged against the Administration of Jefferson as well as against the Administration of Madison that they had almost wholly neglected the Navy. What was the result? When the trial of strength did come, although we encountered an enemy who by reason of the blows she had given to the Spanish, French, and Dutch navies was riding the ocean with contempt for the rest of the world, who does not remember with pride our struggle, and that it was our own despised little Navy which first brought her to a recognition of the fact that there was one power she must and should respect? But how did it happen? Much was due to the fact that our Navy was composed of men of skill, of courage, and of endurance, and a great deal that we found our commercial marine ready at once to come to our rescue. It was our hidden, but our easily available strength.

It is true that there is greater reason for ample preparation for naval warfare now than there was in 1812. In those days it required only a few months to build the largest battle ship. It took comparatively few weeks to build a ship of the ordinary size, and we had a merchant marine in those days on which we could rely for men. As sailors they performed the same duties on board the merchant ship which they would have to perform on a man-of-war, and they generally had some knowledge of gunnery, because in those days merchant ships were obliged to be armed for protection against pirates and privateers in time of war. Then it took three or four months to declare war, and that was a reasonable time to make preparation for it. To-day a declaration of war can be made in as many minutes, allowing no time for preparation. It takes three years to build a battle ship and a commensurate time to build smaller ships, and we have no merchant marine to furnish suitable men needed to serve on a man-of-war, which requires special training. We have had many examples in our own history to show the necessity for preparation. In the Virginius affair, which took place just before the gentleman from Georgia made the remarks which I have quoted, American citizens were seized in Cuba, stood in a row, and shot down, and other Americans would have been treated the same way if it had not been for the interposition of a British consul, backed by a British man-of-war, while we stood supinely by and did nothing, simply because our Navy was so weak that even our demands for redress received scant courtesy. It is safe to say that there would be no occasion to make such a demand under present circumstances, for no nation would now dare treat American citizens in such a way. Compare this humiliation with the pride and satisfaction felt by every American citizen when the reports came that Admiral Dewey had destroyed the Spanish fleet in Manila Harbor.

This will always be considered one of the great events in American history, but the part which people forget or have never considered is that, while as a military accomplishment the result was perfect, it would have been impossible if Admiral Dewey and his fleet had not been prepared to do just exactly what they did do. It should not be necessary to add to these illustrations, and the remedy for both is exactly the same—preparation would prevent the first affair and will make a recurrence of the second a reasonable certainty. But such a recent and convincing example of the same truth as the war between Japan and Russia furnishes should be added. It almost goes without saying that if Japan had not been prepared for that war she would have ceased to be an independent nation before this time, for her defeat on the sea would have meant military ruin, whatever successes she might have gained elsewhere; outside interference alone could have prevented this, and we have seen in the case of Korea within the past year that this aid could not be depended upon.

As stated by the gentleman from Ohio, a radical change in the reasons for making war has taken place since the French Revolution. Before that time wars were made because ruling families or rulers believed that the interests of their families or their own interests would be promoted by so doing, they conveniently assuming that the interests of the people were promoted in this way. Such a war would now be impossible, and the wars of the future will be waged for commercial or humane reasons, as have been nearly all wars since the time of the first Napoleon.

We, in common with all the great nations of Europe, have reached a condition where we produce more manufactured goods than we consume. We are all looking for markets. To insure our having a fair chance to trade with the whole world the open-door policy must be maintained, especially in the Orient, but if we were lacking in physical power it is safe to say that the door to our trade in many localities would be closed. Gentlemen speak of the triumphs of diplomacy as indicating the folly of maintaining a large navy, but diplomacy would lose many of its laurels if the Navy did not exist to insure a hearing and to compel a respectful consideration of our demands. From a commercial standpoint at least, the greatest success obtained by diplomacy in recent years was our demand, after the Boxer uprising, that the integrity of the Chinese Empire, territorially, and the open door for her trade should be agreed to, but does anyone believe that any attention would have been paid to our demand if our fleet in Chinese waters had consisted of three old ships of the civil war period, as it did twenty-five years ago, or if it had not been well known that we had the physical power at sea to make ourselves a vital factor in the affairs of the world?

It is an historical fact that when our naval power was at its lowest point our trade with the Orient was at its lowest possible ebb. When we commenced to build up our Navy, and especially when we had advertised our strength by the Spanish-American war, our trade commenced to increase and has continued to increase enormously. In the last fifteen years our trade with Japan has increased 700 per cent, while England's trade with Japan has scarcely doubled. Our trade with China in the last twenty-five years has increased 1,000 per cent, while the trade of England has increased but about 300 per cent.

Mr. PALMER. I am curious to know how an increase in trade can be ascribed to an increase in the Navy. I should like to have that explained.

Mr. WEEKS. I will try briefly to point out what I mean by this. As I stated a moment ago, if the gentleman had been listening——

Mr. PALMER. I have been listening to you intently.

Mr. WEEKS. Our trade commenced to increase about the time that our Navy commenced to develop. Our Navy is our one advertising medium in the Orient. The fact that we showed great strength during the Spanish-American war, great physical power, appeals to those people. They buy goods of nations which show to them that they have physical strength; and while I do not pretend to say that our increased trade is due entirely to that one cause, I believe that a large part of it is due to it, and I can show, Mr. Chairman, that where we have not objected to the closing of the door against us in other parts of the world, we have lost the trade that we had.

The best illustration of that statement is in the loss of our trade with Madagascar. Nearly ten years ago the French Government decided that it would take possession of that island. We had a trade with Madagascar that year of over half a million dollars. Our trade last year was about $11,000. In other words, in these days of reciprocity and favored-nation treaties and preferentials, such regulations can be made that unless the open door is maintained (and I have said the open door can not be maintained unless we have physical force), we are not going to develop new markets for our goods if we do not lose the trade we now have. Another illustration of that very point is the case of the Kongo.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Have we not had physical force for several years back?

Mr. WEEKS. Yes.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Why did we concede this trade to France in Madagascar?

Mr. WEEKS. That was before the Spanish-American war, and we are not responsible for that concession.

Mr. Chairman, some twenty years ago, before the Berlin conference, every annual message that was sent to Congress by our President mentioned the great trade which might be developed in the Kongo territory. This was also frequently referred to in reports made by our State Department. President Arthur, for instance, in his annual message in 1883, said:

The rich and populous valley is being opened to commerce. The United States can not be indifferent to the work nor to the interests of their citizens involved in it. It may become advisable for us to cooperate with other commercial powers in promoting the rights of trade and residence in the Kongo Valley.

Now, everybody knows the Kongo was put under the control of the King of Belgium. He has taken the trade of that territory to himself. We have no consul in the Kongo region, and while it is becoming one of the greatest, if not the greatest, exporting rubber-producing territories in the world, and Antwerp, in Belgium, is the greatest rubber market in the world, our records do not show that we are doing one single dollar of business with the Kongo, although we are one of the first countries in the manufacture and consumption of rubber goods. In other words, the King of Belgium, or Belgium, whichever it is, has taken that entire trade. If we had had our interests properly looked after and that door had been kept open, we would be getting our share of that large and valuable trade.

Mr. PALMER. But the gentleman would not advocate the method by which the King of Belgium has conquered the rubber country and ask the United States to go into that business, would he?

Mr. WEEKS. Not at all. Now, Mr. Chairman, I understood the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] to say yesterday that he was not opposed to a navy, but he did not state just how large a navy he was in favor of. That is the crux of the whole matter. If a definite arrangement were made with our commercial rivals, preventing the increase of armament, or for a gradual reduction of armament, I doubt if there is a Member of this House who would not be in favor of such a proposition, but until such an arrangement is made there is nothing for us to do, in my judgment, but to do what they are doing.

The question I would like to ask the gentleman from Ohio is, What kind of a navy is he in favor of—a navy half large enough to protect ourselves, a navy one-quarter large enough to protect ourselves, or a navy large enough to protect ourselves? There are some very good people in this country who do not believe in the maintenance of any navy. There are others, like the distinguished Democrat from Alabama, who is about to stop in Congress on his way to the Presidency long enough to provide for a billion-dollar navy—who, I believe, are extremists in the opposite direction.

But the fact is, Mr. Chairman, we need a navy large enough to meet the commercial rivals whom we would have to meet in case of difficulty. In other words, our building policy, in my opinion, should be based upon what our rivals are doing, and while I have no right to speak for the Committee on Naval Affairs, I have no doubt their conclusions are based on some similar reasons. The Navy is not being increased to any extent by this bill. We have an old ship that is going to the junk heap, the Texas, the only ship in the Navy, by the way, except a few small ones that were acquired during the war with Spain, the plans of which were not made in this country.

The battle ship which is proposed is simply to take the place of the Texas.

Now, I want to say one word in reply, or rather in reference to a suggestion made by the chairman of the Naval Committee, when in making his opening statement he said that the estimates sent to the Naval Committee would have required $120,000,000, as I recollect it, and that the committee had reduced the estimates about $22,000,000. I contend, Mr. Chairman, that this statement should not be construed as a criticism of the Secretary of the Navy or the bureau officers, for they as well as the Naval Committee have done their duty in this case. It is the business of the Navy to prepare to fight. It is not the business of its officers to say how much money shall be appropriated, but it is their duty to evolve plans which, if carried out, would put us in condition to fight successfully if we have to do so at all.

It is the duty of Congress when the estimates are presented to make appropriations which will reflect not only the prevailing desire of the people for a strong Navy, but also their desire that economy shall be considered in making appropriations; to take into account also the fact that the revenues can not all be devoted to one purpose only, since proper consideration must be given to the needs of other Departments. That is exactly what has been done in this case. Those who have made the estimates for the Navy Department have doubtless based them on theoretical perfection, as it was their duty to do, and the Naval Committee has cut down the estimates to meet the conditions which I have referred to. I do not want to take any laurels from the Committee on Naval Affairs, but I do not think the officers of the Navy Department who have prepared the estimates should be criticised because the estimates are larger than the appropriations we are willing to make.

But when asked to appropriate $100,000,000 for the naval service this House and the country at large should have the assurance that the money is being wisely expended; that our ships fill all the modern requirements of fighting machines, and especially that the personnel is in quality and efficiency at least equal to that which has in every crisis in the past brought honor and glory to the American flag, and that in education and discipline it is maintaining the best traditions of our naval service. Neither the Naval Academy, the naval officer, nor the naval service have escaped criticism, much of it from unreliable sources, but occasionally coming from a source of such high character that it seems to me desirable to consider in detail some of these criticisms and as far as possible to determine whether they are justified or not, for I assume that there is no Member of this House who will vote $100,000,000 for the support of a military organization in which the personnel is not diligent and efficient and honestly trying to improve the character and standard of the service, and I hope there are few, if any, Members who will not willingly support the naval programme if convinced that the country is getting the best possible results from the expenditures made, and especially if convinced that the service is not only not retrograding in character, but is each year reaching a higher standard.

Fair and friendly criticism is beneficial to the naval service, as well as to any person or organization, but when criticism is based on insufficient data or information it is especially unfair to the naval service, which can not resort to the press, magazines, or stump to defend itself, but must depend on past service and achievements for a reply.

I propose to refer to two criticisms of the naval service recently made to illustrate the difference between the just and unjust varieties. Naval officers and those responsible for the effectiveness of the naval establishment have repeatedly called the attention of Congress to the necessity for a change in the age of promotion and retirement, a change which from every view point seems most essential. One of these propositions depends on the other in this way, that retiring or placing on the reserve list officers of a stipulated rank, who have not been promoted before reaching a stipulated age, will cause the promotion of their juniors early enough to enable the latter to perform the best service in the grade to which they are being promoted.

By our present system of promotion men reach command and flag rank at an age which precludes their obtaining great experience in those grades before the retiring age—62 years—reaches them, so that officers come to these responsible positions disqualified by age from giving the Government the service which we naturally expect and demand. This is a condition which has been growing more acute during recent years, owing to the large number of midshipmen graduated from the Naval Academy during and immediately after the civil war, forming a hump, which, by the way, will be duplicated by the unusual number of midshipmen now being appointed to the Naval Academy. Nothing better illustrates the desirability of a liberal and at the same time conservative naval policy which will keep the service in condition for hostilities without taking unusual and expensive action whenever we are brought face to face with real trouble than does this condition of the Navy personnel. It is not, as I have stated, a new question, but has been repeatedly called to the attention of Congress by the President, Secretaries of the Navy, and bureau chiefs during recent years.

In his annual message in 1904 the President referred to the subject by saying:

> Sooner or later we shall have to provide some method by which there will be promotions for merit as well as for seniority or else retirement of all those who after a certain age have not passed beyond a certain grade.

In 1905 the President in his annual message repeated this suggestion in these terms:

> There should be a resolute effort to eliminate the aged officers of reputable character who possess no special efficiency.

In 1903 the Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Moody, in his annual report, says:

> In discussing this subject the Chief of the Bureau suggests as the only remedy for the evils attending the tardy attainment of command rank * * * early compulsory retirement in the higher grades.

In 1904 the Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Morton, in his annual report, says:

> I believe that action should be taken to place younger men in positions of command as soon as a way can be found to do so that does not involve injustice or impose unnecessary hardship upon officers whose long and worthy service entitles them to consideration.

In 1905 the Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Bonaparte, called attention to this defect in our system and proposed a plan to remedy it.

During the last five years the Bureau of Navigation, which has special charge of the personnel of the Navy, has had at its head two officers who to an unusual degree have had the confidence of the Navy as well as of the public—Rear-Admiral H. C. Taylor and Rear-Admiral George A. Converse, the present incumbent. They have repeatedly voiced this criticism of the condition of the personnel of the Navy, and Admiral Taylor, in his annual report in 1904, in speaking of the ages of captains, said:

> Unless these be diminished disaster is practically certain to ensue.

And Admiral Converse in his annual report in 1904 discussed the necessity, and in 1905, in referring to the subject, says:

> This subject was discussed at some length in my last annual report, and the views of the Bureau were fully indorsed by your predecessor (Secretary Morton). These were in general effect that officers arrived at flag and command ranks too late and served too short a period in those grades for the general efficiency of the Navy.

These citations are sufficient to show that this is a criticism based not on rumors or insufficient knowledge, but on real facts, coming as it does from those who are best qualified to pass upon the subject; but in order to show that we are not in even a comparatively good position, I wish to compare the ages of our officers with the ages of seagoing officers of command and flag ranks in the principal navies of the world. This compilation is taken from an article recently written by Lieut. Commander A. L. Key, United States Navy, printed in the proceedings of the United States Naval Institute, which treats this subject exhaustively, and from which I shall make additional quotations. It is, however, too long to be reprinted in this connection.

Seagoing flag officers.

Country.	Rear and vice admirals.		Captains.
	Average years in grade.	Ages.	Average years in grade.	Ages.
Great Britain	8.0	49 to 62	11.2	35 to 55.0
France	14.2	53 to 64	9.5	47 to 59.0
Germany	6.0	51 to 56	6.2	42 to 52.0
Japan	11.0	44 to 57	8.0	38 to 52.0
United States	1.0	59 to 62	4.5	55 to 61.5

This table shows that officers in our Navy come to the command of battle ships between the ages of 55 and 61½ years; that they serve but four and one-half years in the grade of captain, and that if they get the command of a battle ship they never have it for a longer time than one cruise of two years; that officers come to flag rank between the ages of 59 and 62 years, and that the average time served in this grade is but one year. It should be observed, however, that officers holding the rank of commander in our Navy are given command of smaller ships than battle ships, but that under our present retirement system officers do not reach that rank until they are about 48 years of age.

Every business man knows that the age of best achievement, at least as far as taking the initiative is concerned, is between 30 and 50, and no business man would consider employing a man in a minor position until he had reached the age of 50 and then suddenly place him in a position where he would be obliged to depend absolutely on his own judgment, for even at 48 the naval officer may not receive a command, but he will quite likely get one command of two years as a commander and one command of two years as a captain, or a total service of four years in command rank before he becomes a flag officer, and then possibly serve one year in the latter position. Such a proposition if applied to business affairs would be considered ridiculous. It is none the less so in the naval service.

It is no reply to say that officers have reached the age of 60, or even a greater age than that, and have performed service of the best character, for it will be found that in all such cases those officers were placed in command rank when very young and had had years of preparation for any unusual service performed in high rank late in life. I have stated that the average service which flag officers will in future perform in that rank is one year. To show that conditions are getting worse rather than better, it may be stated that the five senior rear-admirals on the Navy list the 1st of January, 1906, have served, or will serve before their retirement, an average in that grade of four and four-fifths years; while the five senior captains on the Navy list January 1, 1906, will serve as rear-admirals just one-half of that time, or two and two-fifths years.

As Lieutenant-Commander Key well says:

> Since our Navy is maintained for the single purpose of fighting the navy of some foreign power, when the necessity arises, if our captains and flag officers have as much sea experience or training as the flag officers and captains of other navies then we, at least in the crucial test of war, will be on equal terms.

The table which I have given, however, shows conclusively that we would not be on equal terms in this respect. Neither have we been as liberal in providing for officers of advanced rank as have foreign governments, for they have not only made provision so that officers may serve as rear-admirals for a considerable number of years, but have provided the additional grades of admiral and vice-admiral for officers of unusual capacity who have served in the grade of rear-admiral for a term of years, as the following table will show:

	England.	France.	Germany.	Japan.	United States.
Admirals of the fleet	4	----	1	----	1
Admirals	11	----	4	7	----
Vice-admirals	23	15	8	23	----
Rear-admirals	49	30	19	25	18

Neither have we been as liberal in providing flag officers in proportion to our tonnage or the number of our men as have foreign navies, which is shown by the following comparison:

	England.	France.	Germany.	Japan.	United States.
Tonnage per flag officer	22,447	17,799	18,373	7,778	38,939
Men per flag officer	1,121	1,158	1,097	551	2,056

These figures demonstrate that we are not doing our duty even from an independent standpoint, or from a business standpoint, in retaining officers in junior capacities until they have passed the age when they are best fitted to assume great responsibilities; neither have we done our duty when we compare our course with foreign governments, which should be the final test. Our Navy in the past has been successful, or very largely so, because we have been superior to the enemy in ships of the same general class, in guns of the same general caliber, and in personnel of the same general rank—that is, ship for ship, gun for gun, and man for man we have been superior.

While it is believed that we retain our advantage in ships and guns, we have distinctly lost that advantage in the age of the promotion of our officers, and it should be up to Congress to at once remedy this defect. Let us not continue to spend one hundred millions a year for the purpose of maintaining an efficient Navy and at the same time fail to take advantage of criticisms which call to our attention the fact that we are spending our money with the probability that we are not getting the best possible results. I now wish to call to your attention a criticism of an entirely different character.

During the recent discussion of a measure to prevent hazing at the Naval Academy the occasion was taken by the distinguished Representative from Iowa, whose name is a household word throughout the country, to show that, as a result of hazing and hazing methods at the Naval Academy, the Navy personnel was inefficient, and, further, that the incompetent were protected from adequate punishment by their companions in arms before whom they were brought for trial in accordance with Navy regulations. These are serious charges which have been circulated throughout the country, not made by some irresponsible person, but by a leading Member of Congress, whose experience and ability as a legislator are known and respected everywhere and whose words for that reason carry unusual weight and conviction. In this case, however, I believe his criticisms and conclusions are not only unwarranted, but that they do the naval service rank injustice, and for that reason I wish to call to the attention of the Members of this House the actual facts, taken from the records, and I hope that these facts may not only carry conviction to the Members of this House, but may reach a few, at least, of the thousands throughout the country who have read, and doubtless have been persuaded by, the statements made by the gentleman from Iowa that the naval service needs prompt and vigorous overhauling.

The first of the two charges made was based on the fact that there had been within twenty-five years a large number of disasters to naval vessels due to negligence and inefficiency of their officers. It was made in the following terms:

> In twenty-five years twenty-six vessels have been destroyed. Almost every month you read of some mark of inefficiency upon the part of those who are charged with the conduct and management of the Navy.

Unfortunately for the United States naval service, it is impossible to make comparisons with other similar services or with the merchant marine to prove that our service has been singularly free from accidents due to either of the causes alleged, because service at sea is subject to many and unlooked-for conditions which can never be the same, or even similar, in different services. It is apparent that the number of accidents must depend on the number of ships in commission, on the activity of those ships, and on the character of the activity, whether it is based on well-known conditions or experimental conditions, for navies have been making great changes in the last twenty years, the character of ships and their armament having undergone almost a complete revolution, so that much of the active service has been trying out new devices and applying old and oftentimes out-of-date methods of handling a fleet to new conditions and new ships. Such a thing as fleet maneuvers in our Navy twenty-five years ago were almost never thought of. Our ships were not only few in number, but of widely different classes, so that fleet tactics were seldom engaged in, but to these necessary evolutions have been due some of the most serious accidents, not only in our own Navy but in foreign navies, which have happened in recent years. Again, danger in active service is governed by the location in which the service takes place. If in the Tropics, earthquakes, tidal waves, cyclones, and other violent conditions are encountered, and frequently the results from them are disastrous under conditions which no man could foresee or prepare for.

Very frequently naval vessels must cruise in unknown or comparatively unknown waters, along badly lighted and buoyed coasts, using charts which are both incomplete and inaccurate, so that it can readily be seen that, if much service is required or performed under such conditions, accidents must necessarily be more frequent than they would be if the same amount of service were performed in tropical latitudes and contiguous to our own well lighted and charted coasts.

This brief statement will indicate the impossibility of comparing our own service with any other, or even with itself, at different periods. Neither would it be fair to compare it with the merchant marine, which, generally speaking, does not cruise except along well-known coasts, in many cases, in fact generally, between the same ports for long periods, so that the merchant ships' officers become perfectly familiar with the condition of tides, currents, winds, and natural and artificial marks in the section in which they are employed, while the naval officer must frequently, in fact, when away from the coast of his own country almost always, take his ship along coasts and into harbors which he is entirely unfamiliar with, so that the commercial marine is not a fair standard to compare with naval efficiency or lack of it. Therefore it becomes necessary to take up individual accidents, in fact, all such, to determine whether they are sufficient in number and are of a character to warrant such a sweeping charge as a general declaration of lack of efficiency.

In 1865 the U. S. S. San Jacinto ran aground on the Bahama Banks. She was not seriously injured, but her commanding officer was court-martialed and sentenced to three years' suspension; he appealed from this decision and the President ordered a new trial by a different court, which resulted in the same sentence being imposed as in the first instance.

January 4, 1866, the U. S. tug Narcissus foundered in the Gulf of Mexico. A volunteer ensign was in command and he had a reputation as a competent officer. A violent hurricane passed over the Gulf at the time, and as all hands were lost it is presumed that the accident was unavoidable.

In June, 1867, the U. S. S. Sacramento was lost on a known reef in the Bay of Bengal. Her captain and navigator were tried by court-martial, were both found guilty and sentenced to three years' suspension and to be publicly reprimanded. In both cases the sentence was reduced to two years by the Secretary of the Navy.

In 1867 the U. S. S. Monongahela, while anchored in the harbor of Fredickstadt, island of St. Croix, was picked up by a tidal wave and landed on a wharf. The next wave in receding carried the ship to the entrance of the harbor and deposited her on a coral reef, from which she was later removed but little damaged and with small loss of life.

In the same storm the U. S. S. De Soto, anchored in a St. Thomas harbor, was treated in a similar way and, as in the case of the Monongahela, she was later floated with but little damage and small loss of life. No court-martial was ordered in either of these cases.

August 13, 1868, the U. S. S. Fredonia and the U. S. S. Wateree were anchored in the harbor of Arica, Peru, where they were overwhelmed by a tidal wave, resulting from an earthquake, which carried the Wateree a half mile inland, from which position the ship was never moved; the Fredonia was sunk in the harbor by the same wave and most of her officers and crew were lost. In neither case was a court-martial ordered.

In 1868 the U. S. S. Suwanee was lost in Shadwell Passage, Alaska. There are irregular and unusually strong currents in this locality, and while the ship had been furnished with the only available charts, they were imperfect and incomplete. Her captain was court-martialed and exonerated.

January 24, 1870, the U. S. S. Oneida, while putting to sea in Yokohama Bay was, in the night, run into by the English steamer Bombay and sank fifteen minutes after the collision, carrying down nearly all of her officers and crew. A court of inquiry showed conclusively that the Oneida had the right of way and no court-martial was ordered.

In 1870 the U. S. S. Saginaw was carried by unknown and unchartered currents onto a reef in the Pacific Ocean and was lost. Her commander, Lieut. Commander Montgomery Sicard, one of the most distinguished officers of the Navy, was court-martialed and exonerated.

In 1874 the U. S. S. Brooklyn ran aground near Key West, Fla. She was floated and no damage was done. Her captain was court-martialed and acquitted.

In 1875 the U. S. S. Saranac, while cruising in uncharted waters in Seymour Narrows off the Alaskan coast, was thrown by a whirlpool on a sunken rock and lost. No court-martial was ordered.

In 1877 the U. S. S. Huron was lost during a severe storm on Cape Hatteras; as her captain, navigator, and the deck officer, who was on duty at the time, as well as nearly all of the other officers and men, went down with the ship, there was no court-martial ordered.

In 1881 the U. S. S. Rogers, a whaler purchased to take part in the Greeley relief expedition, while frozen in the ice in the Arctic Ocean caught fire and, being saturated with oil, was quickly destroyed. No court-martial was considered necessary.

In 1883 the U. S. S. Ashuelot was run on a rock off the coast of China and lost. Her captain was court-martialed and dismissed from the service. It is worth noting that this officer had previously been dismissed for drunkenness and restored to the service by act of Congress.

In 1888 the U. S. S. Enterprise ran onto a submerged barrier in Christiana Bay, which was new and did not show on the charts furnished the ship. The ship was not damaged and no court-martial was ordered.

In 1889 the U. S. S. Trenton, Vandalia, and Nipsic were lying at anchor in the harbor of Apia, Samoan Islands, in company with a German squadron of three ships and H. M. S. Caliope, when such a terrific hurricane arose that the American and German ships, being unable to steam against it, were wrecked; the Englishman, being a new ship, with, for that day, powerful engines, was able to get to sea. The Trenton and Vandalia were a total loss; the Nipsic, however, was later pulled off the reef and repaired. Several officers and many men were lost. No court-martial was ever ordered. On the contrary, Rear-Admiral Kimberly and his officers were highly complimented for their devotion and heroism on this occasion. And with your permission I will read part of the letter which the Secretary of the Navy sent to Admiral Kimberly:

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, April 27, 1889.

SIR: * * * In reply to your request and that of Captain Farquhar for a court of inquiry, the Department has to say that it deems such a court unnecessary. It is satisfied that the officers in command of the ships at Apia did their duty with courage, fidelity, and sound judgment, and that they were zealously and loyally seconded by their subordinates; that the hurricane which caused the destruction of the vessels and the loss of so many lives was one of those visitations of Providence in the presence of which human efforts are of little avail; that the measures actually taken by yourself and the officers under you were all that wisdom and prudence could dictate, and that it was due to these measures that so large a proportion of the crews were saved; that the one step which might have averted the catastrophe, namely, to have put to sea before the storm had developed, could only have been justified in view of the grave responsibilities resting upon you at Samoa, by the certainty of overwhelming danger to your fleet, which could not then be foreseen; that you rightly decided to remain at your post, and that the Department, even in the face of the terrible disaster which it involved, approves absolutely your decision, which has set an example to the Navy that should never be forgotten.

To convene a court of inquiry under these circumstances would seem to imply a doubt on the part of the Department where no doubt exists; and instead of ordering an investigation, it tenders to you, and through you to the officers and men of your command, its sympathies for the exposures and hardships you have encountered, and its profound thanks for the fidelity with which you performed your duty in a crisis of appalling danger.

Very respectfully,

B. F. TRACY,
Secretary of the Navy.

Rear-Admiral L. A. KIMBERLY, U. S. Navy,
Commanding United States Naval Force on the Pacific Station, Apia, Samoa.

In 1889 the U. S. S. Constellation was run aground in Lynnhaven Bay, but received no injury. Her captain was court-martialed and sentenced to two years' suspension. This sentence was reduced to one year by the Secretary of the Navy.

In 1891 the U. S. S. Dispatch was run aground and lost on the New Jersey coast, and, although a court of inquiry found the captain, navigator, and officer of the deck negligent, the Secretary of the Navy decided that a court-marital was not necessary.

In 1891 the U. S. S. Galena, while being towed by the tug Nina, was run aground on Gay Head, off the Massachusetts coast, the course of the tug being directed from the Galena. The Galena had no deviation table and the captain had failed to compare his compass with the tug's. The ships were in a dense fog at the time of the accident. The captain of the Galena was suspended for one year.

The same year and at the same time the tug Luiana, while proceeding in the fog to the relief of the Galena, ran on a rock. Her commanding officer was court-martialed and acquitted.

In 1892 the U. S. S. Alliance was run against the breakwater in Yokohama Harbor, with slight damage. The captain was court-martialed and suspended for one year.

In 1892 the U. S. S. Tallapoosa was run down and sunk by a coal-laden schooner. A court of inquiry showed that the Tallapoosa had the right of way and no court-martial was ordered.

In 1893 the U. S. S. Mohican was run on a rock off the badly charted Alaskan coast. The captain was court-martialed and dismissed.

In 1894 the U. S. S. Kearsarge was run onto Roncador Reef, in the Caribbean Sea, and lost. Her captain and navigator were each sentenced to two years' suspension, and in both cases the sentence was reduced to one year by the Secretary of the Navy.

In August, 1894, the U. S. S. Adams was run aground on St. Paul Island, Bering Sea. The accident was due to unknown or irregular currents. Her acting captain and navigator were sentenced to one year's suspension, which was reduced to six months by the Secretary of the Navy.

In 1898 the U. S. S. Maine was blown up in Habana Harbor. No court-martial was ordered.

In 1899 the U. S. S. Charleston was, while using old Spanish charts on the Philippine coast, run onto an uncharted rock and lost. Her officers were held blameless.

In 1901 the U. S. S. Yosemite was, by a tidal wave, driven ashore on the island of Guam and then carried to sea, where she foundered. In this case the officers were acquitted.

In 1903 the U. S. S. Frolic, while entering the harbor of Cebu at night, was run on a reef, from which she was later removed, little damage having been done. Her commanding officer was sentenced to receive a public reprimand.

February 26, 1903, the tug Leydon was, during a violent storm, run onto rocks off Block Island. Her commanding officer was court-martialed and acquitted of negligence.

In 1903 the U. S. torpedo boat Winslow collided with a ferry-boat in New York Harbor. Her commanding officer was sentenced to lose three numbers and receive a public reprimand.

In 1904 the U. S. S. Culgoa collided with and sunk a schooner. The court-martial developed the fact that the Culgoa had the right of way, and her captain was acquitted.

In 1905 the U. S. S. Eagle was run on a rock and slightly damaged. Her commanding officer was sentenced to lose four numbers.

May 17, 1905, the U. S. S. Detroit, while leaving the harbor of Porto Plata, Dominican Republic, was twice run aground. Her captain was court-martialed and dismissed from the service.

This record, which is complete, being taken from the records of the Navy Department, shows that in the forty-one years since the civil war there have been thirty-seven cases of ships lost or accidents of such character that the court of inquiry reported negligence on the part of the officers which necessitated a court-martial being ordered. It should be noted that if a ship is lost, Navy regulations require that a court-martial be ordered, even if there be no apparent fault on the part of her officers.

These thirty-seven accidents include twenty-two ships lost for the following reasons:

By hurricanes or by tidal waves, which human power could not have foreseen or controlled, 6; by uncharted currents or on uncharted rocks, 6; by collision in cases in which the man-of-war had the right of way and therefore her officers were not at fault, 2; the U. S. S. Maine blown up in Habana harbor, 1; the U. S. S. Rogers burned, 1; the U. S. tug Lyden, a small vessel, lost in a violent storm and her commanding officer found without fault, 1; and there were five ships lost when the accident presumably should have been avoided. In one of these cases the captain was dismissed; in one the responsible officers were lost, and in the other three the sentence of the court was reduced by the Secretary of the Navy or no court was ordered by him.

In the fifteen cases in which the court of inquiry found negligence but in which the ships were not lost, the court-martial found the officers guilty in ten cases, but in three of these ten sentences the convening authority—the Secretary of the Navy—reduced the sentence imposed.

Of the other five cases, one was the Nipsic, wrecked in the Samoan hurricane, and one the Culgoa, in collision when she had the right of way. In not a single case of these thirty-seven was the sentence of the court-martial disapproved because it was too lenient, and after a careful study of all the cases, I believe that the most critical and even partial authority on such matters would have returned a more severe sentence in but three instances.

As an evidence of an apparently constant increase in efficiency in the navigation of our men-of-war, it should be noted that, although the Navy has passed through a war within the last ten years and has been engaged in unusual service in and near the Philippine Islands, and has elsewhere been extremely active, there has not been a single case of loss of a vessel which could have been prevented by any human foresight or skill, and that in the few cases of accidents brought to court-martial the responsible officers have, in every case, been given an adequate punishment.

I have stated that it is impossible to make accident and efficiency comparisons with other navies, but before leaving this subject I wish to call to the attention of the committee a report made to the British Admiralty for the year 1904, the last year reported, showing the nature of all accidents for that year, the result of the inquiry, and other details.

This report shows that there were 108 accidents, of which 50 were collisions. As we have perhaps two-fifths as many vessels in commission as the English, if we had a similar number of collisions the number would be twenty, which is a greater number of collisions than have been reported in our Navy for the last twenty years. From August 5 to August 11 there were six collisions, several of which took place during maneuvers, which illustrates the suggestion which I have made that activity is one of the principal factors leading to accidents; but if we had a proportional number of collisions in our Navy in any one week we should be likely to inquire the reason for their frequency, and there would be a better basis for criticism than there is now. The Admiralty report indicates that no punishment whatever, except a reprimand in one case, was inflicted in the six cases referred to.

The second part of the charge, or the second charge, made by the gentleman from Iowa is the one, however, which should most concern Congress and the country, for if it were true that in isolated, or even in many, instances, there were naval officers guilty of stupidity and inefficiency, that is a matter which can be remedied; the incompetent can be relieved from responsible duty or dismissed from the naval service. That, however, would not indicate that the whole naval service, or any great part of it, were not efficient. But the question which I now wish to call to the attention of the House is one which involves the honor of naval officers, not only individually, but collectively, for it is charged that the naval officer is not only guilty of dishonesty, but guilty of dishonesty in its most unworthy form, namely, the violation of his oath, the charge being made in these words:

> We do not punish naval officers. There is no punishment inflicted upon naval officers except in most extraordinary cases by a system of court-martial selected from among the friends and associates and old classmates of the man who is to be tried. It is a mockery, a mockery, and it results in, I believe, this condition of inefficiency.

No form of court proceedings or method used in the trial of civil and criminal cases is or ever will be entirely satisfactory. The human equation will always enter and prevent entirely equitable verdicts. There is probably not one of the nearly three hundred lawyers in this House who has not had experiences with juries and individual jurymen which were anything but satisfactory, or who has not seen case after case decided in a way which not only introduced a doubt of the jury's capacity to give to testimony suitable weight, if, indeed, it did not indicate in some cases a lack of honesty on the part of the individual juryman; and it is no uncommon practice for the sitting judge to set aside a verdict as not being in accord with the testimony submitted, but I do not recall any case where a judge has set aside a verdict brought in by a jury as being too severe, except in cases of personal damage suits. Notwithstanding these many cases of a miscarriage of justice, I doubt if there is here or elsewhere a lawyer or layman who would seriously advocate giving up jury trials in the great majority of cases which are now tried in that way.

A similar question enters into the proceedings of the general court-martial. It is not a perfect tribunal, for personal sympathy might be a bar to a just verdict, at least in many cases where the relations between members of the court and the accused had been intimate, and it would seem possible that in many cases a sufficiently severe sentence would not be imposed, but when the character of the jury, or judges as the members of a court really are, their capacity to comprehend the fitness or unfitness of technical testimony, and their appreciation of the sanctity of the oath which they have taken are all considered, it is almost certain that in no other way could there be obtained as fair and just a trial of a naval offender.

Naval discipline, as far as ordering courts of inquiry and courts-martial are concerned, is entirely in the hands of the Secretary of the Navy, and when the court has brought in a verdict the passing upon that verdict, either in approving or disapproving, rests entirely in the hands of the Secretary of the Navy, or, in the case of a sentence of dismissal, in the hands of the President of the United States.

For the last twenty years, at least, these officers have almost invariably been lawyers of the highest standing, quite competent to pass upon evidence of all kinds and to judge whether sentences ordered by court were or were not sufficiently severe, and I propose to show from the records that, as a matter of fact, a very large percentage of the verdicts returned by general courts-martial have been approved, and of those disapproved the sentence has been reduced by the reviewing power four times as frequently as it has been considered too mild. Gentlemen may complain that there have been few dismissals from the Navy for offenses which seem to deserve the severest punishment, but they forget that officers charged with offenses have very often, in fact nearly always, had many years of honorable and efficient service to their credit, and that their fault, if fault it be, in the case at issue may be simply an error of judgment. In such a case the court-marital would not be a trial, but a persecution of the offender if it failed to give credit for the years of good service performed. As I have said, general courts-martial, except on foreign stations, are ordered by the Secretary of the Navy. They are usually, except in the case of the loss of a ship, preceded by a court of inquiry, which is the grand jury of naval jurisprudence, which looks into the facts and reports its finding. Basing his conclusion on this finding, the Secretary acts, and in all of the criticisms which I have read or heard I do not recall that there has been any criticism of the court of inquiry or the method of conducting it. Its members are under oath, as they are when acting as members of a court-martial, the oath which they take being as follows:

You, A. B., do swear (or affirm) that you will try without prejudice or partiality the case now depending according to the evidence which comes before the court, the rules for the governing of the Navy, and your own conscience; that you will not by any means divulge or disclose the sentence of the court until it shall have been approved by the proper authority, and that you will not at any time divulge or disclose the vote or opinion of any particular member of the court unless required so to do before a court of justice in due course of law.

In all cases the members of a court must be either equal in rank to, or senior to, the accused.

I have had examined the records of Navy courts-martial for the past twenty years, with the following results:

General courts-martial ordered	130
Sentences approved	92
Sentences reduced	29
Sentences disapproved	9
Total number of dismissals	21

In other words, in only 9 instances out of 130, or less than 7 per cent, was the sentence of the court-martial disapproved by the convening authority because it was either too lenient or for some technical reason, though it should be said in possibly four or five other cases the Secretary of the Navy did not entirely approve of the character of the sentence imposed. This is a most complete disapproval of the charge made against the honor and integrity of naval officers and the entire manner of performing this most distasteful duty—distasteful for, as has been said, members of the court are passing on the errors of their intimate associates. This examination shows not only a refutation of the charge, but also a keen appreciation of the value of testimony and a greater tendency to impose severe punishments than would be imposed by the civilian officers who have had the reviewing of the courts' proceedings, and, instead of the statement that officers are never punished, this record shows that twenty-one officers in twenty years have been dismissed from the service, though in many of these cases the sentence has been reduced by the President of the United States, and in two of these cases the dismissed officer was restored to his place in the Navy by special act of Congress. It is worth noting that one of the two officers dismissed last year for gross irregularities was one of the two officers who had been restored to their positions in the Navy by special act of Congress during the period being considered.

It is also a fact that in the case of the loss of the U. S. S. Ashuelot, in many respects the most blameworthy of the accidents which have happened to naval vessels, for which her commanding officer was dismissed, that officer had been previously dismissed from the service by a general court and had been restored to the Navy list by a special act of Congress.

In the previous twenty years to those from which the statistics referred to have been compiled—that is, from 1866 to 1886—seventy officers were dismissed for various causes. Of this number fourteen line officers and forty-three staff officers were discharged between 1866 and 1876, nearly two-thirds of all those dismissed during the last forty years, and it is worthy of note that none of these staff officers and only part of the line officers had had a Naval Academy training, but were largely the product of more or less hurried appointments from civil life during the civil war period. I do not mention this to reflect on the staff, but as an incident to show that the Naval Academy training, or the assumed lack of discipline in the Naval Academy, is not responsible for neglect of duty when the graduates have gone into the naval service.

The fact that it has been assumed by the gentleman from Iowa that hazing at the Naval Academy is not only the reason for lack of discipline and disorder there, but is the cause for neglect, loss of ships, and every form of accident which happens in the Navy, seems to me to justify my calling to the attention of this House what the Naval Academy has done for the Navy during its sixty years' existence. It is the most democratic of all the higher institutions of learning in this country, excepting always its older sister, West Point, which is similar to it in practically all respects. The method of appointment to the academy is reduced to the result of a competitive examinations, or to the appointment of those whose parents have shown marked military or naval ability, or to those who in themselves seem to demonstrate the possibility of unusual ability. The political consideration and money equation have been eliminated, and the varied and democratic character of appointees resulting from this system of appointments may be judged by the result of a compilation made of the parentage of the graduates of West Point for fifty years. While these figures have not been compiled for the Naval Academy, there is every reason to believe that the results would be substantially the same. The parentage of the 5,491 graduates from West Point during these years represented 152 callings, of whom 442 were the sons of officers, 367 of physicians, 722 of merchants, 341 of mechanics, 151 of manufacturers, 645 of lawyers and judges, 128 of clergymen, and 1,149 of farmers and planters, the remaining 1,546 coming from 142 trades and professions. It necessarily follows from this statement that the midshipman when he enters the Naval Academy is pretty raw material, and while the physical and mental training which he receives does not insure his being a great officer or great seaman, there is developed in him the naval spirit, a keen sense of duty, regularity in habits, respect for proper authority and obedience, all of which fits him for the great variety of duties which will come to him in his professional career, and which in any career combine to make the good citizen.

It is easily the best system for the development of the naval officer which has been established, and not only prepares the graduate to perform his routine duties in time of peace and war, but the habits of thought, of manner, and of body which he obtains are the foundation of all his activities and efforts throughout his entire service. But even if the professional accomplishments and efficiency of the naval officer afloat is admitted, it only tells part of what should be said for the graduate of the Naval Academy. Twenty-five years ago we were as weak in ordnance, motive power, and every detail of naval equipment as in ships, but the development of these accessories has kept pace with the growth of our naval architecture, and the most gratifying part of this record is that we have not turned to outside sources or to foreign aid for this upbuilding, but it has been accomplished by our own officers, and so successfully that the country may have confidence that no nation has better ships, better guns, better projectiles, better motive power than have we.

There is not a ship in our Navy, except the Texas, and she is about to go to the scrap heap, and the smaller craft acquired at the time of the Spanish-American war, which has not been designed by our own naval architects, every member of that corps to-day being a graduate of the Naval Academy, and all of these ships, including the Texas, have been built in this country under the supervision of our own naval constructors, so that the Navy may properly claim that it has furnished the fleets which we can so reliably depend upon.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. WEEKS. Certainly.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I notice the gentleman from Massachusetts said the Texas was going to the junk heap. She is a battle ship.

Mr. WEEKS. She is a second-class battle ship.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. How old is that ship?

Mr. WEEKS. She was built about 1890, if my recollection is correct.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. In the opinion of the gentleman, is that about the average life of a battle ship?

Mr. WEEKS. I should think it ought to be longer.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. That is fifteen years, approximately.

Mr. WEEKS. That is sixteen years, and I think the Texas was five years building. I should think a battle ship ought to last longer than that, and I expect from the designs our own constructors have made that the life of battle ships will be longer.

Every gun of large caliber has been built at our gun foundry at the Washington Navy-Yard under the supervision of our own officers, and not only that, but the machinery which has been used in this work, which can be viewed any day by any Member of this House, forming as fine a plant for such a purpose as there is in the world, has been either designed or revised by our own people, so that we may claim the entire credit for this work. The engines and boilers used on our men-of-war have been designed by our Bureau of Steam Engineering, and the officers who run these engines are to-day entirely the product of our Naval Academy. The electrical equipment which now, to such an extent, fills our men-of-war, has been entirely adapted to the purpose for which it is applied by our own constructors and officers; in short wherever we look in the naval service we see nothing but efficiency and accomplishment. There is nothing in the records of the immediate past to show that in professional accomplishments and in personal honor the officers of our Navy do not compare favorably with our naval officers in any period of the nation's history or in the same characteristics with the officers of any military force in the world, and I submit to this House that the recital of this record should remove any doubt which the people may have had regarding the efficiency of our Navy at this time and should strengthen confidence that no backward step is being taken, but that it is living up to its history as the equal, if not the superior, of any existing naval establishment. [Loud applause.]

Mr. FOSS. I would ask my colleague on the committee if he desires to go ahead?

Mr. MEYER. We have no more on our side to speak this afternoon.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, that closes general debate upon this side, and I would call for the reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

PAY, MISCELLANEOUS.

For commissions and interest; transportation of funds; exchange; mileage to officers while traveling under orders in the United States, and for actual personal expenses of officers while traveling abroad under orders, and for traveling expenses of civilian employees, and for actual and necessary traveling expenses of midshipmen while proceeding from their homes to the Naval Academy for examination and appointment as midshipmen; for rent and furniture of buildings and offices not in navy-yards; expenses of courts-martial, prisoners and prisons, and courts of inquiry, boards of inspection, examining boards, with clerks' and witnesses' fees, and traveling expenses and costs; stationery and recording; expenses of purchasing paymasters' offices of the various cities, including clerks, furniture, fuel, stationery, and incidental expenses; newspapers and advertising; foreign postage; telegraphing, foreign and domestic; telephones, copying; care of library, including the purchase of books, photographs, prints, manuscripts, and periodicals; ferriage; tolls, and express fees; costs of suits; commissions, warrants, diplomas, and discharges; relief of vessels in distress; recovery of valuables from shipwrecks; quarantine expenses; reports; professional investigation; cost of special instruction at home and abroad, in maintenance of students and attachés and information from abroad, and the collection and classification thereof, and other necessary and incidental expenses, $650,000: Provided, That hereafter in cases where orders for travel are given to officers of the Navy or Marine Corps, the Secretary of the Navy, in his discretion, may direct that either mileage or else their actual and necessary expenses only shall be allowed.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that many Members of the House are not here this afternoon who may be interested in the different provisions in this bill, I move that the committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois moves that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CRUMPACKER, the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 18750—the naval appropriation bill—and had come to no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. WACHTER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 8226. An act granting an increase of pension to Laura B. Ihrie;

H. R. 10251. An act granting an increase of pension to Sarah M. E. Hinman;

H. R. 11635. An act granting an increase of pension to Jeremiah Lunsford;

H. R. 15397. An act granting an increase of pension to Edward Gillespie;

H. R. 15687. An act granting an increase of pension to William F. M. Rice;

H. R. 15907. An act granting an increase of pension to Lewis De Laittre;

H. R. 16215. An act granting an increase of pension to Mary Dagenfield;

H. R. 16521. An act directing the Secretary of the Interior to sell and convey a certain parcel of land to Johnson County, Wyo.; and

H. R. 15435. An act to empower the Secretary of War to convey to the city of Minneapolis certain lands in exchange for other lands to be used for flowage purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. WACHTER, from the Committee on Enrolled bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bill and joint resolutions:

H. J. Res. 145. Joint resolution for appointment of members of Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers;

H. J. Res. 149. Joint resolution extending the thanks of Congress to Gen. Horace Porter; and

H. R. 15334. An act to authorize the construction of dams and power stations on the Coosa River, at Lock 2, Alabama.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned to meet on Monday next, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a letter from the Director of the Mint submitting an estimate of appropriation for transportation of bullion and coin—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a letter from the Secretary of War submitting an estimate of appropriation for the relief of Luisa de Castro, of Quingua, Bulacan, P. I.—to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a letter from the Secretary of War submitting an estimate of appropriation for the relief of Pedro Evangelista & Bro., Candaba, Pampanga, P. I.—to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a letter from the Secretary of War submitting an estimate of appropriation for return of certain funds to citizens of the island of Cebu, Philippine Islands—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. BURTON of Ohio, from the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, to which was referred the House joint resolution (H. J. Res. 134) authorizing the construction and maintenance of wharves, piers, and other structures in Lake Michigan, adjoining certain lands in Lake County, Ind., reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3873); which said joint resolution and report were referred to the House Calendar.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

Mr. HOLLIDAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 7589) granting an increase of pension to Robert A. Scott, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3799); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. HOPKINS, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 9828) granting an increase of pension to John Broughton, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3800); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SULLOWAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 8852) granting a pension to Frederick W. Clark, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3801); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. CHAPMAN, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 18655) granting an increase of pension to Leander Gilbert, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3802); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. HOPKINS, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 18116) granting an increase of pension to Green Evans, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3803); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 1420) for the relief of John Nay, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3804); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. FULLER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 7244) granting an increase of pension to Christopher S. Guthrie, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3805); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. CHANEY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 6914) granting an increase of pension to John Hecker, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3806); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. DIXON of Indiana, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 5560) granting an increase of pension to Henry Chubb, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3807); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 4715) granting an increase of pension to John H. Whiting, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3808); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SULLOWAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 4241) granting an increase of pension to David B. Coleman, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3809); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. FULLER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 4161) granting an increase of pension to Robert Beatty, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3810); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. GUDGER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 3572) granting a pension to William L. Riley, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3811); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 3351) granting a pension to George King, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3812); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 3005) granting an increase of pension to Jacob C. Shafer, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3813); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. FULLER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 2237) granting an increase of pension to Martin Poole, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3814); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. CHAPMAN, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 1788) granting an increase of pension to William D. Christy, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3815); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 1650) granting an increase of pension to Frank B. Watkins, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3816); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. HOLLIDAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 1247) granting an increase of pension to Columbus Botts, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3817); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. CHANEY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 1178) granting a pension to Herman Buckthall, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3818); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 1034) granting an increase of pension to John D. Logan, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3819); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. LINDSAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 9243) granting an increase of pension to Joseph A. Bernard, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3820); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. CHANEY, from the Committtee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 10794) granting an increase of pension to Jacob Schultz, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3821); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. DIXON of Indiana, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 12184) granting an increase of pension to Joseph Sprauer, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3822); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 13069) granting an increase of pension to Friend S. Esmond, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3823); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. FULLER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 12971) granting an increase of pension to Matthew H. Brandon, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3824); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. LINDSAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 12879) granting an increase of pension to Catherine Myers, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3825); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. KELIHER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 17390) granting an increase of pension to Mary Sheehan, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3826); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. BRADLEY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 17445) granting an increase of pension to William H. Farrell, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3827); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SULLOWAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 2785) granting an increase of pension to Margaret Bonynge, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3828); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. KELIHER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 17922) granting an increase of pension to Thomas D. Adams, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3829); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SULLOWAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 17999) granting an increase of pension to Samuel Yehl, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3830); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 18041) granting an increase of pension to William R. Hiner, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3831); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. CALDERHEAD, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 8795) granting an increase of pension to O. A. A. Gardner, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3832); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. CHANEY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 9862) granting an increase of pension to William B. Warren, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3833); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. HOLLIDAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 9531) granting an increase of pension to Eliza Rogers, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3834); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. GUDGER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 8867) granting an increase of pension to George Stillman, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3835); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. BRADLEY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 10395) granting an increase of pension to Stephen Cundiff, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3836); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. FULLER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 17466) granting an increase of pension to James P. Hall, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3837); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. CHANEY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 18076) granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth Bartley, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3838); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. BRADLEY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 18135) granting an increase of pension to Benedict Sutter, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3839); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. CHANEY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 18724) granting an increase of pension to Alfred Gude, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3840); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SULLOWAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 18447) granting an increase of pension to Elijah G. Gould, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3841); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. LINDSAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 18243) granting an increase of pension to Jacob S. Rickard, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3842); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. CHAPMAN, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 18449) granting an increase of pension to Hannah R. Jacobs, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3843); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. BRADLEY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 18184) granting an increase of pension to John J. Howells, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3844); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. KELIHER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 17388) granting an increase of pension to Patrick McCarthy, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3845); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. DIXON of Indiana, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 18132) granting an increase of pension to John W. Blanchard, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3846); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 18105) granting an increase of pension to John A. Lyle, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3847); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. CHAPMAN, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 17374) granting an increase of pension to Isom Wilkerson, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3848); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. CHANEY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 18357) granting an increase of pension to William E. Starr, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3849); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. FULLER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 18308) granting a pension to Clay Riggs, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3850); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. HOLLIDAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 18165) granting an increase of pension to Jacob Stauff, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3851); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. CHAPMAN, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 17542) granting an increase of pension to John Cain, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3852); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. CHANEY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 13828) granting an increase of pension to John M. Carroll, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3853); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SULLOWAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 14264) granting an increase of pension to John H. Eversole, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3854); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 14729) granting an increase of pension to David Ford, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3855); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. CHAPMAN, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 14702) granting an increase of pension to Christian Schlosser, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3856); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. LINDSAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 16441) granting an increase of pension to Joseph J. Good, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3857); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. BRADLEY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 17171) granting an increase of pension to David H. Parker, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3858); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. CHANEY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 16595) granting a pension to James Russell Hicks, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3859); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. BRADLEY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 16005) granting an increase of pension to Hezekiah J. Reynolds, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3860); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. CHAPMAN, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 16812) granting an increase of pension to Dudley McKibben, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3861); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. CALDERHEAD, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 16252) granting an increase of pension to Adam Dixon, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3862); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. CHAPMAN, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 16565) granting an increase of pension to George H. Gordon, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3863); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. KELIHER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 16878) granting an increase of pension to James B. Adams, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3864); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. FULLER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 16977) granting a pension to Isabel Newlin, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3865); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. CHANEY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 15126) granting an increase of pension to William K. Trabue, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3866); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. HEARST: A bill (H. R. 19017) to promote the construction of a national system of good roads, facilitate the extension of the postal service, and lessen the dependence of the agricultural and industrial interests of the country upon the railroads for transportation—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. BENNETT of Kentucky: A bill (H. R. 19018) authorizing The Warfield Coal and Salt Company to construct a bridge across Tug Fork of Big Sandy River—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. RUCKER: A bill (H. R. 19019) providing that all contributions hereafter made to political committees engaged in promoting the election of Representatives or Delegates to the Congress of the United States or of Presidential electors at any election at which such Representatives or Delegates shall be voted for shall be given publicity—to the Committee on the Election of President, Vice-President, and Representatives in Congress.

By Mr. STEPHENS of Texas: A bill (H. R. 19020) authorizing suit to be brought in the Court of Claims in behalf of certain Indians in the Indian Territory—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were introduced and severally referred, as follows:

By Mr. BURNETT: A bill (H. R. 19021) granting a pension to Andrew M. Gilbreath—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BRUNDIDGE: A bill (H. R. 19022) granting an increase of pension to James R. Russell—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 19023) granting a pension to John T. Lester—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CHANEY: A bill (H. R. 19024) granting an increase of pension to George W. Cloin—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DALE: A bill (H. R. 19025) granting an increase of pension to Milton McFarland—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HARDWICK: A bill (H. R. 19026) granting an increase of pension to Mary Navy—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HEPBURN: A bill (H. R. 19027) granting an increase of pension to Peter Lunsford—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KINKAID: A bill (H. R. 19028) granting an increase of pension to Lorenzo D. Frantz—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 19029) granting an increase of pension to Henry Julius—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LITTLEFIELD: A bill (H. R. 19030) granting an increase of pension to Samuel S. Peters—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. PEARRE: A bill (H. R. 19031) for the relief of William Iams—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. SMITH of Kentucky: A bill (H. R. 19032) granting an increase of pension to Charles W. Brown—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. TIRRELL: A bill (H. R. 19033) granting an increase of pension to Moses S. Rockwood—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WILEY of Alabama: A bill (H. R. 19034) granting a pension to Elizabeth Morgan—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 19035) granting a pension to Lizzie Morgan—to the Committee on Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, the following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By the SPEAKER: Resolution of the board of aldermen of the city of New York, for relief for heirs of victims of General Slocum disaster and asking favorable action on the bill for their relief introduced by Mr. SULZER—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. BELL of Georgia: Paper to accompany bill for relief of Andrew J. Anderson—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CAPRON: Petition of the councils of the Order of United American Mechanics, in Providence, Anthony, Phenix, Clayville, Wickford, Woonsocket, Hope Valley, and Riverside, R. I., favoring restriction of immigration—to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

Also, petition of the State League of Improvement Societies, in Rhode Island, for an appropriation to stay the ravages of the gypsy and brown-tail moths—to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, petition of Rhode Island Chapter, American Institute of Architects, for forest reservations in the White Mountains—to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, petition of Rhode Island Chapter, American Institute of Architects, for preservation of Niagara Falls—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. CHANEY: Petition of Frank Nebb Post, Grand Army of the Republic, of Sullivan, Ind., for relief of George W. Cloin—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin: Petition of citizens of Janesville, Wis., against religious legislation in the District of Columbia—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. DAVIS of West Virginia: Paper to accompany bill for relief of Jacob H. Heck (previously referred to the Committe on Pensions)—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GOULDEN: Petition of members of St. Luke Council, No. 438, Knights of Columbus, favoring bill H. R. 13304, for a memorial to Christopher Columbus—to the Committee on the Library.

By Mr. HAUGEN: Petition of citizens of Marble Rock, Floyd County, Iowa, and citizens of Winneshiek County, Iowa, against consolidation of third and fourth class mail matter—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. HIGGINS: Petition of the Municipal Art Society of Hartford, Conn., for bill H. R. 18024, for preservation of Niagara Falls—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. LACEY: Petition of citizens of Grinnell, Iowa, against religious legislation in the District of Columbia—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. POLLARD: Petition of citizens of Talmage, Nebr., against religious legislation in the District of Columbia—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. SMITH of Kentucky: Paper to accompany bill for relief of Charles W. Brown—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SMITH of Pennsylvania: Petition of 500 citizens of Indiana, Pa., against sale of intoxicating liquors in all Government buildings—to the Committee on Alcoholic Liquor Traffic.

By Mr. SMITH of Texas: Petition of the Chamber of Commerce of El Paso, Tex., for an appropriation for the enlargement of the Federal building in El Paso, Tex., and papers to accompany bill H. R. 17574—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

SENATE.

MONDAY, May 7, 1906.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. EDWARD E. HALE.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of Friday last, when, on request of Mr. GALLINGER, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Journal stands approved.

TRANSPORTATION OF PETROLEUM.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, stating, in response to a resolution of the 4th instant, that, as was shown by the footnote to the President's message, the full copy of the report on the transportation of petroleum is now in the hands of the Public Printer; which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

RESTORATION OF PUBLIC BUILDINGS IN CALIFORNIA.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting photographs of the Government buildings damaged in San Francisco, San Jose, and Oakland, Cal., together with an estimate of cost for repairs thereof, and also brief references to reports on file showing the heroic work done on the part of several officials of the Treasury Department in connection with their efforts to save these buildings; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

DESTRUCTION OF USELESS PAPERS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the Postmaster-General, transmitting a schedule of papers and documents not needed in the transaction of public business and which have no permanent value of historical interest in connection with that Department; which will be referred to the Joint Select Committee on the Disposition of Useless Papers in the Executive Departments, and printed.

The Chair appoints as members of the committee on the part of the Senate the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS] and the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER]; and the House of Representatives will be notified of this action.

FINDINGS OF THE COURT OF CLAIMS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a certified copy of the findings of fact filed by the court in the cause of Nathaniel W. Jones v. The United States; which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, returned to the Senate in compliance with its request the bill (H. R. 17576) to provide for the entry of agricultural lands within forest reserves.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15331) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. SHERMAN, Mr. CURTIS, and Mr. STEPHENS of Texas managers at the conference on the part of the House.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

H. R. 8226. An act granting an increase of pension to Laura B. Ihrie;

H. R. 10251. An act granting an increase of pension to Sarah M. E. Hinman;

H. R. 11635. An act granting an increase of pension to Jeremiah Lunsford;

H. R. 15397. An act granting an increase of pension to Edward Gillespie;

H. R. 15435. An act to empower the Secretary of War to convey to the city of Minneapolis certain lands in exchange for other lands to be used for flowage purposes;

H. R. 15687. An act granting an increase of pension to William F. M. Rice;

H. R. 15907. An act granting an increase of pension to Lewis De Laittre;

H. R. 16215. An act granting an increase of pension to Mary Dagenfield; and

H. R. 16521. An act directing the Secretary of the Interior to sell and convey a certain parcel of land to Johnson County, Wyo.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented a petition of the Council of Jewish Women of Lafayette, Ind., praying that an appropriation be made for a scientific investigation into the industrial conditions of women in the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a petition of Local Grange No. 979, Patrons of Husbandry, of West Chazy, N. Y., praying for the enactment of legislation to remove the duty on denaturized alcohol; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. GALLINGER presented a petition of the faculty of New Hampshire College, of Durham, N. H., and a petition of the Maine Manufactuing Company, of Nashua, N. H., praying for the enactment of legislation to remove the duty on denaturized alcohol; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a memorial of the East Washington Citizens' Association, of Washington, D. C., remonstrating against the appointment by the supreme court of the District of the members of the board of education in the District of Columbia; which was referrred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented a petition of Augustus Saint-Gaudens, of Windsor, Vt., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the appointment of a national advisory board on civic art in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented the petition of Morris E. Sabin, of Washington, D. C., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the grading and macadamizing of Girard street NE., between Twelfth street and Brentwood road NE.; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. WETMORE presented a petition of the Rhode Island Chapter of the American Institute of Architects, of Providence, R. I., praying for the enactment of legislation to prevent the impending destruction of Niagara Falls on the American side by the diversion of the waters for manufacturing purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of the Rhode Island Chapter of the American Institute of Architects, of Providence, R. I., praying for the enactment of legislation to establish national forest reserves in the Southern Appalachian and White mountains; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. DRYDEN presented a petition of the Woman's Home Missionary Society of the First Methodist Episcol Church of Cranford, N. J., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation providing for the transfer of the Alaskan native schools from the United States Bureau of Education to the governor of the Territory of Alaska; which was referred to the Committee on Territories.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Milltown and Sayreville, in the State of New Jersey, praying for the enactment of legislation to restrict immigration; which were referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Montclair, N. J., praying for the enactment of legislation to establish a national bureau for the protection of children; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Dennisville, N. J., praying for the enactment of legislation to remove the duty on denaturized alcohol; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a memorial of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, of Vineland, N. J., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to extend the time in the interstate transportation of live stock; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Elizabeth, Westfield, Newark, and Atlantic Highlands, all in the State of New Jersey, praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution to prohibit polygamy; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of J. B. Morris Post, No. 46, Department of New Jersey, Grand Army of the Republic, of Long Branch, N. J., praying for the enactment of legislation granting pensions to ex-prisoners of war; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BURROWS presented a petition of sundry citizens of Grand Rapids, Mich., praying for the enactment of legislation to prevent the impending destruction of Niagara Falls on the American side by the diversion of the waters for manufacturing purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of the Montcalm County Medical Society, of Greenville, Mich., praying for the passage of the so-called "pure-food bill;" which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the Grand Rapids Clearing-House Association, of Grand Rapids, Mich., praying for the enactment of legislation permitting national banks to loan 10 per cent of their capital and their surplus to individual borrowers; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the Rock Elm Grange, Patrons of Husbandry, of East Jordan, Mich., praying for the passage of the so-called "Hepburn railroad rate bill;" which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of Rock Elm Grange, Patrons of Husbandry, of East Jordan, Mich., praying for the passage of the so-called "parcels-post bill;" which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Charlotte, Detroit, Ludington, and Grass Lake; of Hamburg Grange, No. 118, of Hamburg; Pomona Grange, of Gratiot County; Garfield Grange, No. 1106, of Crooked Lake; Pomona Grange, of Ingham County, and Fern Grange, No. 803, of Big Rapids, all of the Patrons of Husbandry; of Local Union No. 514, Painters, Decorators, and Paper Hangers, of Ann Harbor; the Wolverine Auto and Commercial Vehicle Company, of Dundee; the Charles A. Greenman Company, of Grand Rapids; the Grand Rapids Wood Carving Company, of Grand Rapids; the Grand Rapids Furniture Association, of Grand Rapids; the Keeler Brass Company, of Grand Rapids; the Gale Manufacturing Company, of Albion; the Clough and Warren Company, of Detroit; the Alamo Manufacturing Company, of Hillsdale; the Kalamazoo Tank and Silo Company, of Kalamazoo; the Dowagiac Manufacturing Company, of Dowagiac; the "New Way" Motor Company, of Lansing; the Cadillac Motor Car Company, of Detroit; the Reo Motor Car Company, of Lansing; the Saginaw Manufacturing Company, of Saginaw; the Globe Furniture Company, of Northville; the McRae & Roberts Company, of Detroit; the Field-Brundage Company, of Jackson; the Otsego Chair Company, of Otsego; the Challenge Refrigerator Company, of Grand Haven; the Wolverine Brass Works, of Grand Rapids; the Charles A. Strelinger Company, of Detroit; the Truscott Boat Manufacturing Company, of St. Joseph; the Muskegon Valley Furniture Company, of Muskegon; the Hackley-Phelps-Bonnell Company, of Grand Rapids; the Detroit Trolley Wheel and Electrical Equipment Company, of Detroit; the Michigan Steel Boat Company, of Detroit, and the Manistee Novelty Company, of Manistee, all in the State of Michigan, and of the Wisconsin Chemical Company, of Hackley, Wis., praying for the removal of the internal-revenue tax on denaturized alcohol; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a memorial of the Amalgamated Association of Street and Electric Railway Employees of Ypsilanti, Mich., remonstrating against the repeal of the present Chinese-exclusion law; which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented a petition of the Woman's Club of Detroit, Mich., praying that an appropriation be made for a scientific investigation into the industrial conditions of women in the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a petition of the Woman's Independent Voters' Association of Detroit, Mich., and a petition of the Central Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Detroit, Mich., praying for the enactment of legislation to regulate the employment of child labor in the District of Columbia; which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. DANIEL presented a petition of sundry students of St. Andrew's School, of Richmond, Va., praying for the enactment of legislation to prevent the impending destruction of Niagara Falls on the American side by the diversion of the waters for manufacturing purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. GAMBLE presented a petition of the Western South Dakota Stock Growers' Association, praying for the classification of public lands in South Dakota lying west of the Missouri River and adjacent thereto; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also presented a petition of the Western South Dakota Stock Growers' Association, praying for the enactment of legislation extending the time for the interstate transportation of live stock; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. BURNHAM presented the petition of Augustus St. Gaudens, of Windsor, Vt., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the appointment of an advisory board on civic art in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented petitions of the Morris Manufacturing Company, of Nashua; of Prof. Charles L. Parsons, of Durham; of the Drysalter Club of New England; of Rev. Thomas Whiteside, of Lancaster, all in the State of New Hampshire, and of the International Association of Master House Painters and Decorators of the United States and Canada, praying for the enactment of legislation to remove the duty on denaturized alcohol; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. KEAN presented a petition of sundry citizens of Long Branch, N. J., praying for the enactment of legislation granting pensions to ex-prisoners of war; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Pleasantville, Fanwood, Princeton, and Dennisville, all in the State of New Jersey, and a petition of sundry citizens of New York City, N. Y., praying for the removal of the internal-revenue tax on denaturized alcohol; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Sayreville, Milltown, and Plainfield, all in the State of New Jersey, praying for the enactment of legislation to restrict immigration; which were referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented memorials of sundry citizens of New Jersey, of the Woman's Home Missionary Society of the First Methodist Episcopal Church, of Cranford, N. J., of the Woman's Home Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Plainfield, N. J., and of sundry citizens of Rutherford, N. J., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation removing the control of the schools in Alaska from the Bureau of Education to the governor of Alaska; which were referred to the Committee on Territories.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Montclair, N. J., praying for the enactment of legislation to establish a national bureau for the protection of the children of the United States; which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. SPOONER presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Kewaskum, Wis., remonstrating against the passage of the so-called "parcels-post bill;" which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented petitions of the Cream City Mirror Plate Company, of Milwaukee; of the Fuller & Johnson Manufacturing Company, of Madison, and of sundry citizens, all in the State of Wisconsin, praying for the removal of the internal-revenue tax on denaturized alcohol; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HEMENWAY presented petitions of the Woman's Missionary Society of the Second Presbyterian Church of Madison, of the congregation of the Presbyterian Church of Hanover, and of the Woman's Missionary Society of the First Presbyterian Church of Logansport, all in the State of Indiana, praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution to prohibit polygamy; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented petitions of Local Union, Brotherhood of Painters, Decorators, and Paper Hangers of America, of Indianapolis; of sundry citizens of Goshen; of Local Union, Brothhood of Painters, Decorators, and Paper Hangers of America, of Lafayette; of Robinson & Co., of Richmond; of the Birdsell Manufacturing Company, of South Bend, and of the Hubbard Saw and Planing Mill, of Martinsville, all in the State of Indiana, praying for the enactment of legislation to remove the duty on denaturized alcohol; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of the Council of Jewish Women of Lafayette, Ind., praying that an appropriation be made for a scientific investigation into the industrial conditions of women in the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. FRYE presented the petition of Arthur L. Sampson and sundry other citizens of Maine, praying for the removal of the internal-revenue tax on denaturized alcohol; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BEVERIDGE presented a petition of the Missionary Society of the First Presbyterian Church of Logansport, Ind., praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution to prohibit polygamy; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SMOOT, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them each with an amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 4937) granting an increase of pension to John Reece; and

A bill (S. 4852) granting an increase of pension to Andrew Reeder.

Mr. SMOOT, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 5256) granting an increase of pension to John Johnson;

A bill (H. R. 16320) granting a pension to Esther M. Noah;

A bill (H. R. 4965) granting an increase of pension to Samuel P. Holland;

A bill (H. R. 6114) granting an increase of pension to Andrew J. Douglass;

A bill (H. R. 7584) granting an increase of pension to James H. Kemp;

A bill (H. R. 11917) granting an increase of pension to Davis Preston;

A bill (H. R. 13026) granting an increase of pension to J. Bailey Orem;

A bill (H. R. 15274) granting an increase of pension to Edward W. Bell; and

A bill (H. R. 15523) granting a pension to Jose N. Lucero, alias Nasario Lucero.

Mr. ALGER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally with amendments, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 4879) granting an increase of pension to Nellie Baker;

A bill (S. 722) restoring to the pension roll the name of Annis Bailey, widow of Abram R. Ward;

A bill (S. 3629) granting an increase of pension to William Hibbs; and

A bill (H. R. 12135) granting an increase of pension to William Landahn.

Mr. ALGER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 549) granting an increase of pension to Charles W. Storr, jr.;

A bill (H. R. 1482) granting an increase of pension to Philip Cook;

A bill (H. R. 6061) granting an increase of pension to William H. Chapman;

A bill (H. R. 6546) granting an increase of pension to Samuel A. White;

A bill (H. R. 6865) granting an increase of pension to Charles F. Voss;

A bill (H. R. 11151) granting an increase of pension to John Sirmyer;

A bill (H. R. 11552) granting an increase of pension to Abraham G. Leiser;

A bill (H. R. 13979) granting an increase of pension to Emeline A. Stewart; and

A bill (H. R. 15634) granting an increase of pension to Samuel M. Reese.

Mr. GALLINGER. The bill (S. 152) to provide for the building of a public avenue on the south side of the Potomac River from the city of Washington to Mount Vernon was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia by mistake. I report the bill back, and move that the Committee on the District of Columbia be discharged from its further consideration, and I move that it be referred to the Committee on Claims, where it belongs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. McCUMBER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them each with an amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 5928) granting an increase of pension to Patrick Gaffney;

A bill (S. 5442) granting a pension to Frances E. Taylor;

A bill (S. 5790) granting an increase of pension to Jehial P. Hammond;

A bill (S. 3486) granting an increase of pension to Edwin D. Wescott; and

A bill (S. 2032) granting an increase of pension to Thomas F. Stevens.

Mr. McCUMBER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally with amendments, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 5798) granting an increase of pension to Charles Hunsley; and

A bill (H. R. 15869) granting an increase of pension to Wilson H. McCune.

Mr. McCUMBER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 3487) granting an increase of pension to Joseph Fuller;

A bill (S. 5949) granting an increase of pension to George F. White;

A bill (H. R. 1182) granting an increase of pension to Ezekiel Bridwell;

A bill (H. R. 1192) granting an increase of pension to George B. Hess;

A bill (H. R. 2816) granting an increase of pension to James C. Town;

A bill (H. R. 2168) granting an increase of pension to William Bridges;

A bill (H. R. 2226) granting an increase of pension to George F. Long;

A bill (H. R. 2234) granting an increase of pension to Jacob W. Gersteneker;

A bill (H. R. 10029) granting an increase of pension to Abram Higbie;

A bill (H. R. 10257) granting an increase of pension to Samuel Deems;

A bill (H. R. 10922) granting an increase of pension to John McDonald;

A bill (H. R. 10561) granting an increase of pension to Joseph N. Piersell;

A bill (H. R. 11822) granting an increase of pension to Lawyer Sugs;

A bill (H. R. 12810) granting an increase of pension to Edward Ross; and

A bill (H. R. 14801) granting an increase of pension to Thomas Armstrong.

Mr. BURKETT, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally with amendments, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 5966) granting an increase of pension to C. C. Davis;

A bill (S. 5708) granting an increase of pension to Nathalia Boepple; and

A bill (S. 5032) granting a pension to Daisy Crowninshield Stuyvesant.

Mr. BURKETT, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 5948) granting an increase of pension to Samuel B. Rice;

A bill (H. R. 1719) granting an increase of pension to William N. Whitlock;

A bill (H. R. 18237) granting an increase of pension to Rachel Egeness;

A bill (H. R. 5571) granting an increase of pension to William Cary;

A bill (H. R. 8716) granting an increase of pension to John L. Coffey;

A bill (H. R. 10766) granting a pension to Rachel L. Bartlett;

A bill (H. R. 9529) granting an increase of pension to William Gibson;

A bill (H. R. 11062) granting an increase of pension to Samuel W. Harlan;

A bill (H. R. 11365) granting an increase of pension to Robert D. Williamson;

A bill (H. R. 15316) granting an increase of pension to James McKelvy; and

A bill (H. R. 15819) granting an increase of pension to William T. Burgess.

Mr. GEARIN, from the Committee on Claims, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally with amendments, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 225) granting a pension to Thomas R. Smith;

A bill (S. 5932) granting an increase of pension to E. R. Merriman; and

A bill (S. 5056) granting a pension to Alexandar Plotts.

Mr. GEARIN, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 14118) granting an increase of pension to Edward Delany;

A bill (H. R. 17118) granting an increase of pension to John Burke;

A bill (H. R. 11989) granting an increase of pension to Francis M. Hinds;

A bill (H. R. 11510) granting an increase of pension to Joseph S. Larrance;

A bill (H. R. 9138) granting an increase of pension to Aaron L. Rockwood;

A bill (H. R. 9135) granting a pension to August Crome; and

A bill (H. R. 735) granting an increase of pension to Frank L. Fornshell.

Mr. GAMBLE, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them each with an amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 1336) providing for the allotment and distribution of the tribal funds of the Yankton tribe of Sioux Indians in the State of South Dakota; and

A bill (S. 1337) providing for the allotment and distribution of the tribal funds of the Sisseton and Wahpeton tribes of Sioux Indians in the State of South Dakota.

Mr. PILES, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2008) granting a pension to Virginia A. McKnight, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them each with an amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 5844) granting an increase of pension to John Keys; and

A bill (H. R. 13022) granting an increase of pension to Sarah L. Ghrist.

Mr. PILES, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 4205) granting an increase of pension to George Warner;

A bill (H. R. 17387) granting an increase of pension to David F. Eakin;

A bill (H. R. 17806) granting an increase of pension to Enoch Boyle;

A bill (H. R. 8954) granting a pension to George Cunningham;

A bill (H. R. 10008) granting an increase of pension to James W. Dorman;

A bill (H. R. 12762) granting an increase of pension to Jesse H. Brandt;

A bill (H. R. 13337) granting an increase of pension to Joseph W. Harsh; and

A bill (H. R. 14982) granting an increase of pension to Isaac N. Long.

Mr. BURNHAM, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them each with an amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 20) granting an increase of pension to Edward Higgins;

A bill (S. 3553) granting an increase of pension to William Oliver;

A bill (S. 4492) granting an increase of pension to George W. Fletcher; and

A bill (H. R. 17072) granting an increase of pension to Joseph French.

Mr. BURNHAM, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 1256) granting an increase of pension to Lewis D. Moore;

A bill (S. 1865) granting an increase of pension to Solomon H. Baker;

A bill (H. R. 1557) granting an increase of pension to Frank J. Oatley;

A bill (H. R. 1946) granting an increase of pension to James A. Sproull;

A bill (H. R. 2791) granting an increase of pension to Mary E. Adams;

A bill (H. R. 3694) granting an increase of pension to Joseph D. Emery;

A bill (H. R. 4240) granting an increase of pension to James F. Chipman;

A bill (H. R. 4244) granting an increase of pension to John Spaulding;

A bill (H. R. 3686) granting an increase of pension to Henry R. Cowan;

A bill (H. R. 5222) granting an increase of pension to Lewis R. Stegman;

A bill (H. R. 8737) granting an increase of pension to Horace A. Manley;

A bill (H. R. 8771) granting an increase of pension to Florence Sullivan;

A bill (H. R. 8833) granting a pension to Edna M. Johnson;

A bill (H. R. 12238) granting an increase of pension to Helen S. Brown;

A bill (H. R. 14391) granting an increase of pension to Franklin Cooley; and

A bill (H. R. 15305) granting an increase of pension to Ezra H. Brown.

Mr. OVERMAN, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 5290) granting an increase of pension to James Ramsey, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally with amendments, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 5855) granting an increase of pension to Blanche B. Badger;

A bill (S. 4608) granting a pension to George W. Walter; and

A bill (S. 4173) granting an increase of pension to Catharine E. Smith.

Mr. SCOTT, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them each with an amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 5767) granting an increase of pension to Thomas D. Welch;

A bill (S. 5700) granting an increase of pension to Stacy B. Warford;

A bill (S. 5765) granting an increase of pension to Theodore F. Montgomery;

A bill (S. 4910) granting an increase of pension to William Wright;

A bill (H. R. 1413) granting an increase of pension to John Crawford;

A bill (H. R. 1768) granting an increase of pension to George W. Childers;

A bill (H. R. 3345) granting an increase of pension to Christina White;

A bill (H. R. 5048) granting an increase of pension to William A. Failer;

A bill (H. R. 6498) granting an increase of pension to Isaac C. France;

A bill (H. R. 9923) granting an increase of pension to Joseph J. Mishler;

A bill (H. R. 10993) granting an increase of pension to Samuel Jones;

A bill (H. R. 12727) granting an increase of pension to Benjamin D. Bogia;

A bill (H. R. 14169) granting an increase of pension to Bettie Stern;

A bill (H. R. 14731) granting an increase of pension to Ezra H. Wiggins;

A bill (H. R. 15003) granting an increase of pension to James Gray;

A bill (H. R. 15695) granting a pension to John T. Wagoner; and

A bill (H. R. 15748) granting an increase of pension to Jacob R. Deckard.

Mr. BLACKBURN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 15332) to incorporate the National Society of the Sons of the American Revolution, reported it without amendment.

Mr. SPOONER, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6101) for the relief of the estate of Charles M. Demarest, deceased, reported it without amendment.

IMPROVEMENT OF PUBLIC ROADS.

Mr. PLATT. I am directed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the resolution submitted on the 4th instant by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. LATIMER], to report it with an amendment; and I ask for its present consideration.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution, which was read, as follows:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the Senate 10,000 copies of the hearings before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry of the Senate on Senate bills 3477 and 2539, Fifty-eighth Congress, relating to public roads.

The amendment of the Committee on Printing was, to add at the end of the resolution:

And that the said copies, when printed, shall be delivered to the document room of the Senate.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

HEARING BEFORE COMMITTEE ON WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

Mr. KEAN, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by Mr. BACON on the 4th instant, reported it without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the stenographer employed to report the hearing before the Select Committee on Woman Suffrage given to a delegation of the National Woman Suffrage Association, February 15, 1906, be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

AID IN REBUILDING SAN FRANCISCO.

Mr. ALDRICH. From the Committee on Finance I report back the concurrent resolution submitted by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] on the 2d instant, relative to aid in rebuilding San Francisco, and I submit a report thereon. As the matter is a rather important one and the report is very short, I ask that it may be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the report.

The Secretary read as follows:

The Committee on Finance, to whom was referred Senate concurrent resolution No. 24, providing for the creation of a joint committee to consider various plans for national financial aid in the work of rebuilding the city of San Francisco, beg leave to report:

The resolution suggests alternative plans for national relief: First, that the Federal Government guarantee the credit of the city of San Francisco to the extent which will enable that city to secure the money necessary for the restoration of its public and private buildings, the money to be loaned at fair rates of interest to property owners upon note and mortgage;

Second. That the United States should subscribe to stock in, or make loans to, a great financial corporation, to be chartered either by the State or the nation, which should undertake the work of rebuilding San Francisco, or of making loans for this purpose.

Your committee are clearly and unanimously of the opinion that both the plans suggested are without the legitimate province of Congressional action, and therefore that the appointment of a joint committee to consider their advisability or practicability is inexpedient.

It does not seem to your committee advisable at this time to appoint a committee to consider other plans for national aid.

They therefore report the resolution adversely, and recommend that it be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. ALDRICH. In the absence of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS], I ask that the resolution and report may go upon the Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. HANSBROUGH introduced a bill (S. 6037) to amend an act entitled "An act regulating the sale of intoxicating liquors in the District of Columbia;" which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. PILES introduced a bill (S. 6038) authorizing the construction of a dam across the Pend d'Oreille River, in the State of Washington, by the Pend d'Oreille Development Company, for the development of water power, electrical power, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. TALIAFERRO introduced a bill (S. 3039) granting an increase of pension to George Gardner; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. McENERY introduced a bill (S. 6040) for the relief of the estate of Joseph Richard Martin; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. OVERMAN introduced a bill (S. 6041) granting an increase of pension to James N. Brown; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CLAY introduced a bill (S. 6042) for the relief of the Jerusalem Evangelical Lutheran Church, Ebenezer, Ga.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. SPOONER introduced a bill (S. 6043) granting an increase of pension to George W. Phillips; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 6044) granting an increase of pension to John H. Arnold; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CULLOM introduced a bill (S. 6045) granting an increase of pension to J. G. Bridaham; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. FULTON introduced the following bills; which were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 6046) granting an increase of pension to K. Shannon Taylor; and

A bill (S. 6047) granting a pension to W. C. Baker.

Mr. GAMBLE introduced a bill (S. 6048) for the relief of L. A. Jopeline; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced the following bills; which were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 6049) granting a pension to Mary A. Washburn;

A bill (S. 6050) granting an increase of pension to Edward W. Galligan; and

A bill (S. 6051) granting an increase of pension to Mary A. Duncan.

Mr. BEVERIDGE introduced a bill (S. 6052) granting an increase of pension to William E. Redmond; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 6053) for the relief of William Taylor; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. WARNER introduced the following bills; which were severally read twice by their titles, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 6054) granting a pension to Edward W. Livingston;

A bill (S. 6055) granting an increase of pension to Henry H. Davis;

A bill (S. 6056) granting an increase of pension to Alexander C. Boner;

A bill (S. 6057) granting an increase of pension to James M. Wood;

A bill (S. 6058) granting an increase of pension to Samuel Owings;

A bill (S. 6059) granting a pension to Uriah Fosberg;

A bill (S. 6060) granting an increase of pension to Alonzo W. Wright; and

A bill (S. 6061) granting an increase of pension to William K. Trabue.

Mr. GEARIN introduced a bill (S. 6062) granting a pension to Mary Haney; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. TILLMAN introduced a bill (S. 6063) granting an increase of pension to F. A. Sullivan; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. RAYNER (for Mr. GORMAN) submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $130,629.67 to reimburse the directors of Providence Hospital, in the District of Columbia, for moneys expended by them in the reconstruction of said hospital, intended to be proposed by Mr. GORMAN to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. OVERMAN submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $8,000 for paving Eleventh street from K to O streets NW. with sheet asphalt, intended to be proposed by him to the District of Columbia appropriation bill; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $143,000 for the purchase of land and modification and extension of railroad system incident to abolition of grade crossings in connection with the spur railroad from the Washington Navy-Yard to the tracks of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $3,000 each for six justices of the peace in the District of Columbia, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the District of Columbia appropriation bill; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. DICK submitted an amendment providing for the transference to the Secretary of the Navy for preservation, indexing, and preparation of the publication of all records relating to the personnel and operations of public and private armed vessels of the North American colonies in the war of the Revolution, intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MILLARD submitted an amendment proposing to increase the number of superintendents of registry, Post-Office Department, from twenty-five to twenty-seven, intended to be proposed by him to the post-office appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENTS TO RAILROAD RATE BILL.

Mr. CULBERSON. I submit an amendment, in the nature of a substitute, to the bill (H. R. 12987) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, and all acts amendatory thereof, and to enlarge the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD. It is not very long.

There being no objection, the proposed substitute was ordered to lie on the table, and to be printed, and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

That whenever the Interstate Commerce Commission, created by "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, and exercising powers thereunder and under acts amendatory thereof, and under this act, shall, upon complaint and hearing, as provided by said acts, or either of them, decide that any rate fixed for service which is subject to the provisions of said acts, or either of them, is unjust and unreasonable, said Commission shall have the power, and it shall be its duty, to fix a just and reasonable maximum rate for such service and make an order specifying the time, which shall be within not less that twenty days from the date of said order, when such rate shall take effect; and thereafter such rate shall be the only lawful rate which the carrier may charge for such service for the period of one year from the time such rate may become operative, unless otherwise ordered by the Commission: Provided, That if such rate so fixed by the Commission is in violation of the rights of any party in interest secured by the Constitution of the United States the party so affected may proceed against the Commission by appropriate proceedings in equity in any circuit court of the United States of competent jurisdiction to enjoin the enforcement of such order and rate: Provided further, That in determining what is a just and reasonable rate no consideration shall be given fictitious stock issued by the carrier or bonds or other obligations of the carrier issued in excess of the fair value of its property: Provided further, That no circuit or other court of the United States, and no judge thereof in vacation, shall annul, restrain, enjoin, or otherwise interfere with the enforcement or operation of a rate and order established and made by the Interstate Commerce Commission provided for in this act until a petition, declaration, bill of complaint, or other proper statement of the cause of action is filed in said court or presented to said judge in vacation, and the Interstate Commerce Commission is duly and legally served with a copy thereof at least ten days prior to any action taken by the court or judge thereon and until said Commission has had opportunity within said ten days to answer by proper pleadings and present testimony in like form as the complainants therein: Provided further, That in such proceedings either party to the suit may appeal immediately and directly to the Supreme Court of the United States from the final decree therein, or from any interlocutory or preliminary restraining order therein, whether granted during the term or in vacation, by which the rate and order so established and made by the Commission is enjoined in whole or in part: Provided further, That said appeal must be taken within thirty days from the entry of such order or decree, and said case so appealed shall be advanced and take precedence in the Supreme Court of all cases of a different character therein: Provided further, That the circuit court, or the judge thereof, or the Supreme Court or any justice thereof, may direct that the final decree or the interlocutory or preliminary restraining order from which an appeal is taken shall be stayed during the pendency of such appeal.

SEC. 2. That section 1 of an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as hereafter to read as follows:

"That the provisions of this act shall apply to any common carrier or carriers engaged in the transportation of oil, gas, or water wholly or partly by pipe lines and to any common carrier or carriers engaged in the transportation of passengers or property wholly by railroad, or partly by railroad and partly by water, when both are used for a continuous carriage or shipment, from one State or Territory of the United States, or the District of Columbia, to any other State or Territory of the United States, or the District of Columbia, or from any place in the United States to an adjacent foreign country, or from any place in the United States through a foreign country to any other place in the United States, and also to the transportation in like manner of property shipped from any place in the United States to a foreign country and carried from such place to a port of transshipment, or shipped from a foreign country to any place in the United States and carried to such place from a port of entry either in the United States or an adjacent foreign country: Provided, however, That the provisions of this act shall not apply to the transportation of passengers or property, or to the receiving, delivering, storage, or handling of property wholly within one State and not shipped to or from a foreign country from or to any State or Territory as aforesaid.

"The term 'railroad' as used in this act shall include all bridges and ferries used or operated in connection with any railroad, and also all the road in use by any corporation operating a railroad, whether owned or operated under a contract, agreement, or lease; and the term 'transportation' shall include the use of cars and other vehicles and the use of all instrumentalities and facilities of shipment or carriage, irrespective of ownership or of any contract, express or implied, and all services in connection with the receipt, delivery, elevation, and transfer in transit, ventilation, refrigeration or icing storage, and handling of property transported; and it shall be the duty of every carrier subject to the provisions of this act to provide and furnish such transportation upon reasonable request therefor, and to establish through routes and just and reasonable rates applicable thereto.

"All rates fixed by the carrier or the Interstate Commerce Commission for any service rendered or to be rendered in the transportation of passengers or property, or in connection therewith, as aforesaid, shall be subject to the provisions of this act, and shall be just and reasonable both to the public and the carrier."

SEC. 3. That section 1 of an act entitled "An act to further regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the States," approved February 19, 1903, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as hereafter to read as follows:

"That anything done or omitted to be done by a corporation common carrier, subject to the act to regulate commerce and the acts amendatory thereof, which, if done or omitted to be done by any director or officer thereof, or any receiver, trustee, lessee, agent, or person acting for or employed by such corporation, would constitute a misdemeanor under said acts or under this act shall also be held to be a misdemeanor committed by such corporation, and upon conviction thereof it shall be subject to like penalties as are prescribed in said acts or by this act with reference to such persons except as such penalties are herein changed. The willful failure upon the part of any carrier subject to said acts to file and publish the tariffs or rates and charges as required by said acts or strictly to observe such tariffs until changed according to law, shall be a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof the corporation offending shall be subject to a fine of not less than $1,000 nor more than $20,000 for each offense; and it shall be unlawful for any person, persons, or corporation to offer, grant, or give or to solicit, accept, or receive any rebate, concession, or discrimination in respect of the transportation of any property in interstate or foreign commerce by any common carrier subject to said act to regulate commerce and the acts amendatory thereto whereby any such property shall by any device whatever be transported at a less rate than that named in the tariffs published and filed by such carrier, as is required by said act to regulate commerce and the acts amendatory thereto, or whereby any other advantage is given or discrimination is practiced. Every person or corporation who shall offer, grant, give or solicit, accept or receive any such rebates, concessions, or discriminations shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not less than $1,000 nor more than $20,000: Provided, That every person who shall offer, grant, give or solicit, accept or receive any such rebate, concession, or discrimination shall, in addition to said fine, be imprisoned in the penitentiary for a term not less than one year nor more than five years.

"Every violation of this section shall be prosecuted in any court of the United States having jurisdiction of crimes within the district in which such violation was committed or through which the transportation may have been conducted; and whenever the offense is begun in one jurisdiction and completed in another it may be dealt with, inquired of, tried, or determined, and punished in either jurisdiction in the same manner as if the offense had been actually and wholly committed therein.

"In construing and enforcing the provisions of this section the act, omission, or failure of any officer, agent, or other person acting for or employed by any common carrier acting within the scope of his employment shall in every case be also deemed to be the act, omission, or failure of such carrier as well as that of the person. Whenever any carrier files with the Interstate Commerce Commission or publishes a particular rate under the provisions of the act to regulate commerce or acts amendatory thereof, or participates in any rates so filed or published, that rate as against such carrier, its officers, or agents in any prosecution begun under this act shall be conclusively deemed to be the legal rate, and any departure from such rate, or any offer to depart therefrom, shall be deemed to be an offense under this section of this act."

SEC. 4. That all acts and parts of acts in conflict herewith are repealed and that this act take effect from its passage.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE submitted eleven amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 12987) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, and all acts amendatory thereof, and to enlarge the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission; which were ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

WILLIAM WILSON.

Mr. McCUMBER. I offer the concurrent resolution which I send to the desk, and ask unanimous consent for immediate action upon it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Dakota submits a resolution, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the President be requested to return to the Senate the bill (S. 3454) entitled "An act granting an increase of pension to William Wilson."

Mr. McCUMBER. I simply desire to say that the beneficiary named in the bill has died since its passage.

The concurrent resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

ASSOCIATION OF THE NAVAL MILITIA.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have had handed to me the typewritten copy of the annual proceedings of the Association of the Naval Militia of the United States, accompanied by bills pending before Congress on the subject of the naval militia. On some former occasion the Senate has published proceedings of this association as a public document, and I move that it be printed as a public document.

The resolution was agreed to.

VOLUNTEER RETIRED LIST OF THE ARMY.

Mr. NELSON. I present a statement showing the number, residence, and age of officers affected by the bill (S. 2162) to create in the War Department a special roll to be known as "the volunteer retired list," to authorize placing thereon with pay certain surviving officers of the United States Volunteer Army of the civil war, and for other purposes, and also the amount of money involved. I move that the statement be printed as a public document and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. B. F. BARNES, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had approved and signed the following acts:

On May 1:

S. 3045. An act to incorporate the American Cross of Honor within the District of Columbia;

S. 4046. An act to incorporate the Edes Home; and

S. 47. An act to create a board for the condemnation of insanitary buildings in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15331) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. CLAPP. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, agree to the request for a conference, and that the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice-President appointed Mr. CLAPP, Mr. McCUMBER, and Mr. DUBOIS as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

AGRICULTURAL LANDS WITHIN FOREST RESERVES.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the bill (H. R. 17576) to provide for the entry of agricultural lands within forest reserves, returned from the House of Representatives in compliance with the request of the Senate.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President, I entered a motion to reconsider the vote by which this bill was passed. I do not wish to press it at the present time, but I desire to explain briefly why I entered the motion.

Personally I favor the bill; I desire that it may become a law; but the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN], who is too ill to attend the sessions of the Senate, wishes to be heard on the measure. This I suggested at the time the measure was before the Senate for passage, and I allowed it to be passed and afterwards entered a motion to reconsider the vote in order that it may rest where it is until the Senator from Idaho may attend the sessions of the Senate and present his views.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will lie on the table.

PRESERVATION OF NIAGARA FALLS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith, for the consideration of the Congress, a report made to the Secretary of War by the International Waterways Commission, under date of May 3, 1906, upon the preservation of Niagara Falls.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, May 7, 1906.

REGULATION OF RAILROAD RATES.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed, and——

Mr. SCOTT. I should like very much to call up a bill out of order as a compliment to a retiring Senator on the opposite side. It is Senate bill 2794, a very short bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Under the unanimous-consent agreement House bill 12987 is in order.

Mr. HALE. I must make a point of order against the request of the Senator from West Virginia. First, I ask that the rule be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the unanimous-consent agreement, as requested by the Senator from Maine.

The Secretary read as follows:

It is agreed by unanimous consent that on Friday, May 4, 1906, immediately upon the conclusion of the routine morning business, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the bill, H. R. 12987, to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, and all acts amendatory thereof, and to enlarge the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission; the bill to be read by sections for the purpose of amendment, the discussion upon amendments offered to proceed under a fifteen-minute rule, the amendments to be disposed of when the discussion thereon is concluded. (April 30, 1906.)

Mr. HALE. I will state my point of order. I do not like to interfere with the Senator from West Virginia, but the purpose and object and operation of the rule are entirely clear. The Senate by unanimous consent made the rule and the order of business. You can not upon one unanimous-consent agreement afterwards changed that by another unanimous-consent agreement. My point of order is that there is nothing under the rule which has been read that the Senate can do except to proceed to the consideration of amendments to the rate bill, and no unanimous-consent agreement can or ought to interfere with that order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The unfinished business will be proceeded with.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12987) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, and all acts amendatory thereof, and to enlarge the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The pending amendment is the one offered by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KITTREDGE]. The Secretary will read it.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of section 1 the following:

Companies or persons owning, leasing, managing, or operating cars used in the business of carrying any kind of property, including live stock, though such cars run upon railroads not owned, leased, managed, or operated by such companies or persons, shall be deemed to be carriers engaged in the transportation of property by railroad within the meaning of this act.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I can not believe that the Senator from South Dakota fully realize the scope of his proposed amendment. I fully agree with him, as every one else must agree with him, as to the evil known as the private car lines. As he wisely suggested in his remarks last Friday, one of the remedies is the elimination of the private car lines. The committee at its hearings last spring and the members of the committee in considering this subject have been face to face with the proposition whether private car lines could be eliminated. We recognize it is the law that a common carrier must furnish the facilities for transportation; we realize that they depend to-day very largely upon the private car lines for those facilities; and now to abruptly require them to make the necessary investment and to create that disturbance which would result from the prohibition of the use of these cars by anything but a railroad company seemed entirely too drastic, and the committee had to abandon that thought.

The next plan was how best to meet the evil of the private car lines. One difficulty to-day is that the shipper of fruit and other freight requiring refrigeration has to deal not only with the railroad company which transports that freight, but also he has to deal with the company owning these private cars; and while it did not seem a bit feasible, if advisable, to eliminate the private cars, it did seem as though we ought to take one step forward and require the common carrier to furnish these cars so far as the shipping public is concerned, so that the shipper would have to deal only with one corporation, and that would be the carrier, and the carrier would be free either to buy its cars, own its cars, rent its cars, or employ the cars owned by the private car line companies so long as in its last analysis the cost of transportation, including refrigeration and those things especially inherent in the private cars, was within the control of the Interstate Commerce Commission and the shipper had to deal only with one person, and the Commission had to deal only with one person, and that the common carrier. So we provided first as to what a carrier—a railroad—should be, what transportation should be, bringing refrigeration, icing, and all these matters finally under the one head of transportation or freight, so that it would simplify the subject both with the shipper and the Commission.

Before the Senate votes on the amendment I wish to make another suggestion. So far as the subject of eliminating the private car lines is worthy of consideration, it ought not to be embarrassed in the future by at this time a legislative declaration of its legal existence and its license as a common carrier. If we find in experience that thus making the private car line facilities, and including icing and refrigeration and all these matters, a part of the freight charge, to be dealt with as one matter both with the shipper and the Commission, does not meet the evil, and it should be thought later by a gradual process fair to all and feasible as practical legislation to eliminate the private car lines, I say we ought not then to be embarrassed by the fact that we had deliberately legalized that business and recognized it and licensed it as a common carrier. There will be time enough then, if our present plan should not prove a practical one, to deal with it from that standpoint.

I hope before the Senate thus, within the purview of this law, legalize the operation of the private car lines they will consider if it is not better, for the time being at least, to place every item of transportation subject to the railroads, so that the shipper and the Commission will have to deal primarily and exclusively with the railroad company alone.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. Mr. President, before the Senate proceeds to vote on this amendment, or any of the pending amendments indeed, I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. MALLORY] is unable to be present on account of illness. He has a general pair with the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR], but has sent me a brief statement of his views on the bill, which I desire shall be read. I send the statement to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the statement prepared by the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. MALLORY].

The Secretary read the statement, as follows:

"In my judgment the Hepburn-Dolliver rate bill as it came to the Senate from the House of Representatives will accomplish very little practical benefit. It, however, enunciates a principle which has been more or less disputed in the past and which, in my judgment, is worthy of distinct recognition. The bill declares that the National Legislature has a right, through a commission established by that Legislature, to prescribe reasonable and just rates for the transportation of passengers and freight by common carriers engaged in interstate and foreign commerce. As the bill stands, this is the only point that induces me to favor its enactment into law.

"I believe that one of the greatest difficulties that the Interstate Commerce Commission has to deal with is the facility with which a railroad charged with the imposition of excessive rates can secure a preliminary injunction on facts not adduced before the Commission when that body passed on the rate in question. I believe that Congress has the power to prevent the issuance of such preliminary or interlocutory injunction by the minor United States courts, and that unless Congress does impose such restraint on those courts the practical working of the Hepburn-Dolliver bill will be but little improvement on the working of the law that it seeks to amend. There are other features of the bill that I think should be radically amended, and many provisions might be put on it that would relieve it of serious grounds of criticism. But with effective restrictions on the power of the courts to grant preliminary injunctions I think that substantial benefit to the public could be realized.

"In general, I desire to say that I favor any amendment that enlarges the powers and strengthens the hands of the Interstate Commerce Commission within constitutional limits and that I am opposed to any amendment that in any way lessens the power, narrows the jurisdiction, or weakens the strength of the Commission."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The pending question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KITTREDGE].

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President, before a vote is taken on the amendment I wish to ask the framer of the amendment a few questions with regard to its proper construction. The first lines of the amendment read:

Companies or persons owning, leasing, managing, or operating cars used in the business of carrying any kind of property, including live stock, etc.

The amendment concludes as follows:

Shall be deemed to be carriers engaged in the transportation of property by railroad within the meaning of this act.

What I want to know is this: Suppose a stock breeder in central Illinois leases one, two, or three cars for the purpose of transporting some of his fancy stock into an adjoining State for exhibition purposes, would that act come within the provisions of this amendment and make him a common carrier?

Mr. KITTREDGE. Mr. President, in my judgment it would not.

Mr. HOPKINS. Why does the Senator so think? The provision reads:

Or persons owning, leasing, managing, or operating cars used in the business of carrying any kind of property.

There would be a person, and he would be leasing a car and using it for transporting live stock from one State to another.

Mr. KITTREDGE. That is not intended to be the construction of this amendment. The object of the use of the words "companies or persons" is very evident. The word "companies" is a broader term than the word "corporations," and the words "persons" is there used so as to include anyone engaged in the transportation of property enumerated in this amendment.

Mr. HOPKINS. Under the explanation of the Senator, Mr. President, just such a case as I have indicated would come within the provisions of this proposed law, because there would be a person who would be leasing cars, and he would be leasing them for transporting live stock from one State to another.

Mr. KITTREDGE. That is quite a mistake as to the purpose of this amendment. The case which the Senator mentions is not at all reached by this language. In the case he has cited the owner of the live stock would be the shipper and not the carrier.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. KITTREDGE. Certainly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I wish to ask the Senator from South Dakota a question. The bill at present permits a railroad company to make contracts for leasing cars of private car line companies, but provides that the cost of those cars shall be included in the charge the railroad company makes to the shipper. Does not the Senator's amendment, making the private car lines also interstate carriers, compel the shipper to pay two separate charges, one to the railroad company and one to the private car line? Is not that the case?

Mr. KITTREDGE. Mr. President, my construction of section 1 of the bill now pending, and especially of the part relating to transportation, is that it does not reach at all the relations that may exist between the private car line companies and the shipper, but it does reach the charges that the railway company may make on the private car line companies. If the private car line company presents to the carrier, the railroad company, a car with its contents, the relation of shipment is between the private car line company and the railroad, and the relations between the shipper and the railroad company are not reached in any degree.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. By the present bill?

Mr. KITTREDGE. By the bill which is now pending.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I think it is an admirable thing that that point has been brought out, because if the bill as it stands will not permit the railroad company to make a contract with a private car line, but compels it to include the charge made by the private car line company in the charge it makes to the shipper, then I am sure a large number of Senators have been deceived. I should be very glad to hear from some Senator who has had something to do with the bill upon that question.

As I interpret the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota—and it was to that to which my question was directed—the only difference between the law as it would be if his amendment should be adopted and the law as it would be if his amendment should not be adopted would be that in the first case the shipper must deal with two companies in the carrying of his goods and in the other the shipper would deal with but one carrier in the shipment of his goods.

If the Senator who has charge of the bill will explain whether or not it is true that, in his judgment, this bill does provide that the common carrier may make his contract with the private car line and include the charge that it pays to the private car line in the charge it makes to the shipper, I think it would be enlightening to us.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President, I have examined the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota a little further since the Senator has given me his construction of it, that it would be the carrier and not the shipper that would be held to be a common carrier. I do not interpret the amendment as suggested by the Senator, and, with all due deference to his opinion, I submit that it is not susceptible of the construction that he places upon it, for this reason: Eliminating the other words and bringing the proposition down to the illustration that I gave of the shipper of live stock from Illinois to an adjacent State, it reads that persons leasing cars or operating cars used in the business of carrying any kind of property, including live stock, shall be deemed to be carriers engaged in the transportation of property by railroad within the meaning of this act.

Now, to show that it can not mean the railroads, the amendment substantially provides that the person who owns or leases a car or cars for the purposes I have indicated shall be held to be a carrier under the provisions of this act, "though such cars run upon railroads not owned, leased, managed, or operated by such companies or persons."

So that it precludes the idea that the railroad over which the car is transported would be the shipper. It is the person who leases or owns the car. If that construction is correct—and it seems to me that that is the plain English of it—then a person who is a breeder of fancy stock of any kind who carries it for the purpose of exhibition from one State to another, or for any of the purposes relating to private business, by this amendment becomes a carrier under this proposed law.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I understood when this amendment was introduced and from the remarks that were made by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KITTREDGE] on Friday that it was intended simply to bring these private car lines under the control of the Interstate Commerce Commission; that it was not intended in any way to make a shipper, who leased a car for his own private purpose, a common carrier; nor can I understand that any court could possibly give that construction so as to make a common carrier of a single individual shipping only his own goods in a leased car. But in order to make that absolutely certain, so that there may be no question regarding it, I desire simply to suggest to the Senator from South Dakota that he add after the word "carrying," in line 2 of his amendment, the words "for the public;" so that it would read:

Companies or persons owning, leasing, managing, or operating cars used in the business of carrying for the public any kind of property, including live stock, though such cars run upon railroads not owned, leased, managed, or operated by such companies or persons, shall be deemed to be carriers engaged in the transportation of property by railroad within the meaning of this act.

That would make it, then, susceptible only to the construction that is contended for by the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. KITTREDGE. Mr. President, if it be permissible for me to do so, I gladly accept that amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator can so modify his amendment, if he desires.

Mr. KITTREDGE. Then, I will modify the amendment in that way.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the modification of the amendment.

The SECRETARY. In line 2, of the proposed amendment, after the word "carrying," it is modified by adding the words "for the public."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be agreed to.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, I desire to ask either the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] or the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER] a question; but I will first ask the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KITTREDGE], Does the bill as it stands, in case the present amendment should not be adopted, permit the railroad company to make its contract with the private car line and include the charge of the private car line within the charge that the railroad company makes to the shipper?

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, unless the language on pages 2 and 3, where the terms "railroad" and "transportation" are defined, is twisted out of its ordinary interpretation, it looks to me as if those two words as defined there embrace everything that could be utilized or would be required in carrying either passengers or freight.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Then, as the bill stands as amended, the shipper will have to deal with one carrier, and not with two carriers?

Mr. TILLMAN. That is as I understand it. The Interstate Commerce Commission would have to deal with the railroad alone; it does not matter whose car it uses or what sort of a car it may be.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly; but whatever charges the railroad company makes, the private car line must be included in the toll which it charges the shipper; so that the shipper will have to deal with only one common carrier.

Mr. TILLMAN. I do not think the Commission would have anything to do with the charge for the facilities of transportation or with what contract it might have with this person. He having secured cars for the transportation of stock or fruit from whatever source, then the railroad alone is amenable to the authority, order, and supervision in fixing the rate by the Commission. That would be my judgment of this language.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. My question has nothing to do with the Commission. As I look at the amendment which is proposed and at the bill as it has been explained to the Senate by those on both sides who stand sponsor for it, the bill as it now stands, without this amendment, provides that the shipper shall deal with one carrier and pay one toll, whereas if the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota be adopted, the shipper must deal with two carriers and pay two tolls.

Mr. TILLMAN. To which I object.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. If that is correct—and that is the purpose of my question to the Senator from South Carolina and to the Senator from South Dakota—then I can not see the wisdom of the proposed amendment; and it was in order to bring the matter clearly before the Senate that I ventured to propound the question to both Senators.

Mr. TILLMAN. In my judgment, the amendment is entirely unnecessary.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I can see the very serious possible objection of compelling a shipper to deal with two common carriers where he might deal with but one and to pay two charges where he might pay but one.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will again call the attention of Senators to the rule under which the Senate is now proceeding, which forbids Senators from speaking more than once upon an amendment.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, the time that I have been addressing the Senate has been within the fifteen minutes; but I will ask the Chair, under the rule, whether or not I have the right to dispose of that fifteen minutes either by speaking continuously or by asking other Senators questions?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that the rule is clear—that there can be but one speech by each Senator on an amendment, and that not exceeding fifteen minutes.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. "Not exceeding." I have not——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair had no reference to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Oh, well, I think it wise, so far as that is concerned, if the Chair will permit me, that that be determined at this early stage of the discussion, because if a Senator feels that he can better use his fifteen minutes by asking other Senators questions or by addressing the Senate, I wish to know if he would have the right to occupy the floor in that way for that time.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, it is well known that many of the worst cases of personal discriminations and rebates occur in connection with private car lines; many of the worst abuses have arisen through such lines. If they can be reached through this bill, certainly that is greatly to be desired. But the point I am trying to get at is whether we can hold the railroads responsible for discriminations made by the private car lines? If we can not, then the bill, so far as private car line discriminations go, is worthless.

Mr. TILLMAN. If the Senator from Massachusetts will continue to occupy the floor so that I shall not be ruled out of order, I wish to make a suggestion.

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. TILLMAN. So as to set this matter absolutely at rest, and make it impossible for anyone to construe this language otherwise than as I have just interpreted it, I would suggest to insert, on page 2——

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. LODGE. I have just yielded to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. TILLMAN. On page 2 of the bill, line 21, after the word "railroad," if we insert the words "or cars," we would then include in the definition of the word "railroad" the cars, so that there could be no possibility of the private ownership of the car exempting the carrier from the control of the Commission.

Mr. LODGE. That is what I want to get at—the proper control over the private car lines by the Commission.

Mr. TILLMAN. I will move, then, to insert those words.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly, I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. KNOX. If the Senator from South Carolina will permit me just a moment, I think he has properly construed this bill. When you come to look at the proposed amendment it only has one purpose, and that is to declare, as will be seen if the amendment be examined carefully on the fifth line, that the persons owning or leasing or managing cars shall be deemed carriers. For what purpose? The next line answers that question. They are to be deemed carriers "within the meaning of this act." Why are they to be deemed carriers "within the meaning of this act?" To give the Interstate Commerce Commission jurisdiction over them. If you will take the bill as the Senator from South Carolina called attention to it a moment ago, you will find that under the definition of transportation that is all provided for. Assuming that they are not carriers and assuming that they are not now within the jurisdiction of the interstate-commerce act, what are they? They are facilities and instrumentalities of commerce. That is what they are as a fact, and that, of course, no one can question. They are facilities and instrumentalities of commerce—they are cars. The pending bill says that all instrumentalities and all facilities of every kind used or necessary in the transportation of persons or property shall be within the meaning of this act, and then, in order "to make assurance double sure," they bring it in under the title of "transportation," and say that "transportation shall include cars and other vehicles." I therefore think it is wholly unnecessary to adopt the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. CULLOM. May I ask the Senator a question?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts has the floor. Does he yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. LODGE. I believe I have the floor; but I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CULLOM. I did not know the Senator from Massachusetts had the floor. The question I want to ask is, whether, in view of the provision on the second page of the bill, the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota is necessary at all?

Mr. KNOX. In my judgment, it is wholly unnecessary.

Mr. CULLOM. That is what I thought.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I have received the answer I desired to receive—that the amendment is unnecessary.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KITTREDGE].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. FORAKER. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to be added at the end of section 1.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the first section it is proposed to add the following:

That no carrier engaged in interstate commerce shall, directly or indirectly, by any special rate, rebate, drawback, or other device, charge, demand, collect, or receive from any person a greater or less compensation for interstate transportation of passengers than it charges, demands, collects, or receives from any other person for the same or equally good accommodations and a like and equally good service. And any carrier violating this provision shall be deemed guilty of unjust discrimination and shall for each offense pay to the United States a penalty of not less than one hundred nor more than two thousand dollars: Provided, That nothing herein shall prevent the free carriage of destitute or indigent persons, or the issuance of mileage or excursion passenger tickets, or prevent such carriers from giving free or reduced transportation to ministers of religion, or to the inmates of hospitals, eleemosynary and charitable institutions, or to prevent any such carrier from giving free transportation to officers, agents, employees, attorneys, stockholders, or directors of carrier companies, or to the families of the same.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator from Ohio inform us on what page of the bound copy of the amendments his amendment is to be found?

Mr. FORAKER. On page 163.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, I suggest to the Senator from Ohio—in fact, I move it as an amendment—that after the word "drawback," in line 3, the word "pass" be inserted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend the amendment after the word "drawback," in lines 2 and 3, by inserting the word "pass."

Mr. FORAKER. I accept that amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NELSON obtained the floor.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President——

Mr. NELSON. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, inasmuch as we have all the proposed amendments to the bill, or are supposed to have them all, before us, printed in bound form, I think when a Senator submits an amendment he should tell us on what page it is to be found.

Mr. FORAKER. I did announce the page.

Mr. TELLER. I know the Senator did, but owing to the confusion nobody in this part of the Chamber could hear what he said.

Mr. FORAKER. My amendment is to be found at page 163 of the amendments as printed and bound together.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, it has been the custom of the railways in the agricultural Northwest in the months of July and August, during harvest time, to make special rates for laborers to take them to the farmers' fields. That custom has been absolutely necessary for the people of the Northwest in order to get the laborers there at all. This amendment proposes to cut that off entirely, and the only way under it by which we could get the laborers would be the old-fashioned method of travel by the tramps before they found work to do, the method that was so much in vogue between 1893 and 1896.

Mr. GALLINGER. 1897.

Mr. McCUMBER. The amendment, if it is incorporated in the bill in its present form, will do almost untold and inestimable damage to the farmers of my section of the country and of the northwestern section of the United States generally.

I do not know whether the same system prevails in reference to the shipment of laborers to the mines in other sections of the Northwest. I know it does prevail in my section of the country, and I do not think the Senator could do any greater damage to that section of the United States than to provide that the railways shall make no provision whatever for the transportation of laborers for our farmers during the very busy season.

The farmers' whole crop is harvested from the 25th day of July to about the 1st day of October. If he is going to have laborers there at all, then some provision must be made. I believe the usual method has been that the railway gives a special rate and requires the laborer to bring a certificate of the farmer for whom he has worked, showing he has given at least so many days' labor, and then he is returned home for about one-fifth of the regular rate of fare.

There are so many of these exigencies that have to be met that it seems to me it would be dangerous to tie up a railroad so that it could not meet these exigencies, not only in farming operations, but in many others, such as mining, irrigation work, and railroad work. There are thousands of other cases which might possibly be mentioned in which it would be proper for the railroads to give reduced rates where it would be just as important as it would be to give the reduced rates to ministers of religion, etc.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President, I wish to state to my colleague that in all probability the language to be found on the second page of the proposed amendment will be construed so as to exempt the class to which he refers. I call his attention to lines 2 and 3, where are found the words "or the issuance of mileage or excursion passenger tickets." I am inclined to think, although I would not put my opinion against that of the Senator from Ohio, or that of my colleague, that the class to which my colleague refers would come in under the terms of that provision in the amendment.

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not consider that they would come in under the provision "inmates of hospitals, eleemosynary and charitable institutions," or under "excursions," either. Making reduced rates for a laborer is not an excursion. It is not all done in one car or on a special train. The laborer is given those rates for a certain length of time; and that is not all, I want to say to my colleague. Special rates are given to land seekers during certain months. They ride on any train they desire. Tickets are good for a certain length of time. They are all cut out under the provisions of this amendment, and I do not believe it could be amended in such form as to except them.

Mr. BAILEY. Will the Senator from North Dakota allow me to ask him a question? I take it that the purpose of inserting the words "the same or equally good accommodations" is to include just such a case as he recites.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. In what part of the amendment is that?

Mr. BAILEY. In lines 6 and 7.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I see.

Mr. BAILEY. When they carry home seekers they generally have a particular car——

Mr. McCUMBER. That is not true.

Mr. BAILEY. That may not be true in the Senator's section.

Mr. McCUMBER. It may be in certain sections.

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator was a little too hasty.

Mr. McCUMBER. They do not carry home seekers in box cars.

Mr. BAILEY. It may not be true of the Senator's State, but he did not make any qualification until I called his attention to it. They come with sleeping-car accommodations. They have reduced rates. I want to know if that is the purpose for which the words are to be inserted?

Mr. FORAKER. If I can answer——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield.

Mr. FORAKER. If I can answer without exhausting my right under the rule to speak——

Mr. McCUMBER. I concede that the Senator is speaking in my time. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. FORAKER. I first introduced the amendment some time in March, I think. Then I reintroduced it April 12, explaining at the time when I introduced it that I had made that change, and the words are printed in italics only because they are an amendment of the amendment as originally introduced. The purpose is simply to secure to all who pay the same compensation the same kind of treatment.

Mr. McCUMBER. That, it seems to me, would strike the cars in Virginia and in Maryland which are used to carry colored people only. If they pay the same price, they should have the same accommodations.

Mr. FORAKER. I do not want to speak, except in your time.

Mr. McCUMBER. That will be the effect of it.

Mr. FORAKER. The man who pays $10 to ride from A to B, no matter what his color may be, is entitled to the same kind of accommodations and the same kind of service that any other man is who pays $10.

Mr. McCUMBER. I agree with the Senator. He is entitled to the same accommodations.

Mr. FORAKER. That any other man is who pays the same sum.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I wish to make a suggestion in the line of the suggestion made by the Senator from North Dakota in reference to the influx of men into the harvest fields of the West at certain seasons of the year. In my part of the country we have workingmen's trains, and the workingmen, at certain hours of the day, are carried at a less rate than the ordinary passenger. While I have not examined this amendment so as to satisfy myself entirely that it would interfere with that arrangement, I wish to suggest in this debate that if it does so interfere, it will be a very great hardship that ought not to be imposed upon the workingmen of the country.

Mr. McCUMBER. There can be no possible doubt that it does.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. FORAKER. If the Senator will allow me, I was occupied in answering a question and I did not hear what the Senator from New Hampshire said.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say to the Senator that I suggested that in certain sections of the country, New England notably, we have trains for workingmen, and the workingmen are carried during certain hours of the day at a less rate than is the ordinary passenger; and that if the amendment in any way interferes with this arrangement it would be a very great hardship to the workingmen of New England and ought not to be put in the bill.

Mr. FORAKER. I do not want to interfere with that arrangement, and I suppose the issuance of mileage or excursion tickets would cover that. If the Senator thinks differently, I will be very glad to consider any amendment he may suggest.

Mr. McCUMBER. This amendment provides:

> That no carrier engaged in interstate commerce shall, directly or indirectly, by any special rate, rebate, drawback, or other device, charge, demand, collect, or receive from any person a greater or less compensation for interstate transportation of passengers than it charges, demands, collects, or receives from any other person for the same or equally good accommodations and a like and equally good service.

Now, the only latitude there is that for second or third class accommodations they might charge less. That is the only meaning that could possibly be given to the amendment of the Senator. Now, what are the exceptions to this? The exceptions are—

> The free carriage of destitute or indigent persons or the issuance of mileage or excursion passenger tickets."

The exception certainly does not apply to either the laborer or the farmer who is looking for land in the Northwest, and who now receives especially low rates.

The amendment proceeds:

> That nothing herein shall prevent the free carriage of destitute or indigent persons, or the issuance of mileage or excursion passenger tickets, or prevent such carriers from giving free or reduced transportation to ministers of religion, or to the inmates of hospitals, eleemosynary and charitable institutions, or to prevent any such carrier from giving free transportation to any of its officers.

Those are the exceptions, and anyone can see from the reading of the amendment that it would absolutely cut off all of the special privileges for farmers and laborers, both in mines and in public works, or works that are of importance at certain seasons of the year, where without making those concessions it would be impossible to secure the laborers.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. On Friday I was recognized by the presiding officer to offer some amendments. Among others I had prepared an amendment to this provision of the bill. The RECORD failed to note the recognition and the offer which I made, and my amendments were not printed. I would ask that this provision be passed for the time being that I may have the opportunity to present the amendment which I wish to offer.

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not understand that under the rule it can be passed. However, so far as I am concerned—it is not my amendment—I have no objection.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. NELSON. Oh, no. I rise in my own time.

Mr. McCUMBER. Very well. I yield the floor, then.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I made a request which I should like to have submitted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Will the Senator kindly restate his request?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It is that this provision of the bill may be passed for to-day, in order that I may have an opportunity to present the amendment I have prepared.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is of opinion that that is not practicable under the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. CULLOM. If I may be allowed to make a suggestion, the Senator from Wisconsin states that he attempted to offer an amendment to this section and failed to be recognized for want of being noticed when he was upon the floor; otherwise his amendment would have been presented and printed. I think under those circumstances——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I beg the Senator's pardon. I was recognized by the Chair and offered my amendment, but the RECORD failed to note the fact, and for that reason the amendment could not be printed as other amendments have been.

Mr. CULLOM. I am pleading for the Senator to have an opportunity.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I understand that; but I wish to have the facts stated correctly.

Mr. CULLOM. I supposed the Senator was not recognized, and that is the reason why the amendment had not been printed. I think under the circumstances this section ought to be passed over.

Mr. ALDRICH. I would suggest if the Senator from Wisconsin has the text of his amendment here he can offer it now.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I have no doubt of that. I thank the Senator for his suggestion; but I want the amendment printed and put upon the desks of Senators, so that it may be examined as other amendments are.

Mr. BAILEY. I suggest, as a matter of order, although this is a unanimous-consent agreement, it is still in order for the Senate, by unanimous consent, to modify it. I would not think that the Senate could bind itself by one unanimous-consent agreement to the extent that it could not modify that unanimous-consent agreement. My understanding is that the Senator from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that this section may be passed, so that he may have an opportunity to present his amendment, and so that Senators may have that amendment before them before they are required to vote upon it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I did make that request, and I understood the Chair to rule that it was inadmissible even to make the request.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair did not understand the Senator.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I asked that it might be passed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair did not understand the Senator. Did the Senator ask the Chair that it be passed, or did he ask the unanimous consent of the Senate that the order under which the Senate is proceeding should be modified?

Mr. BAILEY. To that extent, as I understand.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If that is the request of the Senator from Wisconsin, of course it is always competent for the Senate, by unanimous consent, to modify a unanimous-consent agreement, but it is not usual.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, that might involve very serious consequences. If a unanimous-consent agreement can be modified by unanimous consent, it can be destroyed by unanimous consent. I do not think the Senator here in this case needs to ask that the rule be modified by unanimous consent, but simply as a matter of procedure that the amendment may be passed over.

Mr. BAILEY. But the Senator from Maine will readily see that the Senate has it within its own power to protect itself against the destruction of any agreement. I suggest this to the Senator: Suppose we had reached a point where some peculiar and exceptional state of facts had arisen and the Senate had made a unanimous-consent agreement, thus putting it beyond its power to modify it. We might find ourselves very seriously embarrassed. Suppose a Senator desired to offer a particular amendment not at the place in the bill which the Senate then had under consideration, and that for some reason peculiar to him or peculiar to the public service it was desirable to consider and dispose of that amendment right there, and that every Senator in the body recognized the necessity or the propriety of such a disposition. Surely there could be no danger in allowing the Chair to submit to the Senate a request for unanimous consent, because to be effective every Senator must agree to it.

Mr. HALE. My idea of the rule is that in matters such as have come up now and such as have been stated by the Senator from Texas, it does not require a modification of the agreement. The proceedings, points of order, and things of that kind go on without regard to the agreement. They are not an infringement of the agreement, and if it is sought to pass an amendment by for the present, it is not intended that the agreement shall cover that. But it is intended to cover all the essential things in relation to the debate and the consideration of amendments. But the other things, I think, can be safely left to the Chair to settle without asking that the agreement be modified.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Does the Chair hold that the request of the Senator from Wisconsin for unanimous consent that his amendment may be offered to-morrow is in order under the agreement? I trust, if so, unanimous consent will be given.

But I desire to ask the Chair at this point a parliamentary question. Under the agreement, if a section is passed and adopted in Committee of the Whole, and thereafter at any time before the bill goes into the Senate any Senator desires to offer an amendment to that section, is he precluded from doing so?

Mr. GALLINGER. He can offer it in the Senate.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I want to know about the construction of the agreement. After a section of the bill has been passed in Committee of the Whole, if thereafter some Senator wants to offer an amendment in Committee of the Whole, is he, under the unanimous-consent agreement, precluded from doing so?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair would think that under a strict construction of the unanimous-consent agreement an amendment would not be in order after a particular section had been under consideration and had been amended.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Does the Chair hold—of course it is not necessary to ask the question—that when the bill is in the Senate any and every section is open to amendment?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is open to any amendment, under the rule.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I have not finished. When the bill is in the Senate and a new amendment is proposed, does the Chair hold that under the agreement of the Senate it is then subject to debate under the fifteen-minute rule?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will not rule upon questions that may arise——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Oh!

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the future.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I did not mean to embarrass the Chair, but I saw that a very serious predicament might arise by the situation that now confronts the Senate, and in order that we might all be advised in advance as to what every Senator could do and what his rights were, so that at the end he would not be precluded from offering or discussing an amendment, and that he might be on his guard, I thought it advisable that the Senate should know what the unanimous-consent agreement meant.

Mr. HALE. I should not for a moment suppose that the agreement interfered in the slightest degree with the general procedure in the Senate as to the relation between the Committee of the Whole and the Senate; that when the bill is reported to the Senate it is subject to the general rules of the Senate. Any subject may be then considered. But when you come to the question of debate and the time that shall be used, then the agreement is in force. But it does not uproot and destroy the general rules of the Senate.

Mr. SPOONER. I think the ruling of the Chair is entirely correct; and in so far as it was a unanimous-consent agreement, it does uproot some of the rules of the Senate by unanimous consent. It seems to be the obvious purpose of the unanimous-consent agreement that when a section is reached it shall be amended, so far as it is in the power of the Committee of the Whole to amend it, and then we pass to the next section. The sections are to be taken up in their order. Of course after the Senate, sitting as a Committee of the Whole, has amended these sections they are all open in the Senate to unlimited amendment. But it seems to me very clearly that the unanimous-consent agreement precludes the idea that upon request sections are to be passed, and I think if we begin that (because similar requests will be made as to other sections) we will defeat practically the purpose which was sought to be accomplished by the unanimous-consent agreement. I think the ruling of the Chair is entirely correct.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. May I ask a question——

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I am inclined to agree with the statement just made by the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER], unless by implication he intends still further than I do agree. I do not understand that under this agreement, after Senators have discussed certain amendments offered to the first section, for instance, and no other amendment then being offered to the first section, the Senate passes to the consideration of the second section, it is impracticable thereafter for anyone to offer an additional amendment to the first section.

Mr. SPOONER. I meant to be understood as expressing the opinion that it is, until the bill gets into the Senate.

Mr. BACON. In that I disagree with the learned Senator. There is nothing in the unanimous-consent agreement to that effect. The consent agreement——

Mr. ALDRICH rose.

Mr. BACON. Does the Senator object to my finishing the sentence?

Mr. ALDRICH. No.

Mr. BACON. I hope he will permit me to do so. I have not stated my proposition.

Mr. ALDRICH. I simply rose. I had not addressed the Chair.

Mr. BACON. The Senator rose, but he looked to me properly as the one who was to give my consent. I had not even stated my proposition.

Mr. ALDRICH. With becoming respect, as I always do.

Mr. BACON. Not only with respect, but in obedience to the rule, which the Senator always observes.

Mr. ALDRICH. I had not addressed the Chair, but I was about to, with the Senator's permission.

Mr. BACON. I have not stated my proposition, but if the Senator wants to interrupt me, I am willing for him to go ahead.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. BACON. I have just stated that I was willing for the Senator to go ahead.

Mr. ALDRICH. I stated distinctly while this matter was under consideration that it should be understood that amendments to any section of the bill would be in order under the rules of the Senate and under the ordinary customs of the Senate from the time it was first taken up until it was passed to a third reading in the Senate; that we could not cut off amendments to any part of the bill.

Mr. BACON. Then I understand the Senator to agree with me.

Mr. ALDRICH. That is what I was about to say.

Mr. BACON. I am sorry I did not know that before. I will conclude, however, by saying that there is nothing in this unanimous-consent agreement which looks to a clôture as to amendments upon any particular section. The sole scope of the unanimous-consent agreement is that amendments when offered can be debated not exceeding fifteen minutes by each Senator, and that when the debate as to that particular amendment is concluded there shall be a vote upon it. That is not the exact language of the agreement. It says "shall be disposed of"—disposed of as the Senate may determine, either by direct vote or upon a motion to lay upon the table.

The point I am after is this: For instance, we are about at the conclusion of the first section. A Senator may have an amendment which he may design to offer to the second section, but upon consideration he may think it better to offer it to the first, and the fact that we have passed from the first to the second section does not, in any manner, it seems to me, preclude the propriety of his thereafter offering the amendment to the first section. It is true that having voted upon a particular amendment which has been disposed of to the first section, that particular amendment can not, in the absence of a motion to reconsider, be again acted upon until we get into the Senate, but as long as we are in Committee of the Whole substantive or independent amendments to any section may be offered at any time. It seems to me that is undoubtedly the correct construction of the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. LODGE. The very point which the Senator is making, which I think is perfectly sound, was stated by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] when we were discussing this agreement:

> The Senator will see that there being sixty or seventy amendments, unless we proceed reasonably in order it will take a long time. Of course a Senator can withhold his amendment until we get through with the reading of the bill for amendment, and amendments can be offered to the bill in the Senate.

Mr. BACON. Yes.

Mr. LODGE. I think the agreement was made with that understanding fully.

Mr. BACON. Not only can it be offered in the Senate, but before we get into the Senate a Senator can offer an amendment to any section which may have been passed over. If we were proceeding upon the idea that as soon as the amendments applying to any particular section had been acted upon the Senate would then vote upon that section, it would preclude any further amendment being offered to the section until we get into the Senate. But there is no such proceeding in contemplation.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I wish merely to ask the Senator a question, as to whether he thinks that when the bill gets into the Senate and an amendment is offered it may be debated under this rule? Of course we all know that any amendment may be offered after we get into the Senate, or that any amendment which has been offered and adopted in Committee of the Whole may be voted on again; but the question I am asking is whether when we get into the Senate and an amendment is offered it may then be debated?

Mr. BACON. In other words, the Senator means to ask whether the debate in Committee of the Whole precludes debate in the Senate?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Precisely so.

Mr. BACON. I should say not. Of course the same rule will obtain in the Senate as obtains in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator thinks we may debate in the Senate?

Mr. LODGE. Of course.

Mr. BACON. I think so, undoubtedly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Under the fifteen-minute rule?

Mr. BACON. Undoubtedly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That is a very important point to be determined at this juncture.

Mr. FORAKER. Regular order, Mr. President.

Mr. BACON. I would say further before yielding the floor that the junior Senator from Wisconsin will have ample opportunity when the bill is the Senate to offer any amendment to this section which he desires to offer.

Mr. GALLINGER. I propose an amendment to the amendment by inserting, after the word "institutions," in line 5, page 164, the words which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire proposes an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio by inserting, on page 2 of the amendment, in line 5, after the word "institutions," the following words:

> Or to laborers, agricultural or otherwise, under rules to be prescribed by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

Mr. FORAKER. I accept that.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio.

Mr. FORAKER. I say I do not object to the amendment offered to the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is agreed to.

Mr. NELSON. I object to the adoption of that amendment to the amendment until I have had something to say on the general proposition.

Mr. BACON. I hope it may be read again in connection with the text.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will again state the amendment.

Mr. BACON. So as to show us the connection.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment as requested.

The SECRETARY. After the word "institutions," in line 5 of the proposed amendment, it is proposed to insert the following:

> Or to laborers, agricultural or otherwise, under rules to be prescribed by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

So that it will, if amended, read:

> Provided, That nothing herein shall prevent the free carriage of destitute or indigent persons, or the issuance of mileage or excursion passenger tickets, or prevent such carriers from giving free or reduced transportation to ministers of religion, or to the inmates of hospitals, eleemosynary and charitable institutions, or to laborers, agricultural or otherwise, under rules to be prescribed by the Interstate Commerce Commission, etc.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I simply desire to say a word. Unless I change my mind I shall vote against the amendment submitted by the Senator from Ohio. But if that amendment is to be made a part of the bill it is very clear to my mind that we ought not to enact legislation which would prevent railroads from giving reduced transportation to the men who go from the East to the West to work in the harvest field—thousands of them every year—or to the workingmen trains that are being run on some of the railroads of the country. So I am very glad the Senator from Ohio is willing to have the amendment I have suggested incorporated in his amendment, which I trust will be done.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to the amendment, to come in after the word "dollars," in line 11.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from North Dakota withhold his amendment until the pending amendment to the amendment is acted upon?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I offer an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is not in order.

Mr. FORAKER. There is an amendment to the amendment pending.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Minnesota objected to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire to the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I understood the Senator from Ohio to accept the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. FORAKER. I announced that I was willing to accept the amendment, but the Senator from Minnesota objected to it.

Mr. NELSON. I objected to it.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I did not hear the Senator from Minnesota make his objection. I will withhold my amendment to the amendment until the proper time.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the vice of the amendment of the Senator from Ohio. It has not been really touched upon by the Senator from South Dakota or anyone else in this discussion. If you will read the first of the amendment you will see that it confounds interstate and local traffic, and it amounts to this: That a carrier can charge neither more nor less for an interstate rate of passengers that it can for the local rate. In line 4 you will find, commencing in line 1, that—

> No carrier engaged in interstate commerce shall, directly or indirectly, by any special rate, rebate, drawback, or other device, charge, demand, collect, or receive from any person a greater or less compensation for interstate transportation of passengers than it charges, demands, collects, or receives from any other person for a like and equally good service.

Now, taking that whole proposition together it amounts to this: That they can not charge more for passengers carried as interstate passengers than they can charge for passengers carried at local rates. Whatever local rate is paid, for instance, in the State of Minnesota by passengers, that same rate must be charged for passengers going from Minnesota to New York.

We all know, as a matter of fact, that for long distances railroads charge much lower rates than they do for mere local rates. This is, in fact, putting the two on a par, so that the railroads can charge absolutely as much for interstate traffic as for local traffic, and indirectly it reduces it to a mileage basis, because it is proposed to say, "If you charge only 3 cents a mile for local passenger rates, you can not charge any less than 3 cents a mile for interstate passenger rates," and that is the whole milk in the cocoanut. I do not care about taking up more of the time of the Senate. Anyone who will inspect the amendment will see that it has that effect.

Mr. FORAKER. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly.

Mr. FORAKER. If I understand the Senator correctly, his point is one that never occurred to me in connection with my amendment. I should like to have him suggest what words would change that.

Mr. NELSON. The very best way is to leave the amendment out.

Mr. FORAKER. We can find plenty of people who are willing to leave out all provision about prohibiting passes, but in some form or other we will have it presented, so that there will be a vote on it any way.

Mr. NELSON. This amendment does not relate to passes at all. That is a distinct question. What I insist is that it puts interstate passenger rates and local passenger rates on exactly the same level, on practically a mileage basis, by which the railroads can charge just as much for the long transportation from St. Paul to New York as they do from St. Paul to my own home 140 miles from St. Paul. It is putting the two rates on an exact level.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, the language employed, if I may address the Senate at this time, does not admit of any such construction, in my judgment. What the Senator has discovered is entirely new. I am sure it has not occurred to any other member of this body. I have not heard of such a thing being suggested before. I should like to have any man look at that language and tell me how it admits of any such construction.

The provision applies simply to interstate transportation, and it says that no person shall be charged more or charged less than every other person is charged. That language was not new with me. I copied it out of the law as it now stands in that respect. The only trouble with the law as it now stands, and this is the law as it now stands precisely in that particular, is that it provides no penalty. Now, I have added a penalty. The law is good enough as it is already on the statute books to prohibit the giving of passes if there were only a penalty attached.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.

Mr. DOLLIVER. If I am not greatly mistaken, section 10 of the interstate-commerce act, amended March 2, 1889, provides a rather more severe penalty than the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. FORAKER. I do not know about that section. I do not know of any section which provides a penalty for this offense.

Mr. President, I had just two purposes in view in offering this amendment. One is to prohibit the granting of passes with respect to the interstate transportation of passengers. I wanted to put the language in such a form that there could not be any question about it. Then I wanted to provide a penalty that would secure its enforcement. There being no penalty, passes are granted and they have been ever since 1887, and most of us perhaps have accepted them. I have. I have used them; but I have not used any for a considerable time. That is a fault we have all, or at least most of us have, been open to criticism for. But the time has come when we ought to break up that practice. That is universally recognized. You can not break it up unless you provide a penalty, and that I have provided for. If it is not severe enough, make it more severe.

But I had another purpose in view, Mr. President. When we are not making rates, but the railroads are making them, we can stand by and see a great many things done which we can not afford to do. We can acquiesce in them; but when we undertake to make rates, when we put the Government into that business, the Government becomes responsible for the rates that are made and for the treatment of the passengers who pay those rates.

My purpose was, avoiding, if possible, all question about the so-called "Jim Crow cars," to simply put in the law a provision that there should be equal treatment of all passengers who pay the same compensation for being transported.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.

Mr. HOPKINS. I wish to suggest the condition of affairs in Chicago.

Mr. FORAKER. I do not want to lose my time.

Mr. HOPKINS. All right; I will wait until after the Senator concludes.

Mr. FORAKER. In other words, Mr. President, the man who pays a fare, who is charged, for instance, the regular fare from Washington to Richmond or to Mobile, should have precisely as good accommodations without regard to whether he is white or black as any other man who pays it. That is all there is in it. We should put in this law something on which the Commission can stand to enforce equality of treatment in the carriage of passengers, if we are to undertake to become responsible therefor.

The provision I have offered avoids all question about the right to separate passengers by having separate coaches, and the law I have provided, if it should be adopted, is less stringent in that respect then the laws of some of the Southern States. Take the State of Georgia, for instance. I have before me their statute on that subject. They provide as follows:

> The different railroads in this State, acting as public carriers, are required to furnish equal accommodations to all, without regard to race, color, or previous condition.

I say nothing about race, color, or previous condition, but I do say there shall be equal treatment; and I want to know whether any man who believes in equality of treatment will vote against putting in this bill a provision to that effect, especially if it does not conflict with the laws of the different States in that respect. You can do as you like about separating, but there should be an equality of treatment so far as the facilities of travel are concerned and so far as the accommodations are concerned.

That is what I have in mind along with the prohibition of passes. When the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] says that the milk of the cocoanut is to give to the railroads some advantage, the Senator from Minnesota speaks without any warrant whatever so far as anything in my mind was concerned. If there is anything in the language that has been employed which admits of that construction, I hope the Senator will tell me how to correct it, and I will be obliged to him.

Mr. NELSON. I charged the Senator with nothing at all, and he knows it. I stated what the construction of the bill was bound to be.

Mr. FORAKER. I did not say the Senator had charged me with anything.

Mr. NELSON. I do not want him to try and make a personal matter out of it. I gave him no occasion for it.

Mr. ELKINS. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. FORAKER. I ask the Senator to wait until I answer the Senator from Minnesota. I did not say that the Senator from Minnesota had charged me with anything; but I said, when the Senator said the milk in the cocoanut was to try to give the railroads more advantage, he spoke without warrant, so far as anything in my mind was concerned and so far as anything in the language could be construed of which I have any knowledge. If the Senator will tell me how to correct the language so as to accomplish, to his satisfaction, the purpose I have in view by prohibiting the granting of passes and securing equality of treatment to all who travel and who pay the same for their travel I will be very greatly obliged. I am not here to higgle over language, and I have no purposes whatever, except those which I have expressed.

Mr. ELKINS. In reference to providing a penalty, in section 10, if the Senator has examined that act, he will find that provision is made for a penalty. I think that section 10, as amended by the act of March 2, 1889, provides for a penalty for everything that may be prescribed to be done or omitted to be done under any act regulating interstate commerce.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Will the Senator read that portion of the section with reference to passes?

Mr. FORAKER. There is not a word in it about passes.

Mr. ELKINS. But the Senator in his amendment has prescribed a penalty for passes. Now, I will read section 10, if the Senator will allow me:

That any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act, or, whenever such common carrier is a corporation, any director or officer thereof, or any receiver, trustee, lessee, agent, or person, acting for or employed by such corporation, who, alone or with any other corporation, company, person, or party, shall willfully do or cause to be done, or shall willingly suffer or permit to be done, any act, matter, or thing in this act prohibited or declared to be unlawful, or who shall aid or abet therein——

Mr. FORAKER. The Senator is talking in my time. I would not care if it had any pertinency to this, but the Senator will allow me to say, respectfully, I do not think it has. It does not cover the case. I was not unmindful of that provision. I thought when the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER] spoke about it a moment ago he referred to something I had overlooked. I am perfectly familiar with that. It is one of those general provisions for penalty for any violation of the general act. I want to amend that special provision with respect to this subject, and the amendment I have offered fits the case, unless it is open to the suggestion made by the Senator from Minnesota. I do not see how it can be, but I have so much respect for his judgment I would be glad if he would aid me to correct the language if it needs correction.

My sole purpose is, and I think it ought to be put in here without any doubt, to further prohibit the giving of passes, except only in the excepted classes and under the conditions which were suggested by the Senator from New Hampshire, that may be prescribed by the Interstate Commerce Commission. And I think we ought to put in the bill a provision that there shall be equal treatment of all who travel and pay the same fare.

Mr. CULBERSON. I desire to ask if a substitute for the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio is in order at this time. I understood that the several amendments proposed to the amendment had been accepted. If that be true, I take it that a substitute is in order.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Not now.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is of the opinion that the amendment is not now in order.

Mr. LODGE. The amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire to the amendment is pending.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. GALLINGER. I should like to have the amendment to the amendment acted upon.

Mr. CULBERSON. I understood that the amendments suggested by the Senator from New Hampshire and by one of the other Senators, probably the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH], were accepted by the Senator from Ohio. If so, the amendment would be thereby perfected, and a substitute would be in order now.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. When the amendments now offered to the amendment have been acted upon the Chair will recognize the Senator from Texas. There was a request made that the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire to the amendment should be again stated.

Mr. FORAKER. I announced that I would accept the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire, and I understood the Senator from Minnesota to object to it. But he informs me that he has no objection, and if I may, I accept it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio has that privilege.

Mr. FORAKER. I accept the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire to my amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Then the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH] to the amendment is in order.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I offer an amendment to the amendment, to come in after the word "dollars," line 10, page 1, of the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Dakota to the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio.

The SECRETARY. After the word "dollars," page 1, line 10, of the proposed amendment, insert:

That it shall be unlawful for any Senator or Representative, or officer, agent, or other employee of the Government to solicit, accept, or use for himself or for others free railway transportation over any railway engaged in interstate commerce, and any person violating this provision shall forfeit the position he or she holds under the Government: Provided, That clerks to committees of the Senate and House of Representatives and clerks to Senators and Members shall be entitled to receive, upon proper vouchers, an amount equal to the sum necessary to pay their actual transportation expenses to and from the national capital once each year.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I am willing to accept so much of that amendment as makes the provision applicable to Senators and Representatives in Congress and other officers of the Government. I think it already applies to all such without it.

Mr. LODGE. I only want to say, as to the acceptance of the amendment, that I wish to vote on it. I object to the proviso very strongly.

Mr. FORAKER. I have not accepted the amendment as a whole. I announced that I would accept it to that extent. The Senator may change it if he sees fit.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I did not hear the Senator distinctly.

Mr. FORAKER. I accept the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota that he had read at the desk a moment ago, in so far as it relates to Senators and Representatives in Congress.

Mr. GALLINGER. Does the Senator agree to the provision that the asking of a pass for some poor person on the part of a Senator would disqualify him for continuing in the office of Senator?

Mr. FORAKER. No, sir; I do not.

Mr. GALLINGER. I should hope not.

Mr. FORAKER. I do not think that that is proper.

Mr. LODGE. The proviso is that we shall have the right to get free transportation for our clerks.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President, so far as the proviso is concerned, I wish to say that while I make no charge whatever against any clerk or employee about the Senate or the other branch of Congress, it has come to my attention that clerks have extended favors in lieu of passes given by railroad companies, and it seemed to me this was the only way that this condition of affairs could be obviated.

Mr. HALE. If the facts are as stated by the Senator in any given case of that kind, it is high time that that clerk should cease to be a clerk.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I say I do not make any general charge, nor do I refer to any individual clerk, but there is no doubt but that incidents of that kind have occurred about this Capitol, and I do not see any other way to avoid it. If the Senator can propose any measure here that will avoid it, I shall be perfectly willing to accept it.

Mr. HALE. I take it, if the Senator will allow me, that the objection is to the entire clause. It recognizes that these clerks should receive favors from railroads and that they should have substituted allowances in place of paying their fare.

Mr. President, if it has come to the pass that clerks of this body, clerks of Senators, or clerks of the House are receiving favors from railroads in the way of passes and are soliciting these favors, or accepting them without solicitation, it is high time that that should cease entirely.

The proviso of the amendment to the amendment recognizes that situation and acknowledges it as an existing fact. I trust the Senate will not by any means pass the provision.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I do not agree with the Senator that the proviso recognizes anything of the kind. If he will pardon me, I disagree with him on that point. We are proposing to extend to clerks by this proviso the same privilege that is now extended to Senators and Members by paying the mileage of Senators and Members to and from their homes once a year. A clerk is an officer of the Government or an officer of the Senate as much so as a Senator is, and he is entitled to receive mileage. I think it would be a good idea to prohibit him from accepting passes at the same time that we are prohibiting Senators from accepting passes, and to pay them both the legitimate mileage which belongs to them. That is all there is to the proviso.

Mr. HALE. Does the Senator think that the mileage provision which applies to Senators and Members ought to apply to clerks?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. If the Senator will examine the provision he will see it provides that the clerks shall receive the actual expenses of traveling to and from the capital once a year.

Mr. HALE. In other words, it is an enlargement of the privilege of mileage, which is now and always has been confined to Senators and Members. It extends it to their clerks. Does the Senator propose to do that?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. The amendment proposes to do it.

Mr. HALE. Does the Senator think that that would be a good thing?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. What serious objection does the Senator from Maine find to it?

Mr. HALE. Then why not extend it to messengers?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. HALE. And to janitors?

Mr. GALLINGER. And pages?

Mr. HALE. And to the roll of employees, and to the stenographers? Why not extend it to all officials about the Senate?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I have no objection to that.

Mr. HALE. I have had an old-fashioned idea that it was intended to follow the representation in the two bodies—the Senator and the Representative—and that it never would be agitated or supposed that this mileage allowance should be extended to the minor officers. If the Senator believes that is a good thing, let him test the Senate on the proposition.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Certainly; I am perfectly willing to test the Senate on it. I offer the suggestion so that the clerks may be as independent as Senators and Members should be.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Is the amendment now open to amendment?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is not. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Dakota to the amendment of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Immediately after action upon the amendment to the amendment I assume the amendment will be open to amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, it seems to me that we are inclined to run wild on this question of dealing with men in public life. Why it is necessary to single out Senators and Representatives in Congress in the amendment and put them under the ban when we are under the ban if the amendment passes as proposed by the Senator from Ohio, surpasses my comprehension. If we are going to do it, let us include the judges of the courts and all other men in official position.

I shall vote against it, not because I have any objection myself to being denied the privilege of asking or receiving a pass by an interstate railroad, but I do object to it because of the fact that it is invidious distinction which, to my mind, is utterly nonsensical and unnecessary.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. President, it is very certain that the pass has become an evil and an abuse in our transportation system, and I cordially concur with the Senator from Ohio in his anxiety to abolish it. But I am not able to discover any more efficiency in the provision of the amendment which he has submitted than there is or ought to be in the law which was passed over twenty years ago. The older members of the Senate tell me that it was well understood in 1887 that the pass had been abolished, and for many months—I think I may say for years—after the enactment of the interstate-commerce law the pass disappeared in our transportation system.

In order to show that the present interstate-commerce law contains every provision that is contained in the amendment of the Senator from Ohio it is only necessary to read section 3, which provides that—

> It shall be unlawful for any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act to make or give any undue or unreasonable preference or advantage to any particular person, company, firm, corporation, or locality, or any particular description of traffic, in any respect whatsoever, or to subject any particular person, company, firm, corporation, or locality, or any particular description of traffic, to any undue or unreasonable prejudice or disadvantage in any respect whatsoever.

The theory of the present interstate-commerce law is that the rate or fare of the railroads shall be published, and a whole section of the present law is devoted to the publication of the rate. In the sixth section occurs this language:

> And when any such common carrier shall have established and published its rates, fares, and charges in compliance with the provisions of this section, it shall be unlawful for such common carrier to charge, demand, collect, or receive from any person or persons a greater or less compensation for the transportation of passengers or property, or for any services in connection therewith, than is specified in such published schedule of rates, fares, and charges as may at the time be in force.

The Senate will observe therefore that in 1887 the very same care was taken, almost in the same language, to guard against the free railroad pass as appears to be taken in the honorable Senator's proposal.

Mr. FORAKER. The act does not mention the pass.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I do not notice the word "pass" in the amendment.

Mr. FORAKER. I accepted that amendment to the amendment.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I will offer an amendment with the word "pass" in it.

Mr. DOLLIVER. It does not make any particular difference.

Mr. FORAKER. I did not think so, but to make it perfectly clear I accepted the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. DOLLIVER. My honorable friend from Ohio says there is no penalty. I called his attention in an off-hand way to section 10, and I want to read that section to show that the interstate-commerce act now provides a penalty for every violation of that law. Whenever a railroad company does what that law says is unlawful a penalty is provided; and if I have the correct use of language, it is a very much more severe penalty than appears in the Senator's amendment. Section 10 of the interstate-commerce law as amended March 2, 1889, provides that—

> Any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act, or, whenever such common carrier is a corporation, any director or officer thereof, or any receiver, trustee, lessee, agent, or person acting for or employed by such corporation, who, alone or with any other corporation, company, person, or party, shall willfully do or cause to be done, or shall willingly suffer or permit to be done any act, matter, or thing in this act prohibited or declared to be unlawful, or who shall aid or abet therein, or shall willfully omit or fail to do any act, matter, or thing in this act required to be done, or shall cause or willingly suffer or permit any act, matter, or thing so directed or required by this act to be done not to be so done, or shall aid or abet any such omission or failure, or shall be guilty of any infraction of this act, or shall aid or abet therein, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall, upon conviction thereof in any district court of the United States within the jurisdiction of which such offense was committed, be subject to a fine of not to exceed $5,000 for each offense: Provided, That if the offense for which any person shall be convicted as aforesaid shall be an unlawful discrimination in rates, fares, or charges, for the transportation of passengers or property, such person shall, in addition to the fine hereinbefore provided for, be liable to imprisonment in the penitentiary for a term of not exceeding two years, or both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. DOLLIVER. Certainly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I think the Senator will admit that if the language of the act as read covers the position the Senator states it does not do so by construction about which there may be doubt. That being true, what objection has the Senator to putting it in the law in terms about which there may be no doubt?

Mr. DOLLIVER. I was going to suggest that if this amendment is proper—and I certainly sympathize with the notion that everybody in the United States ought to pay the same fare for the same service—I think it would be well to devise, if we are able to do so, some language that would at least be less liable to be misinterpreted than the language of the interstate-commerce act of 1887.

Mr. FORAKER. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that there is nothing in the language of the act of 1887 requiring the furnishing of equally good service and equally good accommodations.

Mr. DOLLIVER. There is something in the act of 1887 that requires passenger and freight rates to be published, and makes a departure from them unlawful. I would suggest, Mr. President——

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. DOLLIVER. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. Does the Senator know of any act now upon the statute book which practically has been construed to prevent the issuance of passes?

Mr. DOLLIVER. I do not know that that act has ever been construed at all in that respect.

Mr. SPOONER. Does the Senator know of any act which has operated to prevent the issuance of passes?

Mr. DOLLIVER. The act has certainly not operated to prevent the issuance of passes.

Mr. SPOONER. I ask whether or not an amendment should be incorporated here which will prevent their issuance?

Mr. DOLLIVER. That is just exactly what I am trying to get at, and I suggest this language:

No common carrier subject to the provisions of this act shall issue any pass or other form of free transportation to any person to be used in an interstate journey except as herein provided, and it shall be unlawful for any person, except as herein provided, to receive or use any such pass or other form of free transportation.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I intend at the proper time to offer a substitute, that no carrier engaged in interstate commerce shall issue a pass or give free transportation to any person or persons except such as are excepted in the interstate-commerce law.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I quite agree with the Senator from Indiana that if we are going to prevent the issuance of passes they ought to be prevented from being issued to any person except persons who are excepted by the original interstate-commerce law. I have here the original interstate-commerce law, and I will read the persons who are excepted, on page 15, section 22:

SEC. 22. (As amended March 2, 1889, and February 8, 1895.) That nothing in this act shall prevent the carriage, storage, or handling of property free or at reduced rates for the United States, State, or municipal governments, or for charitable purposes, or to or from fairs and expositions, for exhibition thereat, or the free carriage of destitute and homeless persons transported by charitable societies, and the necessary agents employed in such transportation, or the issuance of mileage, excursion, or commutation passenger tickets; nothing in this act shall be construed to prohibit any common carrier from giving reduced rates to ministers of religion, or to municipal governments for the transportation of indigent persons, or to inmates of the National Homes or State Homes for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, and of Soldiers' and Sailors' Orphan Homes, including those about to enter and those returning home after discharge, under arrangements with the boards of managers of said homes; nothing in this act shall be construed to prevent railroads from giving free carriage to their own officers and employees, or to prevent the principal officers of any railroad company or companies from exchanging passes or tickets with other railroad companies for their officers and employees; and nothing in this act contained shall in any way abridge or alter the remedies now existing at common law or by statute, but the provisions of this act are in addition to such remedies.

So that it will be observed that the law now prohibits a departure from the published passenger rates, and makes it unlawful and provides punishment for a violation; and this section makes very elaborate exceptions which, I think, have been found to work well as to persons who are excepted from the law. The only place in the law where the word "pass" occurs is in this section. Now, if it is necessary to amend the law, it certainly is worth while to do it in terms so distinct that everybody will know that we are referring to passes.

For my part, I think that, instead of confining it to public officials, the issuance of passes ought to be made unlawful for any purpose, except as to the persons excepted in the section which I have just read.

Mr. FORAKER. It does not apply to all persons. It does not except anybody except only the classes enumerated.

Mr. DOLLIVER. That is true.

Mr. LODGE obtained the floor.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. LODGE. I want my own time.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I desire to ask if it be in order for me to withdraw the amendment I offered and to substitute another in place thereof—a modified amendment?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Dakota can modify his amendment.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. If so, I offer, in lieu of the amendment heretofore offered by me, the one which I now send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "dollars," in line 11 of the proposed amendment by Mr. FORAKER, it is proposed to insert:

That it shall be unlawful for any Senator or Representative, or officer, agent, or other employee of the Government to solicit, accept, or use for himself or for others free railway transportation over any railway engaged in interstate commerce; and any person violating this provision shall, on conviction, pay to the United States a penalty of not less than $100 nor more than $2,000.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President, the amendment as now modified meets some of the objections which have been made against the first amendment I offered.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I think we are all agreed as to the desirableness of stopping the issuance of passes. As the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER] has shown, that is provided for under existing law, although the language is general; and it certainly was so construed when the law was first put into operation. I think it then fell into desuetude, even if it was not innocuous. At all events, there is a great deal more law for the prevention of the issuance of passes in the law as it now stands than there is in the amendment of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER]. The exceptions in that amendment, it seems to me, simply destroy practically the prohibition of passes. They are enlarged beyond the exceptions of the existing law so as to cover all stockholders of the railroads. That opens up a very wide field. A man can make himself eligible for a pass by buying one share of stock. It includes all the families of employees; which the original law does not.

Mr. FORAKER. If the Senator will allow me to interrupt him, I think he is mistaken about that. So far as the word "stockholders" is concerned, I took that out of the statute I was copying from; but I will strike that word out. There need be no difficulty on that point.

Mr. LODGE. It is not in section 22 which I have before me. The families of employees are also added by the amendment. That single addition includes several million persons. I read from section 22:

Nothing in this act shall be construed to prevent railroads from giving free carriage to their own officers and employees, or to prevent the principal officers of any railroad company or companies from exchanging passes or tickets with other railroad companies for their officers and employees.

There is nothing about the families of persons that I can find in the law.

Mr. FORAKER. I am perfectly willing to strike out the word "families." I do not want to enlarge the provision. I do not go as far as the present law goes.

Mr. LODGE. Under the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], I understand that the railroads are to be authorized to issue passes to any laborer, agricultural or otherwise. Under the existing law agricultural laborers and all other laborers would be entitled to receive reduced rates. That is all, I think, that ever has been granted. I am very anxious to preserve the workingmen's trains and their special rates, which are very important in my part of the country; and I have no doubt the same is true of agricultural laborers elsewhere. I may have misunderstood the amendment. I thought it provided for free transportation as well as for reduced rates.

Mr. GALLINGER. That, presumably, is reduced transportation.

Mr. LODGE. Why not leave it as it is in the existing law, which covers those cases perfectly?

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me, I quite agree with him on that point. As I said a moment ago, I expect to vote against the amendment of the Senator from Ohio, so I am not troubled about what gets into it.

Mr. LODGE. The amendment of the Senator from Ohio, as it seems to me, relaxes the law against passes. It does not make it more stringent. The law to-day, properly construed and properly enforced, prevents the issuance of passes to all except certain classes, who are properly excepted in section 22.

I think the legislation as proposed in this amendment is totally needless. I believe we have a better law now, and it is simply a question of its proper enforcement. The language of section 3, if honestly interpreted and properly enforced, covers passes, and the penalties in section 10 apply to section 3. This proviso simply opens the door to the very evil that we are trying to shut out. If it is thought necessary to make more definite what section 3 of the existing law means and to put in it explanatory words, I have no objection to that; but this amendment seems to me to relax the existing law and to add an enormous number of people to the exceptions.

In my State, of small railroad mileage comparatively, there are 36,000 stockholders alone who are immediately eligible for passes, and 60,000 employees, and if their families be added, that would make 300,000 more people eligible for passes. With this extension as to laborers, agricultural and otherwise, it would gradually cover in pretty nearly everybody in the community, and pretty much all the population would become eligible for passes.

I think, Mr. President, unless this amendment can be very much changed we had much better leave the law as it is.

Mr. FORAKER. I think the Senator from Massachusetts has made a just criticism of the amendment in two respects, and I desire to take advantage of his criticism to correct the amendment. He criticised it because it contained the word "stockholders." That word was employed because it was in the statute which I copied. I ask leave to modify the amendment by striking out the word "stockholders," in line 8, page 2, and also in the same line the words "or to the families of the same." I modify my amendment in that way.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the modification suggested by the Senator from Ohio.

The SECRETARY. In the last line of the pending amendment it is proposed to strike out the word "stockholders," and also the words "or to the families of the same;" so as to read:

Or to prevent any such carriers from giving free transportation to officers, agents, employees, attorneys, or directors of carrier companies.

Mr. FORAKER. As so modified, the exempted classes are restricted, and not enlarged; and it is a complete answer to all the Senator said about the law now on the statute book providing all that this amendment proposes to provide. It does not have any such effect; it never has had it; it never has been effective; and never has been put into operation.

Mr. HOPKINS. I desire to call the Senator's attention to the difficulty I suggested earlier in the debate, which is local to Illinois. There are probably between two and three hundred thousand people doing business in the city of Chicago who live in the suburbs. Those suburbs extend down into Illinois and up into Wisconsin. The railroads that center in the city of Chicago, in order to enable those people to properly do business, have established what they call "suburban trains," and allow passengers to travel to and from these points at very much reduced rate over what would be charged a passenger from any other point in either the State of Wisconsin or of Indiana coming to Chicago.

If this amendment is adopted in the form in which it is presented, in my judgment it will cut off those suburban trains that are bound from any point in Wisconsin or any point in Indiana to the city of Chicago. I ask the Senator if he would have any objection to adding this proviso after the word "service," in line 7:

Provided, That this section shall not apply to the transportation of passengers in what are called "suburban trains."

Mr. TILLMAN. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. TILLMAN. I have been listening to the course of this debate, and I thought that, under the agreement, the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota was the only one under discussion, and that we were to consider that and end it; but we have branched off; we are amending everything, and we do not vote on anything. I should like to have the Chair enforce the rule and let us move on, not that I propose to intimate that the Chair is not trying to do that, but Senators seem to forget what they themselves have agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator is right in his insistence. The only question under consideration now is the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH] to the amendment of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER].

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President, I do not propose to be taken off the floor.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair——

Mr. HOPKINS. I am speaking under the fifteen-minute rule.

Mr. TILLMAN. If the Senator will permit me, I am trying to get a vote on the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota. After that amendment is disposed of then the Senator's amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] will be in order. I do not want to interfere with his rights in the least.

Mr. HOPKINS. I will say to the Senator from South Carolina that I was not proposing my amendment at the present time. This is the second time I have undertaken to get the attention of the Senator from Ohio to the objection that I had to his amendment. If it can be arranged so as not to interfere with the great interests in Chicago of the character I have suggested, I am heartily in favor of the amendment; but, instead of offering an amendment, I was challenging the attention of the Senator from Ohio to the subject-matter of my amendment when I should propose it. I am not proposing it now.

Mr. TILLMAN. I merely desired to get a vote on the amendment now pending offered by the Senator from North Dakota, so that we may move on to some other amendment.

Mr. HOPKINS. After I yield the floor I have no objection whatever to a vote on the amendment.

Mr. FORAKER. As the Senator has asked me a question, if I may answer I will call his attention to the provision on page 2 of the amendment, which reads:

Nothing in this act contained * * * shall prevent the issuance of mileage or excursion passenger tickets.

That might be made to read "mileage, commutation, or excursion tickets."

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President——

Mr. TILLMAN. I beg the Senator's pardon, but I declare we will never do anything unless we enforce the rule.

Mr. HOPKINS. I can not be interrupted. I have got my fifteen minutes, and I decline to be interrupted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Illinois declines to yield.

Mr. TILLMAN. I rose to a parliamentary inquiry. I made the inquiry; the Chair sustained me; and now let the Chair please enforce the rule.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is unable to say whether the Senator from Illinois, who has risen within his fifteen minutes, is going to speak to the amendment or not. The Chair assumes, until it otherwise appears, that the Senator from Illinois will address himself to the question before the Senate.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President, the question before the Senate is perfecting this amendment. I want to suggest to the Senator from Ohio that, in my judgment, the language he has suggested will not meet the difficulty, and I desire him to look over the proviso which I have prepared, and which later I shall present to the Senate.

Mr. FORAKER. Very well, I will do so.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH] to the amendment of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER].

Mr. KEAN. Let the amendment be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be again stated, at the request of the Senator from New Jersey.

The SECRETARY. After the word "dollars," in line 11, it is proposed to insert:

That it shall be unlawful for any Senator or Representative or officer——

Mr. KEAN. That is enough. I know now what the amendment is.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. OVERMAN. Is an amendment to that amendment in order?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is not in order. It would be an amendment in the third degree.

Mr. McLAURIN. I should like to hear the amendment stated.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be again stated, at the request of the Senator from Mississippi.

The SECRETARY. After the word "dollars," in line 11, page 1, of the pending amendment, it is proposed to insert:

That it shall be unlawful for any Senator or Representative or officer, agent, or other employee of the Government to solicit, accept, or use for himself or for others free railway transportation over any railway engaged in interstate commerce; and any person violating this provision shall, on conviction, pay to the United States a penalty of not less than $100 nor more than $2,000.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH] to the amendment of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER].

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MORGAN. I propose an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Ohio, in line 6, page 1, after the word "same," to insert the words "class of accommodations."

Mr. FORAKER. As I understand it, I have no objection to that amendment, and accept it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "same," in line 6, it is proposed to amend the amendment by inserting the words "class of accommodation."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOPKINS. On page 2, line 2, of the amendment, after the word "mileage," I move to insert the word "commutation."

Mr. FORAKER. I accept that amendment also.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. On page 2 of the pending amendment, line 2, after the word "mileage," it is proposed to insert the word "commutation."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORGAN. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk as an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Ohio.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 2, page 2, after the word "persons," it is proposed to insert "or persons who are in distress and are prevented from pursuing their usual vocations by visitations of epidemic diseases or of earthquakes or of tempests or of cyclones."

Mr. MORGAN. I desire to make a few observations on that amendment. We have been listening here a long time in the Senate to accusations of bitter character against the conduct of the railroads of this country. Perhaps those accusations in the main are true; but they are not more true probably of the railroad companies than they are of the banks and of a great many other public institutions. While this has been going on, however, a visitation has come upon this country of a calamitous and painful character, and it is my observation, sir, that the railroads of the country have contributed perhaps beyond the capacity or perhaps beyond the generosity of any other class of our citizens to relieve the people of San Francisco against this terrific visitation. I feel more like expressing a sense of gratitude toward these great institutions for their conduct under these circumstances than I do like berating them for their supposed or actual transgressions of the laws of trade and ordinary commercial transactions. But this bill, if it is to contain the amendment of the Senator from Ohio, ought not to put the railroads in such a position as that it would be criminal if they should extend the generosity which they are now extending to the class of people I have been mentioning—those visited by earthquakes, by cyclones, and tempests, and also by epidemic diseases.

The amendment of the Senator from Ohio, Mr. President, contains a proviso, a part of which I will read:

Provided, That nothing herein shall prevent the free carriage of destitute or indigent persons.

My amendment extends the classification of those persons so that they may receive free carriage in their condition of destitution, which I describe in my amendment, without thereby putting the railroads in a criminal attitude toward the laws of the country.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I am glad the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] has called attention to the fact that these much berated corporations that seem to have few friends in the country to-day have been doing this great work in connection with the earthquake sufferers in California. On the 22d day of April a dispatch was printed in the New York newspapers, and has not been denied, that up to that time the railroads had given free transportation to the amount of $3,450,000, and a day or two ago I noticed a statement which seemed to be authentic that it then had exceeded the amount of $5,000,000 in transporting people from San Francisco to other parts of the country.

Mr. FRYE. And supplies also.

Mr. GALLINGER. And likewise in giving supplies to them.

I do not know whether or not it is advisable to add the amendment the Senator from Alabama has suggested to the amendment of the Senator from Ohio. If that amendment shall be adopted, there can be no question about it, it seems to me, that the amendment of the Senator from Alabama enlarges the sphere of beneficence, but what I think is valuable is that the Senator from Alabama has called attention to the fact that in a great emergency these corporations have been generous and liberal and have done everything in their power to relieve the suffering of those stricken people.

Mr. McCUMBER. I wish to ask a question of the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. McCUMBER. If the amendment which is proposed by the Senator from Ohio were the law to-day, would not the railways which have granted these concessions to the stricken people of San Francisco, if the law were strictly enforced, be fined a sufficient amount to break every one of those railroads?

Mr. GALLINGER. I think that is very probable, if I understand the question correctly.

Mr. McCUMBER. And in connection with that, I wish to ask the Senator if it is not true that it is customary for the railways to give free transportation to these commercial delegations from China and Japan and other countries who come here for the purpose of understanding our people and devising means to extend our trade in the Orient. The railways would also under this amendment be liable to punishment for that offense, would they not?

Mr. GALLINGER. I think so.

Mr. McCUMBER. They would also be subject to punishment for bringing over the peace commissioners, whom they brought from San Francisco or Seattle during the last year, conveying them, in fact, I believe, from the Orient and back again?

Mr. GALLINGER. I should think so.

Mr. TILLMAN. I wish to ask the attention of the Senator from Ohio to a small amendment which I wish to add on line 7, page 2, of his amendment, after the word "attorneys." I understand he has already accepted an amendment striking out the word "stockholders."

Mr. FORAKER. Yes.

Mr. TILLMAN. The words I want to put in after the word "attorneys" are these: "Exclusively in its service." The Senator can very readily——

Mr. FORAKER. I accept the amendment.

Mr. TILLMAN. See that if these agents and attorneys can be given passes——

Mr. FORAKER. I accept the amendment.

Mr. TILLMAN. All right; if the Senator accepts it, that ends it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let it be stated.

Mr. MORGAN. I wish to inquire whether the amendment I offered is pending, or whether it has been passed over?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is pending.

Mr. GALLINGER and Mr. KEAN. Let it be acted upon.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I move to amend the amendment by striking out all after the words "section 3" and inserting the following:

No carrier of interstate commerce shall issue any pass or by any other device give free transportation to any person or persons except as herein provided, and any carrier violating this provision shall be deemed guilty of unjust discrimination and shall for each offense pay to the United States a penalty of not less than $100 nor more than $2,000.

Mr. President, I do not desire to occupy the attention of the Senate very long upon this, except to say that the discussion has developed that there is a serious difference of opinion as to what the amendment of the Senator from Ohio means. The first person to call attention to what, putting it lightly, may be said to be the ambiguity of the language was the Senator from Minnesota, and the whole debate has proceeded upon that line. Now, since it seems to be the intention to prevent any carrier of interstate commerce from giving free transportation, it seems to me that that might best be accomplished by stating that intention in so many words, and for that reason I offer the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Are there further amendments to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. FORAKER. The amendment of the Senator from Indiana has not been disposed of.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair did not understand the amendment distinctly.

Mr. FORAKER. I understood the Senator from Indiana to offer an amendment.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes, Mr. President, I offered an amendment, to strike out all after the words "section 3." It is a substitute.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is fair for the Chair to state that the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] rose before——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I am aware of that.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Before the amendment was completed to move a substitute.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Very well. I will withdraw my amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair requested him to withhold his substitute, stating that he would be recognized to offer it when the amendment had been completed.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I saw the Senator not rising. If the Senator from Texas desires to offer a substitute, I will withdraw mine until the Senator from Texas has an opportunity to offer his.

Mr. BACON. I desire to make a statement now, in order that I may not be misconstrued in any subsequent action. There are some amendments which I would offer to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio, but I do not care to do so in case there should be a substitute agreed to. So I withhold any amendment I may see fit to offer, in order to see if a substitute is agreed to. If not, I shall then have some amendments to offer.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, while I do not intend to make any extended remarks upon this matter, I do desire to say that I think it far preferable to confine whatever provision we have on this general subject upon which we have been talking to the prohibition of the issuance of free passes or free transportation. There are a good many reasons for that, but I desire to invite attention to only two. The first is that suggestions have been made, which strike me with favor, by Senators on the other side of the Chamber to the effect that the corporations ought to be permitted to issue commutation tickets or excursion tickets or reduced transportation under certain peculiar circumstances. And the second reason is that the subject to which the Senator from Ohio alluded has for the principal motive which influences him in suggesting this amendment that which ought not to be injected in this bill.

The question of discrimination on the part of railroads engaged in interstate commerce, in so far as it may be affected by his suggestion of discrimination on account of race, ought not to be injected, I repeat, into this bill or into this debate, and I decline to go into the question, so far as a discussion of it is concerned. But for these two reasons I suggest that it is far better to confine this amendment, so far as this legislation is concerned, to a prohibition against the issuance of free passes by railroad companies; and, consequently, I move as a substitute what I send to the desk.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. For the purpose of clearing the way for the Senator from Texas, I withdraw the substitute which I offered.

Mr. CULBERSON. I offer it as a substitute for the amendment of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I will state to the Senator from Texas that I had offered a substitute, which I now withdraw in order that he may offer his substitute.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The substitute proposed by the Senator from Texas will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed, in lieu of the part proposed to be inserted, to insert the following:

That no carrier engaged in interstate commerce shall, directly or indirectly, issue or give any free ticket, free pass, or free transportation to any person except to the officers, agents, employees, and attorneys of the carrier issuing the same, or to ministers of religion, inmates of hospitals, eleemosynary, or charitable institutions. Any carrier violating this provision shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and shall, for each offense, pay to the United States a penalty of not less than one hundred nor more than two thousand dollars.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. May I suggest to the Senator from Texas for what it may be worth that instead of making the specific exceptions which he does in his substitute he put in the words "except as herein provided?" That will leave as the exceptions the exceptions already in the law, which were read by the Senator from Iowa. The substitute of the Senator from Texas is practically the same as the one I offered and gladly withdrew, and I make this suggestion to the Senator because it will probably accomplish his purpose better. It is no matter to me whether he does or not.

Mr. FORAKER. I suppose I have a right to speak to the substitute. I want to say, in answer to the Senator from Texas, that the amendment as I offered it was so plain as to avoid raising the question which he injects into this controversy.

Mr. CULBERSON. I prefer the form of the substitute to the suggestion of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE].

Mr. FORAKER. I want to make some remarks in opposition to the substitute of the Senator from Texas, speaking now in my own time, in answer to that. I drew this amendment, as I have already stated, in the particular to which the Senator has referred, so as to accomplish two purposes—in the first place, to avoid if possible raising any question as to discrimination on account of color, and, in the second place, so as to afford a legal provision in this statute on which the Commission could stand to enforce equality of service and equality of treatment in the transportation of interstate passengers. I might have gone much further than I did without going as far as the statutes of the various Southern States have gone in that particular. I read a moment ago from the Georgia statute, which requires that there shall be no discrimination on account of race, color, or previous condition, using that exact language.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator pardon me a moment? That is coupled with the provision which prohibits common carriers from carrying the two races in the same car.

Mr. FORAKER. I am going to call attention to that. That is the general provision. Now, without anything at all being said on the subject, there is no requirement in this proposed law that the passengers shall be carried in the same coach.

Mr. BACON. No.

Mr. FORAKER. There may be separate coaches provided. In certain of the States there is that statutory provision. I did not care to conflict with that. I do not either approve or disapprove it. I simply let it alone. But I do want in this law, and I think we should all be agreed about that, a provision the necessity for which has been recognized by every Southern State, that there shall be equality of treatment, not that white and black shall be put in the same coach where it is objectionable, as it is in many States, but if you have separate coaches that they shall be as these southern statutes already provide, equally good for both races.

Mr. BACON. I should like to ask the Senator a question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. FORAKER. Yes; I do.

Mr. BACON. If that is the present provision in all of the Southern States, which I think practically it is, what possible good can there be in the insertion of these words? If that is the matter which the Senator has in mind, so far from there being any good in it, will not the very fact of the insertion of those words create the presumption that it was thought that there was not now provision under which this equality of treatment was required?

Mr. FORAKER. The Senator will remember that I have only fifteen minutes, although I yield to him.

Mr. BACON. I beg pardon.

Mr. FORAKER. The necessity is in this: The Interstate Commerce Commissioners can not enforce the statutes of the several States. If in any State there should be a failure to enforce the provisions of the State statutes requiring equality of service and accommodation, the Interstate Commerce Commission would have a legal warrant for doing that thing. In the State of Texas they have very carefully provided for exactly what I want to provide for here, except only I have not gone so far as they have gone in either Texas or Georgia, for in Texas they say that the coach so to be provided shall be equal in all points of comfort and convenience. I think the words "equally good service" would cover everything.

Mr. President, the question comes up to us in such a way that we can not avoid it if we are going into the business of controlling transportation directly, fixing the rates which shall be paid, prescribing the regulations and rules which shall govern in the operation of trains. It is a different attitude that we assume with respect to that matter from that which we have heretofore been standing in.

We become responsible, and if there be any ground in any case for complaint—I do not know anything about what the fact is, but I know I have read a good deal to the effect that there is such ground; I have received a great many letters to that effect—that under the provision of law that they shall give separate and equally good coaches, they are giving separate but not equally good coaches, and very different treatment. What I want in this law is something that does not necessarily raise any question of discrimination; that does not require anything to be done that the laws of the several States, which would have most interest in this question, do not already require to be done; and that is that the Interstate Commerce Commission shall have authority, and authority from the Congress of the United States, to see to it that the humblest man, without regard to color, who pays the same money that the white man pays, may have, not a seat in the same coach, necessarily, but that he shall have decent, respectable, acceptable, and equally good accommodations for his transportation. That is all there is in this. So far as the provision about passes is concerned, there is not, as the Senator from Indiana said a moment ago, any ambiguity about it. The only objection to it is that there is no ambiguity about it. Every Senator here knows that if this provision goes into the statute book as it is framed, there will be no more free passes for anybody, except only the excepted classes. There is not a man here who does not fully understand that and appreciate it.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. If the Senator will excuse me, I said the debate had proceeded upon the assumption that there was ambiguity in the Senator's language.

Mr. FORAKER. I am proceeding upon the theory that the Senator thinks there is ambiguity, and I am saying there is no ambiguity. Every man here understands the provision. Every man here knows it is to prohibit the further abuse of granting free passes. I do not want to dwell upon that any longer. I spoke about it sufficiently earlier in the day. But now a final word about the other provision. Every man here knows that if we are going into the business of rate making we assume a responsibility about it, and we should carefully provide that there should be equality of service for equality of pay. Now, who will vote against it? I want to see.

Mr. HOPKINS. Before the Senator from Ohio takes his seat, I wish to ask him if the difference between his amendment and the substitute offered by the Senator from Texas is this, that his amendment provides against free passes and in addition also provides for equality of accommodations——

Mr. FORAKER. That is all the difference there is.

Mr. HOPKINS. While the substitute simply provides against free passes.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, there can be no possible necessity in the Senate's considering these two separate questions together in one amendment. The question of free passes is one thing and a distinct thing. It is a question of what shall be paid in the way of compensation by one man upon terms of equality with another man for the same service; in other words, whether one man shall pay for what another man receives free.

Mr. President, the question of discrimination is another and a distinct thing. There are in this bill other provisions which look to the question of discrimination, and if this question is to be discussed, and if such a provision is to be incorporated in the bill, I submit to Senators that the latter is the proper portion of the bill in which to incorporate it and not upon this particular part of it. Mr. President, is it the design of Senators—can it be the design of the Senator from Ohio and others who think like him—to incorporate upon the question of free passes, which he knows will receive the unanimous vote practically of the Senate, this additional subject-matter about which there is a difference, in order that the second subject-matter may carry with it strength it otherwise would not have?

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will permit me for a moment——

Mr. FORAKER. If the Senator will allow me, I accepted an amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama, which removed all objections, as I understood, upon the question to which the Senator is now addressing himself, thereby showing that I had no such purpose as that, but only——

Mr. BACON. I am speaking of the fact that the Senator from Ohio joins in the same amendment the question of passes and the question of discrimination.

Mr. FORAKER. It is equality of pay and equality of service.

Mr. BACON. That may be true, but that relates to every other part of the bill. All through the bill runs the question of discrimination. I have confidence in the desire of the Senator not to take any unfair advantage in this matter. I want to call the attention of the Senator to the fact that he raises here a most vital question, a question of the deepest concern and importance to a very large section of this country that has a burden to bear which no other section of the country has to bear; a question of vital importance to the personal comfort and the social organization as well of our people.

The Senator himself says that the purpose of this amendment is not to secure a provision of law on this subject in the Southern States, because he recognizes the fact that that provision of law already exists in the Southern States by enactment of the Southern States. But the Senator avows the purpose to be to give the Interstate Commerce Commission the right to enforce the law, to go into the States and see whether or not the State of Georgia, for instance, is enforcing its law, and if it is not enforcing it, then to enforce it as a Federal law.

Mr. FORAKER. I suggest that the Interstate Commerce Commission will not go into the State any more on this point than it will on every other point on which it is authorized to act.

Mr. BACON. That may be, but that does not change the proposition that that is the purpose of the Senator. There can be no question which could be raised which would more deeply affect our people and which would more deeply concern them in their everyday life.

Mr. FORAKER. May I ask the Senator a question?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. BACON. I do for a question.

Mr. FORAKER. Does the Senator object to a provision in this bill securing equality of service and accommodation to all paying equal prices for transportation?

Mr. BACON. I am free to grant——

Mr. FORAKER. And if he does not, I am willing to have that put in the language of the Georgia statute. I do not object. I do not want——

Mr. BACON. I object to the Interstate Commerce Commission taking charge of this subject.

Mr. FORAKER. Yes; and I insist that they shall.

Mr. BACON. Very well; that may be. The Senator very well knows the fact that he has very nearly two-thirds of the Senators in this Chamber in his party, and consequently he can make his boast of what he will insist upon with very great confidence.

Mr. FORAKER. I did not make it boastfully.

Mr. BACON. The Senator's tone and manner were very boastful.

Mr. FORAKER. I withdraw the boastful spirit.

Mr. BACON. The Senator withdraws the boast, but at the same time it is well known that the Senator does not withdraw his purpose to insist upon it. So the question of phraseology does not amount to much.

I do insist upon it that a spirit of fairness ought to require that those two matters should not be put together. Give us, as the substitute proposes to give, the opportunity to vote upon the question of passes free from any embarrassing or conflicting question. We are all of us in favor of the proposition which will prevent the giving of free passes to anybody. I want to restrict it more than it is in the present law. But there is no possible necessity why the two should not be separate, and then if the Senator shall seek to incorporate upon this bill the independent feature, and he has the votes to do it, of course we can not complain. That is their right. But what we complain of is that they combine the two. I hope the Senator will see the propriety of such division.

I want to call the attention of the Senate to another matter. My objection is not to the principle of the law. That can not be, because for thirty years we have had in Georgia this law which the Senator now proposes to incorporate in the same words in this bill. It is not that I desire that the purpose he has in view shall be defeated; but it is the desire on my part and those who think with me—and I am sure I reflect the sentiments of the people of my section—to avoid what will be an incentive to strife and which will be taken advantage of by malicious and designing people who desire to stir up strife between the races and who will make complaints that are not well founded, and who would be constantly developing discord and discontent in the midst of a people who have every reason to avoid any influences of that kind. It is perfectly competent for the Senator to divide this amendment so that he will have that which relates to passes as an independent proposition. He will get, I suppose, on the provision prohibiting free passes, the unanimous vote of those of us who come from the section who will be particularly affected by the other part of this amendment. He will not jeopardize the other part of his amendment if he has the numerical strength to carry out his announced purpose, and there can be no possible reason, to my mind, why the Senator should combine the two, unless he desires to put other Senators in the position of either voting against the part they approve or compelling them at the same time to vote for another part of which they disapprove.

Mr. FORAKER. I put them together only because they go together.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator so divide it that we can call for a division?

Mr. FORAKER. I would have to frame the amendment anew, and it seems to me it is perfectly proper to provide that for the same compensation there shall be equally good service to all who travel. I do not go as far as the Senator's State statute goes. There is nothing here to interfere with the enforcement of the State statute. The whole thing is in the hands of the Interstate Commerce Commissioners. I hope they will never have any occasion to enforce this provision, but if they should have, they ought to have that authority.

Mr. CLAY. Will the Senator from Ohio let me ask him a question?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to his colleague?

Mr. BACON. I am going to yield the floor in a moment, and my colleague can then present his views in full.

I want to say this: Here is a substitute offered by the Senator from Texas which fully covers the ground, so far as free passes go, and which will receive the unanimous vote, I repeat, of Senators on this side of the Chamber. The fact that the substitute is adopted will not prevent the Senator from Ohio from offering as an independent measure whatever he may desire to offer upon that subject, so that if the Senate adopts the substitute offered by the Senator from Texas it will in no manner be agreeing to what I say on the subject, or disagreeing to the opposite view of the Senator from Ohio, and it will give the opportunity to Senators on this side to vote independently for the matter providing against free passes, and still leave the Senator from Ohio absolutely free to offer any amendment he sees fit in regard to the matter of discrimination, which more properly, in any event, comes to another part of the bill.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I had——

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. TILLMAN. Certainly.

Mr. MONEY. I should like very much to ask a question of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. TILLMAN. If the Senator will pardon me, we are not proceeding under the rules which prevail every day, and I should like to get through what I have to say, and then the Senator from Mississippi can ask the question of the Senator from Ohio.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Carolina declines to yield.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, we have had a great many discussions here on this rate bill, but I never expected to have the race question dragged into it. I deprecate that there should be any allusion to it in this debate.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I did not——

Mr. TILLMAN. I am not charging the Senator from Ohio with the responsibility for it. Unfortunately for myself, though, I have been unable to see things through the same spectacles with some other Senators here, and I for one welcome the recognition by a Senator of the North that used to be known—and I do not intend it as any reflection upon him—as "Fire Alarm," because of this very issue. I welcome, I say, the recognition by that Senator that there are conditions in the South which make it imperative that we should be allowed to deal with that question in our own way. Our laws recognize equality. We compel the carriers to give the same kind of transportation and character of coach to the two races. We only compel them to keep them separate; and when the Senator from Ohio and his colleagues shall recognize that in doing that we intend to stand by that provision in good faith, and want the law enforced by our own people, and will enforce it, I for one am ready to say that the Interstate Commerce Commission may go down there and see that the colored people have just as good coaches to ride in as the white people, because the roads are owned in the North, anyhow, and I want no discrimination by northern capitalists against southern negroes. [Laughter and applause in the galleries.]

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will inform the occupants of the galleries that under the rules of the Senate manifestations are not in order, and he requests the occupants to refrain from a repetition.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, I desire to ask whether, if the amendment is adopted and becomes a law, a colored passenger going through a State from one State to another, coming under the interstate-commerce law, would be compelled to go into a coach equally as good provided for him by the State statute as he goes through that State, or would he be permitted under this provision to go into a coach set apart for white people by the law of that State?

Mr. FORAKER. I stated with some particularity that I did not undertake to touch upon the question of separate coaches at all. The only requirement is that there shall be equally good service and equally good accommodation. If the railroad company should furnish only one coach all would have to travel in it, but if they have two kinds of passengers and do not want them to ride in the same coach they must provide equally good coaches for them. In that respect I do not undertake to interfere with the State law.

They have such a statute in Texas, such a statute in Tennessee, and such a statute, I think, in about every other Southern State. I have read from two or three of them. I do not go as far as any of those statutes go. I only want to put under the Interstate Commerce Commission, for that board to stand upon, something that will give them authority to enforce equal treatment if there are complaints, and just complaints, that there is not equal treatment.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, the Senator did not answer the question that I asked.

Mr. FORAKER. I thought I was answering it.

Mr. MONEY. I asked for his construction of the law, if it should have his amendment incorporated in it, whether a colored passenger going through a State from a State beyond or a State on the border would be at liberty to go into a white coach provided by the law of that State, although a colored coach equally good was provided, being, in other words, in the terms of his amendment, "equally good?"

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly he would not be. I do not remember just how the Senator put his question, but this does not interfere with such a requirement as the Senator refers to by State statute. He could be required, if a State passenger, to go into a separate coach if it was equally as good, but not if an interstate passenger. I do not make any such requirement, nor do I interfere with it where the State has made it.

Mr. OVERMAN. Did I understand the Senator to accept the amendment as to the class of accommodation?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly, I accepted it; so that there might be no question of discrimination, or so-called "Jim Crow car" question raised.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I rather thought that the purpose of this, and I was sure that the effect of it, would be to recognize the right of the carrier to provide separate cars for the two races, provided one coach was as good as the other. The separate-coach law of Texas and the separate-coach law of Arkansas do not supplement each other, because a passenger starting in Arkansas to go into Texas is not subject to the law of either State. But if I understand this provision, and I hope that that is what it means, it is that carriers operating in that section of our country where these arrangements are necessary can provide separate coaches for each race and then can require each race to stay in its own coach, provided one coach is as good as the other coach.

Mr. FORAKER. Yes, that is the only purpose of it, if they see fit to provide separate coaches which would be equally good.

Mr. BAILEY. If that is true, then surely those of us from the South, where we try to enforce the separation of passengers, could find no possible objection to it. Indeed, instead of being objectionable to me, I am glad to take it, because it enables the carriers to conform in their interstate passenger services with the law of the States on that particular subject. Those of us who live in that part of the country and have experienced the relief which the separate coaches have brought, surely agree that every carrier operating there depending upon the patronage and favor of those people will provide the separate coaches for interstate travel if the law of Congress permits them to do it.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, the experience of every State which has adopted a "Jim Crow" law is that the railroad companies would not, for the sake of the good will and patronage of the country through which they operated, provide these separate coaches, for the experience of the Southern States is that every single railroad company which operates in their limits would not provide the separate accommodations, however much it might be demanded by the white people of that country, and it requires a State statute to compel them to do it.

The inquiry I made of the honorable Senator from Ohio was, When this interstate-commerce law of Congress overrode the State law whether a negro passing from one State to another through a State, becoming an interstate passenger, would be compelled to abide by the State law, and whether the railroad companies would then be compelled to provide the separate cars? I do not, for one, believe that they would be compelled to do it, and I have had this much experience with them that I do not believe they will do anything they are not compelled to do which will cost them an extra dollar.

Mr. BAILEY. Will the Senator from Mississippi permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. MONEY. Certainly.

Mr. BAILEY. I agree with the Senator that the railroads would not provide an extra coach at an extra expense, but they are compelled to provide the extra coach for the intrastate passengers of different races, and therefore, having already the separate coaches, they can compel interstate passengers to stay in the coach provided for each race without any additional expense to them.

Mr. MONEY. But the trouble about that is that it is not practical. Under this amendment you can not order a passenger to get up and go into another coach equally as good if he is satisfied with the seat he occupies. So that falls to the ground. The railroad company could do it, perhaps; but will they do it? Consequently there is no remedy for a State that has seen fit to pass a law which separates these two classes of passengers with equally good accommodations, and they are equally good in my State I know, and in other Southern States. This law would come in to override the State statute, and there is no provision that the company shall provide separate cars for interstate passengers.

Mr. BAILEY. Does the Senator from Mississippi believe that this law can divest the State control over the supervision of intrastate passengers?

Mr. MONEY. Oh, of course not.

Mr. BAILEY. Of course not.

Mr. MONEY. Of course not; but what I mean to state is that under such an interstate-commerce act, if passed, the passenger in a coach beyond the limits of the States having the "Jim Crow law," as it is called, keeps his seat in that coach, and you make no provision here by which he is to go into any other coach when he reaches the State line where there is such a law. There is nothing in this amendment, and I venture to say there will be nothing offered here, such as is in every State statute on this subject; but there will be provision made for equally good accommodations. The Senator said it provided for this distinction between the passengers, and also provided that they should have equally good accommodations.

Mr. BACON. I wish to ask the Senator to permit me in his time to ask the Senator from Ohio a question.

Mr. MONEY. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. That is, if the Senator from Ohio is willing to incorporate in the amendment a specific requirement that railroads engaged in interstate commerce shall observe the local laws of the States with reference to separate cars for the separate races.

Mr. FORAKER. I would not want to do that, Mr. President. I think I have gone as far as I care to go—not as far as I might very well go—in simply requiring equally good service.

Mr. BACON. The Senator objects, then, to the incorporation here of a specific requirement that railroads engaged in interstate commerce shall in this particular observe the laws of the State through which they pass? The Senator objects to that.

Mr. FORAKER. I do; because I do not know what all those laws are. If there is any law which does not require equally good service and equally good accommodations I do not want to subject the Interstate Commerce Commissioners to an observance of that requirement. All I want is that they may have equally as good coaches if the carriers see fit to provide separate coaches. I am not going to agree to an amendment that would require them to do the one thing or the other, but to require them to furnish equally good serivce if they see fit to make them separate.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I regret that Senators on the other side should object to the only good provision there is in the amendment. I say the only good provision because I mean by that that the other provision relating to the granting of free passes is fully covered by the law as it now stands. If the English language can make the meaning of a term clear, it is made so in the section 10, which was read by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER]. That section compels railway companies to publish the rates for transportation, both freight and passenger, between any given points. It then prohibits taking either a greater compensation or a less compensation from any person who goes from one point to another. Now, if taking no compensation is not taking less compensation I do not know what you would call it.

Then it goes on and provides a penalty not to exceed $5,000, which is much greater than the penalty provided in the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio. We have on the statute books to-day a clear prohibition against the granting of free transportation and a severe penalty for it. Repassing the same law would not tend in any way to make it more effective. We have the law now.

Then the Senator from Georgia seems to object upon the ground that this amendment and the other amendment would tend to create strife in his State. Now, why would it create strife? Would the white population object that the colored man who pays a given sum of money equal to the white man for transportation from one point to another point should have a car equally good? I do not think the Senator would claim that the white people would object to that. In fact, that is the law of his State as it exists to-day.

Mr. BACON. I hope the Senator will permit me to answer the inquiry.

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. The objection was not based upon that ground at all, nor is there any danger of any conflict growing out of any such situation as that suggested by the Senator. The trouble is that designing people of either color, who may be in sympathy with such a movement, encouraging the insistance of a man of one race that he shall have the liberty to go into another car upon the claim which he may make, whether unfounded or well founded, and generally unfounded, that the car he is in is not as good as the other car, a constant conflict of that kind will arise.

Mr. McCUMBER. Clearly the amendment does not contemplate any interference with the local laws of any State or Territory. It simply provides that in interstate commerce, and that is all it can cover, equally good facilities, equally good cars, shall be granted to one race or one set of individuals as is granted to the other. Certainly it would tend to eliminate rather than increase any race prejudice if the amendment became a law and compelled the railways to grant exactly the same character of coaches to the colored race. It would make them feel at least that they were being treated honestly and justly, and they certainly can not and will not feel that they have been dealt with other than kindly and honestly if they receive exactly the same kind of treatment that is accorded to the white population.

To-day I understand it is universally conceded that notwithstanding the State laws the same character of coaches are not granted, but that in some cases they are compelled to ride in coaches that would be only fit for a cattle car. If that is true, the white population ought not to object that the railways are compelled to furnish decent transportation for all passengers, irrespective of color.

Mr. CLAY. Do I understand the Senator——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. CLAY. Do I understand the Senator to say that in Georgia the colored people are compelled to ride in the same kind of cars that are used for cattle or other live stock?

Mr. McCUMBER. Oh, no.

Mr. CLAY. I was informed that the Senator said so.

Mr. McCUMBER. No, Mr. President; I do not claim that they are compelled to ride in box cars or in cattle cars.

Mr. CLAY. I want to say to the Senator that I have been living in Georgia for fifty years, and I think I have been as familiar with the situation there as anyone, that equally as good cars are used for the colored people as those used for the white people there. There is no difference whatever. The law requires that, and the law has been carried out.

Mr. McCUMBER. If it is true—and I have no doubt it is true, as the Senator suggests—then there can be no objection that that same law shall be carried out in every State; and that is all that is contended for in the amendment of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. BACON. I will ask the Senator if he will permit an amendment of this kind to come in at the end of the seventh line:

Provided, That the carrier engaged in interstate commerce shall conform to the laws of each State through which its lines run in regard to providing separate cars equally good for the different races.

Does the Senator object to that?

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not understand that we can enforce the law of another State.

Mr. BACON. You can adopt the law of the State.

Mr. McCUMBER. I would prefer myself if it is to be made a law that it shall be by an act of Congress, so that the Commission will be enforcing Congressional laws and not State laws.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. McCUMBER. With pleasure.

Mr. MONEY. If the Senator has concluded, I will take the floor in my own right.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair would state to Senators that under the rule no Senator who has spoken to the amendment pending has a right to speak again after having surrendered the floor.

Mr. MONEY. After he has exhausted his fifteen minutes?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Even though he has not exhausted the fifteen minutes.

Mr. MONEY. I will ask the Senator from North Dakota to permit me, then, to make a statement.

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not propose to take a great deal of time, but I will allow the Senator to trespass upon my time by any question or suggestion he desires to make.

Mr. MONEY. If it will be trespassing, I will not insist upon it. I want to say, if it is not too much trespassing——

Mr. McCUMBER. I did not mean any trespassing in an offensive way, I assure the Senator.

Mr. MONEY. I will take the laws of the State of Mississippi. The law requires that equally good accommodations, equally good cars, shall be provided for the two races. A black man is not permitted to enter into a car provided for white people and a white man is not permitted to enter into a car furnished for the black people. One is just as much a violation of the law as the other. This condition of equality in the service and of not mixing in the travel is the result of a feeling which is called prejudice on that side, and the Senator from North Dakota thinks it would probably tend to eliminate that prejudice.

Now, there is no desire to eliminate that prejudice in the South on our part. We do not propose to eliminate that prejudice either by Congressional legislation or legislation of any other sort. We are perfectly willing for gentlemen who want to live with the colored people to do so—and there are quite a number, I have no doubt, who feel just as comfortable in a car containing colored people as in a car with whites. But, nevertheless, there is no disputing of tastes. According to the old proverb, "De gustibus non est disputandum."

Consequently, while we have this law in the South we can not see what objection can be offered to the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia, which exactly complies with the statutes of the Southern States. There is no invasion of the statutes of the Southern States. It is simply ratifying them or, rather, conforming with them or concurring in them in Federal legislation on the same subject, and it can hurt nobody. I do not see what the objection is unless somebody insists that these interstate-commerce passengers shall have the privilege a State does not now grant.

I want to say further, if anything could have been designed to kill this bill, as far as the vote on this side is concerned, this is the very instrument to do it. I say very frankly I will not vote for any rate bill with this provision in it. That is my way of looking at it, and I think there are a great many others who feel the same way. If it is the intention to kill this bill, you are proceeding in a very summary way as far as our vote is concerned.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In order that there may not be a misunderstanding, the Chair would suggest that in his opinion it is contrary to the spirit of the unanimous-consent agreement for one Senator to yield his time to another Senator who has previously occupied the floor under the rule in his own right. The Chair recognizes the right of Senators to rise for a question in the time of another Senator, but he does not recognize his right to rise for a second speech in another Senator's time, because it is the spirit of the rule that each Senator shall speak only once and not exceeding fifteen minutes. The Senator from North Dakota will proceed.

Mr. McCUMBER. I believe I have not occupied the fifteen minutes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Dakota has not occupied the fifteen minutes.

Mr. McCUMBER. I shall then be very brief in replying to the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY]. I do not expect, Mr. President, by any character of law to eliminate any prejudice of race the Senator from Mississippi or the people of the South or any other place may have. That is a deep-seated prejudice; it is a racial prejudice which no law could possibly eliminate; but I think we might eliminate the cause for just complaint on the part of the other race if we insist by a proper law that when they pay the same price for transportation they shall be accorded the same character of transportation, not by the mixing of the races at all, but equally good or substantially equally good accommodations. I understand that there is considerable complaint. I know a great deal of complaint has been made to me upon that ground, and it seems to me that it would open up an era of a great deal of better feeling if, under our boasted theory that the law shall operate equally upon and against all persons, we should so provide that it would operate in giving every person who pays a given price for transportation equality of transportation, notwithstanding that he may be darker than some other man.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield entirely, Mr. President.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. I should like to ask the Senator from North Dakota a question.

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. Would the Senator from North Dakota object to an amendment striking out the words "the same or" where this language occurs:

> Demands, collects, or receives from any other person for the same or equally good accommodations and a like and equally good service.

I ask the Senator if he would consent to striking out the words "the same or" and the words "and a like;" so that the sentence would read:

> Receives from any other person for equally good accommodations and equally good service.

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly I should not object to that; but I understand that has already been amended where the word "class" is used. I do not remember the exact words.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me, on the motion of the Senator from Alabama, I will say to the Senator from Florida that after the word "same," in line 6, the words "class of accommodations" were added.

Mr. McCUMBER. That means practically the same thing, as I understand.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes.

Mr. McCUMBER. I desire to say, in closing, Mr. President, that I am opposed to the amendment as a whole, because it duplicates to some extent the old law, or attempts to reenact it, and does not reenact, in my opinion, as good a law as the old law.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, I think if the words "the same or" were stricken out in line 6, it would remove the objections which have been indicated by the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] as nearly as we have a right to expect they could be removed at this time. The very fact that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] indicates a purpose to recognize the policy embodied in the laws of the Southern States upon this subject, where this separation has been brought about, indicates that very commendable progress has been made upon this question. This provision of law would not go as far, in my judgment, as it should; but it goes very much further than anybody on the other side of the Chamber has ever concluded to go before. It permits a carrier to provide equally good accommodations, though some of the carriers have not heretofore been able to do so; and it recognizes to that extent that principle. Though the amendment could be, in my judgment, improved by including specific provisions such as are now found in our State laws, that is really too much to expect at this time. It shows, however, a better understanding of the question, which comes from the general enlightenment of the age and may bring about a better understanding between the two parties hereafter, in recognition of the good sense of the people of the South, who have done so much to solve the problem so far as the Southern States are concerned.

I feel entirely justified in saying that I believe the code of Arkansas on this subject, if it were properly understood, would not be seriously changed in the enactment of this law. The railroad companies have responded to the statutory demands in many respects satisfactorily. There may be exceptional cases arising out of unusual local conditions, but they are very few in number. That may happen under any law. I have, however, heard very little complaint. I see no ground for complaint at all if the words "the same or" be stricken out of this bill. If it is the intention of the Senator from Ohio to do that, I have no disposition to haggle with him if he desires only to provide for equal accommodations. I repeat I think this is a very decided step in the direction of a proper solution of this question.

Mr. FORAKER. Will the Senator favor me with a statement of the amendment which he proposes?

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I propose to strike out of the proposed amendment the words "the same or," where they occur in the sixth line, and also the words "a like and," in line 7, so that it would read:

> For interstate transportation of passengers than it charges, demands, collects, or receives from any other person for equally good accommodations and equally good service.

That would permit railway companies to exercise that discretion, so as to save themselves from being sued for damages or otherwise proceeded against. It does not command them to do it, but gives them permission to do it. It is a recognition of the fact that, in some parts of this great country, there are differences, or at least there are opinions, concerning this question that would seem to justify the law-making power of the different States in providing a system of that kind. If that be done, I can see no objection to the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. FORAKER. If the Senator will allow me to answer the suggestion, he inquired of me why I put in the words "the same or." I did so in order that there might be a standard by which there could be a comparison as to whether or not the service rendered was equally good. The railroads are not required to give the same, but an equally good service.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I would ask my friend from Ohio to leave out the words "the same or," leaving in the words "equally good accommodations," which I think would answer every requirement.

Mr. FORAKER. "Or equally good."

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. "Equally good accommodations."

Mr. FORAKER. Between all classes?

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Yes, sir; "equally good accommodations for all classes" or "any other classes carried on that train" or any term that will make it clear.

Mr. FORAKER. When we get to a place where we can consider that, I will see if I can so frame the language as to meet the Senator's views. I am not disposed to haggle about any words, just so that I get the substance of what I want.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. That is exactly the spirit in which I am discussing this matter. I do not intend to be censorious in trying to obtain what I desire, nor do I wish to indulge in any hypercritical criticism, for, as I have before stated, I regard this as a substantial step in recognition of the fact that experience in my section of the country has shown that this class of legislation has been necessary; and it is that which has created that impression here. Such legislation would not have been possible a few years ago. I am disposed to meet the proposition in a friendly spirit and to do justice to the motives which induce Senators on the other side to make these concessions.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment in the nature of a substitute proposed by the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] to the amendment of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER].

Mr. BERRY and Mr. CULBERSON called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ALDRICH and Mr. LODGE. Let the proposed substitute be again stated.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment in the nature of a substitute will be again stated.

The SECRETARY. In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by Mr. FORAKER, it is proposed to insert:

That no carrier engaged in interstate commerce shall, directly or indirectly, issue or give any free ticket, free pass, or free transportation to any person, except to the officers, agents, employees, and attorneys of the carrier issuing the same, or to ministers of religion, inmates of hospitals, eleemosynary or charitable institutions. Any carrier violating this provision shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall for each offense pay to the United States a penalty of not less than $100 nor more than $2,000.

Mr. CULBERSON. At the suggestion of one or two Senators, I desire to modify the amendment, after the word "attorneys," by inserting the words "exclusively in the service."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The modification will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "attorneys" insert "exclusively in the service."

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I shall vote against this proposed substitute, for the reason that the amendment is not as comprehensive a law as the present statute. The present statute covers the matter more satisfactorily, to my mind, than does this amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll on the amendment, in the nature of a substitute, proposed by the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] to the amendment of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER].

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MORGAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], and therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when Mr. PROCTOR'S name was called). I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. PROCTOR] is necessarily absent. He is paired with the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. MALLORY], who is also necessarily absent.

Mr. SPOONER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. CARMACK], who is absent. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CLARK of Montana (after having voted in the affirmative). I inquire if the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE] has voted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is informed that the senior Senator from Indiana has not voted.

Mr. CLARK of Montana. I have a general pair with that Senator, and therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. GAMBLE (after having voted in the affirmative). I inquire whether the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] has voted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is informed that he has not voted.

Mr. GAMBLE. Then I withdraw my vote, as I have a general pair with that Senator.

The result was announced—yeas 38, nays 35, as follows:

YEAS—38.

Bacon	Dolliver	Long	Rayner
Bailey	Dubois	McCreary	Simmons
Berry	Foster	McEnery	Stone
Blackburn	Frazier	McLaurin	Sutherland
Burkett	Frye	Martin	Taliaferro
Clapp	Gearin	Money	Teller
Clarke, Ark.	Kittredge	Nelson	Tillman
Clay	Knox	Nixon	Warner
Culberson	La Follette	Overman
Daniel	Latimer	Pettus

NAYS—35.

Aldrich	Clark, Wyo.	Fulton	Millard
Alger	Crane	Gallinger	Perkins
Allee	Cullom	Hale	Piles
Ankeny	Dick	Hansbrough	Platt
Brandegee	Dillingham	Hemenway	Scott
Bulkeley	Dryden	Hopkins	Smoot
Burnham	Elkins	Kean	Warren
Burrows	Flint	Lodge	Wetmore
Carter	Foraker	McCumber

NOT VOTING—16.

Allison	Clark, Mont.	Heyburn	Patterson
Beveridge	Depew	Mallory	Penrose
Burton	Gamble	Morgan	Proctor
Carmack	Gorman	Newlands	Spooner

So Mr. CULBERSON'S amendment to the amendment of Mr. FORAKER was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. I offer an amendment to the substitute just offered, which I send to the desk. I ask the attention of the Senator from Texas to the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment is not, in the opinion of the Chair, in order at the present stage of the bill.

Mr. WARREN. May I ask at the present time when it will be in order?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be in order when the bill goes into the Senate. Are there further amendments to section 1?

Mr. NELSON. I rise to a question of order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator will state his point of order.

Mr. NELSON. Is not the question now upon agreeing to the amendment as amended.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator is correct. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Ohio as amended.

Mr. WARREN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President. I inquire what is the parliamentary condition of the amendment now? I understand from the Chair that I can not offer an amendment to the amendment until the bill gets into the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Section 1 is open to further amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. The substitute has not been adopted.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is so much confusion that it is difficult to hear Senators. Will the Senator from Wyoming please state his parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. WARREN. My inquiry is as to the present parliamentary condition of the substitute just adopted. I wish to offer an amendment to it. I understood from the Chair that I must wait until the bill gets in the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair now understands the Senator, which he did not when the inquiry was first made. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Ohio as it has been amended by the substitute proposed by the Senator from Texas.

Mr. WARREN. It is then open to amendment; and I desire to offer an amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understands now——

Mr. CULBERSON. I rise to a question of order, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator will state his question of order.

Mr. CULBERSON. The substitute having been adopted in lieu of the amendment, is not the question now whether section 1 shall be amended by the adoption of the substitute?

Mr. OVERMAN. That is the question which was put.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is an amendment to an amendment.

Mr. CULBERSON. It has been adopted as a substitute in lieu of the proposed amendment, and now, I submit, the question is on the adoption of the substitute as an amendment to section 1.

Mr. WARREN. That is the way I understand it. I now wish to know whether it is still subject to amendment.

Mr. BERRY. It is not open to amendment, I suggest, Mr. President. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as amended, and it is not open to another amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is correct. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. ELKINS obtained the floor.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. ELKINS. Certainly.

Mr. FORAKER. Is it in order now to offer another amendment to section 1?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Section 1 is still open to amendment.

Mr. ELKINS. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to be found on page 147 of the bound copy of amendments.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of section 1, it is proposed to add the following:

It shall be unlawful for any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act, unless authorized by its charter to do so, to engage, directly or indirectly, in the production, manufacture, buying, furnishing, or selling of coal or coke or any other commodity or commodities of commerce in competition with any shipper or producer on its line or lines: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to prevent a carrier from mining coal exclusively for its own use.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the Senator whether it is the purpose of his amendment to prevent a common carrier from engaging in the mining of coal or any other business, if the operations are not conducted upon its own line?

Mr. ELKINS. Mr. President, I want to confine the railroads to the legitimate business for which they are incorporated—the transportation of freight and passengers—and to forbid them engaging in any other business, especially the business of mining, producing, and selling coal or any other commodity on their lines in competition with a shipper.

Mr. GALLINGER. Why does the Senator insert the words "unless authorized by its charter to do so?" Will not that absolutely destroy the potency of the amendment?

Mr. ELKINS. There are a great many ancient charters in the United States——

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me, I move to strike out the words I have indicated.

Mr. ELKINS. I will state, Mr. President, this reason: There are a great many old State charters, some, I think, sixty years old, some fifty, some forty, some thirty, and some more modern, which authorize the railroad companies—common carriers—to engage in other business. It is known to Senators here, and to the country, that there are a great many of what are called "coal-carrying roads," which, when they were first organized and incorporated, were authorized especially to mine and sell coal. Whether or not an act of Congress is competent to interfere with the vested rights of these corporations is a question. Some say that an act of Congress could, under the power of Congress to regulate interstate commerce, prohibit them from carrying on the business of mining and selling coal, and could annul or set aside their charters to that extent. I do not want to bring on any conflict by this amendment. I want to be fair. I do not want to interfere with any vested rights.

Mr. GALLINGER. But, Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. ELKINS. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. Unless some such amendment as I have suggested be adopted it is very manifest that we shall have a certain class of railroads permitted to do this work and a certain other class prohibited from doing it. I think that would be anomalous and a very unjust condition of things.

Mr. ELKINS. As to railroads that are hereafter to be incorporated, I think this would prohibit them from mining and selling coal.

Mr. HOPKINS. Will the Senator allow me a moment?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. ELKINS. Yes.

Mr. HOPKINS. I will suggest to the Senator that the ancient charters of which he speaks were issued by the States, and that this bill deals with interstate traffic. Therefore, the words in the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia suggested to be eliminated by the Senator from New Hampshire should be eliminated, or else, as suggested by the Senator from New Hampshire, a monopoly will be created by excluding some roads, and putting the carrying of interstate commerce and engaging in the coal business with certain railroads that have these privileges under the State charters.

Mr. ELKINS. It is only a legal question as to whether or not it can be done. For my part, if the Senate will agree to the amendment, I will accept the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire, and agree that the words he suggests may be stricken out.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, what are the words which it was agreed should be stricken out?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the words which are proposed to be stricken out.

The SECRETARY. In lines 2 and 3 of the proposed amendment it is proposed to strike out the words "unless authorized by its charter to do so."

Mr. BAILEY. That was a suggestion which I intended to make, but there is a graver objection to this amendment than that. It is unquestionably true that Congress has a right to forbid a carrier engaged in the production of coal and other commodities from engaging in interstate commerce; but Congress has no power to control within a State the production of coal or any other commodity. The Senator from West Virginia has not, in my opinion, phrased his amendment so as to make it valid. Instead of forbidding any common carrier who is producing these commodities to engage in interstate commerce, the prohibition ought to be against any carrier producing these commodities engaging in interstate commerce.

In other words, the question of the production of coal or of any other commodity is beyond the jurisdiction of the Congress, but who shall be permitted to engage in interstate commerce is wholly for the General Government to decide. I suggest to the Senator from West Virginia, who undoubtedly wants to make his amendment effective, that he change the prohibition by making it read "that no common carrier engaged in the production or distribution of these commodities shall be permitted to engage in interstate commerce." Then he will have an amendment that will hold beyond all doubt.

Mr. ELKINS. I do not agree with the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY]. It seems to me the language of the amendment is plain and unmistakable and that it meets the objection raised by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER]. What I am aiming to do is to prohibit interstate roads, carriers of interstate commerce, from engaging in or doing any other business than the transportation of freight and passengers.

Mr. BAILEY. But the Senator forgets that a railroad is not subject to the jurisdiction of Congress because it engages in State commerce. It is only subject to the jurisdiction of Congress when it does engage in interstate commerce. For instance, the Pennsylvania Railroad, running from New York to St. Louis, is only subject to the jurisdiction of the Federal Government in respect to those transactions which are interstate, and the Federal Congress has absolutely no power over a transaction begun and concluded within a State through which it runs. The Federal Government has no power to say whether this railroad shall produce coal or iron, or whether it shall manufacture either or both in the State of Pennsylvania or in any other State; but the Federal Government does have a right to say that a railroad which is engaged in producing these commodities and in distributing them on its own account shall not be permitted to engage in interstate commerce. That is the whole power of the Federal Government.

Mr. ELKINS. I think it is clearly expressed in the amendment, which reads:

It shall be unlawful for any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act, unless authorized by its charter to do so, to engage, directly or indirectly, in the production, manufacture, buying, furnishing, or selling of coal or coke or any other commodity or commodities of commerce in competition with any shipper or producer on its line or lines, etc.

Mr. President, I want to get this amendment in such shape that it will stop an evil or an abuse that obtains in West Virginia, Pennsylvania, and other coal-mining States. The Supreme Court of the United States, in a recent opinion in a case coming up from West Virginia, decided that under the existing law railroads can not engage in the mining, manufacturing, and selling of coal.

Mr. BAILEY. They did not decide that.

Mr. ELKINS. They intimated it strongly.

Mr. BAILEY. They did not decide it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. ELKINS. He has already said what he wanted to, I hope.

Mr. BAILEY. I want the Senator from West Virginia to be right as we go along.

Mr. ELKINS. I understand what the Senator means. I do not mean to say that they have decided it definitely, but they intimated in a way that is notice to the country and to Congress and to everybody concerned that the railroads were not empowered to produce and sell coal. I thought, following that intimation, it would be better to put into the statutes of the United States a positive prohibition that railroads should not engage in the mining and manufacture and production and selling of coal and coke, and that they should be confined to the legitimate business for which they were chartered, to wit, the transportation of freight and passengers. I do not see how there can be any objection to this, and I do not quite comprehend the Senator's legal objection. I do not want to reverse the wording of this at all. It seems to me it is plain on its face. It shall be unlawful for any carrier of interstate commerce or interstate railroad to do what? To engage in certain kinds of business. If Congress has not jurisdiction over interstate railroads, then all this talk for weary months is vain, stale, flat, and unprofitable.

Mr. BAILEY. The jurisdiction of Congress is over interstate commerce and not over a carrier, whose line happens to extend across two States, except as to interstate transportation.

The jurisdiction of Congress is complete over a line wholly within a State as to interstate-commerce transactions.

Mr. ELKINS. I understand that distinction. But under the recent acts of Congress and the decisions of the courts, you can hardly get a line that is wholly within a State, that is altogther a State line, or intrastate line, because the decisions of the court are to the effect that if products are carried out of the State in which they are produced the road becomes an interstate road, and Congress would have jurisdiction.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator from West Virginia allow me to make a statement?

Mr. ELKINS. Yes.

Mr. NELSON. I think the Senator from Texas is entirely correct. The Supreme Court in the Knight case—the sugar-refining case—with which all lawyers are familiar, decided that the authority of the United States did not extend to the mere manufacture or production; that it only related to the transportation of commerce between the different States; that where it related wholly to a matter of the manufacture and production in a given State it was completely under the jurisdiction of the State. I think the objection of the Senator from Texas is well taken, and unless you amend it as suggested by the Senator your amendment will be of no avail to you in the court.

Mr. BAILEY. Let me state this case to the Senator from West Virginia, in order to illustrate it. Suppose you should make it an indictable offense for the carriers subject to the provisions of this act to produce coal, and suppose you indicted them in the Federal courts. The proof is they were producing coal in the State of West Virginia. The Federal court would instantly say there is no power in the Federal Government to punish such a crime. The Federal Government can not regulate the production or the manufacture of any article within any State, and it seems to me—I may be mistaken about it, but if I am I am very egregiously mistaken, if I am mistaken at all, for it seems to me too plain for argument—that the Senator from West Virginia has attempted to prohibit what we have no power to prohibit, and he omits to prohibit what we may clearly prohibit.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. LODGE. Oh, no. I will wait until the Senator is through.

Mr. CLAPP. If the Senator will pardon me, it would seem wise——

Mr. ELKINS. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. CLAPP. I would suggest some such amendment as you have in your hand.

Mr. ELKINS. As an amendment to the amendment or as a substitute?

Mr. CLAPP. As a substitute.

Mr. ELKINS. I want to ask the attention of the Senator from Texas to this language. Would it cover the point he makes?

Mr. BAILEY. I read it hurriedly, but I think it does.

Mr. CLAPP. If it does not, it can be easily amended.

Mr. ELKINS. I will read it:

It shall be unlawful for any common carrier engaged in the production, manufacture, buying, furnishing, or selling, directly or indirectly, of coal, coke, or any other commodity of commerce, to engage in interstate commerce: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to prevent a carrier from mining coal or furnishing or producing other commodities exclusively for its own use.

Will that meet the Senator's objection?

Mr. BAILEY. I think it does.

Mr. CLAY. I desire to ask the Senator from West Virginia whether he provides any penalty for a violation of this law? If the amendment offered by the Senator from West Virginia simply makes it unlawful to do a certain thing and then does not fix any penalty, the law in reality will have no effect.

Mr. ELKINS. On that point I will say that the general penalty clause of section 10 will cover this very case. I call the Senator's attention to section 10. It provides a penalty for anything done contrary to, or anything omitted to be done required by, the interstate-commerce act.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. ELKINS. For the purpose of offering an amendment?

Mr. LODGE. I want to suggest this form of amendment. It is not in order, but I should like to have it read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The proposed amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "lines," in line 6 of the proposed amendment, add the following:

And any common carrier who shall violate this provision shall be debarred from taking part in interstate commerce.

Mr. ELKINS. I ask that the amendment I sent up, suggested by the Senator from Minnesota, be read at the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the amendment proposed by the Senator from West Virginia.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of section 1, after the amendment already adopted at that place, the following words:

It shall be unlawful for any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act to engage, directly or indirectly, in the production, manufacture, buying, furnishing, or selling of coal or coke or any other commodity or commodities of commerce in competition with any shipper or producer on its line or lines: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to prevent a carrier from mining coal exclusively for its own use.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is the original.

Mr. ELKINS. That is the original. Let the Secretary read the one he has in his hand, suggested by the Senator from Minnesota.

The Secretary read as follows:

It shall be unlawful for any common carrier engaged in the production, manufacture, buying, furnishing, or selling, directly or indirectly, of coal, coke, or any other commodity of commerce, to engage in interstate commerce: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to prevent a carrier from mining coal or furnishing or producing other commodities exclusively for its own use.

Mr. ELKINS. I wish to ask the Senator from Texas a question. Does this substitute, offered by the Senator from Minnesota, meet the objection raised by the Senator from Texas?

Mr. BAILEY. The amendment——

Mr. ELKINS. Just read at the desk.

Mr. BAILEY. I think it does.

I will say I have not much confidence in work that is done in a hurry, even when I do it myself. But reading that hastily, I think it does not only provide against the evil, but does so in a way clearly within the power of Congress.

Mr. LODGE. I should like to have my amendment read again.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will again state the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts.

The SECRETARY. In the print of the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS], in line 6, after the word "lines," it is proposed to insert:

And any common carrier who shall violate this provision shall be debarred from taking part in interstate commerce.

Mr. KNOX. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Massachusetts, who, I understand, proposed this modification of the amendment, by what process he proposes to ascertain the violation of the law, and how he proposes to enforce the penalty of nonadmission to the channels of interstate commerce?

Mr. ALDRICH. I should like to have the last proposition of the Senator from West Virginia again read.

Mr. ELKINS. The substitute?

Mr. ALDRICH. Yes.

Mr. ELKINS. The substitute offered by the Senator from Minnesota.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. The Senator from West Virginia modifies his original amendment so as to read as follows:

It shall be unlawful for any common carrier engaged in the production, manufacture, buying, furnishing, or selling, directly or indirectly, of coal, coke, or any other commodity of commerce to engage in interstate commerce: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to prevent a carrier from mining coal or furnishing or producing other commodities exclusively for its own use.

Mr. DANIEL. I beg to ask that the amendment may be sent me.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. ELKINS. I have the floor.

Mr. DANIEL. I beg pardon.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator from West Virginia has expired.

Mr. ELKINS. I did not get to say anything I wanted to say.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. DANIEL. I want to make a few remarks about this amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. DANIEL. I did not hear what the Senator said.

Mr. McCUMBER. I did not understand the Senator.

Mr. DANIEL. I had just taken the floor to speak to this amendment. I did not hear what the Senator from North Dakota said.

Mr. McCUMBER. I should like to ask a question, and the Senator can answer it at the same time, if that is satisfactory to the Senator.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. DANIEL. I yield for a question.

Mr. McCUMBER. I simply wish to place this proposition before the Senate. Suppose the mining is done in a State, and the coal is sold in the same State, and in a State which does not prohibit it. Has Congress any authority to prevent a railway which does that from engaging in interstate commerce?

That is exactly what this amendment does, if it does anything. I do not anticipate that we can prevent a railway doing business in interstate commerce simply because it is doing some act wholly within a State that is not prohibited by the laws of that State.

Mr. DANIEL. I beg to request that the first amendment offered by the Senator from West Virginia be sent to me.

Mr. President, it was with respect to the identical question that the Senator from North Dakota has addressed to me that I desire to say a few words about this amendment. It is my desire that when an amendment is put in the bill on this subject it shall be an effective one, and the end I would subserve would be this, to prevent those railroads which are engaged also in mining from carrying their own product to market in competition with the shippers who have to pay to get to market.

Now, as it would seem to me, and as it has seemed also to strike the mind of the Senator from North Dakota, this amendment would not accomplish that purpose. There are two propositions in this amendment. First:

It shall be unlawful for any common carrier engaged in the production, manufacture, furnishing, or selling, directly or indirectly, of coal, coke, or any other commodity of commerce to engage in interstate commerce.

Now, what does that mean?

There are some States of this Union, including the State of West Virginia, in which some of the railroads have lawful authority from the State to engage in mining, manufacturing, furnishing, and selling of coal and coke, and as long as they exercise their charter within the scope of the sovereignty which has granted it it does not strike my mind that it is within the power of Congress or of any other power to interfere with their lawful undertaking.

Provided—

Says this amendment—

That nothing in this act shall be construed to prevent a carrier from mining coal or furnishing or producing other commodities exclusively for its own use.

I see no use whatsoever of putting in the second proviso. We do not undertake to interfere with any things except those which we mention, and there is no use in putting in things that we do not propose to interfere with. But the main proposition and the gravamen of this first declaration, I fear, will be a vain one. What is sought to be aimed at is the transportation of articles produced by a common carrier in interstate commerce in competition with articles which are bought by shippers or are delivered to the railroads for carriage by customers. How can Congress avail that purpose by attempting to deny the right of a carrier which is engaged in a lawful occupation, under the charter of a State, from engaging in interstate commerce at all?

It seems to me that the amendment takes hold of the subject by the wrong handle and puts its interdict on the wrong thing. It is the transportation of such things in interstate commerce, not engaging in interstate commerce at all, to which it seems to me the aim of Congress should be directed. If the amendment would say in so many words that no carrier shall transport in interstate commerce articles of which it is itself the producer or the manufacturer, that would reach it, if Congress can reach it.

I concur in the remarks which the Senator from Texas has made, and they are very clear, with respect to the amendment in the form in which it was first offered by the Senator from West Virginia. There was excepted from the amendment the very companies which are the source of the competition which Congress desires to reach—the companies that are chartered by States and with which we have nothing to do in so far as they operate within those States. The exception would simply have solidified and continued a practice which it is the desire of some in Congress to prevent, and I fear if we were to take hold of this matter by this handle we would find that we had exceeded our power in putting an absolute inhibition upon engagement in interstate commerce at all upon those companies which at home are exercising a legitimate and legal calling. But, on the other hand, if we can do this it can only be done by interdicting interstate-commerce transportation by a carrier of articles produced, manufactured, or mined by itself to come in competition with those of its shippers.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I fail to see the force of the argument of the Senator from Virginia, much as I dislike to take issue with him. If Congress can interdict the carrying by a carrier of an article that the carrier mined in the State, and under State law was lawfully engaged in doing so, it is because the carrier took its charter under the State law subject to the reserve power in Congress to regulate that carrier when it comes to interstate commerce. There can be no question——

Mr. DANIEL. Will the Senator allow me to put an illustration before him in order to define better what my meaning is?

Mr. CLAPP. Yes.

Mr. DANIEL. Suppose a carrier, we will say, in Maryland, was engaged in mining coal and in manufacturing iron, both. Suppose its only transactions in mining coal and selling it and in manufacturing iron were within Maryland, and suppose its only interstate transactions were those that were absolutely unimpeachable, and that it did not in interstate commerce engage in any practice whatsoever that was subject to criticism. You would thereby inhibit it from going on with perfectly legitimate relations to the Federal Government when it had not obtruded into interstate commerce a thing that was objectionable, and was merely doing what at home was entirely legitimate and in accordance with State law. Now, then, instead of doing that——

Mr. CLAPP. If the Senator will pardon me, we are limited to fifteen minutes each. I have no objection to the question——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Minnesota declines to yield further.

Mr. CLAPP. What I was going to say was that no matter how legal the business of the corporation might be in Maryland under the laws of Maryland, the only ground upon which Congress could prohibit the carriage of those commodities, which the carrier itself produces, is under the power of Congress to regulate interstate traffic; and if we can lay a prohibition upon that which is produced by a carrier, under a State charter, which authorizes the production of that commodity, then we can lay any prohibition we please upon that carrier when it comes to interstate commerce.

The difficulty with the Senator's position, it seems to me, is here. We are face to face now with one of the gravest questions involved in this whole legislation, and we have a right to invoke law which not only seeks to prohibit, but seeks to prohibit by a penalty for the violation of that prohibition. We can say this to a carrier, taking its charter under a State law, for no matter what that charter contains it was taken subject to the power of Congress to regulate that carrier the moment it engaged in interstate traffic and regulate it as to interstate traffic. It seems to me we ought to make that as strong as possible, by not only prohibiting that carrier from carrying products which it has itself mined or produced, but also a prohibition upon that carrier exercising the right of commerce under Federal regulation.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. CLAPP. Certainly.

Mr. FULTON. I want to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. KEAN. We can not hear the Senator.

Mr. FULTON. I do not wish to take the floor. I desire simply to ask the Senator from Minnesota a question. Can Congress, in the exercise of the power to regulate interstate commerce, so exercise it as to practically regulate intrastate or purely domestic commerce within a State, unless it is necessary to do so in the exercise of the power of regulating interstate commerce? Does not the proposition which the Senator is advocating amount practically to a regulation of purely State or intrastate commerce as distinguished from interstate commerce?

Mr. CLAPP. It regulates in the last analysis the mining, buying, and selling of commodities by railroads, and if, in the exercise of our power, we do that which prohibits or prevents their exercising that right, it is an incident to the exercise of power by Congress—it is not the objective point, but it is the incident—and it must yield to the higher power of Congress, provided, as we have assumed here, that Congress can regulate interstate commerce. I repeat, if Congress, in the exercise of that power, can successfully prohibit the carrying by this carrier of coal which it has mined under a charter which authorizes it so to do within the State, we can, in the exercise of our power to prevent that wrong, go further and say that that carrier, while so engaged in that work, shall not participate in the benefits of interstate traffic. I feel, Mr. President, there can be no question as to the legality of that position.

Mr. FULTON. I should like to say a word. I concede that if it becomes necessary, in order to exercise the power of regulating interstate commerce, to incidentally interfere with the domestic commerce of the State, it is within the province of Congress to do it. But I submit that Congress can not, under the pretense of regulating interstate commerce, interfere with the domestic commerce of a State, any more than a State can, under a pretense of regulating its own commerce or interstate commerce, interfere with or regulate interstate commerce.

Mr. CLAPP. That is not accurate. If in the regulation of rates for interstate traffic under the power of Congress the matter should reach that point where there was a conflict between the rates prescribed by Congress or Congressional machinery and the State rates, in that controversy the State rate must yield to the interstate rate. That is the underlying principle of the authority of Congress to regulate interstate traffic.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, the evil sought to be remedied by this amendment is one as to the existence of which there can be no question. I think it has relation principally to the mining of coal. Companies engaged in interstate transportation, even though engaged lawfully in the States in mining and producing coal, have been able to freeze out independent operators. They have been able thereby to diminish the output of a necessary of life, and to put upon consumers throughout the country a price to suit their own will. That ought to be remedied. But the Senator who believes that it is a subject free from difficulty and intricacy I think makes a very grave mistake. It requires much thought, more thought, I think, than has been bestowed upon it in the preparation of this amendment.

There was great wisdom in the observations of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL], because we want to be careful, I think, in striking at this evil and penalizing the interstate traffic of such a corporation so far as is necessary to eliminate the evil, not to punish the people and the cities and villages along the line.

What we want to accomplish, it seems to me, is to prevent the transportation in interstate commerce of the commodities referred to in this amendment—coal, if you please, or coke—but to say, going beyond that, that the carrier shall not engage in interstate commerce at all, that he shall not carry freight, that he shall not carry passengers to and from sections of the country, may be striking with a very heavy hand at hundreds of thousands of people along the line and at cities and terminal points and points midway along the line. That is what this amendment would do if adopted. It would say to the carrier, though permitted by the law of the State to mine coal, "If you do not abandon that business you shall not carry a passenger from State to State; you shall not carry any freight from State to State." That punishes the carrier, but it punishes the people.

I rose simply to suggest whether it is not the practicable remedy, and as far as Congress may safely go, to prohibit a carrier so situated from transporting from State to State to a market the product of which it is the producer. I take it that that will be less objectionable from the standpoint of the law than this broad provision which penalizes all the traffic for the purpose of preventing some of it. I suggest whether the object might not be accomplished by prohibiting the transportation from State to State by any such carrier of the commodity which it produces in competition with people along its line.

Mr. McLAURIN. Mr. President, I offer an amendment which I think will cover the objection which has been made. I am inclined to believe that Congress has the power to prevent a common carrier from engaging in any kind of interstate commerce so far as carriage is concerned, as a penalty for any act that Congress may think objectionable to the welfare of the country. But I doubt whether Congress has the right to say that anybody, whether an artificial person or an actual person, can be prohibited from engaging in interstate commerce.

The amendment prohibits those engaged in the mining or production of coal or coke or other commodities from engaging in interstate commerce of any kind. I think the amendment would be unobjectionable if after the words "interstate commerce" it added "as a common carrier of articles and commodities of its own production, mining, or manufacture." I do not think that because a railroad company is engaged in the mining of coal it should be prohibited from engaging in any kind of interstate commerce as a common carrier or in hauling the United States mail. I do not think the mere fact that a common carrier is engaged in the mining of coal should preclude that common carrier from carrying flour, or meal, or meat, or wheat, or any other commodity except the one in the production of which it is engaged.

Therefore I think the amendment is a good amendment with the addition I have sent to the desk, and I ask that it shall be read.

Mr. ELKINS. Let it be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Is there not an amendment to the amendment already pending?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is an amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts to the amendment.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Then another amendment is not in order.

Mr. LODGE. It is to be read for the information of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read merely for the information of the Senate.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. It is not then now offered?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It can not be offered now.

Mr. CULLOM. Let it be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment intended to be proposed by the Senator from Mississippi to the amendment will be read for the information of the Senate.

The SECRETARY. Amendment intended to be proposed to the substitute offered by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS]. After the words "interstate commerce" insert "as a common carrier of articles and commodities of its own production, mining, or manufacture;" so that if amended it will read:

It shall be unlawful for any common carrier engaged in the production, manufacture, buying, furnishing, or selling, directly or indirectly, of coal or coke or any other commodity of commerce to engage in interstate commerce as a common carrier of articles and commodities of its own production, mining, or manufacture: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to prevent a carrier from mining coal or producing other commodities exclusively for its own use.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. McLAURIN] is undoubtedly an excellent one if it is the desire of the Senate to go no further than that; and I can see that there may, as suggested both by the Senator from Mississippi and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER], a grave difficulty arise out of a total prohibition of interstate transportation on the part of a carrier engaged in the prohibited enterprises. But my own opinion is that in practical effect no serious embarrassment will grow out of it, because the moment you forbid a common carrier engaged in the production of these commodities to engage in interstate commerce, the interstate commerce being more valuable to it than the production of commodities, it would at once desist from further transactions included in the prohibition.

There is a danger that under the amendment suggested by the Senator from Mississippi a railroad which owns large coal fields in Pennsylvania or in West Virginia will continue in the production of coal, and distributing the coal produced by itself within the State of its production, then continue to transport coal produced by other collieries for interstate commerce. So it might happen that the amendment, if limited, might not be adequate to the correction of the evil.

I have no kind of doubt, since the decision in the Lottery Ticket case, that Congress can absolutely prohibit interstate commerce. Before that case I would have doubted it, because I never have believed that the power to regulate included the power to destroy, though I do understand that the power to destroy includes the power to regulate. But as long as the Lottery case stands as the final expression from the Supreme Court, it looks to me like we can not safely say that Congress exceeds its power when it absolutely prohibits interstate commerce.

If a State in this Union creates a corporation and endows it with powers and faculties contrary to the general public good, I have no question that under the decisions of the Supreme Court Congress may prevent that corporation from engaging in commerce among the States and with foreign nations. If the States have chartered railroads, and if they have expressed in their charters that the railroads may also engage in business other than that of a common carrier, we can simply confine the creature of the State to the boundaries of the State and protect all other States from the injury which would result from combining transportation with production in any form.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. BAILEY. I do.

Mr. ALDRICH. Has the Senator from Texas any doubt but that the remedy suggested by the Senator from Mississippi would be effective? It seems to me there can be no doubt about that. In all the cases I know of which have been brought to our attention coal and the other commodities are necessarily articles which must go into interstate commerce, and in order to go into interstate commerce they must be transported by the railroad companies themselves. Therefore, I think the prohibition suggested by the Senator from Mississippi would be found to be one that would practically stop the practice. It seems to me there can be no doubt about that.

Mr. BAILEY. I would like to annihilate the practice. I want a common carrier to engage in the business of a common carrier, and I want that common carrier to leave the business of all other men alone. I know I am not more earnestly in favor of that than the Senator from Mississippi, and, as he has given this matter very great attention, I am sure he thinks that his amendment is sufficient to correct the abuses which have become so gross as to provoke universal condemnation.

I had supposed that this is one correction upon which all Senators would agree, because I have not during this prolonged discussion heard any Senator express any opposition to the divorce between the business of a common carrier and the business of a miner, a manufacturer, or a producer. I have assumed that there would be no controversy about it and I have therefore given it no attention. I first participated in the debate because it seemed to me that the amendment as proposed was fatally defective, Congress having no power at all over the ownership of land and the operation of mines, but plenary power over interstate commerce.

It may be a sufficient protection for the people against these abuses to interdict the transportation of the commodities which a carrier produces; but while that may be, I know the other will be sufficient, and I should like to make the prohibition as broad as the practice and eradicate the evil at once and for all time.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] asked me a question when I introduced my amendment, which was intended to cover the point just made by the Senator from Texas. I want, if possible, to break up absolutely and finally this ownership and operation of other businesses by the common carrier. I have assumed that railroads entered into interstate commerce solely on the conditions and by the permission of the Government of the United States. I have assumed that we could prohibit their engaging in interstate commerce if they violated the provisions that we laid down.

As for the manner in which we should enforce it, I assume that we should enforce it as we enforce every other order made by the Commission. A question of this sort would come before the Commission, and the Commission would be bound, under the law, to make an order that they should not engage in interstate commerce because, having violated the provisions of the statute by carrying on the coal or coke business, and then the order would be enforced in the manner provided in the act. I know of no other way in which to get at it. Very possibly in practice the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi will reach the difficulty, but I should think it much safer to put an absolute prohibition upon it and bring to an end finally the operation of other great businesses by the common carrier.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I think when Senators consider this question a little more they will find that there are other sides to it which will add to its perplexities. Granting that all of us are earnestly desirous of accomplishing the result of divorcing production and transportation—and I have heard no objection to it, stated in a general way like that, from any source—the more you consider it the more troublesome it grows. At least that has been my experience, and I have been thinking a great deal about it, and I have had suggestions from various sources. I have asked half a dozen great lawyers to suggest amendments; each and every one of them differ; and as yet I have not been able to get any satisfactory solution so far as my own mind goes.

Now, I will state some of my perplexities. This amendment deals with the three great problems: First, of monopoly—the railroad controlling coal lands and freezing out competitors who are engaged in the business as private owners. Second, it deals with the question of discrimination—preventing a fair deal between the private owner and the railroad by distribution of cars and access to market. It also deals with the more perplexing question or idea of the destruction of private rights and private interests.

For instance, suppose we should limit the engaging in interstate commerce of a public carrier to the production by others, forbidding transport beyond the State line of any article which he himself was producing, what would become of that class of cases or those conditions in some region where the country is sparsely settled and where there is a great lumbering industry—that is, a great deal of lumber standing in trees? I have known half a dozen railroads in the South, in my own limited scope of view, that have been built entirely and solely for the purpose of hauling out the lumber from the swamps and backwoods to get it to market; and but for the fact that the lumbermen built their own road they absolutely would have had no market for their product.

Take coal. Go into West Virginia and you find in some of those coves and backwoods large and rich deposits of coal which will lie there—I will not pretend to guess how long, but fifty or a hundred years—undeveloped and unproductive, lacking in value to the present owners, if you say to a company, "You shall not buy this coal and construct a road to market your coal and get it out so as to put it on the market." So you will put a ban on those lands and they will lie there useless.

I take West Virginia as an illustration, because I have had a great many communications from down there complaining about the discrimination and injustice of the Baltimore and Ohio and the Chesapeake and Ohio in their dealings with private operators. Lots of those people have been bottled up, but those little roads have been built primarily for the purpose of getting to the through roads or interstate-commerce roads. While they will transport small quantities of other products, they will build primarily and solely for the purpose of marketing the coal which they have bought, and without the coal there would have been no road, and without the road the coal is valueless. So if you say a man who undertakes to build his own road solely for the purpose of marketing his own coal shall not continue to run the railroad, you put up a barrier to his utilization of his own property.

As I said, you can not have any sweeping and general provision here without doing serious injury somewhere. The more I think about it the more I consider the condition in the anthracite field where this coal monopoly already exists, where the five railroads penetrating the anthracite field have absolute domination over every ton of coal and have parceled out the product and fixed the price. You see the perplexity and the difficulty of legislating along this line without seriously jeopardizing somebody's interests.

Now, I want to stop it. I want Senators to consider seriously the various aspects and difficulties involved. While the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MCLAURIN] will go a long way toward helping, it will itself bottle up and destroy private interests in ownership in coal lands which can never be utilized or reach the market unless the man who owns the land shall also be allowed to build a railroad to get to market.

So, Senators, you will not quickly dispose of it in any wise and judicious way. By careful consideration we may be able to discover a method by which we can accomplish what we seek to do, but unless we are very cautious we will make a mistake, and we had better go not quite far enough than to go too far.

Mr. ELKINS. Mr. President, I am gratified that this has attracted so much attention.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Before the Senator begins his remarks, I should like to suggest to him a form of amendment to his amendment, that it may be considered during his time:

No carrier of interstate commerce shall engage in any other business except the carriage of passengers and freight for hire: Provided, That said carrier may mine or make fuel exclusively for its own purposes.

I should like to ask the Senator from West Virginia and the Senator from Minnesota whether that does not, in the fullest way, cover not only those engaging in the business of coal mining, but every other possible business?

Mr. ELKINS. Mr. President, I think the suggestion of the Senator is broad and very comprehensive.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I give notice that I shall offer that amendment to the amendment in the morning.

Mr. ELKINS. I have drawn the amendment two or three times and at the advice of good lawyers. The amendment suggested by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MCLAURIN] seems to find favor with the good lawyers of the Senate. I am willing to accept an amendment in any form that will correct this great abuse, because it has become the fashion of late for interstate roads to engage in the owning, mining, and selling of coal, which leads to the crushing out, as stated by the Senator from South Carolina, of independent operators.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair would remind the Senator from West Virginia that he has already occupied the floor.

Mr. ELKINS. On the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi I have not said a word.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator has not spoken to that amendment.

Mr. ELKINS. I am speaking now to the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator is in order upon that amendment.

Mr. ELKINS. Mr. President——

Mr. MCCUMBER. I do not know whether or not the Senator is through, but I only desire to make one suggestion.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I wish to offer an amendment as a substitute for the pending amendment which I think will reach the matter. I ask that the amendment may be read.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, there have been a number of amendments offered, and I suggest that they be printed and go over until tomorrow, so that we may have an opportunity to consider them. There is an amendment by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. McLAURIN]; one by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL], and another to be offered by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE]. If they are printed we can then have an opportunity to examine them, and I think we shall be shortening our work by doing so.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL] proposes an amendment in the nature of a substitute for the pending amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to substitute for the pending amendment the following:

It shall be unlawful for any common carrier to transport from one State, Territory, or district of the United States to another State, Territory, or district of the United States or to any foreign country any article of commodity whatever which may be owned by it or in which it has any interest, excepting such as are necessary for its own use in its business as a carrier and not intended for sale, barter, or commercial traffic of any sort.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be printed and laid upon the table, in the absence of objection.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. CLAY. Will the Senator withhold the motion for a moment that I may offer an amendment?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President, I desire to offer—although I know it is not in order at this time—a substitute to the amendment offered by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS]. I simply ask to have it printed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The proposed substitute offered by the Senator from Georgia will be printed, as will all the amendments which have been proposed and are pending, and the amendment will lie upon the table.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to be printed and lie upon the table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be printed and lie upon the table, in the absence of objection.

Mr. FORAKER. I understand there is nothing further at present to be considered, and I give notice that I will offer the amendment which I now send to the desk.

Mr. TELLER (to Mr. FORAKER). Have it printed.

Mr. FORAKER. I will offer the amendment now, and ask that it may be printed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The proposed amendment will be ordered to be printed and lie upon the table.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. GALLINGER. I renew my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After sixteen minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until tomorrow, Tuesday, May 8, 1906, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate May 7, 1906.

PROMOTIONS IN THE ARMY.

Lieut. Col. James B. Quinn, Corps of Engineers, to be colonel from May 5, 1906, vice Suter, retired from active service.

Maj. George McC. Derby, Corps of Engineers, to be lieutenant-colonel from May 5, 1906, vice Quinn, promoted.

Capt. Clement A. F. Flagler, Corps of Engineers, to be major from May 5, 1906, vice Derby, promoted.

First Lieut. Gustave R. Lukesh, Corps of Engineers, to be captain from May 5, 1906, vice Flagler, promoted.

Second Lieut. Robert P. Howell, jr., Corps of Engineers, to be first lieutenant from May 5, 1906, vice Lukesh, promoted.

APPOINTMENT IN THE NAVY.

Abraham H. Allen, a citizen of Pennsylvania, to be an assistant surgeon in the Navy from the 2d day of May, 1906, to fill a vacancy existing in that grade on that date.

PROMOTIONS IN THE NAVY.

Gunner Conrad W. Ljungquist to be a chief gunner in the Navy from the 10th day of March, 1906, upon the completion of six years' service, in accordance with the provisions of an act of Congress approved March 3, 1899, as amended by the act of April 27, 1904

Midshipman Bradford Barnette to be an ensign in the Navy from the 2d day of February, 1906, to fill a vacancy existing in that grade on that date.

REGISTER OF THE LAND OFFICE.

J. J. Payne, of Des Moines, Iowa, to be register of the land office at Des Moines, Iowa, vice Thornton S. Howard, term expired and resigned.

POSTMASTERS.

GEORGIA.

Stephen B. Vaughn to be postmaster at Augusta, in the county of Richmond and State of Georgia, in place of Edward D. Smythe. Incumbent's commission expired January 21, 1906.

INDIANA.

Walter G. Bridges to be postmaster at Greenfield, in the county of Hancock and State of Indiana, in place of Newton R. Spencer. Incumbent's commission expires June 5, 1906.

J. Albert Spekenhire to be postmaster at Richmond, in the county of Wayne and State of Indiana, in place of Daniel Surface. Incumbent's commission expires June 5, 1906.

Luther Worl to be postmaster at Matthews, in the county of Grant and State of Indiana, in place of Frank Smiley. Incumbent's commission expired March 15, 1906.

INDIAN TERRITORY.

John McL. Dorchester to be postmaster at Pauls Valley, District Seventeen, Indian Territory, in place of John McL. Dorchester. Incumbent's commission expired April 2, 1906.

KANSAS.

Lavelle H. Boyd to be postmaster at Russell, in the county of Russell and State of Kansas, in place of Lavelle H. Boyd. Incumbent's commission expires June 30, 1906.

KENTUCKY.

George M. Crider to be postmaster at Marion, in the county of Crittenden and State of Kentucky, in place of George M. Crider. Incumbent's commission expired January 13, 1906.

L. W. Key to be postmaster at Mayfield, in the county of Graves and State of Kentucky, in place of James H. Happy. Incumbent's commission expires May 14, 1906.

Samuel T. Moore to be postmaster at Princeton, in the county of Caldwell and State of Kentucky, in place of Samuel T. Moore. Incumbent's commission expired February 28, 1906.

MASSACHUSETTS.

Louise G. Newton to be postmaster at South Ashburnham, in the county of Worcester and State of Massachusetts, in place of Wilbur F. Whitney, resigned.

MICHIGAN.

William S. Linton to be postmaster at Saginaw, in the county of Saginaw and State of Michigan, in place of William S. Linton. Incumbent's commission expired March 31, 1906.

Henry D. Northway to be postmaster at Midland, in the county of Midland and State of Michigan, in place of Henry D. Northway. Incumbent's commission expires July 1, 1906.

MINNESOTA.

Kee Wakefield to be postmaster at Hutchinson, in the county of McLeod and State of Minnesota, in place of Kee Wakefield. Incumbent's commission expires May 8, 1906.

MISSOURI.

Willis E. Flanders to be postmaster at Paris, in the county of Monroe and State of Missouri, in place of Willis E. Flanders. Incumbent's commission expired January 22, 1906.

Joseph H. Smith to be postmaster at Warrensburg, in the county of Johnson and State of Missouri, in place of Nellie S. Van Matre, resigned.

Isaac N. Strawn to be postmaster at Hopkins, in the county of Nodaway and State of Missouri, in place of Isaac N. Strawn. Incumbent's commission expires June 28, 1906.

MONTANA.

Edward A. Winstanley, of Montana, to be receiver of public moneys at Missoula, Mont., to take effect May 21, 1906, at the expiration of his term. (Reappointment.)

NEBRASKA.

John R. Hays to be postmaster at Norfolk, in the county of Madison and State of Nebraska, in place of John R. Hays. Incumbent's commission expires May 19, 1906.

NEW HAMPSHIRE.

Addison H. Frizzell to be postmaster at Groveton, in the county of Coos and State of New Hampshire, in place of Addison H. Frizzell. Incumbent's commission expires June 11, 1906.

NEW JERSEY.

Henry B. Hagerman to be postmaster at Mahwah, in the county of Bergen and State of New Jersey. Office became Presidential January 1, 1906.

Carl L. Richter to be postmaster at Fort Lee, in the county of Bergen and State of New Jersey. Office became Presidential January 1, 1906.

NEW MEXICO.

Dora W. Howard to be postmaster at San Marcial, in the county of Socorro and Territory of New Mexico. Office became Presidential April 1, 1906.

NEW YORK.

Edward T. Cole to be postmaster at Garrison, in the county of Putnam and State of New York, in place of Edward T. Cole. Incumbent's commission expires July 1, 1906.

David O. Williams to be postmaster at Mount Vernon, in the county of Westchester and State of New York, in place of David O. Williams. Incumbent's commission expires June 24, 1906.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Patrick J. O'Brien to be postmaster at Durham, in the county of Durham and State of North Carolina, in place of Patrick J. O'Brien. Incumbent's commission expires May 19, 1906.

Joshua P. Jessup to be postmaster at Hertford, in the county of Perquimans and State of North Carolina, in place of Joshua P. Jessup. Incumbent's commission expires June 27, 1906.

Joseph G. Walser to be postmaster at Lexington, in the county of Davidson and State of North Carolina, in place of Joseph G. Walser. Incumbent's commission expired March 24, 1906.

NORTH DAKOTA.

Henry F. Speiser to be postmaster at Fessenden, in the county of Wells and State of North Dakota, in place of Homer A. Jackson, resigned.

OHIO.

George G. Sedgwick to be postmaster at Martins Ferry, in the county of Belmont and State of Ohio, in place of George G. Sedgwick. Incumbent's commission expires July 1, 1906.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Alpheus B. Clark to be postmaster at Hastings, in the county of Cambria and State of Pennsylvania, in place of Alpheus B. Clark. Incumbent's commission expired April 10, 1906.

George H. Moore to be postmaster at Verona, in the county of Allegheny and State of Pennsylvania, in place of George H. Moore. Incumbent's commission expired April 10, 1906.

Jesse N. Watson to be postmaster at Hatboro, in the county of Montgomery and State of Pennsylvania, in place of Jesse N. Watson. Incumbent's commission expired April 3, 1906.

Franklin Wisener to be postmaster at Beaver Falls, in the county of Beaver and State of Pennsylvania, in place of Harry F. Hawkins. Incumbent's commission expired January 30, 1906.

WASHINGTON.

William T. Cavanaugh to be postmaster at Olympia, in the county of Thurston and State of Washington, in place of William T. Cavanaugh. Incumbent's commission expired January 16, 1906.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate May 7, 1906.

PROMOTIONS IN THE ARMY.

Subsistence Department.

Maj. Albert D. Kniskern, commissary, to be deputy commissary-general with the rank of lieutenant-colonel from April 24, 1906.

Capt. Charles P. Stivers, commissary, to be commissary with the rank of major from April 24, 1906.

Artillery Corps.

Capt. John C. W. Brooks, Artillery Corps, to be major from March 16, 1906.

Capt. George T. Bartlett, Artillery Corps, to be major from March 26, 1906.

Capt. Charles A. Bennett, Artillery Corps, to be major from April 1, 1906.

Capt. Edward A. Millar, Artillery Corps, to be major from April 14, 1906.

Cavalry Arm.

First Lieut. Ben H. Dorcy, Fourth Cavalry, to be captain from April 26, 1906.

PROMOTION IN PORTO RICO PROVISIONAL REGIMENT OF INFANTRY.

Second Lieut. Pedro J. Parra, Porto Rico Provisional Regiment of Infantry, to be first lieutenant from February 23, 1906.

PROMOTIONS IN THE NAVY.

P. A. Surg. Holton C. Curl to be a surgeon in the Navy from the 16th day of December, 1905.

To be assistant naval constructors in the Navy from the 30th day of April, 1906, to fill vacancies existing in that grade on that date:

Edwin G. Kintner.
Alexander H. Van Keuren.
Paul H. Fretz.
Roy W. Ryden.
Fred G. Coburn.
Waldo P. Druley.

Lieut. Commander William L. Rodgers to be a commander in the Navy from the 7th day of January, 1906.

Lieut. Thomas J. Senn to be a lieutenant-commander in the Navy from the 7th day of January, 1906.

POSTMASTERS.

CALIFORNIA.

La Fevre Webster to be postmaster at Ventura, in the county of Ventura and State of California.

COLORADO.

Frank B. Thomas to be postmaster at Del Norte, in the county of Rio Grande and State of Colorado.

FLORIDA.

Dick M. Kirby to be postmaster at Palatka, in the county of Putnam and State of Florida.

ILLINOIS.

Levi W. Davison to be postmaster at Earlville, in the county of Lasalle and State of Illinois.

Milton A. Ewing to be postmaster at Neoga, in the county of Cumberland and State of Illinois.

Joseph E. Helfrich to be postmaster at Carthage, in the county of Hancock and State of Illinois.

Frank Rockwell to be postmaster at St. Charles, in the county of Kane and State of Illinois.

Jerome B. Stewart to be postmaster at Wilmington, in the county of Will and State of Illinois.

Sylvanus S. Thompson to be postmaster at Marseilles, in the county of Lasalle and State of Illinois.

KANSAS.

Frank E. Shoemaker to be postmaster at Neodesha, in the county of Wilson and State of Kansas.

Alonzo H. Williams to be postmaster at Holton, in the county of Jackson and State of Kansas.

LOUISIANA.

John A. Duplan to be postmaster at Patterson, in the parish of St. Mary and State of Louisiana.

MICHIGAN.

E. Harvey Drake to be postmaster at Yale, in the county of St. Clair and State of Michigan.

Hannibal A. Hopkins to be postmaster at St. Clair, in the county of St. Clair and State of Michigan.

John D. Smead to be postmaster at Blissfield, in the county of Lenawee and State of Michigan.

MINNESOTA.

Claude Atkinson to be postmaster at Hibbing, in the county of St. Louis and State of Minnesota.

John T. Hammar to be postmaster at Madison, in the county of Lac qui Parle and State of Minnesota.

Frank B. Lamson to be postmaster at Buffalo, in the county of Wright and State of Minnesota.

Fred A. Swartwood to be postmaster at Waseca, in the county of Waseca and State of Minnesota.

MISSOURI.

James H. Nay to be postmaster at Holden, in the county of Johnson and State of Missouri.

MISSISSIPPI.

William F. Elgin to be postmaster at Corinth, in the county of Alcorn and State of Mississippi.

Sallie Millsaps to be postmaster at Hazelhurst, in the county of Copiah and State of Mississippi.

NEBRASKA.

Edward R. Sizer to be postmaster at Lincoln, in the county of Lancaster and State of Nebraska.

NEW JERSEY.

Edward S. Hance to be postmaster at Wharton, in the county of Morris and State of New Jersey.

NORTH DAKOTA.

Arnold J. Brunner to be postmaster at Minot, in the county of Ward and State of North Dakota.

OHIO.

Samuel H. Bolton to be postmaster at McComb, in the county of Hancock and State of Ohio.

John H. Oakley to be postmaster at Ravenna, in the county of Portage and State of Ohio.

Manning M. Rose to be postmaster at Marietta, in the county of Washington and State of Ohio.

Seth M. Snyder to be postmaster at Coshocton, in the county of Coshocton and State of Ohio.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Silas C. Daugherty to be postmaster at Jeannette, in the county of Westmoreland and State of Pennsylvania.

Charles A. Dunlap to be postmaster at Manheim, in the county of Lancaster and State of Pennsylvania.

Richard M. Hunt to be postmaster at Houtzdale, in the county of Clearfield and State of Pennsylvania.

Lott I. Leech to be postmaster at Chicora, in the county of Butler and State of Pennsylvania.

R. A. Fulton Lyon to be postmaster at Greensburg, in the county of Westmoreland and State of Pennsylvania.

John Scher, jr., to be postmaster at Dushore, in the county of Sullivan and State of Pennsylvania.

Sydney S. Smith to be postmaster at Punxsutawney, in the county of Jefferson and State of Pennsylvania.

TENNESSEE.

Gale Armstrong to be postmaster at Rogersville, in the county of Hawkins and State of Tennessee.

Frank E. Britton to be postmaster at Jonesboro, in the county of Washington and State of Tennessee.

William A. Pamplin to be postmaster at Fayetteville, in the county of Lincoln and State of Tennessee.

TEXAS.

William S. Hart to be postmaster at Humble, in the county of Harris and State of Texas.

Tom Richards to be postmaster at Sherman, in the county of Grayson and State of Texas.

Walter S. Yates to be postmaster at Forney, in the county of Kaufman and State of Texas.

VERMONT.

Minnie A. Benton to be postmaster at Saxtons River, in the county of Windham and State of Vermont.

Fred G. Haskins to be postmaster at Bristol, in the county of Addison and State of Vermont.

Charles A. Parker to be postmaster at West Rutland, in the county of Rutland and State of Vermont.

David A. Perrin to be postmaster at White River Junction, in the county of Windsor and State of Vermont.

WASHINGTON.

James M. Vernon to be postmaster at Everett, in the county of Snohomish and State of Washington.

Emery Troxel to be postmaster at Connell, in the county of Franklin and State of Washington.

WISCONSIN.

Rollin C. Lybrand to be postmaster at Richland Center, in the county of Richland and State of Wisconsin.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, May 7, 1906.

The House was called to order at 12 o'clock m. by the Speaker, who, on assuming the chair, was greeted with great applause.

The Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou who art supremely great and glorious, creating, recreating, life-giving, life-sustaining potentate, increase, we beseech Thee, our faith and confidence in Thee and in the integrity of mankind that, in spite of the enigmas of life, its sorrows and disappointments, we may, with unfaltering footsteps and undying allegiance to right, truth, and duty, follow the dictates of conscience wherever it may lead, leaving the result to Thee, who doeth all things well. Let Thy blessing descend upon each Member of this House, especially upon him who presides over its deliberations crowned by the glory of seventy years of usefulness to-day. Lengthen his years, keep him in health, strength, and vigor to his family, friends, and country. All of which we ask in the name of Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

The Journal was read.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Journal will stand approved.

Mr. WILLIAMS rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry; has any motion been made to approve the Journal?

The SPEAKER. No motion has been made.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the Journal be approved.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves that the Journal be approved.

The question was taken; and the Chair announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, upon that I call for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi demands the yeas and nays. Those in favor of ordering the yeas and nays will rise and stand until they are counted. [After counting.] Twenty-five have voted in the affirmative.

Mr. DALZELL. The other side, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Those opposed to ordering the yeas and nays will rise and stand until they are counted. [After counting.] Upon this question there are 25 in the affirmative and 111 in the negative, not a sufficient number, and the yeas and nays are refused.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, upon this motion I ask for tellers.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi calls for tellers. [After counting.] Thirty-seven gentlemen have arisen—not a sufficient number; and tellers are refused and yeas and nays are refused [applause on the Republican side], and the Journal is approved.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and discharge the Committee on Indian Affairs from further consideration of the Indian appropriation bill with Senate amendments, to disagree to all the Senate amendments, and to ask a conference thereon with the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves to suspend the rules and take from the Speaker's table the Indian appropriation bill with Senate amendments, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference. Is a second demanded?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN] asks unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I object to that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN] and the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] will take their places as tellers.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 142, noes 52.

So a second was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN] is entitled to twenty minutes and the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] to twenty minutes.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I simply desire to say that there are 212 amendments to the bill, that in amount there is nearly $3,000,000 added to the bill, that the amendments cover a wide range of subjects, including the ratification of agreements, including legislative matters as well as matters of appropriation, and it is apparent that an unusual amount of time must of necessity be consumed in the conference committee in giving full and proper consideration to all of these various amendments and the subjects to which they relate. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, it is perfectly clear to anyone that we should get into conference at the earliest possible moment. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I quite agree with every word that has been uttered by the gentleman from New York, and I think the motion which has been made ought to prevail. I have been actuated merely by the desire to discover whether there was a quorum in the House of Representatives or not to do this or any other sort of business.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken; and, in the opinion of the Chair, two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended, and the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair announces the following conferees on the part of the House: Mr. SHERMAN, Mr. CURTIS, and Mr. STEPHENS of Texas.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

A message, in writing, from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives, by Mr. BARNES, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House of Representatives that the President had approved and signed bills and joint resolution of the following titles:

On April 27:

H. R. 15910. An act to amend the act entitled "An act to regulate commutation for good conduct for United States prisoners," approved June 21, 1902.

On April 28:

H. R. 5297. An act for the relief of the board of trustees of West Tennessee College, Jackson, Tenn.;

H. R. 10152. An act granting certain lands to the city of Biloxi, in Harrison County, Miss., for park and cemetery purposes; and

H. R. 17135. An act providing that the State of Montana be permitted to relinquish to the United States certain lands heretofore selected and select other lands from the public domain in lieu thereof.

On April 30:

H. R. 17217. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a code of law for the District of Columbia," regulating proceedings for condemnation of land for streets; and

H. R. 18025. An act to regulate shipping in trade between ports of the United States and ports or places in the Philippine Archipelago, between ports or places in the Philippine Archipelago, and for other purposes.

On May 1:

H. R. 14508. An act permitting the building of dams across the north and south branches of Rock River, adjacent to Vandruffs Island and Carrs Island, and across the cut-off between said islands, in Rock Island County, Ill., in aid of navigation and for the development of water power; and

H. R. 11490. An act granting the Edison Electric Company a permit to occupy certain lands for electric-power plants in the San Bernardino, Sierra, and San Gabriel forest reserves, in the State of California.

On May 2:

H. R. 16954. An act providing for the reappraisement of certain suburban lots in the town sites of Port Angeles, Wash.

On May 3:

H. R. 11037. An act relating to the transportation of dutiable merchandise without appraisement;

H. R. 17757. An act extending to the subport of Spokane, in the State of Washington, the privileges of the seventh section of the act approved June 10, 1880, governing the immediate transportation of dutiable merchandise without appraisement; and

H. R. 18709. An act making additional appropriations for the public service on account of the earthquake and attending conflagration on the Pacific coast.

On May 4:

H. R. 15911. An act to amend the laws of the United States relating to the registration of trade-marks.

On May 5:

H. R. 1565. An act for the relief of Theodore H. Bishop.

On May 7:

H. J. Res. 145. Joint resolution for appointment of members of Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers; and

H. R. 8997. An act to regulate the practice of pharmacy and the sale of poisons in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

WHARVES, PIERS, AND OTHER STRUCTURES IN LAKE MICHIGAN.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass House joint resolution No. 134, authorizing the construction and maintenance of wharves, piers, and other structures in Lake Michigan adjoining certain lands in Lake County, Ind.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER] moves to suspend the rules and pass House joint resolution No. 134, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the owners of the property known as sections Nos. 33 and 34, township 37, range 8 west, Lake County, Ind., be permitted to fill the whole, or such portions as they may elect, of the bed of Lake Michigan adjacent to such property, and within the boundary established by the extension of such section lines, out to a depth of water not exceeding 25 feet, and that such owners may be permitted to build wharves, piers, and such other structures as may be useful for occupancy or to promote navigation inside of and out to such 25-foot line: Provided, That the owners thereof shall present a map showing the line to which they intend filling and complete plans to the Secretary of War and Chief of Engineers, and until they shall approve the same this permission shall not be effective: Provided further, That this permit shall not conflict with any law or statute of the State of Indiana in which said property is located.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

There being no demand for a second, the question was taken; and (two-thirds voting in the affirmative) the rules were suspended and the joint resolution was passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading Clerk, announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 15331) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. CLAPP, Mr. MCCUMBER, and Mr. DUBOIS as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

MARY E. DUGGER.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the order which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] moves to suspend the rules and pass the order which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That the motion to reconsider the vote whereby the House passed the bill (S. 1975) "granting an increase of pension to Mary E. Dugger" be, and hereby is, taken from the table and is agreed to; that the vote on the third reading of the said bill is hereby reconsidered; that the bill is hereby amended by inserting the initial "L," after the word "Jefferson," in line 6, so as to read "Jefferson L. Dugger;" and that the bill as amended be considered as read a third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

There being no demand for a second, the question was taken; and (two-thirds voting in the affirmative) the rules were suspended and the order was adopted.

PRIVILEGE TO CERTAIN BILLS.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the following order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa moves to suspend the rules and pass the following order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That the privilege granted to bills reported from committees having the right to report at any time, be, and is hereby, granted to the following bills:

S. 88: "For preventing the adulteration or misbranding of foods or drugs, and for regulating traffic therein, and for other purposes."

H. R. 18673: "To regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States."

Ordered further, That the bill (H. R. 17984) to provide a code of penal laws for the United States be, and hereby is, made a special continuing order for consideration at evening sessions of the House, whenever the House shall by vote take a recess from the usual hour of adjournment until 8 p. m., the said evening sessions not to continue after 10.30 p. m.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I demand a second.

Mr. ADAMSON. I demand a second.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I demanded a second myself.

Mr. HEPBURN. I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. A gentleman who is opposed to the bill and on the committee would be entitled to demand a second.

Mr. ADAMSON. I am opposed to the bill, and have been for ten years; and if I live ten years longer I will still be opposed to it.

The SPEAKER. Very well, under the practice, the gentleman should have been recognized to demand a second.

Mr. HEPBURN. I request that a second may be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. ADAMSON. I do not consent that a second be accorded. I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] will take their places as tellers.

The House divided; and tellers reported—ayes 119, noes 29.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to make the point of no quorum, but I hope in order to obviate that necessity that this order will be divided. Here is an order taking a whole lot of bills, not homogeneous, not kindred one to the other, in order, with the privileges of appropriation bills, and providing for night sessions for their consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is in error as to the night sessions. The night session that is provided for is for the bill codifying the criminal code.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The most important one of them.

The SPEAKER. And then only when the House recesses, and the usual motion to adjourn could cut it off.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then, Mr. Speaker, I will modify my remarks in that respect. I read the order hastily. But the order provides to accord the right of privileged legislation to several bills in principle not homogeneous with each other.

Now, in explanation of my position, reserving the right to make the point of no quorum, I want to state that I called for a division this morning for the purpose of determining whether a quorum was present to transact this or any other business.

I am perfectly willing for the bills to be considered which may be brought before the House on motion to suspend, each upon its distinctive merits or demerits, at the time. I am perfectly willing to let the business under suspension of the rules go on, but I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of this order if it is not well to separate the bills in the order and make the order apply seriatum to each bill mentioned in the order instead of including them all in one order?

Mr. HEPBURN. I am perfectly willing for the gentleman to pursue any parliamentary course that he pleases in connection with the matter.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I was not asking the gentleman with a big club in my hand, Mr. Speaker. I am asking him sincerely whether or not he will agree to a motion to accord the privileges to each of these bills. I am asking the gentleman whether he is willing that this order shall be made applicable to each of the bills in their order asking for consideration.

Mr. HEPBURN. I am perfectly willing to allow the question to be determined in the usual parliamentary way. I have no agreement to make.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then I will ask the Chair a parliamentary inquiry. Still reserving the right to make the point of order, I want to ask the Chair this question.

Mr. PAYNE. What is the point of order?

The SPEAKER. The House is now proceeding under unanimous consent.

Mr. PAYNE. What point is the gentleman making?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am trying to arrive at a modus vivendi with the gentleman.

Mr. HEPBURN. I ask for the regular order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then, Mr. Speaker, I make the point that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and eight gentlemen are present—a quorum.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I call for tellers on the count.

Mr. PAYNE. I make the point of order against that. The rules provide how a quorum shall be ascertained, and a quorum has been ascertained.

The SPEAKER. The Chair holds that under the precedents the gentleman's demand is not in order, the point being made upon it. The gentleman can obtain the same result, as he is aware, by demanding the yeas and nays.

Mr. WILLIAMS. At this time?

The SPEAKER. When the House votes on the motion.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Very well, Mr. Speaker. I had my doubts myself as to whether I could call for tellers, but I wanted to submit it to the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and agreeing to the order. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] is entitled to twenty minutes, and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] is entitled to twenty minutes.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I should like to ask the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] a question for information before this debate begins. Do you propose to hold the House here until you get this codification scheme through?

Mr. HEPBURN. We merely want a vote on this proposition that is now before the House.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Well, I know; but the proposition that is now before the House involves night sessions for the consideration of this revision or codification business—whatever it is—and the Clerk can not read the Revised Statutes of the United States between now and the 4th of March, if he reads five hours a day without ever stopping.

Mr. TALBOTT. Does this order include what is known as the "pure-food bill?"

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

Mr. HEPBURN. I reserve the balance of my time, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. ADAMSON. I should like to have the Clerk read the proposition from the desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read the pending order again.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I have tried to understand the proposition, but gentlemen have prevented the Clerk from laying the matter before us. I thought we had a right to know what the proposition was.

As to night sessions, I have no disposition to resist them because I am here to work, and I am willing to work night or day for my constituents.

As to indiscriminate immigration, I am opposed to it.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is so much confusion that gentlemen can not be heard.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is well taken. The House will be in order.

Mr. ADAMSON. I thank the gentleman from New York, Mr. Speaker. He is right for one of the few times in his life. I know he wants to be right, and he would be right but for his unfortunate environment. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

As to the proposition about immigration, Mr. Speaker, I am against immigration to this country by anybody but industrious, healthy, and moral folks. I would not admit paupers, lunatics, nor diseased people.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Nor anarchists.

Mr. ADAMSON. Nor anarchists. I would not permit anybody to land on the shores of this, the greatest Republic on earth, except honest, good, straight people. [Applause.] I shall never say "nation." I say "Republic," because it is the greatest and best exhibition of brains and patriotism the world has ever seen, all combined to establish a republic.

As to the other proposition, my dear friend the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN], chairman of our Committee on Interstate Commerce, has inherited what he calls the "pure-food bill." It is not of his origination. Another man fomented it, and worked on it, and the gentleman from Iowa took it up. Instead of pure food, Mr. Speaker, it ought to be called "pure foolishness." That is what it ought to be named. [Laughter.]

It is a proposition to abolish all legal responsibility; it is a proposition to take up one industry and damn another. We have for eight years, in my experience in Congress, had hearings, and the whole output of the entire investigation has been with reference to prostituting the Federal Government, with its power and its money, to uphold one enterprise and destroy another.

Mr. Speaker, during this time a great many bad things have been developed in the hearings. There is not a solitary case ever developed that is not punishable by local authorities if the local authorities will do their duty. I want to say another thing; there are two or three features in that bill that are not only foolish, but vicious also.

There is one section in that bill that would fill this country with morphine and opium fiends. Read that section. It is a provision that any druggist may supply the customers with a concoction containing 2 grains of opium or one-quarter of a grain of morphine to each ounce whether fluid or solid.

More than that, Mr. Speaker, the bill contains a proposition to go into the regulations of the State and say whether or not you shall put so many ounces into a package. It proposes that if you sell a pound package and it is less than a pound the Federal Government will undertake to correct that crime. It is not only foolish, but illegal. I believe habeas corpus would discharge any man arrested under that provision.

I tell you, Mr. Speaker, the system of this Government as propounded by its founders is that people shall sweep in front of their own doors; that the Federal Government shall not be loaded down with all the domestic affairs, and you know it. The Federal Government was not created for the purpose of cutting your toe nails or corns. We ought to do our duty to the Government and State. There is not in this entire bill a proposition to punish any crime that your own State can not punish, if it will do its duty. All lawyers know it is the duty of the State and the right of the State to perform that part of the functions of government involving police duty. We all know that a venue has to be laid and proved, and if the Federal judges are as honest as the State judges the same requisites are necessary to convict a criminal. Is not that true? There is not in all the hearings for eight years on this pure-foolishness bill a case cited that we can not convict in Georgia or in Pennsylvania or any other State.

I will yield to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT].

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry?

